Ch.1: ~Prologue~ Heaven Official's Blessing

Among all the gods and buddhas of heaven, there was one famous laughingstock of the three realms.

Legends have it that, eight hundred years ago, there was an ancient kingdom in the Midlands called the Kingdom of Xianle.

The Kingdom of Xianle was vast in land and bountiful in resources. There were four treasures within the kingdom: cloud-like beauties, vibrant music and marvelous literature, gold and gems, and their one infamous crown prince.

What would be the best way to describe this crown prince? Well, he was a unique man.

He was beloved by the king and the queen, extremely doted upon. They would often say: "My son will become a great ruler in the future, his renown will echo through history."

However, the crown prince wasn't interested in imperial power or wealth in the common world in the least.

What he was interested in, in his own words, was——

"I will save the common people!"

When he was young, the crown prince focused only on his cultivation, and there were two little stories that were widespread of his path of cultivation.

The first story happened when he was seventeen years old.

That year, a grand Shangyuan¹ Heavenly Ceremonial Procession took place in the Kingdom of Xianle.

Although the custom of conducting these divine ceremonies has since fallen out of fashion for centuries, it is still possible to deduce what a grand occasion of jubilation it must have been from remnants of ancient books and oral tradition.

The wondrous Shangyuan Festival, upon the Great Martial Avenue.

¹ Shangyuan Festival is also known as the Lantern Festival, marking the 15th and last day of the Lunar New Year. It's a day for worshipping and celebrating the celestial heavens.

Seas of people gathered on either side of the grand street, there were royals and nobles talking and laughing in merriment atop the high platforms. The glorious royal warriors donned in armour opened the paths while the maidens danced elegantly, their fair hands scattering flowers; who was to say whether the flowers or the maidens were the more beautiful. From within the golden carriage came melodious music that drifted in the air across the entire imperial city, and coming last of the procession was a grand stage pulled by sixteen white horses in golden bridles.

And upon this towering grand stage was the God-Pleasing Warrior, on whom all focused their attention.

At the Heavenly Ceremonial Procession, the God-Pleasing Warrior wore a golden mask. Donning glamorous attire and with a sacred sword in hand, he played the role of the number one martial god of a thousand years who subdued evil: The Heavenly Martial Emperor, Jun Wu.

It was the greatest of honours to be chosen to play the God-Pleasing Warrior; thus, the selection criteria were exceedingly strict. The one chosen this year was that crown prince. Everyone from all over the kingdom believed that he would bring about the most thrilling performance of the God-Pleasing Warrior.

However, an accident happened that day.

During the third tour of the procession, it passed by a city wall that was dozens of meters tall. At the time, the martial god upon the grand stage was just about to slay the demon with a strike. It was the climax scene of the performance, both sides of the street were at the height of excitement. The top of the city wall was also swarming with people fighting to watch the show, pushing and shoving each other.

Right then, a small child fell from the edge of the wall.

Screams reached the heavens. Just when everyone thought this small child would stain the Great Martial Avenue with blood, the crown prince looked up, leapt into flight, and caught the boy.

The people only caught a glimpse of a white silhouette that flew like a soaring bird before the crown prince already landed with that small child in his arms. The golden mask fell and revealed that young and handsome face behind the mask.

In the next second, cheers erupted.

The people were thrilled and joyous, but the Guoshi² of the royal cultivation hall were troubled.

² "Guoshi" can be translated as "Imperial/State Preceptor". It is a high-ranking government position that also has significant religious responsibilities. Guoshi serve as the religious heads of state under the Emperor, and are the tutors, chaplains, and confidants of the Emperor and his direct heirs. Read more here: https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Imperial_Preceptor

They had never imagined such a huge problem would occur. This was ominous luck! The gravest of misfortunes!

The guoshi were so distraught, they were losing hair as fast as the rain fell. After much contemplation, they called over the crown prince.

They very courteously requested him thus: “Your Highness, might you be willing to face the wall in reflection for a month? It doesn’t really need to be a month, as long as the intention’s there.”

The crown prince smiled, and replied as such: “No.”

This was how he said it: “Saving people is not anything bad. Why would the heavens condemn me for something I’ve done right?”

Uh...but what if the heavens do condemn you?

“Then, it’s the heavens who are wrong. Why would I apologize to those who are wrong?”

The guoshi could not argue.

This crown prince was thus such a person.

He had never run into anything he couldn’t do, nor had he ever met anyone who didn’t love him. He was the justice of the mortal realm, he was the centre of the world.

So, even though the guoshi were frustrated—“What the hell do you know?!”—it wasn’t their place to say much, and they didn’t dare say too much regardless. His Highness wouldn’t listen either way.

The second story also happened in the year the crown prince was seventeen.

Legends have it that in the south of the Yellow River, there was a bridge called Yinian³. Upon this bridge, there was a ghost that had been lingering for years.

This ghost was exceedingly fearsome: it was donned in broken armour, the flames of karma burned beneath its feet, and its body was covered in blood and pierced by all manner of sharp weapons. Every step it took, it would leave behind a footprint of blood and fire. Every few years, it would suddenly appear at night and wander back and forth at the head of the bridge, blocking travelers to ask them three questions:

³ [一念] means “One Thought” or “Fleeting Thought”. This is also the first half of the idiom, “Wrong decision made in a moment of weakness.”

“What is this place?”

“Who am I?”

“What is to be done?”

The ghost would then devour whoever answered incorrectly. However, no one knew what the correct answers were. As the years went by, this ghost devoured countless travelers.

During his errant wandering, the crown prince caught word of this. So, he went and found Yinian Bridge, guarding it night after night, until finally, one night, he met the haunting ghost.

When that ghost appeared, it was indeed as horrifying as the legends said. It asked the crown prince the first question, and the crown prince answered with a smile.

“This place is the human world.”

However, that ghost replied, “This place is the abyss.”

An auspicious start. The first answer was already incorrect.

“Well, all three answers are going to be wrong anyway,” the crown prince thought. “So why should I wait ‘til you’re done?”

And so he pulled out his weapon and lunged.

This fight was complete chaos. The crown prince was skilled in martial arts, but that ghost was terrifying and dauntless. The one man and the one ghost fought so hard the sun and the moon were toppling. In the end, the ghost was finally defeated.

After the ghost vanished, the crown prince planted a flowering tree at the head of the bridge. Just then, a cultivator passed by and happened to see him sprinkle a handful of dirt to send the ghost off.

He asked, “What are you doing?”

And thus, the crown prince said the famous words: “Body in abyss, heart in paradise.”

When that cultivator heard, he gave a light smile. He then transformed into a divine warrior donned in white armour, with auspicious clouds beneath his feet, and rode off in wind and holy light. Only then did the crown prince realize that he had accidentally met the Heavenly Martial Emperor, who had personally descended the mortal realm to defeat evil.

All the gods and celestial beings had already noticed this exceedingly outstanding God-Pleasing Warrior when he did that leap during the Shangyuan Heavenly Procession.

So, after this meeting at Yinian Bridge, the deities asked the emperor: "How does my lord find this royal highness?"

The emperor answered: "This child's future is infinite."

That night, a celestial phenomenon manifested in the skies above the palace, and storms raged.

Amidst the flashes of lightning and the roars of thunder, the crown prince ascended.

Every time a mortal ascended, the heavenly realm would always shake. When this crown prince ascended, the entire heavenly realm shook with three times the normal tremors.

To achieve a fruitful cultivation truly was much too difficult. It required talent, training, and chance. It was often a long road of a hundred years in order for a god to be born.

It wasn't that there weren't any fortunate souls who became deities at a young age. But, there largely existed those who exhausted themselves for their entire lives and trained for a hundred years, and still there'd be no heavenly calamities⁴ to dawn upon them. Even if they did come to face a heavenly calamity, they would die if they couldn't pass such a trial; even if they didn't die, they'd be ruined. Their numbers were as numerous as the sands of the Ganges, but most were simply ignorant mortals who would spend their entire lives as nothing more than ordinary, never finding their own paths.

Yet this royal highness was no doubt the darling of the heavens. Whatever he wanted, he got; whatever he wanted to do, he succeeded; he wanted to ascend and become a god, so at the age of seventeen, he actually ascended and became a god.

He had always followed the will of the people, and the king and queen loved their son and missed him dearly. So the king ordered for great temples and shrines to be built all across the land, and for the crown prince's statues to be erected and worshipped by all. The more believers there were, the more temples there'd be, and thus the longer his life and the stronger his spiritual powers. Thus, in a few short years, the Xianle Palace of the Crown Prince became incomparably glorious, and for a time, its prosperity and splendour reached the peak.

⁴ Before a Daoist Cultivator can ascend, they must go through the trial of a Heavenly Calamity in order to pass to the heavens. It's usually a fierce storm full of piercing lightning.

—Until three years later, Xianle fell into chaos.

The cause of the chaos was tyranny, and rebels rose in revolt. However, while the flames of war were set ablaze all over the mortal world, the deities of the heavenly realm couldn't easily intervene. Unless it was ghosts, monsters, and demons encroaching on the borders—otherwise, whatever was, was.

Imagine: conflicts were everywhere in the mortal realm, and everyone believed they had reason. So if anyone were to stick a foot in, today you would back your former kingdom, tomorrow another would avenge his descendents. Thus, wouldn't there be gods who'd want to fight each other all the time and fall into a life of disgrace?

A situation like this for the crown prince meant he must keep his distance. But, he didn't care at all.

He said to the Heavenly Emperor: "I will save the common people."

The Heavenly Emperor was in possession of a thousand years of divine power, but even he didn't dare hang those words off his lips. When he heard this, it was easy to imagine how he felt, yet he couldn't do anything about the crown prince.

So he said, "You can't save everyone."

"I can," the crown prince declared.

Thus, he descended to the mortal realm without looking back.

Naturally, the people of Xianle rejoiced. However, ever since ancient times there had been one truth the people had always spoken of in the human world: when gods descended to the mortal realm without permission, there was never a good outcome.

Thus, not only were the flames of war not extinguished, they blazed even wilder.

It wasn't that the crown prince didn't work hard, but it would've been better had he not tried at all. The harder he worked, the more of a mess the war became; the people of Xianle were devastatingly battered and crushed, the number of wounded and casualties severe, and in the end, a plague swept through the entire imperial city, the rebel army broke through to the palace, and so ended the war.

If it was said Xianle was originally hanging by a thread, then the crown prince came and cut it directly.

After the kingdom had fallen, the people finally came to realize one thing: the crown prince they worshipped as a god was never as perfect or strong as they imagined.

More harshly, wasn't he just some useless trash who couldn't do anything right?!

Without anywhere to vent the anguish and pain of losing homes and families, the battered people furiously poured into the Palaces of the Crown Prince, toppled his divine statues, and burned down the divine temples.

Eight thousand temples burned for seven days and seven nights, and burned until there was nothing left. From that moment on, the martial god who guarded peace and safety vanished, and a God of Misfortune who brought disasters was born.

When the people call you a god, then you are a god. If they call you crap, then you're crap. You are whatever they said you were. It has always been thus.

The crown prince couldn't accept this reality no matter what, and what he couldn't accept even more was the punishment he was sentenced: Banishment.

His spiritual powers were sealed, and his person knocked back down to the mortal realm.

He grew up endlessly coddled and pampered, he had never tasted the suffering of the human world before, yet this punishment threw him from the clouds down into mud. And in this mud, for the first time, he understood the taste of hunger, poverty, and filth. This was also the first time that he did things he never thought he'd do willingly: stealing, robbing, loudly cursing, and giving up on himself. He'd lost all dignity, there was no self-esteem left, and he was as unkempt as one could be. Even his most loyal servant couldn't accept this change in him and chose to leave.

"Body in abyss, heart in paradise". This phrase was engraved on stone monuments and plaques everywhere in Xianle. If it wasn't for the war that burned almost all of the kingdom to the ground, if the crown prince were to see the remnants of those words, he'd probably be the first to rush up to destroy what remained.

The person who had said those words had personally proven that, when the body was in the abyss, the heart couldn't be in paradise.

He ascended to the heavens quickly, but he fell from grace even faster. That awe-inspiring glance upon the Great Martial Avenue, having met evil at Yinian Bridge; it was as if it was only yesterday. However, after the heavenly realm whispered for a while, what was past was past.

Until after many years, one day, a huge rumble thundered from the sky. This royal highness ascended for the second time.

Throughout history, heavenly officials who were banished either never regained themselves, or fell into the ghost realm. There had never been many who were able to turn a new leaf after having been banished. The second ascension was fully grand and spectacular.

What was even more spectacular was that, after he ascended, he charged all the way into the heavenly realm and rampaged in full fury. Thus, he had only been ascended for the spanse of one incense time before he was knocked back down again.

One incense time. This could be considered the swiftest and the shortest ascension in history.

If the first ascension could be considered a beautiful tale, then the second ascension was a farce.

Having been banished twice, the heavenly realm looked upon this crown prince with full contempt. And in this contempt, there was also caution. After all, he was already threatening and on edge after the first banishment; now that he was banished twice, wasn't he going to go berserk and avenge himself against the world?

Yet who knew, after getting banished this time, he didn't go berserk, and was even adjusting to the banished life honestly. There were no issues at all, the only problem was...maybe he was taking things a little too seriously?

Sometimes he'd busk at the end of the street, expertly playing any instrument and singing any songs, and even shattering boulders on his chest was not beyond him. While there had long been word that this royal highness could sing and dance and was a master of many talents, unbelievably, all of his talents were being witnessed in such a fashion, truly making one feel complicated. Sometimes, he would diligently and humbly collect junk.

All the deities were shocked to the core.

Unthinkable, that things would reach this point; the point where now, if anyone was to say "the son you gave birth to is the Crown Prince of Xianle", it'd be a curse more malicious than "may you die without sons".

He was once the noble and gracious crown prince, a heavenly official who made part of the divine ranks. But to have screwed up to this point, there really was no one else. And so, this was the story of the man who was known as the laughingstock of the three realms.

After laughing, those who were more sentimental might also sigh. That darling of the heavens, who once stood at such a height, had truly and thoroughly disappeared.

Divine statues collapsed, native kingdom destroyed, not a single believer remained. Gradually, he was forgotten by the world. Thus, no one knew where he drifted afterwards.

Another many years passed. Suddenly one day, there was another huge rumble in the sky. The heaven fell and the earth cracked, the ground trembled and the mountains shook.

The lanterns of everlasting light shuddered, the firelights danced in fury, and all the heavenly officials jolted awake inside their own golden palaces, every one of them running out to ask each other:

Which new dignitary ascended? Such a grandiose entrance!

Yet who knew—they'd only exclaimed in wonder the first second, when in the next second, all the gods and buddhas of heaven were thunderstruck.

Weren't you done?!

That infamous weirdo, the laughingstock of the three realms, the legendary royal highness the crown prince, he—he—he—he fucking ascended again!

BOOK 1: CRIMSON RAIN SOUGHT FLOWER

“Congratulations, Your Highness.”

Hearing this, Xie Lian looked up, and he smiled before saying anything. “Thank you. But can I ask what you’re congratulating me for?”

Ling Wen Zhenjun⁵ stood tall, with her hands folded behind her back. “Congratulations, you have won first place on the chart of ‘Heavenly Official Most Hoped to be Banished Down to the Mortal Realm’ of this calendar term⁶.”

“Well, no matter what, first place is first place,” Xie Lian said. “But since you’re congratulating me, is there anything that’s actually worth being happy about?”

“Yes,” Ling Wen replied. “First place on this chart can receive one hundred merits.”

Xie Lian immediately said, “If there are any similar charts in the future, please absolutely call me up.”

“Do you know who the second place is?” Ling Wen asked.

Xie Lian pondered for a moment, then replied, “That’s too hard to guess. After all, in terms of ability, I should be able to take the first three places myself.”

“Pretty much,” Ling Wen said. “There isn’t a second place. You are so far ahead that you’ve left everyone in the dust.”

“That’s too great of an honour,” Xie Lian replied. “Then who was first place in the previous calendar term?”

“There isn’t one,” Lin Wen said. “Because this chart was established as of today.”

“Huh?” Xie Lian was taken aback. “You don’t mean to say that this was a chart set up just for me?”

Ling Wen replied, “You can think of it as, you just so happened to have made it in time, and just so happened to steal first place.”

Xie Lian grinned with crescent eyes. "Alright. I'll be happier if I think of it that way."

"Do you know why you got first place?" Ling Wen continued.

"By popular demand?" Xie Lian said.

"Let me explain to you the reason," Ling Wen said. "Please look at that bell."

Xie Lian turned his head to gaze toward where she pointed, and what he saw was an extremely beautiful sight. There was a grand palace temple made of white jade, and there were abundant towers, pavilions, and gazebos with heavenly clouds lingering about. Streams flowed and birds danced.

He looked for a good while, then asked, "Did you perhaps point in the wrong direction? There's no bell anywhere?"

"I didn't," Ling Wen said. "It's right there, don't you see it?"

Xie Lian looked again seriously, then answered honestly, "I don't."

Ling Wen replied, "It's right if you don't. There used to be a bell there, but when you ascended, it fell off because of the quakes."

"..."

"That clock is older than you, but it has a spirited character and enjoyed a good spectacle. Whenever someone ascends, it would toll a few times to applaud. The day you ascended, the quakes were so strong the bell tolled like mad and couldn't stop at all. In the end, it made itself fall off the belltower before it finally ceased. And when it fell, it crashed into one of the heavenly officials passing by."

"Um...then is everything better now?" Xie Lian inquired.

"Not yet, it's still under repairs," Ling Wen replied.

"I meant that heavenly official who was hurt," Xie Lian clarified.

"The one it hit was a martial god," Ling Wen said. "A flip of his hand and the bell was chopped into two right then and there. Now, please look over at that golden palace. Do you see it?"

Again, Xie Lian looked to where she was pointing, and saw amidst the haze of clouds the bright glass golden roof. "Ah, this time I see it."

"It's not right if you see it," Ling Wen said. "There didn't use to be anything there."

“When you ascended, the golden pillars of the golden palaces of a number of heavenly officials collapsed from the quakes, and their glass tiles shattered. There are some that won’t be so easily fixed, so the heavenly officials could only put together some last-minute palaces to make do for the time being.”

“And I’m the one responsible?”

“You’re the one responsible.”

“Mm...” Xie Lian asked to confirm, “So, I have offended many heavenly officials the moment I arrived?”

“If you can make amends, maybe not,” Ling Wen said.

“How do I make amends?”

“Easy. With eight million, eight hundred and eighty thousand merits.”

Xie Lian grinned again.

Ling Wen added, “Of course, I know you don’t have even a tenth of that amount.”

Xie Lian replied earnestly, “How do I say this? Even though I’m very sorry, even if you want just ten thousandth of that amount, I don’t have it.”

The faith of mortal believers was converted into a heavenly official’s spiritual power, and every stick of incense they lit and every offering they gave were thus called “merits”.

Xie Lian turned solemn and asked seriously, “Are you willing to kick me down from here and give me eight million, eight hundred and eighty thousand merits for it?”

“I’m a civil god,” Ling Wen said. “If you’re looking for someone to kick you down under, you’ll need to find a martial god for it. The harder they kick, the more merits they’ll give.”

Xie Lian heaved a long sigh. “Please allow me to think on what to do.”

Ling Wen patted his shoulder. “Don’t worry, there will always be a way when the carriage reaches the mountain.”

“Boats always sink when they reach the pier-head for me, though⁷,” Xie Lian said.

If this was eight hundred years ago, when the Palace of Xianle was at its peak of prosperity, eight million eight hundred and eighty thousand merits would be nothing; the crown prince could throw it out without batting an eye. But the present wasn't the same as the past, and all of his temples in the mortal realm had long since been burned to the ground. He had no believers, no incense, and no offerings.

There was no need to say more on the subject. Either way he had nothing, nothing, absolutely nothing!

He crouched on the side of the large main street of the Heavenly Capital by himself feeling distraught for a while, before suddenly remembering—he had ascended for almost three days now, but he still hadn't entered the communication array of the Upper Court. He forgot to ask what the verbal password was earlier.

The heavenly officials of the Upper Court had gotten together and set up an array⁸ that could allow the consciousness to communicate and pass on messages within the array instantaneously. Once ascended, one must enter the array, but the password was required in order for the consciousness to find the designated communication array. The last time Xie Lian had entered the array was eight hundred years ago, and he didn't remember the password at all. He let his consciousness scatter to search, and saw an array that seemed to be what he was looking for, so he just went in. The moment he entered the array, he was blown away by the whirlwind of yelling pouring from all over.

“Place your bets and no take-backs, let's wager on how long our royal highness the crown prince can last before going down again!”

“I bet one year!”

“One year is too long, last time it was only one incense time; it'll be three days this time, I think. I put my merits down on three days, three days!”

“Don't, you dimwit! Three days is almost over already, do you even know how to gamble?!”

...Xie Lian silently exited the array.

He got in the wrong one. That definitely wasn't it.

The heavenly officials of the Upper Court of Heaven were all bigwigs who ruled over a given region, widely known by every household, and were kept occupied by a myriad of state affairs.

⁷ “When the boat gets to the pier-head, it will go straight with the current” is a proverb that means “Everything will be alright”.

⁸ Think alchemy circle, a la Full Metal Alchemist

Since they were deities who ascended respectably, keeping in mind their status, they were generally more discreet and often haughty in their speech and action. He himself had been the only one who went to greet every single heavenly official inside the communication array out of excitement the first time he ascended, incomparably earnest and exceedingly thorough in introducing himself from head to toe.

After he exited that array he went on another random search, and entered into another one randomly. This time when he went in, he relaxed, thinking to himself, “How quiet, it’s probably this one.”

Just then, he heard a voice say softly, “So, Your Highness is back?”

It was a very comfortable voice, the sound soft and gentle, the tone decorous. However, if one was to listen to it closely, one would discover that the voice was quite cool and indifferent, and the sentiment it carried was also cool and distant; causing that soft gentleness to turn into something more malicious in intent.

Xie Lian had originally wanted to enter the array manneredly and lie low quietly, but since the other party had already addressed him, he couldn’t keep pretending to be deaf and mute. Besides, he was still very delighted that there were actually heavenly officials in the Upper Court who would willingly start a conversation with a God of Misfortune like himself.

Thus, he quickly answered, “Yeah! Hello everyone, I’m back again.”

Yet little did he know, after this exchange, every single heavenly official who was currently inside the communication array all perked up.

That heavenly official said languidly, “Your Highness certainly ascended with great force this time, huh.”

Within the Upper Court of heaven, emperors, kings, generals, chancellors were found everywhere, and heroes flowed like the water.

In order to become a deity, one must first achieve greatness. Within the mortal realm, those who had established laurels or ones possessing great talent had always had a greater chance at ascension. Thus, it wasn’t an exaggeration to say that rulers, princes, royalty, generals, none of these were a rarity here. Everyone was a Darling of the Heavens. Everyone was proprietary with each other, so they would address one another as Your Majesty, Your Highness, Lord General, Alliance Chief, Head Chief; all sorts, as long as the address was flattering.

However, the words from this one heavenly official seemed to have something underlying in the tone. Although he said “Your Highness” this, “Your Highness” that, Xie Lian couldn’t sense a bit of respect from him at all; it was more like he was poking with a needle. There were also several heavenly officials inside the communication array who were authentic crown princes, and they were feeling the hairs on their neck rise from such an address, incredibly uncomfortable. Xie Lian could tell that the other party didn't come with good intentions, but he didn't want to fight and so chose to run instead.

He smiled. "It's not too bad."

However, that heavenly official wouldn't give him the chance to run, and said impassively, "It's Your Highness, after all, so not too bad. But my luck doesn't seem to be as good."

Suddenly, Xie Lian heard a private message from Ling Wen.

She only said one word: "Bell."

Instantly, Xie Lian understood.

So, this was the martial god who was hit by the bell!

If that was the case, then the other party wasn't angry without reason. Xie Lian had always been very good at apologizing, so he immediately said, "I've heard about the accident with the bell, I'm dreadfully sorry, I do apologize."

The other party humphed, the meaning unclear.

There were a great number of renowned martial gods in the heavenly realm, and many of them were newly-ascended dignitaries who came after Xie Lian's time. Just by voice alone Xie Lian couldn't be sure who this person was, but he couldn't stay ignorant of his name after apologizing either.

So Xie Lian asked, "Might I ask how I may address my lord?"

The moment he spoke, the other side fell silent. Not only did the other side fall silent, the entire communication array was like it had frozen, and suddenly the air was dead.

On the other end, Ling Wen sent him another voice message. "Your Highness, although I don't think you wouldn't have recognized him after talking for so long, but I still want to give you a reminder. That's Xuan Zhen."

"Xuan Zhen?" Xie Lian said.

He was stumped for a moment before he finally came around, and sent a voice message back in shock. "That's Mu Qing?"

General Xuan Zhen was the Martial God of the Southwest, and possessed seven thousand temples. His name in the human world was considerably distinguished.

And the original name of this General Xuan Zhen was Mu Qing. Eight hundred years ago, he was a deputy general at the Xianle Palace of the Crown Prince.

Ling Wen was also quite shocked. “You really didn’t recognize him?”

“I really didn’t,” Xie Lian replied. “He didn’t talk to me like this back then. Besides, I can’t even recall when the last time we met, it was either five or six centuries ago. I can barely remember what he looks like, so how can I possibly remember what his voice sounds like?”

The communication array was still deep in silence. Mu Qing didn’t utter a sound, and the other heavenly officials were pretending they weren’t listening while waiting on the edge of their seats for whichever one would continue the conversation.

Things were rather awkward when it came to these two. After so many years of twisted rumours, everyone basically knew most of the story at this point. Back then, when Xie Lian was still the esteemed Crown Prince of Xianle, he trained at the Royal Holy Pavilion. This Royal Holy Pavilion was a royal cultivation hall in the Kingdom of Xianle, with a very strict standard in selecting disciples. Mu Qing came from an impoverished background, and his father was an executed criminal; someone like this didn’t qualify to enter the Royal Holy Pavilion, so he could only run errands. Within the temple grounds, he was someone who cleaned the royal highness’ room and served tea and water.

Xie Lian saw how hard he was working, so he requested for the guoshi to make an exception to take Mu Qing in as a disciple. It was only by the golden mouth of the royal highness that Mu Qing could enter the temple to cultivate, and be trained alongside the crown prince. Then after ascension, Xie Lian appointed him his general, and took him along to the Heavenly Capital.

However, when the Kingdom of Xianle fell and Xie Lian was banished to the mortal world, Mu Qing didn’t follow him. Not only did he not follow, he never even spoke a word in Xie Lian’s favour. Either way, the crown prince was gone, so he was free. He found a cave in a piece of auspicious land and trained strenuously, and not a few years later, he passed a heavenly calamity and ascended to heaven himself.

In the past, one was in the heavens and one on earth. Now, there was still one in the heavens and one on earth — it was just their positions had thoroughly switched, that’s all.

On this end, Ling Wen said, “He’s very angry.”

“I figured as much,” Xie Lian said.

“I’ll go start another topic of conversation, you best take the chance to leave,” Ling Wen said.

“Nah, it’s okay,” Xie Lian replied. “It’s fine as long as we pretend nothing’s happened.”

"It's okay?" Ling Wen said. "I feel awkward just watching you two."

"It's not that bad!" Xie Lian replied.

For someone like Xie Lian, anything really was okay aside from death; he didn't have much, and certainly not shame. He had suffered much, much more awkward things than this, so he genuinely felt that this was okay. Yet who knew that "okay" wasn't a word to be uttered lightly. He had only just said "it's okay" when a voice roared angrily.

"WHO THE FUCK TORE DOWN MY GOLDEN PALACE?! SHOW YOURSELF!!!"

This angry roar was going to make the heads of all the gods explode.

While they were already filled to the brim with surging complaints, each of them still held their breaths, waiting soundlessly to hear how Xie Lian was going to answer this accusing cry. Yet unexpectedly, things only got more exciting. Before Xie Lian had opened his mouth, Mu Qing spoke up first.

Or rather, he only snorted. "Heh."

The newcomer spat coldly, "You tore it down? Good. Just you wait."

Mu Qing replied coolly, "I didn't say it was me, don't accuse people without evidence."

The other party said angrily, "Then what are you laughing about? You mental?"

"No reason, you just sound funny, that's all," Mu Qing said. "The one who tore down your golden palace is in the communication array right now, go interrogate him yourself."

With things reaching this point, Xie Lian was too embarrassed to run away just like that.

He cleared his throat. "It was me. I'm sorry."

The moment he spoke, that one who came after also fell silent.

Next to his ear, Ling Wen messaged him again. "Your Highness, that's Nan Yang."

"This one I knew," Xie Lian said. "But it seems he didn't recognize me."

"He did," Ling Wen said. "It's just that he spends more time roaming the mortal realm and rarely comes back to the Heavenly Capital, so he didn't know you had ascended again, that's all."

Nan Yang Zhenjun was the Martial God of the Southeast, possessed eight thousand temples, and was incredibly loved by the people.

His original name was Feng Xin, and eight hundred years ago, he was the number one heavenly general in the Xianle Palace of the Crown Prince.

Feng Xin was loyal to a fault, and had been Xie Lian's bodyguard since Xie Lian was fourteen years old. He grew up with the crown prince, they entered the heavens together, were banished together, and drifted together. Unfortunately, they didn't manage to endure the eight hundred years together. In the end, it was an unhappy separation as each went their own paths, never to meet again.

The master of forgone days, fallen so low as to be the laughingstock of the three realms with neither offerings, temples, nor believers, while the two servants under him had both passed a heavenly calamity and became great martial gods themselves who ruled over their own regions.

With such a situation, it was impossible for anyone not to think too much on it. If Xie Lian had to choose between Feng Xin and Mu Qing and say who made him feel the more awkward, he would answer “they’re both fine!”. But if bystanders had to choose whether they more wanted to see Xie Lian and Feng Xin brawl or Xie Lian and Mu Qing, then that would depend on the individual’s taste. After all, all three had sufficient reasons to beat each other up, so it would be a hard pick.

Which was why everyone was severely disappointed when Feng Xin hadn’t responded for the longest time, not answering a single word, then went invisible directly.

And so, Xie Lian concluded the scene on his own. He said, “I didn’t think things would get this out of hand. It wasn’t intentional, I do apologize to everyone for having caused trouble.”

Mu Qing replied sarcastically, “Oh, then what a coincidence.”

Coincidence. Xie Lian also thought this was such a coincidence. How did he so coincidentally hit Mu Qing and wreck Feng Xin’s palace? By any bystander’s perspective, this was practically an intentional revenge. But the truth was thus: he was just the type that could pick up the one poisoned cup in a thousand cups of wine.

But, it wasn’t like one could do anything about what others thought. So, Xie Lian could only reply, “I will do my utmost in compensating everyone’s golden palaces and the other damage, and pray you’ll all give me a little time.”

Even thinking with the tail of a whisk, it was obvious Mu Qing must’ve wanted to keep making snide remarks. But his golden palace didn’t suffer any damage after all, and the bell that fell on him was also chopped into two; if he continued to be so overbearing it’d be unseemly for someone of his status, thus, he also fell silent and went invisible. When Xie Lian saw that the awful messes themselves had already gone, he quickly fled too.

He was still contemplating deeply and seriously on where he could go to get these eight million, eight hundred and eighty thousand merits. Then the next day, Ling Wen requested for him at the Palace of Ling Wen.

Ling Wen was a heavenly official who managed the affairs of celestial personnel, and controlled the smooth-sailing and rapid career rise of humans. The entire palace was stacked full of official documents and scrolls from the ground to the ceiling; quite a shocking sight, and it could make one’s feet tremble. On the way over, every heavenly official who emerged from the Palace of Ling Wen was hauling piles of documents that were taller than the average person, their complexions ghastly pale, looking either like they were breaking down or numb.

After Xie Lian entered the great hall, Ling Wen turned around and got straight to the point.

“Your Highness, the emperor has a matter to request of you, will you give him a hand in assistance?”

There were plenty of “Zhenjun”s and “Yuanjun”s in the heavenly realm, but there was only one who could be addressed as the emperor. If this lord wanted to do anything, he needn’t to have asked anyone.

Thus, Xie Lian was a little taken aback before he replied, “What is it?”

Ling Wen handed him a scroll. “Recently, there have been a large number of grand believers from the north praying frequently, so things must not be peaceful there.”

What was called a “grand believer” usually referred to three types of people: the first type was the rich, those who paid for incense and religious services, and built temples for the gods; the second type was missionaries, who could promote the religion and give sermons; the third type was believers who possessed absolute faith in both heart and body.

Among the three, the first type dominated; the richer someone was, the more they feared and respected gods and ghosts, and there were as many rich people as there were fish in the sea. The third type was the least common, because if someone could genuinely reach that level, then their spiritual state must be extremely high, and they wouldn’t be far from ascension themselves.

The one spoken of here was, obviously, the first type.

“The emperor cannot attend to the north right now,” Ling Wen explained. “If you’re willing to make a trip over on his behalf, then in the future, regardless of the amount of offerings these grand believers give as a gesture of redeeming their vows, everything will be counted under your altar. What do you think?”

Xie Lian received the scroll with both hands and said, “Thank you.”

How could Xie Lian not tell that this was clearly Jun Wu helping him? He had only made it sound like he was asking if Xie Lian was willing to help him. At the moment he couldn’t find any phrase to express how he felt, besides those two words.

Ling Wen replied, “I’m only responsible for getting things done. If you want to say thanks, then wait ‘til the emperor returns and go thank him directly yourself. By the way, do you need me to lend you any spiritual devices?”

“No,” Xie Lian said. “Even if you gave me a spiritual device, I don’t have any spiritual power once I go down, so I can’t use it anyway.”

Having been banished twice, Xie Lian had lost all of his spiritual powers. Things were fine in the heavenly realm; the heavenly realm was the place where all the divine palaces stood, and spiritual qi was abundant, endless, and right at his fingertips for his own use. However, once back in the mortal realm, he was stunted. If he wanted to have a spiritual battle with anyone, he’d have to borrow said power from someone to make do; quite the inconvenience.

Ling Wen pondered for a moment. “Then it’s best if we call a few martial officials over to give you a hand.”

The martial gods that were currently in office either didn’t know him, or loathed him. Xie Lian knew that, at least. “Forget about that, too. No one will come.”

Ling Wen had her own considerations, however, and said, “I’ll give it a try.”

It wouldn’t matter whether she tried or not, but Xie Lian neither agreed nor protested and let her go off to try on her own. Thus, Ling Wen entered the communication array and clearly and loudly asked:

“Everyone, the emperor has an urgent matter in the north and is in desperate need of capable hands. Is there any martial highness who can assign two martial officials over from your palaces?”

Just as the words were spoken, Mu Qing’s voice popped up lightly. “I hear the emperor isn’t in the north at the moment, so this is probably a call for assistance from His Highness the Crown Prince, am I right?”

Xie Lian thought to himself, “Are you just guarding inside the communication array every day...”

Ling Wen thought the exact same thing, and dearly wanted to slap Mu Qing out of the array for obstructing her work, but still she smiled outwardly.

“Xuan Zhen, how come I keep seeing you inside the array these days? Seems like you’ve got free time on your hands lately? Congratulations.”

Mu Qing replied coolly, “My hand is injured, I’m currently nursing the injury.”

Every heavenly official thought to themselves, “That hand of yours can chop the mountains and the seas without breaking a sweat, what can splitting a bell do to you?”

At first, Ling Wen had wanted to wait until she had deceived two people into volunteering before saying anything. Yet not only did Mu Qing figure it out so easily, he had to say it out loud, too. Now for sure there wouldn't be anyone available. As expected, not a single soul responded, but Xie Lian didn't think anything of it.

He said, "I told you no one would come."

"If Xuan Zhen didn't say anything, I would've succeeded," Ling Wen said.

Xie Lian chuckled. "You worded it like a pipa player with half her face covered, and within the fog the flower looks three times more beautiful. Other people thought it was to do work for the Emperor, so of course they would've come. But if they came and discovered they'd be working with me, there would probably be a riot, and how can we cooperate under those conditions? Either way, I'm used to being alone; it's not like I lost any limbs during all these years, so we'll leave it as it is. Thanks for all the trouble, I'll be off now."

Ling Wen was out of ideas too, so she cupped her hands in salute. "Alright. Wishing everything goes smoothly for Your Highness down below, may heaven officials give their blessings."

"No paths are bound!" Xie Lian replied, waved his hand, and left in a dashing manner.

Three days later, the mortal realm, in the north.

There was a teashop by the side of a major street. Its storefront wasn't big and the shopkeepers were simple, but what was good about it was the scenery. There were mountains and waters, people and the city. It had it all, but not much; not much, but just right. If one was to have a chance meeting here in this landscape, it would definitely become a beautiful memory.

The Tea Master inside the shop was extremely idle, and when there weren't any customers, he'd bring a stool out to sit by the entrance to watch the mountains and the waters, the people and the city, quite cheery as he watched on. Today, he saw a white-clad cultivator who had come from the road in the distance; travel-worn, like he had walked for a long time.

When the man came close, he brushed past the small shop at first, but suddenly, he halted. Then, very slowly, he backed up. Lifting the tip of his bamboo hat, he looked up, glanced at the shop sign, and smiled.

"'Small Shop of Chance Encounter', what an interesting name."

While this man appeared somewhat tired, his expression was a cheerful one, so much so that the one watching him couldn't help but lift the corners of his lips too.

The man then asked, "Excuse me, is Mount Yujun nearby here?"

The Tea Master pointed in a direction for him. "It's around here."

That man let out a breath, and managed not to let out his entire soul while he was at it. He thought to himself: "I've finally made it."

This was indeed Xie Lian.

When he left the Heavenly Capital that day, he had originally set the desired landing location in the mortal realm, and it was somewhere nearby Mount Yujun. Yet who knew that when he left in such a dashing manner, and jumped down dashing, his sleeve was caught by a dashing cloud. Yes, it was caught by a cloud. He didn't know how his sleeve got caught, but either way he tumbled across the million-mile-high sky, and by the time he tumbled down he no longer knew where he was. After walking on foot for three days, he finally made it to the originally-intended landing point.

Xie Lian entered the shop and picked a table next to the window, ordering tea and snacks. After he finally settled, there was suddenly the sound of gongs being drummed, and the sound of weeping, outside.

He gazed towards the street and saw a group of men and women, both young and old, escorting a bright-red marriage sedan as they passed by.

The air surrounding this procession was downright odd. At first glance, it seemed like a marriage procession, but upon a closer look, the expressions on those people's faces were solemn, full of grief, fury, and terror. The only emotion not present was joy. It didn't look like they were festive at all, yet still they all wore red with flowers and made an ostentatious show. Such a scene truly was exceedingly peculiar. That Tea Master raised the copper teapot in his hand high and tipped it to pour tea. He also saw this scene play out, but he only shook his head before moving on.

Xie Lian watched as that bizarre procession disappeared into the distance and was deep in thought for a moment. Just as he was about to take out the scroll Ling Wen gave him to read it over once more, he suddenly sensed something dazzling flit by.

When he looked up, a silver butterfly flew past his eyes.

That silver butterfly was glittering and translucent, and as it fluttered through the air it left behind a sparkling bright trail in its wake. Xie Lian reached out towards it in spite of himself. This silver butterfly was incredibly intelligent; not only was it unalarmed, it even stopped on the tip of his finger. Its wings shimmered, beautiful and serene, and beneath the sunlight, it felt like the illusion of a dream that'd shatter with just the touch of a finger. A moment later, it flew away.

Xie Lian waved at it as a farewell, and when he turned his head back around, there were two more people sitting at his table.

There were four sides to this table; these two each took a side, one left, one right. They were both young men of eighteen or nineteen years of age. The one on the left side was taller, his brows deep and handsome, and his eyes carried a sort of unbridled wildness. The one on the right was extremely fair, elegant and poised; the only thing was, his expression was a bit overly-distant and cold, making him look as if he was extremely displeased. Actually, neither of them looked pleasant.

Xie Lian blinked. "You two are?"

The one on the right said, "Fu Yao."

"I wasn't asking for your names..." Xie Lian thought.

Just then, Ling Wen suddenly transmitted a voice message. "Your Highness, there are two junior martial officials from the Middle Court who have volunteered to come assist you. They've already descended to go find you, and should be there by now."

This Middle Court was naturally the opposite of the Upper Court. The heavenly officials of the heavenly realm could be crassly divided into two groups: those who ascended, and those who didn't. The Upper Court consisted of heavenly officials who ascended on their own abilities, and there were only about a hundred of them in the entire heavenly realm, extremely eminent. As for the ones in the Middle Court, they were brought up as "appointed generals". Strictly speaking, they should be addressed as "Peer Heavenly Officials", but when everyone addressed each other, they'd often take out this "Peer" in the name.

Then, if there was an Upper Court and a Middle Court, was there a Lower Court?

No.

Actually, there really was one when Xie Lian first ascended. At the time, the division was still "Upper Court" and "Lower Court". However, later everyone discovered a problem: when one was giving a self-introduction, it really sounded bad to say "I am xxxx, from the Lower Court". With the word "lower", it felt like one was lower compared to the others. It must be known that there were definitely geniuses and outstanding figures with impressive spiritual power among them; what they were missing was only that one heavenly calamity before they could become real heavenly officials. Who knew when that day would arrive? Thus, it was proposed that one word be changed, and it sounded so much better to say "I am xxxx, from the Middle Court"...even though they both meant the same thing. In any case, after it was changed, Xie Lian couldn't get used to it for the longest time.

Xie Lian stared at these two junior martial officials, each with an expression more upset than the other, looking fully unlike they had come “voluntarily”.

He couldn't help but ask, “Ling Wen, they don't look like they're here to help me work, more like they're here for my good-for-nothing head.”

Unfortunately, what he said couldn't be transmitted, and he couldn't hear Ling Wen's voice by his ears anymore either. He figured it was because he'd been away from the Heavenly Capital for too far and too long, and his spiritual powers had been depleted.

Without any choice, Xie Lian first flashed a smile at these two junior martial officials, then said, “Nan Feng and Fu Yao, was it? Let me first thank you both for volunteering to come help.”

The two only nodded, giving quite the attitude; so it seemed they must've come from the retainment of distinguished martial gods. Xie Lian got the tea sommelier to bring two more cups, then he raised his own teacup, and scraped the tea leaves aside.

He asked casually, “From which Highness did you guys come?”

“The Palace of Nan Yang,” Nan Feng replied.

“The Palace of Xuan Zhen,” Fu Yao answered.

“...”

Well, this was certainly horrifying.

Xie Lian gulped down his mouthful of tea and replied, “Did your generals tell you guys to come?”

The two answered in unison, “My general didn't know I was coming.”

Xie Lian pondered for a moment, and asked again, “Then, do you guys know who I am?”

If these two junior martial officials had come after they were deceived by Ling Wen and helped him, then when they went back they would get scolded by their own generals. It wouldn't be worth it.

“You're the Royal Highness the Crown Prince,” Nan Feng said.

“You're the justice of the mortal realm, the centre of the world,” Fu Yao said.

Xie Lian choked for a moment, then asked Nan Feng, uncertain, “Did he just roll his eyes?”

“Yes,” Nan Feng replied. “Make him scam.”

It wasn't any secret that Nan Yang and Xuan Zhen didn't get along. When Xie Lian first heard of this, he wasn't surprised in the least, because Feng Xin and Mu Qing didn't share any great friendship in the past. The only thing was that, back then, they were subordinates; so when the crown prince said "don't fight, you have to be good friends", then everyone held back and didn't flip out. When they were really upset they'd stab each other with words at most, but with how they were now, there wasn't any more need to be all fake.

Even the two heavenly officials' common believers in the southeast and southwest looked at each other with contempt; throughout the years, the Palace of Nan Yang and the Palace of Xuan Zhen had always seen each other as enemies. The two before him now were a classic example.

Fu Yao sneered. "Ling Wen Zhenjun said that all willing volunteers are welcome, so on what basis are you telling me to scram?"

The word "willing", said using that expression of his, really wasn't persuasive. Xie Lian said, "Let me just confirm. You two really came as willing volunteers? If not, then please don't force yourselves."

The two answered in unison, "I'm willing."

Looking at those two grim and dispirited faces, Xie Lian thought inwardly, "You guys actually meant 'I want to kill myself', right?"

"Well, in any case," Xie Lian continued. "Let's talk business first. I'm sure you both know what we're doing here in the north, right? So, I'm not gonna go over it from the top..."

"Nope," the two said in unison.

"..." Without any choice, Xie Lian could only take out the scroll. "Then I guess I'll start from the very beginning for you two."

It was said that, many years ago, there was a couple at the foot of Mount Yujun.

This couple were deeply in love. That groom waited for the marriage procession to arrive, but he waited for a long time and still there was no sight of the bride. Anxious, the groom went to the bride's house, but his father- and mother-in-law told him the bride had long since set out. Both families reported this to the authorities, and they searched all over to no avail. If she was eaten by the beasts of the mountain, then at the very least there'd be a leftover arm or leg; how could she just vanish from mid-air? Thus, it couldn't be helped that there were those who suspected that the bride wasn't willing to marry, so she colluded with the marriage procession and ran off. Yet who knew that many years later, when another couple was to marry, the same nightmare replayed.

Once again, the bride was gone. However, this time there was something left behind. On a small road, the search party found a foot that hadn't yet been fully eaten.

Ch.4: Three Clowns; Night Discussion on the Palace of Gigantic Masculinity

Ever since then, things had gotten out of control. In the hundred years since that incident, there had been a total of seventeen brides who went missing in the Mount Yujun area. Sometimes there'd be a couple of decades of peace, and sometimes two could go missing in the short span of one month. A horrific legend quickly spread: a ghost groom lived on Mount Yujun, and if a woman caught his eye, then he would kidnap her on the road and devour the marriage procession.

Originally, this affair wouldn't have been reported to the heavens. While seventeen brides had gone missing, there were thousands more who were perfectly fine. Either way, the girls couldn't be found, and they couldn't be protected even if everyone wanted to do so; everyone could only make do with the status quo. The only thing was, there were now fewer families willing to marry their daughters into this area, and the locals didn't dare to make a big show of their weddings, that was all. But it just so happened that the father of the seventeenth bride was a lord official who doted on his daughter. When he heard of the legend, he meticulously selected forty valiant and capable martial officials to escort the marriage procession of his daughter. But, the daughter was spirited off anyway.

Now this ghost groom had really stirred up the hornet's nest. Anyone this old lord official could find in the mortal realm couldn't do anything about it, so in a fit of outrage, he assembled a group of official friends and conducted a round of crazed religious services. He even followed the guidance of a great master and opened up his stores to feed the poor; something like that. It was a huge uproar, and finally it alerted a few heavenly officials above. Otherwise, it was practically impossible for the voices of insignificant mortals to reach the ears of gods in heaven.

"That's the gist of it," Xie Lian said.

Since those two still looked very uncooperative, he didn't know if they had actually been listening. If they didn't listen, then he'd have to tell the story again. Nan Feng looked up though, and frowned.

"Are there any similarities between the missing brides?"

"There are those who are poor and those who are rich, those who are beautiful and those who are ugly, there are lawful wives and there are concubines, in short: there's no pattern," Xie Lian said. "We can't determine at all what this ghost groom's preference is."

Nan Feng mnn-ed and picked up his teacup to take a sip, seeming to be thinking now. Fu Yao, on the other hand, never touched the tea Xie Lian had pushed in his direction, and had been languidly cleaning his fingers with a white handkerchief this entire time.

He said coolly as he wiped, “Your Highness, how would you know that it must be a ghost groom? This can’t be certain since no one’s ever seen it before, so how would we know if it’s a male or female, if it’s old or young? Aren’t you a little too quick to judge?”

Xie Lian grinned. “This scroll is a summary provided by a civil official from the Palace of Ling Wen, the ghost groom is just the common way to call it. However, what you’ve said makes a lot of sense.”

They spoke a bit more, and Xie Lian realized that the minds of these two junior martial officials were quite clear. While they didn’t appear very friendly, they weren’t muddled at all when discussing matters. Xie Lian felt relieved. Looking out the window, the hour was getting late, so the three left the small shop for the time being. Xie Lian put on his bamboo hat and walked for a bit before suddenly realizing the two behind him weren’t following, so he looked back, feeling puzzled. Turns out, the other two were also watching him in bewilderment.

Nan Feng asked, “Where are you going?”

“To find some place to settle for the night,” Xie Lian replied. “Fu Yao, why are you rolling your eyes again?”

Nan Feng continued his questions, still puzzled. “Then why are you heading to the wild bushes?”

Xie Lian often camped out in the wild and slept on the streets, and could spread out a cloth sheet and spend the night just like that. So naturally, he was ready to find some cave to start a campfire as he’d always done. But it was with Nan Feng’s reminder that he suddenly realized that Nan Feng and Fu Yao were both martial officials under a martial god; if there were any Nan Yang temples or Xuan Zhen temples around, then they could enter directly, so what need was there to sleep out in the wild?

A short while later, the three found a broken-down *tudi*⁹ shrine, in an incredibly inconspicuous little corner, that worshipped a round and small stone Lord of the Ground and Soil. With incense residue and shattered platters, it looked exceedingly desolate. Xie Lian called out a few times; this Lord of the Soil and Ground hadn’t been worshipped or called by anyone for years, so when he suddenly heard the call, he snapped open his eyes and saw three people standing before his shrine. The two on the left and right respectively were both enveloped in a sheen of spiritual light like the nouveau riche, their faces barely visible at all, and the deity jumped in alarm.

His trembling voice said, “Do the three heavenly officials have anything to command of this humble one?”

⁹ Lord of Soil and Ground is the tutelary deity of local communities.

Xie Lian inclined his head. “No commands. I just wanted to ask if there are any local temples that worship either General Nan Yang or General Xuan Zhen?”

The Lord of Soil and Ground didn't dare to affront him and replied, “Um um um...” Then in a quick divination with the pinch of his fingers, he answered, “There's a local town temple five miles from here, and the one worshipped is, is, is the General Nan Yang.”

Xie Lian put his hands together in prayer. “Many thanks.”

However, that Lord of Soil and Earth was blinded by the two balls of spiritual power on both sides of Xie Lian, so he quickly vanished. Xie Lian fumbled out a few coins and placed them in front of the altar shrine, and when he saw there were fallen burnt-out incense sticks on the ground, he picked them up. Throughout the entire thing, Fu Yao was rolling his eyes so hard Xie Lian almost wanted to ask if his eyes were tired.

After walking five miles, they indeed spotted a local town temple standing fiery-red by the roadside. While the temple was small, it had everything, and people were going in and out of it, extraordinarily lively. The three concealed their forms and entered the temple; the one worshipped within the hall was a clay divine statue of the martial god Nan Yang, donned in armour with a bow in hand.

When Xie Lian saw this divine statue, he mhm-ed inwardly.

In a small temple in the countryside, the craft and paint of the divine statues could be expected to be rough, but on the whole, this statue was still significantly different from Xie Lian's own impression of Feng Xin.

However, distorted divine statues were something that every heavenly official had gotten used to already. Nevermind that their own moms wouldn't recognize them, there were heavenly officials who didn't even recognize themselves when they saw their own statues sometimes. After all, there weren't many artisan masters who had actually seen the real forms of the heavenly officials, so the statues were either distorted beautifully or distorted hideously. One could only rely on the posture, spiritual device, attire, and crown to determine which heavenly official this was.

Usually, the more affluent the area, the more the divine statue would please the heavenly official. The more impoverished a place, the worse the taste of the craftsmanship, and the more tragic the sculpture became. To speak of the present, there was only General Xuan Zhen whose divine statues were in a better situation. Why? Because for everyone else, if their statues were ugly, then whatever, leave it be. But when Mu Qing saw his statues were hideously-sculpted, he would either secretly destroy them and then make people resculpt, or appear in dreams to express his displeasure. This went on for a long time, and the grand believers had all learned that they had to find an artisan master who could sculpt beautifully!

All of the temples of Xuan Zhen were exactly the same as their general: particular and tasteful. After Fu Yao entered the Temple of Nan Yang, for two whole hours he thoroughly criticized this statue of Nan Yang from head to toe, something about how the design was deformed, the colours tacky, the craftsmanship crude, the taste bizarre. Xie Lian watched as the blue veins on Nan Feng's forehead slowly popped out, and thought he best quickly find another topic of conversation to change the subject.

It just so happened there was another girl who entered to pray, and she very sincerely knelt down.

Xie Lian spoke up warmly. "Speaking of, Nan Yang Zhenjun's main domain is in the Southeast, I'd never imagine you guys would have such a following in the north too."

When people constructed temples and palaces, they were actually imitating the divine palaces of the heavenly realm; as for divine statues, they were reflections of the heavenly officials' venerable selves. The temples were where the believers assembled and attracted worship, becoming an important source of spiritual power for the heavenly officials. And due to various reasons - such as geography, history, and customs - people of different regions often worshipped different gods. A heavenly official's spiritual power would be unleashed to the max on their own turf, and this was the main domain advantage. Only to a heavenly official like the Great Martial Emperor, who had believers from all over the world and possessed temples everywhere, was the notion of a main domain meaningless. It was a good thing that his own general's divine temple would be so popular even outside his main domain, Nan Feng should be proud, but judging by his expression, this was very much not the case.

On the side, Fu Yao gave a light smirk. "Yes, yes, he's deeply loved."

Xie Lian said, "But, I just have a question that I don't know if..."

"If you're going to say 'you don't know if it's appropriate', then don't say anything," Nan Feng said.

"No, I was going to say 'don't know if anyone has the answer'," Xie Lian thought.

But, he had a feeling that it wouldn't be good if he said it, so in the end he decided to change the subject again.

Yet unexpectedly, Fu Yao languidly said, "I know what you want to ask. You must be wondering why there are so many female believers coming to worship?"

That was indeed the question Xie Lian had in mind.

There had always been fewer female believers than males in the martial gods' stream; only he himself was an exception, eight hundred years ago. However, the reason for this exception was very simple, it was only two words: Good-Looking.

He knew very well that it wasn't because he was distinguished, or because he had extraordinary spiritual powers. It was merely due to the fact that his divine statue was good-looking, and his palace temples were handsome too. Practically all of his palace temples were constructed by the royal family, and the highest-skilled experts and artisans of the kingdom were summoned to sculpt the divine statues according to his face. Besides, because of that phrase "Body in Abyss, Heart in Paradise", the artisans often liked adding flowers to his divine statues, and liked planting a sea of flower trees in his temples. Thus, at the time, he had another title: "The Flower-Crowned Martial God". The lady believers liked that his divine statues were good-looking, and liked that his palace temples were filled with flowers, and by that alone they were willing to walk in casually to pray.

But the usual martial gods often had their faces sculpted to be serious, savage, and cold, because their killing aura was too great. So when lady believers saw, they would rather pray to the bodhisattvas instead. While this statue of Nan Yang had none of the killing aura, it was even further from good-looking, yet there were more female believers praying than there were males. Nan Feng didn't seem to want to answer this question either, so it was making Xie Lian even more curious. Just then, that girl finished her worship, rose to her feet to reach for the incense, then spun around.

After this spin, Xie Lian nudged the other two. The other two were already very annoyed, and after his nudge, they looked, and whoosh, both their faces dropped.

"Too hideous!" Fu Yao exclaimed.

Xie Lian choked for a moment, then chided, "Fu Yao, you can't talk about girls like that."

If he must be honest, what Fu Yao said was true. That girl's face was incomparably flat, like someone had slapped her face into a pancake. The five features were so plain it almost seemed to be a mistake; if they must be described, then only "crooked nose and slanted eyes" could be used.

However, Xie Lian didn't register whether she was beautiful or ugly at all. The main thing was, when she spun around, there was an enormous tear on the back of her skirt, and he really couldn't pretend he didn't see it.

Fu Yao was startled at first, but he quickly calmed down. The popped veins on the corners of Nan Feng's forehead also instantly vanished.

Seeing his face change colours so drastically, Xie Lian quickly soothed, "Don't panic, don't panic."

That girl took the incense and knelt down anew, and said as she prayed, “May General Nan Yang give his blessings, this believer Xiao Ying prays for that ghost groom to be captured soon, so no other innocents will be harmed by him...”

She was sincere and devout in her prayers and didn't sense anything peculiar going on behind her at all, nor was she aware that there were three men crouching next to the foot of the divine statue she was praying to.

Xie Lian fretted. “What do we do? We can't let her walk out like this? Everyone on her way home will see.”

Besides, judging by that tear on the back of her skirt, it was obvious someone had intentionally ripped it with a sharp object. So she probably wouldn't just be seen by a crowd of onlookers, she would also be publicly laughed at, and that would truly be a round of considerable humiliation.

Fu Yao was unconcerned. “Don't ask me. The one she's praying to isn't my General Xuan Zhen. ‘One shall not look at impropriety’. I saw nothing.”

Meanwhile, blood was draining from Nan Feng's face. He only knew to wave, not talk; a perfectly fine, unbridled, strapping young man was forcibly rendered mute, completely helpless. And so, Xie Lian had no choice but to take action himself, taking off his outer robe and throwing it down below. That outer robe flapped in the air for a moment and drifted down onto the body of that girl, blocking that very inelegant tear on the back of her skirt. The three sighed a breath in unison.

However, this breeze truly felt wicked and startled that girl. She looked around, took off the robe, and was confused for a moment before she placed it onto the altar. She was actually completely unaware, and after she had stuck in the incense, she made to head out. If they let her out to walk around like that, the little maiden would probably not have the face to look at anyone ever again. The two on each of Xie Lian's sides were either frozen or frozen, completely useless however you wanted them, and he sighed. Nan Feng and Fu Yao only felt the space beside their bodies empty all of a sudden, and Xie Lian had already taken form and jumped down.

The lamplight inside the temple was dim, and a small breeze rose from his leap, causing the firelight to flicker. That girl Xiao Ying only saw a blur before her eyes and a man suddenly emerged from the darkness, reaching out to her with his upper body bare, and she was scared out of her wits right then and there.

Just as expected, she screamed. Just as Xie Lian was about to speak, that girl's slap already struck out in a flash, and she yelled, “HARASSMENT!”

PA! And Xie Lian was slapped just like that.

The slap was clear and crisp, and the two crouching on top of the altar both felt the side of their face twitch at the same time.

Xie Lian wasn't mad at the strike however, and only forcefully stuffed the outer robe into her arms, swiftly whispering something. That girl was greatly alarmed, felt her behind, and suddenly flushed red in the face. Tears welled up in her eyes; who knows whether it was anger or indignation. She clutched that outer robe Xie Lian gave her, and dashed out covering her face, leaving Xie Lian standing there half-bare. After she left, the temple was empty. A cool breeze crossed through the hall, and all of a sudden, it was a little cold.

He rubbed his cheek, and with that red hand-mark on half of his face, he turned to the other two. "Alright, everything's solved."

Nan Feng pointed at him. "Did...you tear your wounds?"

Xie Lian looked down and oh-ed.

After undressing, what was revealed was a body smooth and fair like jade. Except, his chest was heavily wrapped by layer after layer of white cloth, firmly bound; even his neck and wrists were wrapped in bandages. Innumerable small cuts crawled out from the edges of the white bandages, truly somewhat startling.

He figured his sprained neck was pretty much recovered by now, so Xie Lian started unbinding his bandages.

Fu Yao glanced at him, then questioned, "Who was it?"

"What?" Xie Lian asked.

"Who fought you?" Fu Yao demanded.

"Fought?" Xie Lian was confused, "No one?"

"Then all these injuries on your body..." Nan Feng was hesitant.

Xie Lian looked at them blankly. "I fell on my own."

"..."

These were indeed the injuries from when he tumbled down from heaven three days ago. If it was from a fight with another person, then he actually might not have been hurt to this level.

Fu Yao grumbled something, but it wasn't clear. Either way, it definitely wasn't praising him for his fortitude, so Xie Lian didn't bother to ask, focusing only on taking off the heavy layer of bandages from his neck. The next second, Nan Feng and Fu Yao's eyes hardened and fell on his neck.

A black collar was encircled around his snow-white neck.

Ch.5: Three Clowns; Night Discussion on the Palace of Gigantic Masculinity 2

Sensing their stare, Xie Lian gave a smile and turned around. “First time seeing a real cursed shackle?”

Cursed shackle. Like its name, it was a shackle formed by a curse.

Heavenly officials who were banished from heaven would have the mark of sin forged by the wrath of heaven branded onto their bodies, forming a fetter that sealed spiritual powers away, never to be freed. Just like a brand on the face, or chains shackling hands and feet, this was a form of punishment, and the mark of a warning. It was both terrifying and humiliating.

As the laughingstock of the three realms who was banished twice, of course Xie Lian had such a cursed shackle on his body. It was impossible for these two junior martial officials not to have heard of this before, but, there was still a little discrepancy between having heard and seeing it personally. Thus, Xie Lian could understand why they would react the way they did.

He figured this thing might be making the two junior officials wary and uncomfortable. After all, it wasn't like it was a good thing.

At first, he was using the excuse of searching for clothes in order to step outside, but he was stopped by Fu Yao's eyeroll and his comments:

“If you go out there looking like that, you'd be called a pervert.”

In the end, it was thanks to Nan Feng, who tossed him a light attendant's¹⁰ robe that he'd grabbed from the back of the temple, that Xie Lian was able to stop being so indecent. However, even after they'd settled back down, it felt like the incident earlier had caused the mood to become somewhat awkward.

And so, Xie Lian took out the scroll given by the Palace of Ling Wen and said, “Do you guys want to take another look at this?”

Nan Feng raised his eyes and gave him a look. “I've looked through it already, I think he's the one who needs to take a better look at it.”

“What do you mean I'm the one who needs to take a better look at it?” Fu Yao countered. “That scroll isn't detailed at all, completely worthless, and you think it's worth another look?”

Hearing him say that the scroll was worthless, Xie Lian couldn't help but feel a little sad for the ashen-faced junior civil officials at the Palace of Ling Wen who put this together.

¹⁰ A term for a temple attendant in charge of incense and candles.

Fu Yao then continued, “Oh yeah, where were we? The Temple of Nan Yang—why does Nan Yang have so many female believers, right?”

Alright. Xie Lian put the scroll away and rubbed his pulsating forehead. He knew now. Tonight, no one was going to look through it! If they weren’t going to focus on the real business, then why not see what the side business was all about.

Turns out, other than the royal highness who spent centuries collecting junk in the mortal realm, every god and buddha knew that there was a period of time when Nan Yang Zhenjun Feng Xin was called “Ju Yang¹¹ Zhenjun”. The man himself deeply despised this title, and everyone only had one word for his experience: “Injustice”! Originally, the correct writing was “Ju Yang” for “Perfect Masculinity”¹², but the reason it was wrongly transmitted was because of a certain incident.

Many years ago, there was a king constructing temples and palaces. In order to demonstrate his faith and sincerity, he personally drafted the titles of every temple and palace’s establishment plaque. But when it came to the Palace of Ju Yang, for some reason, he wrote it as the Palace of “Ju Yang”¹³.

This gave the officials responsible for the construction much grief. They just couldn’t figure out whether His Majesty changed this intentionally or if this was an accidental mistake. If it was intentional, why wasn’t there a clear decree that indicated yes, this is what We want to change to? If it wasn’t intentional, why would such a low-level mistake be committed? It wasn’t like they could say “Your Majesty, you’re wrong”. Who knows if His Majesty would think they were being sarcastic about his carelessness? That they were hinting that his knowledge was shallow? His heart insincere? This was His Majesty’s royal writing, were they going to trash it if they weren’t going to use it?

Divine beings had hearts most difficult to discern, and the officials were in pure agony. After much deliberation, instead of causing grief for His Majesty, they might as well cause grief for Ju Yang Zhenjun.

It had to be said that they made the right decision. When the emperor discovered that Perfect Masculinity had become Gigantic Masculinity, he didn’t make any statements about it, but instead, invited a bunch of scholars to scour the ancient texts with great vigour to find countless miniscule reasons and compose many essays to strongly prove that it should’ve been Gigantic Masculinity in the first place, and that Perfect Masculinity was wrong. In any case, every Palace of Perfect Masculinity in the country became a Palace of Gigantic Masculinity overnight.

¹¹ Ju Yang [巨陽], Gigantic Masculinity, or, a euphemism for “giant penis”. :)

¹² Ju Yang [俱陽], Yang being the masculine part of the Yin Yang. The word also means “Sun” and “Living”.

¹³ From “Perfect Masculinity” to “Gigantic Masculinity”.

Feng Xin, who got his divine title changed so randomly, didn't find this out until decades later. He basically never bothered to look closely at the signs of his own temples, but one day, he suddenly felt rather baffled. How come there were so many women coming to pray in his temples, and each of them were flushed with shyness on their cheeks? And what in the world were they praying for when offering incense?!

After he figured it out, he charged to the peak of the ninth sky and shouted his curses to the scorching sun and the vast skies.

Every heavenly official was shaken by this.

After he was done cursing, there was nothing he could do, so he could only relent. It wasn't like he could pick on those women who were praying so sincerely, so he forced himself to listen for many years. It wasn't until a decent ruler came along who thought Gigantic Masculinity was horribly obscene that it was changed to Nan Yang¹⁴. Nonetheless, no one forgot what else this martial god could grant besides his duty as a martial god. Only, everyone also upheld an unspoken rule: never use that name to call him. At the same time, they also upheld a general consensus: how to evaluate this Nan Yang Zhenjun? One word: GOOD!

Nan Feng's face was already as dark as the bottom of an aged wok, yet Fu Yao was suddenly feeling poetic, and he recited demurely:

*“Friend of women
A trusty companion
Ask for a son
Most powerful is he
The secret formula
To bolster masculinity
A son in your prayers
Nan Yang delivers.”¹⁵ Ahaha, ahaha, ahahahahaha...”*

Xie Lian very kindly held back his laugh, leaving a bit of face for Nan Yang in front of his divine statue. Nan Feng, however, was outraged.

“Don't you be acting all sarcastic here, if you're really so bored, go sweep the floor!”

The moment those words came out, Fu Yao's face also darkened to the colour of a pot bottom. If the Palace of Nan Yang couldn't stand to hear those two words, then the Palace of Xuan Zhen couldn't stand to hear people bring up the term “sweep”. This was because, when Mu Qing was still an errand boy at the Royal Holy Pavilion, what he did all day was serve tea, deliver water, sweep, and change the sheets for Xie Lian at the Palace of the Crown Prince. One day, Xie Lian saw him silently reciting training incantations while sweeping. He was thus moved by his spirit for learning and working hard under such harsh and difficult circumstances, and thus persuaded the Guoshi to take him in as a disciple.

¹⁴ Meaning: “Southern Sun”.

¹⁵ I added an extra line to make it rhyme in English.

How to best describe this incident? This could be considered grand or miniscule, could be humiliating or a compliment, it depended entirely on the individual in question. Obviously, the individual in question had taken this as the humiliation of his life, since Mu Qing and every martial warrior under his command would flip out whenever they heard the word “sweep”.

Sure enough, Fu Yao steadied himself, then after throwing a look at Xie Lian—who was waving his hand, appearing fully innocent—he sneered.

“Listening to you, those who don’t know would think your Palace of Nan Yang sides with the Palace of the Crown Prince and fights hard for his injustices.”

Nan Feng sneered too. “Your general certainly is the ungrateful one that bites the hand that feeds him, what more can I say?”

“Um...”

Xie Lian was just trying to intercept when Fu Yao ahaha-ed and said, “The kettle calling the pot black, what right do you have to make accusations?”

“...”

Listening to them turning him into the mallet to beat each other onto the spine of the heavenly official who stood right up there on the altar, Xie Lian finally couldn’t take it any longer.

“Wait, hold up. Stop, stop.”

Of course no one paid him any mind, and they even started throwing fists. Who knows who threw the first punch, either way, the altar was split in half just like that, and the platters of fruits rolled all over the ground. Seeing how there was no way he could stop this fight anymore, Xie Lian sat himself in the corner and heaved a sigh.

“What a sin.”

Then he picked up a small steamed bun that had rolled to his feet, dusted off its skin, and was about to bite down when Nan Feng saw from the corners of his eyes and immediately slapped it away.

“DON’T EAT THAT!”

Fu Yao stopped too, and appeared shaken and disgusted. “How can you eat it when it’s rolled into dirt?!”

Xie Lian used this chance to raise his hand. “Stop, stop stop. I have something to say.”

He separated the two and said, looking amicable, “First, that highness the crown prince you two speak of happens to be me. This Highness hasn’t even said anything, so don’t sling me around like a weapon to attack each other.” He paused for a moment, then added, “I don’t think your generals would ever behave like this. If you two act so indecorously, you’ll ruin their reputations.”

When those words were spoken, the faces of the other two changed to something indiscernible.

Xie Lian continued, “Second, you two are here to help me, right? So do you listen to me, or do I listen to you?”

It was a moment before the two replied, “Listen to you.”

While their expressions looked like they were saying “Listen to you? Dream on”, Xie Lian was already very satisfied. Then, PA!, he put his hands together in prayer.

“Good. Now thirdly, the most important thing—if you must throw something, then please throw me instead of food.”

Nan Feng finally dug out the steamed bun that Xie Lian had clutched in his grip hoping for a chance to eat it. He said, looking like he couldn’t take it anymore, “If it’s fallen to the ground, then don’t eat it!”

The next day, back at the Chance Encounter shop.

The Tea Master was once again by the entrance with his leg up relaxing, and saw the three approaching from far away. The cultivator in light and simple white robes, with a bamboo hat hung on his back, led the way while two tall black-clad youths trailed behind him.

That cultivator had come strolling, his arms crossed. He spoke languidly, sounding more idle than he did, “Owner, three cups of tea please.”

The Tea Master smiled. “Coming!”

Then he thought to himself, “Those three silly guys are here again. What a shame, looking each more sightly than the other, but their brains are each more damaged than the next. What god, what ghost, what heavens? When you’re mental, what good is being handsome?”

Xie Lian still picked the spot next to the window, and after they’d settled, Nan Feng spoke up.

“Why do we have to come here to discuss things? You sure there won’t be people listening in?”

Xie Lian replied warmly, “It’s fine. Even if other people hear us, they won’t care, they’ll only think we’re insane.”

“In order to avoid the three of us continuing to waste each other’s time like this, let’s lay it out,” Xie Lian said. “Now that we’ve calmed down for a night, have you guys thought of any ideas?”

Fu Yao’s eyes flashed, and he said coldly, “Kill it!”

“No shit!” Nan Feng said.

“Nan Feng, don’t be so rude. Fu Yao didn’t say anything wrong,” Xie Lian said. “The way to solve this problem is to kill the creature, but the problem is, where do we go? What are we killing? How do we kill it? I suggest...”

Right then, the sound of gongs and drums came from the main street, and the three looked out the window.

It was that procession of “delivering family” again, looking bleak and tragic. This party of men and horses blew their instruments to the utmost, hollering and cheering as if they were afraid people couldn’t hear what they were about.

Nan Feng frowned. “Didn’t they say the people around Mount Yujun don’t dare to make a big show of these ceremonies anymore?”

This procession consisted of large, strong, and buff men, their expressions and muscles both taut, and cold sweat oozed from their forehead, like they weren’t carrying a festive and cheery bridal sedan, but a guillotine that’d end their lives early. It made one wonder just what kind of person was seated in that sedan.

After humming for a moment, just as Xie Lian was thinking of going to check things out, a sinister wind blew by, raising one of the curtains on the side walls of the sedan.

The figure within the sedan behind the curtain was lying in a really odd position within the sedan. Her head was bent in an awkward angle, and beneath the bridal veil revealed bright red lips, the smile of which was overly exaggerated. The sedan tipped and the covering fell, exposing a pair of bulged eyes staring their way.

From the looks of it, this was clearly a woman who had her neck wrung, and was laughing uproariously at them soundlessly.

Perhaps it was because the sedan carriers were shaking too hard, but that bridal sedan wasn't steady in the least, so that woman's head bounced along with the bumps. They bumped and bumped, and THUD!, a head fell off and rolled onto the street.

And the headless body sitting inside the sedan also fell forward — BANG! the entire person crashed out of the sedan.

Ch.6: Ghost Takes a Bride; Crown Prince Mounts the Bridal Sedan

One of the sedan carriers wasn't paying attention and stepped onto an arm. He screamed without thinking, then instantly the entire wedding procession exploded. Good going! A band of people came out of nowhere, whipped out their shining broadswords, and yelled.

"WHAT'S THE MATTER?? HAS IT COME??"

It was a huge commotion on the streets. When Xie Lian looked closely, that body with its head severed wasn't actually a real person, but a wooden puppet.

"Too ugly!" Fu Yao commented again.

The Tea Master just happened to be bringing the copper teapot over. Xie Lian recalled his attitude yesterday, so he asked, "Owner, I saw that group of people banging drums and gongs yesterday, so what's that they're doing today?"

"Seeking their own ruin," the Tea Master replied.

"Hahaha..." Xie Lian wasn't surprised. "Are they trying to lure out that Ghost Groom?"

"What else do you think?" the Tea Master replied. "The dad of a missing bride is awarding a great sum of money to find his daughter and capture that Ghost Groom, so that group has been billowing smoke around, all day every day."

Fu Yao commented disgustedly, "If I was the Ghost Groom, I'd wipe out this entire troupe for sending such an ugly thing to me."

"Fu Yao, you're not speaking as an Immortal should," Xie Lian said. "And, can you change that eye-rolling habit of yours? Why don't you set a small target for yourself first, and roll only five times a day or something like that?"

"Set fifty times a day and it won't be enough!" Nan Feng said.

Just then, a little youth suddenly poked out from the procession; spunky and spirited, he was the leader, judging by sight. He raised his arm and hollered, "LISTEN TO ME, LISTEN TO ME! It's completely useless if we keep this up! How many times have we made this trip now in these past few days? Has the Ghost Groom ever shown itself??"

The group of big men agreed and started to grumble, and that little youth said, "I think, since we started this, we should just do it, and charge right into Mount Yujun. We'll search the mountain and drag that ugly freak out to kill! I'll lead the way. Any good, brave men can follow me, kill the ugly freak, and we'll split the reward money!"

There were only a small and scattered number of men at first who answered his call, but the voices gradually grew bigger and bigger. At the end, everyone was roaring in agreement, actually sounding rather great in strength.

Xie Lian wondered, "Ugly freak? Owner, what's with the ugly freak they're talking about?"

The Tea Master replied, "Apparently this Ghost Groom is an ugly creature living in Mount Yujun, and it's because it's too ugly that no women love it. Which was why it grew hate from its heart, robbing others of their brides to ruin their happy occasion as a result."

The scroll from the Palace of Ling Wen didn't record this. Xie Lian wondered, "Is that explanation true? Is it not speculation?"

"Who knows," the Tea Master replied. "Apparently quite a few people have seen it; its entire face wrapped in bandages, with savage eyes. It doesn't know how to talk and can only growl like a wolfhound. The rumours are bizarre."

Right then, a young girl's voice came from the street. "Don't...don't anyone listen to him, don't go, Mount Yujun is a very dangerous place..."

The one who'd spoken while hidden at a street corner was that girl Xiao Ying, who was praying for blessings at the Temple of Nan Yang last night.

When Xie Lian saw her face, he could feel his own aching, and subconsciously rubbed it.

That youth looked grim when he saw her, and he shoved her. "What's a little woman doing, interrupting when the big men are talking?"

Xiao Ying cowered a little when she was shoved, but then she gathered her courage and said in a small voice, "Don't anyone listen to him. Whether it's faking a wedding procession or searching the mountain, aren't you all seeking your own deaths, doing something so dangerous?"

"Well, don't you make it sound swell," the youth rebuked. "Us guys are putting our lives on the line to exterminate evil for the people, but what about you? Selfish and greedy, refusing to play the role of the fake bride and get on the sedan, you don't have half the courage of the citizens here, but now you're here to obstruct us? What are you scheming?"

With every word he shoved the girl once, so hard that everyone inside the shop all frowned. Xie Lian looked down and unwrapped the bandage on his wrist while he listened to the Tea Master talk.

"This little mob boss wanted to coax that girl into playing the fake bride before, his words sweet like honey. But the girl refused, so now he's changed face."

On the street, the group of burly men also exclaimed, "Don't stand there and block our way anymore, move aside!"

When Xiao Ying saw this, her flat face was flushed bright red, tears rolling in her eyes. "Why...why must you talk like this?"

That youth continued, "Did I lie? I told you to play the fake bride, but did you refuse?"

Xiao Ying said, "I didn't dare to, but, you didn't have to slash, slash my dress..."

The moment she mentioned this, that youth instantly jumped as if he was kicked where it hurt. He pointed at her nose, yelling, "You ugly freak, don't slander people around here! Me? Slash your dress? Are you taking me for a blind? Who knows if it wasn't you wanting to flash other people, and you slashed it yourself? Who knows if anyone would want to see an ugly face like yours even with a ripped dress, don't blame this on me!"

Nan Feng couldn't bear to listen anymore, crushing the teacup in his hand. Just as he was about to stand up, however, a white silhouette drifted by. At the same time, the little mob boss over there who could hop to three feet tall, yelled then fell on his butt on the ground, holding his face while blood dripped out from between the cracks of his fingers.

No one in the crowd had the time to see what exactly happened before the boy was already sitting on the ground. At first they thought it was Xiao Ying who went berserk. Yet who knew, when they looked at her, they couldn't actually see her anymore because a white-clad cultivator had come and shielded her.

Xie Lian tucked his hands in his sleeves, not bothering to look back at all, and smiled happily at Xiao Ying, bending slightly at the waist to match her eyes. "My lady, I was wondering if I might have the pleasure of inviting you inside for tea?"

The little mob boss on the ground over there was feeling excruciating pain from his mouth and nose, and his entire face was in agony, as if he was just whipped brutally by a steel whip. Yet this cultivator clearly didn't carry any weapons, nor did he see how the man had struck or what he had used to strike.

He stumbled to crawl up, then brandished his blade and yelled, "THIS MAN USED WICKED MAGIC!"

When the group of burly men behind him all heard "wicked magic", they all brandished their broadswords. Yet unexpectedly, Nan Feng suddenly struck with his hand from behind, and CRACK!, a pillar snapped and broke.

Having witnessed such godly strength, the group of burly men instantly lost colour on their faces, and fear was stricken in that little mob boss's heart. Still, he remained stubborn and shouted at them as he ran away.

"I'll concede defeat today, where did you fellow good men come from, leave your names, and we'll meet again someday..."

Nan Feng didn't even care to answer him, but next to him, Fu Yao answered, "Very kind, very kind, this one is from the Temple of Ju..."

Nan Feng struck out another hand, and these two began to spar soundlessly. Xie Lian wanted to invite the little maiden in to sit for a bit at first, order some fruit tea or something, yet she walked off on her own first while wiping her tears. Watching that retreating back, he sighed, then went inside by himself.

When he went in, the Tea Master said, "Remember to pay for that pillar."

Thus, when Xie Lian sat down, he turned to Nan Feng. "Remember to pay for that pillar."

Nan Feng, "..."

"Before that, let's focus on the proper business," Xie Lian said. "Who can lend me some spiritual powers? I need to enter the communication array to verify some information."

Nan Feng raised his hand, the two clapped hands as an oath, counting it as binding an extremely simple contract. Thus, Xie Lian could finally enter the communication array again.

The moment he entered, he heard Ling Wen say, "Your Highness finally managed to borrow some spiritual powers? Is everything in the north going well? Were the two junior martial officials who volunteered themselves any help?"

Xie Lian looked up and glanced at the pillar Nan Feng snapped with his palm earlier. Then, he glanced at Fu Yao who was currently resting with his eyes closed with a cold and distant face.

He then replied, "The two junior martial officials both have their own values, and are both talents worth nurturing."

Ling Wen chuckled. "Then we must congratulate General Nan Yang and General Xuan Zhen. On Your Highness' words, the future of these junior martial officials must be infinite, and will soon ascend themselves."

It didn't take long before Mu Qing's voice surfaced coolly, "He didn't inform me of this outing, so let him be. Either way, I don't know anything."

"You really are guarding the communication array all day..." Xie Lian thought.

"Your Highness," Ling Wen said. "Where have you settled? The north is ruled by General Pei, his worshippers are abundant. So if Your Highness has any need, you can stay temporarily at his Temples of Ming Guang."

"There's no need for the trouble," Xie Lian replied. "We didn't find any Temple of Ming Guang nearby, so we settled in a Temple of Nan Yang. A quick question, Ling Wen, about this Ghost Groom, do you have any more information?"

"Yes," Ling Wen replied. "The result of its rank evaluation was just processed by my palace. It's a Savage."

A Savage!

In regard to the monsters, demons, and ghosts that caused great turmoil within the mortal realm, the Palace of Ling Wen had categorized them based on their abilities. The ranks were as follows: Malice, Menace, Savage, and Supreme.

"Malice" murdered one, "Menace" could murder a sect, "Savage" could slaughter an entire city. As for the most fearsome "Supremes", once they were born into this world, they were destined to bring ruin to countries and people, and bring complete disorder to the world.

This Ghost Groom that had been holing up in Mount Yujun was actually ranked a "Savage", only one level lower than that of a "Supreme". That meant no one who saw it could withdraw unharmed.

Thus, after Xie Lian exited the communication array and informed the other two of this, Nan Feng said, "What 'ugly bandaged male', that's probably just rumour. Or they saw something else."

"There's another possibility," Xie Lian said. "Like for example, under certain circumstances this Ghost Groom will not or can not cause harm."

Fu Yao said disapprovingly, "The Palace of Ling Wen is so inefficient, taking this long only to come up with a rank, what's the use!"

"At the very least, we have an understanding of the enemy's strength," Xie Lian said. "But since this is a Savage, then the Ghost Groom's spiritual powers must be very strong, and a fake puppet can't deceive it at all. If we want to lure it out, then we can't cast a camouflage spell on puppets for the wedding procession, and we can't carry weapons either. The most important thing is, the bride must be a live person."

"We'll just find a woman on the street to use as bait," Fu Yao said.

Nan Feng, however, rejected the idea. "No."

"Why not?" Fu Yao said. "Not willing? Then give them a sum of money, and they'll be willing."

"Fu Yao, even if there are women who are willing, it's best if we don't employ this method," Xie Lian said. "This Ghost Groom is a Savage. If there are any mishaps, nothing will happen to us, but if the bride is kidnapped, a weak lady won't be able to escape or fight back, so it's only certain death for her."

"If we can't use women, then we can only use men," Fu Yao said.

Nan Feng said, "Where are we going to find a man who's willing to..."

He trailed off, and the two gazed over.

Xie Lian was still sitting there, smiling. "???"

Night-time, the Temple of Nan Yang.

Xie Lian emerged from behind the back of the temple, with his hair down and flowing. The two guarding by the temple entrance looked, and Nan Feng cursed right on the spot, "FUCK!!!", then charged out.

Xie Lian was speechless for a moment, then said, "Was that necessary?"

No matter who looked, they could tell with one glance that this was a handsome man with gentle brows. But this was precisely the reason why not many would be able to stand the image of a perfectly good, handsome man wearing a woman's wedding dress. Nan Feng, for example, couldn't stand it at all, which was why his reaction was so extreme.

Xie Lian saw Fu Yao was still standing there, scanning him up and down with complicated eyes.

He asked, "Is there anything you wish to say?"

Fu Yao nodded. "If I was the Ghost Groom and someone sent a woman like this to me..."

"You'd wipe out the entire town, was it?" Xie Lian finished for him.

Fu Yao replied frigidly, "No, I'd kill the woman."

Xie Lian smiled. "Then thank goodness I'm not a woman."

Fu Yao said, "I think, why don't you go ask in the communication array now to see if there is any heavenly official who is willing to teach you transformation magic? That's more realistic."

There certainly were several heavenly officials who, due to unique needs, knew transformation magic. However, it was probably too late to learn by now. Over on the other end, Nan Feng came back in with a grim face. He was much more calm after having sworn; this trait of his was truly entirely the same as that general he served.

Xie Lian saw that it was getting late, and said, "Whatever, it's all the same when the veil goes on."

He was about to put the covering on when Fu Yao raised a hand and stopped him.

"Hang on, you don't know how that Ghost Groom harms people, so if he raises the veil and feels deceived, then wouldn't it just provoke unnecessary trouble if he goes into a rage and causes an unexpected outcome?"

Xie Lian thought that made sense when he heard, but then when he took a step, he heard a RIIIPPP.

This red wedding dress Fu Yao got him really didn't fit that well.

A woman's form was really much daintier. After he put on the dress, while the waist was surprisingly just fine, he was severely restricted in raising his arms and lifting his feet. When the movement was too wide, the robes ripped. Just as he was looking everywhere to see where the fabric ripped, a voice came from the entrance of the temple.

"Excuse me..."

The three looked to the sound, and saw Xiao Ying was holding a properly-folded white robe in her hands while standing at the entrance of the temple, watching them with trepidation.

"I remember it was here where I met you, so I wanted to come over to see if I'd run into you again..." Xiao Ying said. "I've washed the clothes, I'll put them here. Thanks so much for yesterday and today."

Xie Lian was just going to smile in response when he suddenly remembered his own appearance right now, and decided it was best if he didn't speak to scare people.

Yet unexpectedly, not only was Xiao Ying not frightened, she took another step forward. "Are you...I can help if you like?"

"...No, my lady, please don't misunderstand, I don't have such a hobby," Xie Lian explained.

Xiao Ying quickly replied, "I know I know. What I meant was I can help you if you don't mind. You guys...you guys are going to go catch the Ghost Groom, right?"

Her voice and her expression both lifted instantly. "I, I know how to tailor clothes, I've got needles and thread on me at all times, I can help fix anywhere that doesn't fit, I can even help with makeovers, let me help you!"

Two incense time later, Xie Lian once again emerged from the back of the temple with his head down. This time, the bridal veil was already in place. Nan Feng and Fu Yao had wanted to take a look at first, but in the end they decided to cherish their eyes. The sedan they called over was already waiting by the entrance of the temple, and the carefully-selected sedan carriers had also been waiting for a long time.

It was a night where the moon was obscured, and the winds raised. Donned in a brand-new wedding dress, the crown prince thus mounted the bright red bridal sedan.

Ch.7: Ghost Takes a Bride; Crown Prince Mounts the Bridal Sedan

The entire body of that bridal sedan was dressed in bright red satin, embroidered with coloured threads with the words “Blooming Flowers and Full Moon”¹⁶ and “Dragon and Phoenix Bring Prosperity”¹⁷. Nan Feng and Fu Yao were on the right and left respectively, escorting on either side of the bridal sedan. Xie Lian sat poised within the sedan, swaying along with the movement of the sedan carriers.

The eight sedan carriers carrying the large palanquin were all outstanding military officers. In order to find expertly-skilled sedan carriers to play the part of the wedding procession, Nan Feng and Fu Yao went directly to that Lord Official’s residence and demonstrated their power, then revealed that they planned to probe Mount Yujun that night. Without a word, that lord called out a squad of big and tall military officers. However, it wasn’t in the hopes of extra help that the expertly-skilled were chosen. Rather, it was so that when that Savage ghost launched attacks, they could run away and protect themselves.

But in truth, it was actually those eight military officers who were looking down on them inwardly. They were the top, number one experts at the government office, leaders of outstanding heroes wherever they went. Yet those two pretty-boys were actually riding over their heads, and ordered them to be sedan carriers? It wouldn’t be wrong to say they were quite upset. The master’s orders had to be followed, so they forcibly pushed down the disdain in their hearts; nonetheless, it was difficult to avoid the frustration flaring up, so every so often they’d purposely jerk their legs or shake their hands, making the sedan ride quite bumpy. Others might not be able to tell, but if the one sitting inside the sedan was just a bit more delicate and weak, they would have probably puked their guts out.

The sedan bumped and bumped, and sure enough, they heard Xie Lian inside the sedan let out a low sigh. The military officials couldn’t help but feel rather proud inwardly.

Outside, Fu Yao said coolly, “What’s the matter, miss? Tears of joy for finally marrying at an old age?”

Indeed, when a bride left home for the first time, many teared up and wept in the bridal sedan. Xie Lian didn’t know whether to laugh or cry, but when he spoke, his voice was calm and natural, revealing nothing of the discomfort from the bumpy ride.

“No. It’s just, I suddenly discovered that this wedding procession is missing something very important.”

“Missing what?” Nan Feng asked. “We’ve prepared all that we need.”

¹⁶ An idiom, meaning “Perfect Happiness”.

¹⁷ An idiom, meaning “Extremely Good Fortune.”

Xie Lian smiled. "Two accompanying maids."

"..."

The two outside exchanged a look, and seeming to have imagined something, they both shuddered violently.

Fu Yao replied, "Just pretend that the family's poor, there's no money to buy maids, and deal with it."

"Alright," Xie Lian said.

When the sedan-carrying military officers heard all this gag, they couldn't help but chuckle. With this, the displeasure did indeed disperse quite a bit, and a bit more sense of closeness developed, making the sedan much steadier. Thus, Xie Lian leaned back into a proper sitting position and closed his eyes to rest his mind.

Yet who knew, not long after, a child's laughter abruptly sounded by his ears.

Hee hee ha ha, ke ke chee chee.

The laughter rippled across the mountain, ethereal and peculiar. However, the bridal sedan never paused or stopped, continuing on its way steadily. Not even Nan Feng or Fu Yao made a noise, seeming to not have noticed anything amiss.

Xie Lian opened his eyes and called in a low voice, "Nan Feng, Fu Yao."

From the left side of the bridal sedan, Nan Feng answered, "What is it?"

"Something's come," Xie Lian replied.

At this time, this "wedding procession" had gradually entered the deeper parts of Mount Yujun.

Quiet blanketed the wilderness, and the creaking of the wooden sedan, the crackling of broken leaves and branches when stepped on, the breathing of the sedan carriers, all seemed to sound noisier in this silence.

And that child's laughter never once disappeared. It was sometimes distant, as if it came from deeper within the woods; sometimes close, as if it was leaning over on the edge of the sedan.

Nan Feng's expression grew serious. "I don't hear anything."

Fu Yao also said coldly, "Me neither."

Then, it was even more impossible for the other sedan carriers to have heard anything.

“That means, it’s purposely letting only me hear,” Xie Lian said.

The eight military officers held themselves to be experts in martial arts, plus they felt there was no pattern to the Ghost Groom taking brides, so they felt sure they would go home empty-handed tonight and weren’t frightened in the least. Yet for some reason, the forty-some military officers from before who mysteriously went missing delivering the bride suddenly came to mind, and cold sweat appeared on some of their foreheads.

Xie Lian sensed that some had stalled in their steps and said, “Don’t stop. Pretend nothing is the matter.”

Nan Feng waved, gesturing for them to keep going.

Xie Lian then said, “It’s singing.”

“What’s it singing?” Fu Yao asked.

Xie Lian listened carefully to that child’s voice, then repeated verse by verse, a pause after each verse. “New bride, new bride, new bride in the red bridal sedan…”

In the quiet of the night, his somewhat slow voice was clear. But while he was clearly the one reciting, it was as if those eight military officers had heard the voice of a very young infant, singing this odd little nursery rhyme along with Xie Lian, making their blood run cold.

Xie Lian continued, “Brimming tears, past the hills, smile not…under the bridal veil…the Ghost G…is it the Ghost Groom? Or what is it?”

After a pause, Xie Lian said, “No. It keeps laughing, I can’t hear clearly anymore.”

Nan Feng frowned. “What did that mean?”

“It means exactly what you heard,” Xie Lian said. “It’s to tell the bride inside the sedan to only cry, and not smile.”

“I meant, what’s the meaning of this creature running over to give you hints like this?” Nan Feng said.

Always having the opposite opinion, Fu Yao said, “It might not be giving hints. It’s also possible that it’s purposely trying to encourage the opposite, and only smiling can keep one safe and sound, but its objective is to trick people into crying. It’s hard to say if the brides from the past weren’t deceived like this.”

“My dear Fu Yao, when hearing such a voice on the road, any normal bride would’ve been scared to death, how could they smile?” Xie Lian said. “Besides, whether I cry or smile, what’s the worst that can happen?”

“Getting kidnapped,” Fu Yao said.

“And isn’t that our objective for tonight’s outing?” Xie Lian said.

A hard sniff came out of Fu Yao’s nose, but he stopped his rebuttals.

Xie Lian continued, “And, there’s another thing I feel I must tell you all.”

“What?” Nan Feng asked.

“I’ve been smiling ever since I mounted the bridal sedan,” Xie Lian said.

“.....”

Just as he spoke, the body of the sedan abruptly dipped.

There was suddenly a commotion outside among the eight military officers, and the bridal sedan stopped completely.

Nan Feng shouted, “DON’T PANIC!”

Xie Lian raised his head. “What’s going on?”

Fu Yao replied coolly, “Nothing. We’ve run into a bunch of beasts, that’s all.”

Just as he answered, Xie Lian heard the sharp howl of wolves slashing across the night sky.

There was a pack of wolves blocking the way!

No matter how Xie Lian thought about it, this didn’t feel normal. He said, “Quick question. Are there often wolves running about on Mount Yujun?”

One of the military officers carrying the sedan answered, “It’s unheard of before! How is this Mount Yujun?!”

Xie Lian raised his brows. “Mn, then we’ve come to the right place.”

Those were only feral wolf packs from the wild mountains; they couldn’t do anything to Nan Feng and Fu Yao, nor could they do anything to those military officers who spent years rolling around the edge of danger. It was just, they were all focused earlier on deciphering that bizarre and eerie nursery rhyme, which was why they were so abruptly surprised.

From deep within the woods in the dark of the night, pairs and pairs of haunting green wolf eyes lit up, and one starving wolf after the other slowly emerged from within the forest, coming to surround them. However, it was so much better to face beasts one could see and hit, than face a creature one could neither hear nor touch. And so, the group started rubbing their hands and clenching their fists, ready to get down to slaying.

However, the good part was yet to come. What followed closely behind the wolves was the sound of rustling and crackling; a series of odd noises that sounded like beasts but not quite, and like humans but not.

A military officer exclaimed in alarm, "WHAT...WHAT'S THAT! WHAT IS THAT THING?!!"

Nan Feng also cursed. Xie Lian knew that something unexpected had happened and tried to stand.

"What's happened now?"

Nan Feng immediately replied, "Don't come out!"

Xie Lian had only just raised his hand when the sedan body violently jolted as if something had pressed against the sedan door. He didn't lower his head, but he dropped his eyes slightly, and from beneath the bridal veil, he saw the back of the head of something black.

It had actually climbed into the sedan!

That creature crashed head-first into the sedan door, but was then forcefully dragged out by the man outside. Nan Feng swore in front of the sedan.

"Fucking hell, it's a binu!"

The moment he heard it was a binu, Xie Lian knew that this was going to be troublesome.

Based on the evaluation of the Palace of Ling Wen, binu were creatures that didn't even deserve to be ranked as a Malice.

Allegedly, binu were originally humans, but by the looks of them now, even if they were considered humans they'd be deformed humans. It had a head and a face, but the face was blurred and unclear; it had arms and legs, but was too weak to walk; it had a mouth and teeth, but it couldn't bite anyone to death no matter how much it tried.

But, if there was a choice, everyone would rather run into the scarier Malice or Menace-ranked ghosts than to run into these creatures.

This was because binu often appeared at the same time as other monsters, demons, and ghosts. When the prey was distracted battling with the other enemy, it'd suddenly pop out and use its incessantly pestering limbs, its sticky and gooey body fluids, and its endlessly-reinforcing companions to tangle up the prey like very sticky candy. Even though its combat power was extremely low, because its vitality was exceedingly tenacious and it often appeared in large groups, it was impossible to shake them off and very difficult to quickly kill them all. Gradually, it would drain your strength, you'd get tripped up, and there would always be that instance of carelessness when the enemy waiting for such an opportunity would then prevail.

And when the prey was killed by the other monsters, demons, and ghosts, the binu would pick at the remnant broken limbs the other left over after eating. They'd eat with keen pleasure, and gnaw the bones full of holes and scraps.

This was truly a very disgusting creature. For any heavenly official in the Upper Court, all they needed to do was to release their spiritual light and summon their weapons and those creatures would withdraw in fright, but to the junior officials of the Middle Court, those creatures were exceedingly vexing.

Fu Yao spat with disgust from a far distance, "I, HATE, THOSE THINGS! Did the Palace of Ling Wen say those things are here?"

"No," Xie Lian said.

"THEN WHAT DO WE NEED THEM FOR!" Fu Yao exclaimed.

"How many have come?" Xie Lian asked.

"About a hundred, possibly more!" Nan Feng replied. "Don't come out!"

Creatures like binu were strong in numbers, and over a dozen were already very difficult to manage. Over a hundred? That was more than enough to drag them to death. It usually preferred staying in areas heavily populated with people; he had never imagined there'd be so many in Mount Yujun. Xie Lian pondered for a moment, then slightly raised his arm, exposing a wrist that was half-wrapped in bandages.

"Go on," he said.

The moment those two words were said, that white bandage suddenly slipped off his wrist on its own like it was alive, and flew out of the curtain of the bridal sedan.

Xie Lian sat poised within the sedan and instructed gently, "Strangle them to death."

In the black of the night, it was as if the white silhouette of a viper suddenly slithered out.

When that white silk band was pretending to be a bandage wrapped around Xie Lian's hand, it looked only to be several feet long. Yet when it was slaughtering with such devilish lightning speed, it was like it was endless. A series of seamless cracking sounds later, dozens of feral wolves and binu had their necks wrung in an instant!

The six binu wrapped around Nan Feng instantly fell to the ground dead, and he sent a feral wolf flying with the strike of a hand, never dropping his guard the once. He shouted with disbelief towards the sedan, "WHAT WAS THAT THING?? DIDN'T YOU SAY YOU CAN'T MANIPULATE SPIRITUAL DEVICES WITHOUT SPIRITUAL POWERS??"

Xie Lian replied, "There are always exceptions..."

Nan Feng was furious, and he slapped the sedan door. "XIE LIAN! EXPLAIN PROPERLY RIGHT NOW WHAT THAT THING WAS!! IS IT..."

His slap almost broke the entire sedan completely, and Xie Lian had to quickly raise his hand to support himself against the door, slightly taken aback. The way Nan Feng spoke actually reminded him of how Feng Xin used to be when he was mad. Nan Feng was about to say more when suddenly, the wailing of military officers came from the distance.

Fu Yao said coldly, "If there's anything to say, say it after fighting this wave off first!"

Without any choice, Nan Feng had to rush over to rescue the people.

Xie Lian swiftly snapped out of it and ordered, "Nan Feng, Fu Yao, you guys leave first."

Nan Feng whipped his head around. "WHAT?"

Xie Lian explained, "If you guys are around the sedan, then there will always be creatures coming, the fight will never end. Take the men away first, I'll stay behind and meet this groom."

Nan Feng was about to cuss again. "You're by yourself..."

However, Fu Yao said coldly, "He can control that silk band anyway, nothing will happen for the moment. If you've got the time to pull and drag, why don't you settle this group first, then come back and help? I'm off."

Well, he was certainly straightforward and carefree, leaving without a thought, dragging not a single step. Nan Feng clenched his teeth, knowing what Fu Yao said wasn't false, so he turned to the military officers who were there.

“Come with me first!”

Sure enough, after they left the bridal sedan, while that pack of wolves and binu were still pestering around, there wasn't a new wave joining the fray. The two each escorted four military officers, and on the way, Fu Yao fought as he spat hatefully.

“I can't believe this, if I wasn't...”

He stopped mid-speech. The two met eyes, and the look was odd. Fu Yao swallowed his words and turned his head away, both temporarily stopping and not bringing it up, then continued to hurry forward.

Around the bridal sedan, corpses were strewn all over the ground.

The silk band Ruoye¹⁸ had already strangled every wolf and binu that had lunged forward and came flying back, gently wrapping itself back onto Xie Lian's wrist on its own. Xie Lian sat within the sedan quietly, surrounded by the infinite darkness and the rustling of the sea of trees.

All of a sudden, everything fell quiet.

The sound of wind, the sound of the sea of trees, the howling and roaring of demonic creatures, all sank into a deadly silence in an instant, as if they were afraid of something.

And then, he heard a very soft chuckle.

It seemed like a young man, but also a boy.

Xie Lian sat poised and quiet.

The silk band Ruoye was quietly ruffling on his hand, ready to strike at a moment's notice. As long as whoever had come showed a trace of killing aura, it would instantly strike back crazily with ten times the power.

Yet who knew, what came wasn't the expected attack or any murderous intent, but something else.

The curtain of the bridal sedan was lightly lifted, and from underneath the bright red veil, Xie Lian saw the person had extended a hand to him.

The digits were well-defined. A red string was tied on the third finger, and on that long, slender, and fair hand, it was like a bright and colourful affinity knot.

¹⁸ [若邪] means “As if evil”. 邪 is pronounced in the alternative archaic reading Ye instead of Xie.

Ch.8: Ghost Takes a Bride; Crown Prince Mounts the Bridal Sedan

Should he give his hand, or no?

Xie Lian didn't move, he hadn't decided yet. Should he continue to sit tall and still, or pretend to be a bride who was frightened and at a loss hiding away? The owner of that hand was rather patient, and incredibly well-mannered. He didn't move, and so he didn't move either, seeming to be waiting there for his response.

A moment later, as if something had taken control of him, Xie Lian reached out.

He rose to his feet, ready to push aside the curtain to descend the sedan, but the other had already moved first, lifting the red curtain. The one who had come grasped his hand, but the hold wasn't too firm, as if afraid he'd be hurt. He somehow gave the impression of treating him with the utmost care.

Xie Lian had his head bowed, letting the man guide him slowly out of the sedan. Below the veil, Xie Lian could see the dead body of a wolf the silk band Ruoye had strangled to death by his feet. An idea came to him, and Xie Lian lightly tripped, falling forward with an alarmed gasp.

The man immediately reached out and caught him.

Xie Lian also twisted his hand and caught the man's arm, and felt something cold. It turned out the man was wearing a pair of silver vambraces around his wrists.

The vambrace was exquisite and beautiful, with decorative and primitive patterns. Maple leaves, butterflies, and savage beasts were engraved upon them; quite mysterious and unlike anything from the Midlands, but moreso akin to the ancient objects of foreign tribes. With them locked around the man's wrists, they appeared refined and agile.

Icy silver and fair hands without a trace of life, but carried a killing and evil aura.

Xie Lian's trip and fall earlier was a feint; he had the mind to test this man. The silk band Ruoye had been circling languidly inside the large and expansive sleeves of his celebratory robe, waiting to strike at a moment's notice. However, the man only took his hand and guided him forward.

First, Xie Lian couldn't see the path clearly with the veil on, second, he had the mind to delay time, thus, he purposely walked very slowly. Yet the other matched his pace and walked slowly with him, the other arm coming around to support him every now and then, as if afraid Xie Lian would trip again.

No matter how high on guard Xie Lian was, to be treated this way, he couldn't help but think, "If he was a real groom, then he'd genuinely be a most gentle and considerate one."

Just then, he suddenly heard an exceedingly soft clinking sound; with every step the two took, that sound would ring crisply. Just as he was mulling over what that sound could be, there was suddenly the low, suppressed growls of wild beasts from all around.

Feral wolves!

Xie Lian's form jerked slightly, and the silk band Ruoye suddenly snapped tight on his wrist.

Yet who knew, before he could do anything, the man who was holding his hand softly tapped the back of his hand like he was comforting him, telling him not to worry. These two taps were so soft, so gentle. Xie Lian was slightly taken aback, but that low growling was already suppressed. When Xie Lian listened closely, he suddenly realized that these feral wolves weren't growling, but whimpering.

That was clearly the whimpering of beasts that had reached the peak of fear, and could not move while they struggled before death.

Now his curiosity for who this man was was even stronger. He wanted to lift the veil to take a look first, but he knew that wasn't the best course of action, so he could only peek through the crack underneath the red covering; his view limited and missing the big picture. The only thing he saw was the lower hem of a vividly red robe, and below the red robe were a pair of black leather boots walking languidly.

Those black leather boots were wrapped tight, and going upwards there were a pair of long and slender legs, looking extremely beautiful as they walked. On the sides of the black boots there dangled two thin, broken silver chains; with every step, the silver chains would sway, clinking and crinkling, sounding extremely nice.

The steps were unhurried and languid but light, much like a young man's. However, his every step was confident, like there was nothing that could stand in his way. If anyone dared to block him, then he'd rip them to pieces. Thus, now Xie Lian couldn't say just who exactly this character was.

Just as he was deep in thought, suddenly, something hauntingly white on the ground intruded on his vision.

It was a skull.

Xie Lian's step faltered for a moment.

He could tell with one look that the way the skull was placed was amiss. This was clearly a point in some array; if moved, the entire enchanted array would probably attack this point in the blink of a second. But judging by that youth's steps, it was as if he didn't notice there was anything there at all. Xie Lian was just thinking on whether he should warn him when he heard the crisp sound of a tragic CRACK! The youth stepped down, and instantly crushed this skull to dust.

And then, as if he sensed nothing, he walked over, stepping through that mound of dust indifferently.

Xie Lian, "..."

He actually, with just one step, crushed the entire enchantment into a mound of wasted dust...

Just then, that youth's step paused. Xie Lian tensed, wondering if he was about to do something now, but that youth only stopped for a moment before continuing to guide Xie Lian along. After a couple steps, suddenly there was pitter-patter from above, as if beads of raindrops were beating down on the surface of an umbrella. Turns out, that youth had opened an umbrella and raised it over both their heads.

Although it wasn't the time for it, Xie Lian couldn't help but praise inwardly that he really was quite considerate, but at the same time, very curious as well.

"Is it raining?"

Within the mystic black mountain, the vast wilderness, somewhere deep in the far distant ranges there came the long howls of the wolves. Perhaps it was because a slaughtering had just occurred inside the mountain, but the faint scent of blood was still permeating in the cold, frigid air.

Everything about this situation was oddly charming to the extreme. That youth held him in one hand and the umbrella in the other as he walked languidly on, appearing for no reason to be bewitchingly romantic and deeply affectionate.

That strange shower came strangely and ended strangely as well; it wasn't long before the dripping sound of raindrops hitting the umbrella disappeared. That youth also came to a stop, seeming to have put away the umbrella. Then at the same time, he finally let go of Xie Lian's hand and moved one step closer.

The hand that had been holding his own this entire way softly folded a corner of the veil, and slowly raised it upwards.

Xie Lian had been waiting for this moment the entire time. He stood still, watching as the tormenting red curtain was slowly pulled up——

The silk band shot out!

It wasn't because killing aura had stirred in that youth, but because the man must be apprehended first; control him, then talk later!

Yet unexpectedly, when the silk band Ruoye flew out and carried with it a blast of wind, that bright red veil left that youth's hand, fluttering up then down. Before Xie Lian had the chance to see the remnant shadow of that red-robed youth, the silk band Ruoye had shot through him.

And that youth shattered into thousands of silver butterflies, scattering into a breeze of silver twinkling stars.

While it wasn't the time for it, after Xie Lian had backed a couple of steps away, he couldn't help but sigh in awe. This sight truly was as beautiful as a fantastic dream.

Just then, one silver butterfly flew past his eyes errantly, but when he tried to look closer, that single silver butterfly fluttered twice around him before joining the wind of butterflies, melting into a part of the silver that enveloped the sky as they fluttered their wings to fly into the night.

It was a good while before Xie Lian came back around, and he wondered, "So was that youth the Ghost Groom?"

In his opinion, he didn't think so. And if those wolves on Mount Yujun were his subordinates, then why would they appear so terrified upon seeing him? And if that enchanted array on the way was set up by the Ghost Groom, then he so casually...crushed it.

The more he pondered, the stranger this was. But then Xie Lian tossed the silk band Ruoye over his shoulder and thought, "Well, whatever. He could also just be someone passing by. I'll leave this for now and focus on the proper business."

But after scanning around, he eh-ed. Turns out, not far away was a building standing there somberly.

Since that youth had brought him here and this building was so painstakingly hidden inside this enchantment array, then Xie Lian must go inside to take a look.

Xie Lian took a few steps, then halted abruptly. After some thought, he turned back, picked up the veil that was on the ground, patted it off and clutched it in his hand before continuing to make his way to the building.

This building was a tall structure with red walls, the bricks and wood appearing rather mottled, much like an aged local town temple. However, based on Xie Lian's experience, this design was most likely a martial god temple. Sure enough, when he looked up, he saw the large, solidly metal words nailed on the top of the entrance:

"Temple of Ming Guang"!

The Martial God of the North, General Ming Guang, was also that General Pei that Ling Wen spoke of in the communication array, whose worship was abundant in the north. No wonder they didn't find any Temples of Ming Guang nearby, but found a Temple of Nan Yang. Turns out, the Temple of Ming Guang on Mount Yujun had long since been locked away by an enchantment array. Could this Ghost Groom have anything to do with General Ming Guang?

However, this General Ming Guang was a mighty and unapproachable great heavenly official flushed with success, plus his status in the north was very secure, so personally, Xie Lian didn't think a heavenly official like that would have any connection with a malicious creature like the Ghost Groom. It wasn't anything strange to have one's base be unfortunately overtaken by a malicious creature unknowingly. He'd have to wait and see what the truth really was.

He walked up to the temple and the doors were closed but not locked, so when he pushed they opened. After pushing the doors in, a strange smell came assaulting his senses.

It wasn't the dusty air common to an unvisited place of many years, but a faint stench of rot.

Xie Lian closed the doors behind him to make it seem like no one had entered, then crossed the threshold into the temple. Within the centre of the great hall was a martial god statue, naturally being that Martial God of the North, General Ming Guang. Many humanoid objects, such as sculptures, puppets, and portraits, were easily tainted by the aura of evil. Thus, the first thing Xie Lian did was to go up and look closely at this martial god statue.

After examining it for a while, his conclusion was: this divine statue was exquisitely sculpted. Wielding a sacred sword and wearing a jaded belt, his appearance handsome with an imposing bearing. There weren't any issues, and the rotting smell didn't come from this divine statue either. Thus, Xie Lian stopped caring for it and started to make his way to the back of the great hall.

After turning around, Xie Lian's entire person froze, and his pupils shrank.

A group of women dressed in bright red wedding robes, with their heads covered with veils, stood tall before him.

That faint stench of rot had been exuding from these women.

Xie Lian quickly steadied himself, then started counting. One, two, three, four...until he counted to seventeen.

They were the seventeen brides who went missing in the Mount Yujun area!

The red on some of the wedding dresses was already faded, exceedingly old and tattered, so they should be the earliest brides who went missing. Some of the brides were still wearing brand-new wedding dresses, and the styles were new too, the smell of aged rotting corpses still very light on them, so they must be the ones who recently went missing. Xie Lian thought for a moment, then removed the veil of one of the brides.

It was a tragically-pale face under the bright red veil, so white that it was faintly glowing green, and with the soft light of the moon shining upon it, it was quite horrifying. But the most horrifying part was, while the muscle of this woman's face was already twisted with death, on this twisted face hung a stiff smile.

Xie Lian pulled off the veil of the next woman, and there were the same curled lips.

An entire building full of dead people, and they were all dressed in wedding robes with a smile on their faces.

That strange nursery rhyme sung by that little child seemed to be sounding in Xie Lian's ears again, "New bride, new bride, new bride in the red bridal sedan...Brimming tears, past the hills, smile not under the bridal veil..."

Suddenly, there was a strange sound coming from outside the temple.

It truly was a strange sound. So strange that it was hard to describe; like two sticks wrapped in heavy cloth were violently thumping on the ground, but also like it was dragging something heavy, pulling with difficulty on the ground. That sound went from far to close and it came very quickly, it was merely an instant before it reached the entrance of the Temple of Ming Guang. CREAAAK, the doors of the Temple of Ming Guang opened.

Whatever had come, whether it be human or creature, was most likely that Ghost Groom. And now, it had returned!

There was nowhere to escape in the back of the hall, nor anywhere to hide. Xie Lian's mind spun for a second. Seeing this row of brides, he instantly put on his own veil anew, joining the line himself and standing still.

If there were only five to six corpses standing there, then of course it'd be easy to see that the numbers weren't correct. But there were seventeen corpses of brides here, and unless each one was counted like he did earlier, then it'd be difficult to notice someone was mixed in.

He'd only just joined the line before he heard that strange THUMP THUMP, THUMP THUMP "walk" in.

Xie Lian remained still while he pondered, "Just what is this sound? By the length and pauses, it's a bit like the sound of footsteps, but what creature's footsteps sound like this? It's definitely not the youth who brought me here, he was very at ease, and when he walked it clinked."

Suddenly, he realized something, and his heart violently lurched.

"Oh no, my height is wrong!"

These corpses were all women, but he was an authentic male through and through, and was born a notch taller than women. While an extra person couldn't be noticed with a glance, if there was someone particularly tall in the group of corpses, then it was very noticeable!

But, his mind spun again, and Xie Lian quickly collected himself once more. He certainly was taller than these brides, but that girl Xiao Ying had only tied a simple ponytail for him and didn't do much else. The brides here were each richly-dressed to the nines, their hairdos shooting for the skies; there were even some who were wearing phoenix crowns, a giant piece raising high on their heads, so they might not be shorter than him, considering. Even if he was tall, he shouldn't be that conspicuous.

Just as he was thinking this, he heard a SSHHHH sound that was about two meters away from him.

A moment later, there was another SSHHHH, and this time, it was a bit closer.

Xie Lian realized what this Ghost Groom was doing now.

It was pulling off the veil of each one of the brides and checking the faces of the corpses one by one!

PANG!

If he didn't strike now, then when was a better time? The silk band Ruoye shot out and hit that Ghost Groom squarely.

There was a large rumble, and a black smoke assaulted his face. Xie Lian didn't know whether that demonic smoke was toxic or not, but since he had no spiritual light to shield his body, he immediately covered his nose and mouth while at the same time, prompted Ruoye to whirl widely to vent the air, dispersing that black smoke. There was more THUMP THUMP, THUMP THUMP, and when Xie Lian cracked open his eyes, he saw a small and short form by the entrance of the temple flashing past. The entrance was thrown open, and a ball of black smoke stole for the forest.

Xie Lian made the decision on the spot and chased after it immediately. Yet who knew, he hadn't gone far before seeing fires blazing within the woods, and the screaming and shouting of rampage came from the distance.

"CHARGE——!"

The voice of a youth was particularly loud and clear. "CATCH THE UGLY FREAK AND EXTERMINATE EVIL FOR THE PEOPLE! CATCH THE UGLY FREAK AND EXTERMINATE EVIL FOR THE PEOPLE! WE'LL SPLIT THE REWARD MONEY EVENLY!"

It was indeed that little mob boss. Xie Lian gave a frustrated cry inwardly; this group said they were going to come into the mountain, and they actually did. There was originally an enchanted array covering the place so whatever, but this array was just crushed to smithereens by that youth earlier. And this group, with their blind luck, actually found the place. Upon a second look, the direction they'd come from just so happened to be the direction where the Ghost Groom had fled!

Xie Lian grabbed the silk band Ruoye and charged out, shouting, "DON'T MOVE!"

The group froze for a moment. He was about to say more when he heard the little mob boss inquire warmly, "My lady! You were kidnapped by the Ghost Groom, right? What's your name? We're here to rescue you, you can relax now!"

Xie Lian was taken aback, finding this hilarious before remembering that he was still dressed in women's attire. There were no mirrors inside the Temple of Nan Yang, so he didn't know how he looked like right now, but based on their reaction, Lady Xiao Ying's hands must be nimble. Whilst in shock, this group actually took him for a real bride, and this little mob boss was probably hoping he would be that seventeenth bride so he could go collect the reward money. However, given the situation, he could not allow these villagers to run amok no matter what, in addition to the fact that he couldn't guarantee whether the Ghost Groom had kept fleeing onwards.

Coincidentally, right then, two black-clad youths came rushing over, and Xie Lian immediately called, "NAN FENG, FU YAO, COME AID ME, QUICK!"

When those two heard and looked over, they were both taken aback, then backed a couple steps away. Xie Lian had to ask many times before they came around.

Xie Lian asked, "Did you two come from that direction? Did you run into anything on the way?"

"No!" Nan Feng replied.

"Good," Xie Lian said. "Fu Yao, immediately follow this path down to search, search once all around, to make sure the Ghost Groom isn't escaping."

Fu Yao turned and left when he heard the instructions.

Xie Lian then said, "Nan Feng, you stay and guard this place, and make sure not a single person leaves. If Fu Yao doesn't find that Ghost Groom in the mountain, then it must be in that crowd right now!"

Upon hearing this, the crowd erupted in commotion. The little mob boss had realized he wasn't a woman by now and he was the first to jump.

"Not a single one can leave? ON WHAT BASIS?! ARE THERE NO LAWS IN THIS LAND? Guys, don't listen to them..."

He hadn't yet landed from his jump when Nan Feng struck out with his hand, and a large tree the width of one man hugging around snapped and collapsed. The crowd instantly remembered that this young man chopped things whenever there was a disagreement, and if he chopped them like that pillar, then any form of monetary repayment would be useless, so they all shut up.

The little mob boss exclaimed, "You said the Ghost Groom is among us? Every single one of us has a proper name and family, if you don't believe me, use a torch to light up everyone's face and check individually!"

"Nan Feng," Xie Lian called.

Nan Feng took the torch from the little mob boss and went around to shine it on every single person. Each face was covered in sweat, or nervous, or at a loss, or excited, all extremely spirited.

Xie Lian couldn't discern anything and he came before the crowd. "Everyone, I apologize for any offense earlier, but I injured that Ghost Groom and it escaped. It definitely couldn't have gone far. My two little friends here didn't bump into it on the way here, so I'm afraid this creature is mixed within the group. Will you please take a good look at each other, see each other's faces clearly, and see if there's anyone you don't know in the crowd."

When the crowd heard that the Ghost Groom could be mixed within their own group of people, their blood ran cold and they didn't dare to be careless, peering at each other, you looking at me and me looking at you. They looked for a while when there was a sudden yell.

"WHY ARE YOU HERE?"

Xie Lian's brows jumped and he pushed himself over. "WHO IS IT?"

The little mob boss snatched someone else's torch and shined it at the corner. "THIS UGLY FREAK!"

The one he was pointing at was Xiao Ying. Xiao Ying's slanted eyes and crooked nose appeared somewhat contorted under the firelight, and she looked like she couldn't bear to be exposed under the light, raising her arms to block her face.

"I...I was worried, so I wanted to come up and look..."

Seeing how alarmed she looked, Xie Lian took away the torch in the little mob boss' hand and turned to the others. "How is it, everyone?"

The group all shook their heads.

"There isn't anyone we don't know."

"We've seen everyone here."

"Could it be possessing someone?" Nan Feng asked.

Xie Lian hummed for a moment. "It shouldn't have, that was a solid body."

"Since it was already a Savage, it's hard to say whether it can change shape," Nan Feng said.

While the two were hesitating, the little mob boss was again the first to shout, "THE GHOST GROOM ISN'T AMONG US, DO YOU SEE? IF YOU SEE, THEN WHY WON'T YOU LET US GO??"

Scattered voices agreed here and there, and Xie Lian gave them a sweeping look.

"Will everyone please stay here in front of this Temple of Ming Guang and not move even half a step away."

The group was about to complain again, but when they saw Nan Feng's cold glare, they didn't dare.

Just then, Fu Yao had also returned. He reported, "There's nothing nearby."

Gazing at this heavily-packed crowd before the Temple of Ming Guang, Xie Lian slowly said, "Then, it must be within this group of people."

Ch.9: Mountain-Locked Ancient Temple; Forest of Hanging Corpses

Fu Yao noticed that Xiao Ying was shrunken in the crowd, and frowned. "Why is there a woman here?"

While his tone wasn't furious, it didn't mean well either. When Xiao Ying heard him she bowed her head.

Xie Lian explained, "She was worried, so she came over to look."

Fu Yao questioned the others, "Did you all come up with her?"

The crowd was a little uncertain at first, but then they replied:

"Don't remember."

"Can't tell."

"No, when we came up she wasn't there, right?!"

"Either way I didn't see her."

"Me neither."

Xiao Ying quickly said, "It's because I was following secretly..."

The little mob boss immediately cut her off. "Why did you follow in secret? Are you guilty of something? Are you the Ghost Groom in disguise?"

With such an accusation, the space near Xiao Ying immediately cleared out, and she waved madly.

"NO... No, I'm Xiao Ying, I'm the real one!" She turned to Xie Lian. "Young Master, we just saw each other! I helped you put on makeup, helped you dress..."

Xie Lian said, "..."

Everyone turned their eyes on him, and some started to whisper among themselves. He vaguely heard the words "hobby," "abnormal," "unbelievable", and he cleared his throat.

"This was a mission requirement. Mission requirement. Nan Feng, Fu Yao, you..."

He turned his head, and only then did he notice that Nan Feng and Fu Yao had been staring at him with odd looks in their eyes this whole time, and their feet very rigidly pulled some distance away from him.

The way they were staring at him gave Xie Lian goosebumps. He said, "...Is there anything you two want to say to me?"

How could he possibly know that the cosmetic work of the girl was so gifted that his brows were shaped elegantly, his face was fair as jade powder, and his lips were touched with rouge. If he didn't speak, then he was entirely a gentle, demure, and beautiful mature lady. This gave the two a grave shock and mired them in disbelief, making them question their lives and feel uncomfortable all over. The face was still the same face, but they completely did not know who they were talking to anymore.

Fu Yao looked to Nan Feng. "Was there something you wanted to say?"

Nan Feng immediately shook his head. "There's nothing I want to say."

"...Why don't you guys just say something," Xie Lian said.

Just then, someone from the crowd spoke up:

"Eh? This is the Temple of Ming Guang?"

"There's actually a Temple of Ming Guang on this mountain? Amazing, I've never seen it before."

The crowd all started to look at the wonder.

Xie Lian suddenly said, "That's right, the Temple of Ming Guang."

Nan Feng could tell something was off about his tone. He asked, "What is it?"

Xie Lian replied, "The north is clearly General Ming Guang's territory; it's not like worship of him isn't prospering. But how come there's only the Temple of Nan Yang at the foot of Mount Yujun?"

That the Lord Official had prayed to the Heavenly Martial Emperor was easy to understand, because the Heavenly Martial Emperor was the number one martial god in the past thousand years, and his status was higher than General Ming Guang; naturally the higher up you prayed, the more guarantee there was. However, General Ming Guang and General Nan Yang were equal in status, with not much difference. If it must be debated, then General Ming Guang possessed nine thousand temples, over a thousand more than Nan Yang, so it was really hard to imagine why they would seek from afar and forgo what lay close at hand.

Xie Lian wondered, "Technically, even if this Temple of Ming Guang on Mount Yujun was overtaken and people couldn't find it, then they could've clearly built another Temple of Ming Guang; why build the martial temple of another god?"

Fu Yao could understand. "There must be another reason."

"Right, there must be another reason that would make the people in the Mount Yujun area never build another Temple of Ming Guang," Xie Lian said. "Can either one of you lend me a bit more spiritual power? I'm afraid I'll have to go ask..."

Just then, someone made a commotion, "Whoa, there's so many brides!"

That voice had come from inside the temple, and Xie Lian whipped around. He told that group to properly stay in the open ground in front of the temple, but they completely ignored him and went into the temple!

Nan Feng shouted, "THE SITUATION'S DANGEROUS, DON'T RUN AROUND!"

However, that little mob boss rebuked, "Don't listen to him guys, they won't dare to do anything to us! We're good citizens, as if they'd actually dare kill us? Get up everyone, get up get up!"

He egged people on and over half of the group actually started to move, running into the temple along with him.

Fu Yao flicked his sleeves and said apathetically, "Let them be. Those unruly people." He sounded extremely disgusted, and didn't want to care anymore.

However, inside the Temple of Ming Guang there came a wail. "THEY'RE ALL DEAD PEOPLE!"

The little mob boss was also alarmed. "ALL DEAD?!"

"ALL DEAD!"

"This is evil business, how come this one hasn't rotted yet even though it looks like she's been dead for decades??" He quickly turned around and got over it, however. "Doesn't matter if they're dead. Transport all the corpses of the brides down the mountain; wouldn't their families still have to pay up?"

Xie Lian's eyes slowly darkened. The group thought about it; that certainly made sense. Some sighed in amazement, some grumbled, and there were those who became happy again.

Xie Lian stood at the temple entrance. "Why doesn't everyone come outside first? The air in the back of this temple is heavy with corpses; without any ventilation for years, it'll be bad if normal folks were to breathe it in."

This sounded very logical and the group didn't know whether they should listen.

Xiao Ying begged in a small voice, "Everyone, let's not be this way? It's so dangerous here, why don't we listen to this young master first and go out to sit..."

But this group didn't even bother to listen to Xie Lian, so why would they listen to her? No one paid attention. Xiao Ying didn't give up, however, and repeated herself a few times.

The little mob boss even directed them: "Pick for the fresh corpses, guys, who knows if the families of the ones that are too old are still alive, so don't waste your energy hauling those."

There were even those who praised him for being clever and able. Xie Lian really didn't know whether to laugh or cry at this, and when he saw there were people touching where they shouldn't, he warned aloud.

"Don't remove the veils! That veil can separate the aura of the corpse and the aura of yang. There's a lot of you and the aura of yang is too abundant; if they suck it in, it's hard to say what will happen."

However, in order to pick out the freshest corpse, the group of men had already pulled off pretty much all the veils. Xie Lian exchanged a look with Nan Feng, who had come to the door, and shook his head, knowing they couldn't stop them. After all, it wasn't like they could beat the men to a bloody pulp so they couldn't move; otherwise, if something happened, wouldn't they lose the ability to run? A very hopeless situation.

Just then, one of the burly men removed the veil of one of the brides and exclaimed, "My god, this little hussy is hella cute!"

The men all came to surround the corpse.

"She didn't even get married yet, right? What a waste to just die like that."

"Her clothes are a bit tattered, but she's the prettiest!"

This bride probably hadn't been dead for too long, the skin of her face was still rather supple.

Someone said, "Dare you to feel her up?"

The little mob boss replied, "Why would I be afraid?"

Then he pinched the corpse's face twice. It was so silky-smooth that it made his heart itch, and he reached out ready to touch it again. Xie Lian couldn't bear to watch anymore, and was about to stop him when Xiao Ying rushed over.

She exclaimed, "Don't do this!"

The little mob boss shoved her backhandedly and yelled, "DON'T GET IN MEN'S WAY!"

But Xiao Ying climbed to her feet again and cried, "You're going to incur Heaven's wrath like this!"

The little mob boss was furious now, and cursed. "FUCKING HELL! This ugly freak is really nosy!"

He cursed as he moved to kick her, but Xie Lian easily lifted the back of Xiao Ying's collar with one hand and pulled her away. Yet unexpectedly, they heard a THUD.

The little mob boss yelled, "WHO HIT ME?!"

Xie Lian turned back to look. The little mob boss was bleeding from a gaping wound in the head after having been hit, and there was a bloodstained rock on the ground.

Xiao Ying was stunned for a moment before quickly apologizing. "Sorry, sorry...I was scared and accidentally threw it..."

However, even if she was eager to take the blame for it, no one would believe her, because the direction was all wrong. This rock was hurled from a window behind the little mob boss. When the little mob boss had yelled, everyone had turned to look in that direction, just in time to see a flash of a shadow outside the window.

The little mob boss hollered, "IT'S HIM! That ugly freak with bandages on his face!"

Xie Lian stuffed Xiao Ying into Nan Feng's hands and strode a couple steps forward. Propping his right hand on the window lattice, he flipped over and ran towards the forest in pursuit. A few of the bolder ones who had their eyes on the bounty followed after him and leaped out the window as well. However, when Xie Lian reached the edge of the forest, he suddenly caught a whiff of blood.

Sensing something off, and with alarm bells ringing in his mind, he suddenly halted in his steps and warned, "Don't go in!"

He had shouted his warning, but those few people thought, "I'll chase even if you don't," and charged into the forest without even stopping. The others who had originally gathered in the temple poured out too. Seeing that Xie Lian had stopped at the edge, those who weren't as bold crowded around to watch. Before long, they heard a few screams. A few shadows stumbled out from the forest. These were the few people who had barged in first earlier, and now they were staggering out. When the crowd saw them after they stepped under the moonlight, they were instantly scared out of their wits.

They were still living humans when they had entered. How did they become bleeding humans when coming out?

From their faces to their clothes, these people were red all over, with their blood gushing forth like a spring. If a person could truly bleed this much, then they would definitely die, but these men were still walking towards them, step by step. Everyone retreated in unison out of terror until they were behind Xie Lian.

Xie Lian raised his hand. "Calm down. The blood isn't theirs."

Sure enough, those few men said, "Yeah! The blood isn't ours. It's...it's..."

Even a face covered in blood could not hide their horrified expressions. The group followed those men's eyes and looked into the forest; it was pitch-black, so they could not see exactly what lay within. Xie Lian took over a torch, took a few steps forward, then raised it to probe ahead. Something in the darkness dripped onto the torch, giving off a "SIZZLE" sound. He glanced at the torch before looking up. After composing himself for a moment, he raised his hand and then tossed the torch up.

Although the torch that had been hurled up had only illuminated the area overhead for an instant, everyone still got a clear look of what had been above the trees.

Long black hair, deathly white faces, tattered military officers' uniforms, and arms dangling in the air.

The swinging corpses of more than forty men, suspended upside-down at varying heights on the trees. No one knew for how long their blood had flowed, but they had yet to dry up. They dripped and dripped, forming a terrifying scene: a forest of hanging corpses, amidst a falling rain of blood.

This group of people outside the forest were all strong, burly men, but how could they have ever seen such a sight? They were all petrified from the shock, and it was silent all around. When Nan Feng and Fu Yao came over and saw this scene, their expressions froze.

After a moment, Nan Feng said, "Green Ghost."

Fu Yao agreed, "Indeed. It's his favorite trick."

Nan Feng turned to Xie Lian. "Don't go over. It'll be a bit of a problem if it's him."

Xie Lian looked back and asked, "Who are you talking about?"

Nan Feng said, "A 'Near-Supreme'."

Xie Lian asked, puzzled, "'Near-Supreme'? You mean, close to the power level of a Supreme?"

"That's right," Fu Yao said. "The 'Near-Supreme' Green Ghost is a malicious creature who has been evaluated by the Palace of Ling Wen to be close to that of a Supreme. He adores games like this forest of hanging corpses. You can say he's famous."

Xie Lian thought, "That's really unnecessary. If you're a Supreme, you're a Supreme. If you aren't, then you aren't. Just like there's only 'ascended' and 'not ascended'; there's not 'near ascended' or 'about to ascend'. Adding a 'near' only makes it awkward for everyone."

He recalled the time when that young man had led him all the way here; there had been the sound of rain pitter-pattering on the surface of the latter's umbrella. Could he have held up the umbrella in order to shield him from the blood rain of this corpse forest?

He let out a soft "ah" right then, and the other two immediately asked, "What's the matter?"

Thus, he gave a brief account of how he had met a young man while he was in the sedan, and how that young man had brought him here.

When he was done, Fu Yao said skeptically, "I noticed the enchanted array on this mountain when I came up. It's extremely ruthless, but he broke it so handily?"

Xie Lian thought, "Rather, he crushed it under his heel, without paying it any mind."¹⁹ He said, "That's right. This 'Near-Supreme' Green Ghost you speak of, could that be him?"

Nan Feng considered it a little and said, "I've never seen the Green Ghost before, so I can't say. Does that young man you saw have any distinctive features?"

"Silver butterflies," Xie Lian said.

Earlier, when Nan Feng and Fu Yao saw the scene of the forest of hanging corpses, their expressions could be said to be calm, but the instant those two words left Xie Lian's mouth, he could clearly see the drop in their expressions.

Fu Yao exclaimed in disbelief, "What did you say? Silver butterflies? What kind of silver butterflies?"

Xie Lian realized that he had probably said something significant, and explained, "They're like silver, yet also like crystal. They don't seem to be living creatures. But, they look quite pretty."

He saw Nan Feng and Fu Yao exchange looks, with expressions so grim their faces were almost green.

After a while, Fu Yao said in a heavy voice, "Leave. Right now."

"We haven't settled the case of the Ghost Groom yet, how can I leave?" Xie Lian said.

"Settle?" Fu Yao said. He turned back and sneered. "Seems like you have really tarried too long in the human realm. This Ghost Groom is merely a Savage. Even the Green Ghost of this hanging-corpse forest is merely a 'Near-Supreme', as pesky as he might be."

After another pause, he suddenly said in a stern voice, "Do you know who the master of those silver butterflies is?"

Xie Lian replied honestly, "I don't."

"...Even if you don't, there isn't time for me to explain now," Fu Yao said stiffly. "In short, he isn't someone you can handle. You'd better hurry back to Heaven and ask for reinforcements."

"Then you head back first," Xie Lian said.

"You—"

Xie Lian said, "The master of those silver butterflies never showed any hint of malice. Even if he does harbor malice, and if he's really as terrifying as you say, then everyone for several miles within the perimeter of Mount Yujun wouldn't have been able to escape from his hands. All the more reason someone has to stand guard here at this time, so why don't you go back first and see if you can help me seek reinforcements?"

He could tell that Fu Yao didn't want to remain here and deal with so many troublesome matters. If that was the case, then all the more, he mustn't force him to do it. Fu Yao was a clear-cut man by nature, and so he really left on his own with a flick of his sleeves. Xie Lian turned towards Nan Feng and was about to probe further about that young man when there was another commotion in the crowd.

Someone shouted, "We caught him! We caught him!"

Now Xie Lian didn't have the time to probe. He asked, "What did you catch?"

Once again, two bloody figures walked out of the forest. One was a burly fellow, one of those few who had charged into the forest earlier. Pretty gutsy, to think he was not scared off by the blood rain in the corpse forest. The other one was a young boy being dragged along by him in a firm grip; his head and face were messily wrapped with bandages.

Xie Lian still remembered what the Tea Master he had met earlier in the small shop had said: "Apparently this Ghost Groom is an ugly creature with his face covered in bandages. And it's too ugly, no women love it. That's why it couldn't stand to see others getting happily wedded."

At that time, they thought that it might be a rumour. Who would have guessed that there was really such a person?

There might really be such a person, but whether he was the Ghost Groom was a different matter altogether. He was just about to take a closer look at the bandaged boy when Xiao Ying rushed over.

She yelled, "YOU'VE GOT THE WRONG PERSON! This isn't the Ghost Groom. He isn't! "

The little mob boss said, "He was caught red-handed, and you still say he isn't? I..." He paused, as if something had suddenly dawned on him, then he continued, "Oooh, no wonder why I was thinking that you're always acting so strangely, and keep insisting 'he isn't', 'he isn't'. So you're in cahoots with this Ghost Groom?!"

Stunned, Xiao Ying hurriedly waved her hands. "No, no, I'm not. He's not, either. He really didn't do anything. He's just an ordinary...ordinary..."

The little mob boss pressed on aggressively, "Ordinary what? Ordinary ugly freak?" He grabbed the bandaged boy's hair a couple times at random and said, "Then why don't we take a look at how this 'ordinary' Ghost Groom looks like, for him to love stealing others' women so much!?"

His random grabbing made a mess of a few strips of the bandages, and the bandaged boy instantly held his head and screamed. His cries were full of fear. It was sad and shrill, and very pitiful at the same time.

Xie Lian grabbed hold of the little mob boss's arm and said, "That's enough."

When Xiao Ying heard that young boy's screams, her tears tumbled down. Seeing Xie Lian reaching out to stop the little mob boss was just like seeing hope, and she hurriedly grabbed his sleeves and begged. "Young...young master, help me, help him."

Xie Lian cast her a glance, and Xiao Ying let go of his sleeve embarrassedly, as if afraid he would detest her touchy-feely hands and would not want to help her anymore.

Xie Lian soothed, "It's fine."

He took another look at the bandaged boy with a bloodied head, and realized that the boy was also peeking at him with wide, bloodshot eyes through the gaps in the bandages under his arm. He took just a peek, then immediately lowered his eyes and hurriedly secured the bandages again. Although he did not reveal his face, a patch of skin on his face had been exposed, and this bit was already very horrifying, as if it had been burned by fire before. It was not hard to imagine how scary the face that laid under the bandages was. The bystanders sucked in a breath while the boy shrank even more.

Xie Lian noticed that the way these two covered were exactly the same. It was as if they did not dare to step into the light, nor dare to see other people all year round. He sighed inwardly to himself again.

The little mob boss at the side was wary. "What are you scheming? We are the ones who caught the Ghost Groom."

Xie Lian let go of him and said, "I'm afraid the Ghost Groom won't let you catch him that easily. My friend searched around here earlier, but he didn't find him. It's possible this boy came much later. The real Ghost Groom should still be here."

Xiao Ying mustered up her courage. "You want the reward money...but you can't just catch anyone at random to make up the numbers..."

On hearing this, the little mob boss clearly wanted to beat her again. He had been causing trouble since earlier, and Xie Lian finally couldn't endure it anymore. He waved his hand and Ruoye flew out to give the little mob boss a slap with a THWACK that sent him falling over. Nan Feng seemed to have reached his limit too, and immediately followed up with a kick. The man finally toppled to the ground and remained still. This person was a shit-stirrer, and once he remained immobile, the crowd did not know who to take aim at and so they all became very well-behaved. The commotion died down after a few scattering outcries here and there.

Xie Lian thought, "Finally, we can deal with the issue now." He sized up the young boy on the ground for a moment, then asked, "Were you the one who threw the rock by the window earlier?"

His voice was gentle. The bandaged boy, who was trembling uncontrollably, peeked at him again and nodded.

Xiao Ying said, "He doesn't want to harm anyone. He just wanted to help me when he saw that little mob boss looking like he was going to hit me..."

Xie Lian asked the young boy again, "Do you know what's with all those corpses hanging in the forest?"

Xiao Ying said, "I don't know what's going on, but he's definitely not the one who hung them up..."

The bandaged boy trembled and shook his head repeatedly.

Nan Feng, who was at the side staring at him, suddenly said, "How are you related to Green Ghost Qi Rong?"

Xie Lian gave a slight start on hearing this name. The bandaged boy, however, obviously looked blank. He showed no reaction to this name, and he did not dare to reply to Nan Feng either.

"He...He's too afraid to speak..." Xiao Ying explained. All this while, she had been trying her best to protect this strange boy.

Xie Lian said in a gentle voice, "My lady Xiao Ying, what exactly is the matter with this child? Tell me everything you know."

Xiao Ying seemed to summon up a little courage on seeing Xie Lian, the light from the fire shining brightly on her face. She was no longer avoiding it.

Wringing her hands, she said, "He really didn't do anything bad. This child simply lives on Mount Yujun. Sometimes, when he's too hungry, he'll run down the mountain to steal some food. There was one time he coincidentally went to my house to steal...I saw that he can't really talk and there were injuries on his face, so I found some cloth for him to bandage himself with. I'd also give him some food sometimes..."

Xie Lian had initially thought them to be a couple, but now that he learned of all this, Xiao Ying's reciprocal protection of him was more like that of an older sister, or even an elder taking care of him.

She added, "Later, many people thought that he was the Ghost Groom. I couldn't convince them, so I could only hope that the real culprit would be quickly captured...I thought, since this young master could so capably act as a bride to catch the Ghost Groom, then at the very least you won't get the wrong person, because he would never, ever hijack the wedding sedan. But the moment I headed out, I heard that the little mob boss and the rest wanted to search the mountain today too. I was really worried, so I secretly came up to take a look."

She stood guard before the young boy like she was afraid the others would hit him again, and defended him further.

"He really isn't the Ghost Groom. Look at him, it'd only take a few people to beat him like this. How in the world could he defeat so many military officers escorting the bride's sedan..."

Xie Lian and Nan Feng exchanged glances, both equally finding this to be a headache.

If it was as she said, then wasn't this young boy completely unrelated to this incident?

Bandaged boy, "Savage" Ghost Groom, "Near-Supreme" Green Ghost, and that powerful, influential master of the silver butterflies, whom all heavenly officials turned pale at the mere mention of his name. To think this small Mount Yujun would see a never-ending flow of strange guests. This was truly a tough case to deal with. Who was who? What was the relationship between who and who? Xie Lian felt his headache intensify several times over. He rubbed his forehead and temporarily stopped thinking about how much truth there was in Xiao Ying's words.

He suddenly remembered something he had been meaning to ask, and said, "My Lady Xiao Ying, have you always lived near Mount Yujun?"

Xiao Ying replied, "Yeah. I've always lived here. I can guarantee that he has never done anything bad here."

Xie Lian said, "No, I wanted to ask you something else. Are there no other Temples of Ming Guang built in the vicinity of Mount Yujun, other than the one on this mountain?"

Xiao Ying was taken aback. "Um..." She thought about it, then said, "There should have been others, I think."

On hearing her words, Xie Lian suddenly had the vague feeling that he had grasped hold of something significant.

He asked, "Then, how come I only saw a Temple of Nan Yang at the foot of the mountain, but not a Temple of Ming Guang?"

Xiao Ying scratched her head. "It was indeed built before. But I heard, it seems every time construction of a Temple of Ming Guang was in the works, there would always be a fire for some reason halfway through...Some people say that it was probably because General Ming Guang could not guard this place for some reason, so they switched to General Nan Yang..."

Nan Feng noticed Xie Lian's frozen expression and asked, "What's the matter with you?"

Xie Lian suddenly realized that it was all too simple.

The brides who could not smile; the temple that caught fire for no reason; the temple of Ming Guang locked away by the enchanted array in the mountain; the majestic Martial God statue of General Pei; the Ghost Groom who had disappeared into thin air after being wounded by Ruoye—

All too simple!

It was just that there was always something else interfering and diverting his attention all this while, that he hadn't realized such a simple truth right from the start!

He forcefully seized hold of Nan Feng and exclaimed, "Lend me some spiritual powers!"

Nan Feng was startled by this grab. He hurriedly struck a palm with him in mid-air and questioned, "What's the matter?"

Xie Lian dragged him and ran. "I'll explain later. Think of a way to subdue the corpses of those eighteen brides first!"

Nan Feng said, "Have you gone dumb? There are only seventeen brides' corpses. You are the eighteenth!"

Xie Lian said, "No, no, no."

He explained, "There were only seventeen before, but now there are eighteen. Among the eighteen brides' corpses, one is fake—the Ghost Groom is hiding among them!"

Ch.10: Mountain-Locked Ancient Temple; Forest of Hanging Corpses 2

The two dashed back to the Temple of Ming Guang, however, the back of the great hall was already absolutely empty, and there was only a pile of messily-strewn red veils where those brides stood earlier.

Seeing this sight, Xie Lian cried mentally, "This is bad, this is bad, darn it, darn it."

Then, he quickly picked up the veils on the ground. After he did so, he heard alarmed cries come from outside the temple. The two looked out the window and saw dozens of women in scarlet wedding dresses had formed a circle, slowly closing in on that group of villagers.

Each of these women had pale and greenish faces carrying a smile, their arms raised at level. They were the corpses of those brides from earlier!

No one could remain calm while watching helplessly as they slowly closed in. The crowd didn't care to grab that bandaged boy anymore, and fled. Xiao Ying immediately rushed over to support him.

Xie Lian called out helplessly, "DON'T RUN!"

He had lost count how many times he'd said this tonight. Whenever something happened he'd have to say it at least thirty to forty times, yet there would always be someone ignoring him, what a helpless affair.

He waved his hand and the silk band Ruoye flew out towards the sky, then he made a casual hand sign and the silk band Ruoye began whirling in the air on its own like the mad dance of a celestial being, incredibly eye-catching. When those brides saw there was something over this way that was lively and rapidly-spinning, its tail also whipping at them from time to time, a good number of them were lured over. There were also seven that were attracted by the scent of blood in the deep of the forest, so they slowly hopped in that direction.

Xie Lian exclaimed, "Follow them, Nan Feng! Don't let them go down the mountain!"

He didn't need to worry, Nan Feng had already gone off to chase them. Two of the brides came attacking in Xie Lian's direction, their fingers bright red, their nails sharp. Xie Lian took out the red veils he had collected off the ground earlier, tossing them out with both hands. Two of the veils spun as they shot out, covering squarely over the heads of those two brides. Instantly, their movements stalled.

As expected, when the heavy, bright red veils covered the eyes and the noses of those brides' dead bodies, they could no longer see the shadows of mortals nor smell their scent. And since their corpses were stiff, they couldn't bend their own arms to remove the veils; they could only grab randomly at the air with their extended arms as if they were playing hide-and-seek. A scene like this was truly both horrifying and silly. Xie Lian stood in front of them and tentatively waved his hand in front of the two brides' eyes, and when he saw they were grabbing cluelessly in another direction, he contemplated for a moment. But, in the end he still couldn't help but say, "Please forgive my impropriety," before seizing their arms and placing their claws on each other's necks.

When the two brides suddenly felt something in their hands their bodies shook, and since they couldn't see anything, they started strangling at each other viciously. Xie Lian then quickly ran off with a wide wave of his hand, and the silk band Ruoye followed him like a streak of white rainbow before landing on the ground to form a large white circle.

Xie Lian called after the people who were fleeing in all directions, "EVERYONE, GO INTO THE CIRCLE!"

The group hesitated as they ran, but Xiao Ying immediately helped that bandaged boy over to stand inside. After some thought, she ran out again and dragged the little mob boss who was passed out on the ground in as well. Right then, one of the brides hopped to the edge of the white circle and her claws shot out to grab for them, yet it was as if there was a transparent wall that forcibly divided the space.

Xiao Ying noticed she couldn't hop in no matter how she tried, and quickly shouted, "EVERYONE COME IN, QUICK! THEY CAN'T COME INTO THIS CIRCLE!"

When the men saw this, they hurried back like a hive of bees. Thankfully Xie Lian had the silk band Ruoye burst to a great length beforehand and the circle was big enough, otherwise he would actually be worried there would be people squeezed out because it was too cramped. The brides couldn't hop into the circle and knew they couldn't do anything to this side, so they uniformly spun around and lunged in Xie Lian's direction while shrieking.

However, Xie Lian had already been waiting for them, and from his sleeve he pulled out a large bundle of veils. The many red cloths in his hands spun, up down, left right, flying in all directions, both his hands and feet moving nonstop, covering each one as they came, swift and precise. With every bride veiled, the bride would begin to slow and feel around like a blind person. The veils in his hands were spun to blurs as they were thrown with ease, forming countless red silhouettes flying in the air. The people inside the circle actually started cheering in spite of themselves.

"NICE!"

"Amazing, so amazing."

"You trained for this, right?!"

When Xie Lian heard them, he blurted out of habit, "Thank you thank you. Please support my act with money if you have the means, or support me with applause if you haven't...WAIT???"

Only when the words had already come out did he notice something wrong. He'd actually got caught up and let slip the speech he used to say when he busked, and hurriedly stopped himself. While he was talking, several more brides jumped up; a jump that was surprisingly over seven meters high and three meters far, and in the split of a second the stench of rot came before his eyes.

Xie Lian pushed off with the tip of his foot, his body sweeping past them, and whilst in the air, he mentally chanted the verbal password to a certain private communication array.

"Ling Wen, Ling Wen the all-knowing! I've a question, do you know if the Martial God of the North, General Ming Guang, had any intimate female friends?"

Ling Wen's voice rang in his ear. "Your Highness, why do you ask?"

"I've got a bit of a situation here right now, kind of urgent," Xie Lian said. "Not gonna lie, there are a dozen dead people chasing me right now."

"Huh? That awful???" Ling Wen was shocked.

"Not too horrible," Xie Lian said. "So, did he? I know this question is more personal in nature and it's not easy to answer, which was why I didn't ask in the general communication array. It's necessary for the mission, the information will never be divulged."

"You've misunderstood, Your Highness," Ling Wen replied. "It's not that this question isn't easy to answer, but it's that Ol' Pei really has had too many intimate female friends. Your question is so sudden, I don't know which one you're talking about at the moment."

Xie Lian almost slipped in his step. "Alright. Then, among General Pei's intimate female friends, is there one who is possessive, extremely jealous, and has some form of handicap?"

"Now that you've mentioned it, I really do recall someone," Ling Wen replied.

Xie Lian sent another two veils flying, causing another round of applause, and he spun around, cupping his hands at the audience in thanks. "Tell me!"

Ling Wen began, "Before Ol' Pei ascended, he was a general. He befriended the female general of the enemy state on the battlefield, someone extremely beautiful and fierce in character. Her name was Xuan Ji."

"Okay, Xuan Ji," Xie Lian acknowledged.

Ling Wen continued, "General Pei is someone who, hmm...when he sees a beautiful woman, he'd have to go and entangle himself even if there's a blade to his throat. This woman led an army and crossed swords with him, and was defeated."

Xuan Ji became a prisoner of war and was sent to the enemy camp. While the guards weren't paying attention, she was going to end herself on the spot. But she never succeeded—a general cut her verdant sword in half with one swing of his blade and saved her. This dashing General Pei of the enemy state was thus the General Ming Guang who later ascended.

As for this General Pei, one, he was always someone who cherished beauties, and two, the result of the war was already determined, so even if the fighting continued back and forth, the situation was already impossible to flip. And so, Xuan Ji was released. All these ones and twos and backs and forths, it was easy to imagine what would occur.

Just then, one of the brides caught Xie Lian's leg and dug her fingers in, almost sinking her claws into his flesh. He wanted to kick out at first, but realized at this angle he could only kick her face.

"Well, you can't hit a lady's face," Xie Lian thought, so he changed his position and kicked her shoulder instead while sending another veil flying. "Sounds like a beautiful tale."

"It was a beautiful tale at first," Ling Wen said. "But what killed it was that Xuan Ji was adamant in being General Pei's lover for the rest of his life."

Xie Lian ran a couple steps and leapt, scaling up the roof, then looked down at the five to six brides who continued to close in on him down below.

He wiped his sweat. "There isn't anything wrong for a woman to want to be the only lover in a lifetime."

"There isn't," Ling Wen said. "But when two countries clash, the battlefield is heartless. Those two had originally willingly agreed that it was going to be a short-lived affair, that today would exist but not tomorrow, and speak only of romance and not of war. But someone like Ol' Pei, I'll be honest, it's already pretty good if he doesn't cheat on you."

"..."

"However, Xuan Ji was a dignified lady general, and intense in temperament. If it was something she wanted, she'd clutch on firmly without ever letting go..."

"Hold on, hold on!" Xie Lian interrupted. "Tell me first, is Xuan Ji handicapped? Where is she handicapped?"

"It's her..." Ling Wen's voice abruptly came to a stop.

Goodness sakes; every time when he listened to the most important part, the bit of spiritual power he'd borrowed would run out. It seemed next time he'd have to get straight to the point right from the start. In between flying and jumping, Xie Lian rapidly reorganized his thoughts; if the bandaged boy wasn't the Ghost Groom, and this group of villagers had also confirmed that the Ghost Groom wasn't among them, then, the only place left to hide was among the seventeen brides!

When he snuck into their fold, the Ghost Groom wasn't able to immediately spot that the numbers were wrong. On the flip side, when the Ghost Groom mixed in, Xie Lian also couldn't notice there was an extra corpse with only one look. Now that he thought about it closely, after the silk band Ruoye had injured the Ghost Groom, he only saw a ball of black smoke stealing for the forest, but he couldn't guarantee that the ball of black smoke contained a person for sure. What probably actually happened was that when he rushed out the temple entrance to give chase, the Ghost Groom remained in the temple full of black smoke, brushing past him and returning to the back of the hall; hiding itself like a leaf amongst the trees, and mixing in with the corpses of the brides.

Then, the "Ghost Groom" wasn't a "Groom", but a "Bride"—A woman dressed in a wedding dress!

Since it was a woman, then many things could be explained. For example, why there was no Temple of Ming Guang in or around Mount Yujun. It wasn't that the locals didn't want to build the temples, it was because they couldn't. Xiao Ying had said, "Every time the construction of a Temple of Ming Guang was in the works, there would always be a fire for some reason halfway through the construction." This didn't sound like a coincidence at all, and could be nothing but arson. Why set fire to burn temples? Under normal circumstances it was because of hatred. So then why would there be a Temple of Ming Guang on Mount Yujun that was locked within an enchantment without visitors, yet the maintenance and the craftwork of the divine statue within the temple were exquisite? Why was the Ghost Bride donned in a wedding dress herself, but couldn't bear to see other brides in wedding dresses smile when passing through Mount Yujun?

When every dot was connected, other than jealousy and possessiveness, Xie Lian couldn't think of any other answers. And that odd sound, like cloth-covered sticks dragging something heavy, if it was truly the sound of footsteps, then Xie Lian could only think of one possibility!

Every bride that was chasing him had been veiled. Xie Lian finally landed back onto the ground, let out a light sigh, steadied himself, then straightened up to count.

One, two, three, four...Ten.

Seven brides had hopped into the forest and Nan Feng had gone to chase them. He veiled ten brides and they were all here. Then, there was one more who hadn't shown.

Right then, he heard that familiar sound of THUMP THUMP, THUMP THUMP, coming from behind him.

Xie Lian slowly turned around, and an extremely short and small form reflected in his vision.

He drew in a small breath and thought, "I knew it."

This short and small woman before his eyes was dressed in red wedding robes, but there was no air of joy; only sorrow. The reason she was short wasn't because that was her natural stature, but because she was kneeling on the ground.

The bones of both her legs were already broken, but the legs remained, and she had been using her knees to walk all this time. The odd THUMP THUMP sound he heard was the sound of her dragging her two broken legs to hop on the ground.

Ch.11: Mountain-Locked Ancient Temple; Forest of Hanging Corpses 3

That female ghost bore a handsome oval face, her brows high and arching, truly exceedingly beautiful. While her original beauty was laced with three parts heroism, it was now stormed with a blast of resentment, as if she had been trapped in a small, confined space for years, barred from the light of the sun. She was kneeling on the ground, and the bridal robe below the knees was tattered and frayed. No wonder people talked of it.

Xie Lian and the ghost stared at each other unyieldingly for a while before he spoke up.

“Xuan Ji?”

It seemed it had been many years since anyone called her by that name. It was a long time before the resentment on her face faded some, and a flash of light shone in her eyes.

“...Was it he who sent you to find me?” she asked.

Xie Lian supposed that this “he” naturally referred to that General Pei.

Xuan Ji then pressed on, “What about the man himself? Why won’t he come see me himself?”

That passionate expression and that hopeful tone while she spoke made Xie Lian feel that he best not say “it wasn’t”. Seeing that he hesitated to respond, Xuan Ji slumped onto the ground.

Her back leaned against that handsome and tall martial god statue. Her bright red bridal robe spread about her on the ground like a giant flower of blood. Her hair was dishevelled, her face filled with agonizing torment, as if she was suffering an extreme misery.

“...Why won’t he come see me?”

Xie Lian wasn’t able to answer this question either, so he could only remain silent. Xuan Ji raised her head to gaze upon that divine statue and moaned sorrowfully.

“Pei dear, oh Pei dear, I’ve betrayed my kingdom for you, abandoned my everything and became like this. Why won’t you come see me anymore?”

She pulled at her own hair, demanding, “Could your heart be made of iron?”

Xie Lian didn’t react to any of this, but when he heard her, he silently pondered. Xuan Ji said she betrayed her kingdom for General Pei. Could that mean that this General Pei she spoke of tricked her into spilling enemy secrets while the two were in the heat of their passion, causing Xuan Ji’s kingdom to fall into disadvantage on the battlefield? She also said that it was because of General Pei that she’d become this, and by “this” she naturally meant this tragic broken-legs disposition. Xuan Ji was a woman general; upon the battlefield, there was no way she was crippled, so those legs of hers could only have been broken later. Could this have something to do with General Pei, too? Was it because of General Pei abandoning what he had started that led to such deep and severe resentment?

While Xie Lian felt everything he thought of was rather vulgar, with Xuan Ji having such profound resentment, to the point where she was harming innocent lives, as vulgar as it was, Xie Lian could only force himself to think in this direction. Just then, the sound of a girl screaming suddenly came from outside the temple.

“HELP! HELP!”

Xie Lian and Xuan Ji both looked out of the window at the same time. Where Ruoye had formed the white circle, a man was trying to drag that bandaged boy out while Xiao Ying clung onto that man’s leg, not letting go.

That man started yelling curses; it was that little mob boss. “GET THE HELL AWAY! YOU DUMBASS, WHAT IF YOU CALL THAT FEMALE GHOST OVER?!”

Xiao Ying shouted, “IF SHE COMES THEN SHE COMES, YOU’RE SCARIER THAN ANY GHOSTS! I...I’D RATHER SEE A FEMALE GHOST INSTEAD!”

Turns out, that little mob boss Xie Lian knocked out with one whip of his silk band had come to. When he saw the sluggishly-fumbling brides all around, he first jumped in surprise, but soon realized none of them could register humans. He was exceedingly gutsy, hot-headed and foolhardy, and he planned to drag this bandaged boy down the mountain to collect his bounty while everyone still didn’t dare to move. He didn’t care at all whether or not this boy was really the Ghost Groom; everyone down the mountain said he was, so he was. Yet unexpectedly, Xiao Ying pounced over screaming and shouting, alerting all the drifting brides in the surrounding area, including Xuan Ji inside the Temple of Ming Guang.

Xie Lian saw that it was him again, and mentally grumbled that he should have whipped harder earlier; best if the man was whipped so hard he didn’t wake for three days and three nights.

He shouted, “GO BACK INTO THE CIRCLE!”

The little mob boss saw a stream of black mist had come lunging at him, and hastily retreated. However, the bandaged boy was still in his grip, and Xiao Ying was still clinging onto his leg, so in the end he was still too slow by a beat. Instantly, the black mist enveloped him, and he was then sucked back to Xuan Ji’s hand. He turned his head to look; wasn’t this dishevelled, long-haired, haunting and chilling woman that beautiful corpse he had touched among all those brides lying on the ground earlier?

Only having made it this far did he finally learn what fear meant. He wailed at the top of his lungs while Xuan Ji curled her five fingers, digging them deep into the back of his head. In an instant, his skull was pulled out from the heavy layer of flesh of his head.

The skull that was just pulled out was still steamingly hot, its mouth still wide open and screaming. “AAAHHHHHHHH—!!!!”

The people within the white circle also had their mouths open wide and screaming, so terrified their souls had left their bodies. “AAAHHHHHHHH—!!!!”

Xiao Ying was also thoroughly terrified, pulling that bandaged boy into the circle as she screamed. Xuan Ji reached her fingers out at them again, but Xie Lian flashed over and blocked in front of her.

“General, please refrain from further killing sins.”

He called her “General” in hope of reminding her that she was once a heroine who fought bravely at the frontlines to protect her kingdom. Yet, Xuan Ji crushed the head that was screaming in terror in her grip; that gorgeous face now seven parts twisted.

She sneered. “Is he too scared to see me?”

Xie Lian couldn’t think of any other way, and wondered if he should pretend to be someone sent by General Pei to smooth things over first. But Xuan Ji didn’t need his response at all. She laughed heartily then whipped around, pointing at that divine statue.

“I burnt your temples and caused havoc in your land, just so you’d come to take one look at me! I’ve waited for you for years!”

She stared at that martial god statue with wide eyes for a good while, then she strangled its neck and started shaking it like mad.

“But you still won’t come to see me! IS IT BECAUSE YOU KNEW YOU WRONGED ME? WON’T YOU LOOK AT MY LEGS?! LOOK AT HOW I AM NOW! THIS IS ALL FOR YOU! FOR YOU!! IS YOUR HEART MADE OF IRON?!”

Although as a bystander, Xie Lian didn’t want to comment on who was right or wrong, but based on his own opinions, he really couldn’t help but think, “If you wanted to see him, could you not have used a saner method? In any case, if someone used this method because they wanted to see me, I would have zero desire to show up.”

On the other end, Xiao Ying and that bandaged boy finally returned to the circle anew.

Looking his way, she whispered in concern, “Young master...”

Hearing her, Xie Lian gave her a smile, indicating that she needn’t worry. Yet unexpectedly, the moment he smiled, Xuan Ji’s face instantly contorted and she lunged over from the divine statue.

“Since you won’t look at me and prefer to look at those girls who love smiling, then I’ll let you look to your heart’s content!”

Although the one she was strangling was Xie Lian, her words were directed at General Pei. Xie Lian had originally thought that Xuan Ji's heart was full of jealousy for those happily-smiling brides in their sedans because she herself couldn't marry the one she loved. He hadn't expected that it was because this General Pei liked girls who smiled, so she, in her distorted mind, connected that to brides who were about to marry their lovers. No wonder she burnt all the Ming Guang temples down the mountain. Now that he thought about it, it was probably because she couldn't stand having to share this one divine statue with all those women who'd visit Ming Guang temples day in and day out.

This female ghost was indeed a Savage. Even with both legs broken, her movements were fast like a devil, and even after having been beaten by Ruoye her strength was still formidable. Xie Lian couldn't keep it up with her strangling him like this, and just as he was about to summon Ruoye, there was a loud cry.

“AAAAAAHHHHHHHH—”

That girl Xiao Ying saw that he couldn't hang on anymore, so she picked up a branch and came charging over; yelling as she charged, seeming to be pumping courage for herself. Xuan Ji didn't even need to lift a finger. She only gave a chilling look, and before Xiao Ying had even gotten close, she was sent flying meters away, crashing heavily and head-first.

That bandaged boy croaked out a loud “AAAH” as he ran over. Xie Lian was shocked too, but right as he sat up, he felt a chill on the back of his head. Xuan Ji's five fingers were already in place, seeming like she was going to yank his skull from his skin just like earlier. Under this dire situation, Xie Lian's right hand shot out and grabbed her wrist.

He shouted, “BIND!”

A sharp WHOOSH sound broke through the air, and the white silk bandage heeded the command, circling and twisting about Xuan Ji, tying her up. Xuan Ji's legs were broken, so she couldn't dodge in time. Thus, with a heavy THUD, she fell to her knees and started rolling on the ground, trying to break free of this white silk band. Yet the more she struggled, the tighter the bind became. The moment he was set free, Xie Lian didn't even take a moment to catch his breath before he immediately got to his feet and ran to where Xiao Ying was.

Even with Ruoye recalled, the crowd still didn't dare to move rashly, but there were also a number of daring villagers who had gotten used to those fumbling brides and came circling. That bandaged boy was kneeling next to Xiao Ying's sprawled form, not knowing what to do, so anxious he was like a small insect on the rim of a boiling pot. No one dared touch her, afraid that she had broken something critical and if she should struggle the injury would get worse. Xie Lian gave a quick once-over, and knew that no matter how careful he was it'd be pointless. To have fallen like this, there was no way she'd survive.

While he hadn't interacted much with this girl, Xiao Ying, hadn't even spoken with her much, Xie Lian still knew that she was a kindhearted girl despite her ugly appearance. Such an ending for her truly made one's heart sink. On the other end, Xuan Ji shouldn't be able to struggle free of Ruoye.

Xie Lian thought, "Even if it's pointless, she shouldn't be left in this position right before her death."

And so, he very carefully flipped her over.

Xiao Ying's face was covered with blood, and the crowd around clicked their tongues and sighed as they watched.

However, she still had breath left, and she whispered, "...Young master, have I made things worse..."

Although she didn't make anything worse, she certainly didn't actually help either. Xie Lian was already going to summon Ruoye at the time, and didn't require anyone else's help. Besides, with that single branch of hers, even if she had managed to hit Xuan Ji it wouldn't have done anything, nevermind that she wouldn't have been able to get near the female's ghost's body in the first place. With all that, this could be said to be a completely meaningless death.

Xie Lian answered her, "No. You've been a great help. You see, the moment you came over, the female ghost's attention was diverted, which was how I was able to have the time to subdue her. Thank you so very much. But, you can't do that again next time, alright. If you're going to help, you have to tell me first, otherwise if I don't pick up on it, things will be toast."

Xiao Ying chuckled. "Sigh, young master, you don't need to comfort me anymore. I know I wasn't any help, and there won't be a next time."

Her words were jumbled and unclear, and when she spat out a mouthful of blood, there were even a few broken front teeth mixed in. That bandaged boy was shaking with panic, "woowoo"-ing, trying to speak.

Xiao Ying turned to him. "Don't go down the mountain to steal food anymore, in the future. If anyone finds out, they'll beat you to death."

"If he ever gets hungry, he can come to me," Xie Lian said.

Xiao Ying's eyes lit up hearing this. "...Really? Then, thanks so much..."

She smiled and smiled, until suddenly, two lines of tears streamed down from that pair of tiny eyes.

She said quietly, "I feel, I haven't lived through many good days in all my life here in this world."

Xie Lian didn't know what to say, and gently patted her hand.

Xiao Ying then sighed. "Sigh, nevermind, maybe I'm just...born unlucky."

Those words certainly did sound a little funny, and, since her nose was bent, her eyes slanted, her face so ugly it was silly, it was kind of funny to see such a face covered in blood and tears.

With tears still rolling down, she choked, "But, even then, I still...I still..."

Her breathing stopped, and she passed with those words. That bandaged boy saw that she had died, and started to weep quietly while hugging her dead body. His head was buried in her belly, like he had lost a dependent; he didn't dare to raise his head up no matter what.

As for Xie Lian, he reached out and helped close her eyes, speaking to her mentally, "You're stronger than me."

Right then, the sound of a bizarre bell tolled.

"CLANG!"

"CLANG!"

"CLANG!"

Three roaring tolls later, all of a sudden Xie Lian felt his head go dizzy, and he wondered out loud, "What's going on?"

Then he looked all around. All the brides had collapsed to the ground, only their arms still up and reaching to the sky. The crowd of villagers had also slumped, as if they were all knocked out by this series of quaking bells. Xie Lian himself felt his head rather heavy, and forced himself to stand with his hand supporting his forehead, but his legs went weak and he fell with one knee to the ground. Fortunately, someone helped support him. When Xie Lian looked up, it was Nan Feng.

Turns out, the moment those seven brides entered the forest, they instantly spread out. Nan Feng almost ran all over the entirety of Mount Yujun before he managed to capture all of them, and he had only just returned.

Seeing him quite calm, Xie Lian immediately asked, "What's with that bell?"

"Don't worry, it's reinforcements," Nan Feng replied.

Xie Lian looked over following his gaze, and only then did he notice that, before the Temple of Ming Guang, a row of soldiers had appeared, standing there since who knows when.

Each of these soldiers were donned in armour, emitting sharp and awe-inspiring auras, and their bodies were enveloped with a thin layer of spiritual light. In front of the soldiers there stood a poised, elegant, and tall young military general, obviously not a mortal. That military general approached with his hands clasped behind his back, and came before Xie Lian, bending slightly at the waist.

“Your Highness.”

Xie Lian hadn't yet opened his mouth to make inquiries before Nan Feng whispered next to him.

“This is General Pei.”

Xie Lian instantly took a glance at Xuan Ji, who was on the ground. “General Pei?”

This General Pei didn't quite match what he had imagined, and was also grossly different than the divine statues. That divine statue's heroic form was vivacious, its eyes spirited and energetic; a handsomeness that was aggressive and invasive. While this young military general was also handsome, his complexion was pale, and his brows were as calm as cool jade. There was no sense of a murderous aura, only a rippleless tranquility. He was a military general, but he could be said to be a tactician.

General Pei noticed Xuan Ji who was on the ground, and spoke, “The Palace of Ling Wen informed us that the incident at Mount Yujun this time might be related to our Palace of Ming Guang, and so this servant has come. I didn't expect that it really did have something to do with us. We have troubled Your Highness.”

Xie Lian thanked Ling Wen mentally. He wondered, how in the world was the Palace of Ling Wen inefficient?

He replied, “General Pei is working hard too.”

Xuan Ji, who was in the middle of struggling faintly, heard the words “General Pei” and suddenly looked up, demanding enthusiastically, “Pei dear, Pei dear! Is that you? Have you come? HAVE YOU FINALLY COME?”

She was bound by Ruoye, and as overjoyed as she was, she could only rise into a kneel. Yet unexpectedly, the moment she saw that military general, her face instantly blanched.

“WHO ARE YOU?!”

On this end, Xie Lian had already given Nan Feng a general account of just what the ghost groom affair was about. When he heard her question, he responded, “Isn't this General Pei? Could she have waited for too long, and doesn't recognize him anymore?”

“This is General Pei,” Nan Feng answered. “But it's not the one she's waiting for.”

Xie Lian was confused. “And there are two General Peis?”

Yet Nan Feng replied, “That's correct. There are indeed two of them!”

Turns out, the General Pei this female ghost Xuan Ji was waiting for was the main god of the Temple of Ming Guang. The one before them now was the deputy god of the Palace of Ming Guang, a descendant of the other General Pei. In order to differentiate the two, everyone addressed this one as “General Pei Junior”. In legitimate Ming Guang temples, both must be worshipped, one facing the front, and one facing the back. General Pei was the principal god of the main hall, so his divine statue faced the entrance of the temple hall, whereas General Pei Junior’s divine statue was set up behind the back. While he was of a later generation of his ancestor, by looks they appeared no different than brothers. Two ascendees from one household was definitely considered a fantastic tale.

Xuan Ji scanned the area and didn’t see the one she wanted to see among the soldiers either. She cried bitterly, “Where’s Pei Ming? Why hasn’t he come? Why won’t he come and see me?”

General Pei Junior inclined his head and replied, “General Pei has important business to tend to.”

Xuan Ji muttered, “Important business?”

Underneath the long hair draping over her face, tears were streaming. “I’ve waited for him for hundreds of years, what important business could he have? Back then, in order to see me, he could cross half the border in one night, what important business could he have now? So important that he can’t even come down to spare me a look? Is there anything? I don’t think there is?”

“General Xuan Ji, please be on your way,” General Pei Junior said.

From the troop, two soldiers from the Palace of Ming Guang approached and pulled off Ruoye from Xuan Ji’s person. After it affectionately wrapped itself back around Xie Lian’s wrist, he gently patted it twice to comfort it. Xuan Ji allowed herself to be grabbed by those two soldiers and was blank for a moment, when suddenly she started struggling with force, cursing while pointing to the heavens.

“PEI MING! I CURSE YOU!”

This screech was sharp, and Xie Lian was taken aback, thinking to himself, “Isn’t this cursing the ancestor before the descendant?”

That General Pei Junior, however, didn’t react at all. He said expressionlessly, “Please excuse us.”

Xuan Ji was screaming until she became hoarse. “I CURSE YOU! YOU BEST NEVER FALL IN LOVE WITH ANYONE, OTHERWISE IF THAT DAY SHOULD COME, I’LL CURSE YOU TO BE JUST LIKE ME, TO BURN WITH THE FIRE OF LOVE UNCEASINGLY, FOREVER AND EVER! THE FIRE OF LOVE WILL BURN YOUR BODY, SCORCH YOUR HEART, YOUR LIVER, YOUR ORGANS!”

Right then, General Pei Junior greeted Xie Lian and the others, “Excuse us. Please wait a moment.”

Then he raised his middle and index finger and lightly pressed them against his temple. This was the spell to activate the spiritual communication array, so he must be communicating with someone. A moment later, he “en”-ed, and dropped his hand, clasping it behind him again, and turned to Xuan Ji.

“General Pei wants me to tell you—‘That’s impossible’.”

Xuan Ji screeched, “I CURSE YOU—!!!”

The two soldiers carried Xuan Ji, who was struggling like crazy, and dragged her away.

Xie Lian spoke up, “General Pei Junior, might I ask, how will this Xuan Ji be handled?”

“Sealed under the mountain,” General Pei Junior replied.

To find a mountain as a seal was certainly the usual way the heavenly realm dealt with monsters and ghosts. Humming heavily for a moment, Xie Lian still spoke up.

General Pei Junior however, only inclined his head. “She said she betrayed her kingdom because of General Pei?”

“She certainly did say so,” Xie Lian said. “That it was because of General Pei that she became like this. Whether that’s the truth, though, I don’t know.”

“If it must be said this way, it’s not altogether wrong,” General Pei Junior said. “She did betray her kingdom for General Pei. However, the details in between might be different than what bystanders might imagine. After she and General Pei separated, in order to retain him, General Xuan Ji offered up military intelligence of her own volition. General Pei was unwilling to win unfairly, so he didn’t take the offer.”

....Well now, he had never thought that the whole “I betrayed my kingdom for you” was actually like this.

Xie Lian replied, “Then when she said both her legs were broken, it was also because of General Pei, it was...?”

“She broke those legs herself,” General Pei Junior answered.

...Broke them herself?

General Pei Junior replied emotionlessly, “General Pei doesn’t like forceful women, but General Xuan Ji has a strong character, which was why they couldn’t be together for long. General Xuan

Ji couldn't accept it, and told General Pei that she was willing to sacrifice for him and change herself. Thus she ruined her own martial skills, and broke her own legs.

"With this, it was like she destroyed both her wings in order to tie herself to General Pei's side. General Pei never abandoned her to her own devices, and kept her to take care of her, but in the end he never wanted to marry her. General Xuan Ji's wish was never fulfilled, and so she killed herself in resentment. Not for anything else, but just so General Pei would be sad. But, pardon my bluntness..." The way he spoke had always been polite and overly calm. "...That would never happen."

Xie Lian rubbed his forehead and didn't speak, thinking to himself, "Who the heck are these people?"

General Pei Junior continued, "I don't know the right and wrong of all this, either. I only know that if General Xuan Ji was willing to let go, things wouldn't have to be this way. Your Highness, this servant will take his leave now."

Xie Lian also raised his hands in a courtesy greeting and sent them off.

Nan Feng commented, "Weirdos."

Xie Lian thought inwardly, he himself was the laughingstock of the three realms, an infamous weirdo, so he best not comment on anyone else. This was something between General Pei and Xuan Ji, so for bystanders, there was no point in discussing who was right or wrong. Only, the sympathies went out to all seventeen of those innocent brides, and all the military officials and sedan drivers who escorted them but suffered a disaster for no reason.

Having brought up the subject of the brides, Xie Lian instantly turned his gaze to look, and saw the seventeen corpses of the brides had started to show various stages of deterioration. Some had already become white bones, while some were starting to rot, emitting waves of foul odour. The stench roused the people lying on the ground, and they gradually came to, but when they saw the scene, they jumped in shock and terror once more.

Using this chance, Xie Lian nagged at them to spread the philosophy of good and bad karma, advising them to pray lots for each of the brides once they went back down the mountain, and to think of a way to contact the families of those brides to come and collect their corpses. He also cautioned that they must never commit the same deeds as those corpse-sellers, and they shouldn't commit any wrongdoings either. After such a thrilling night, and now with the leading provocateur gone, no one else dared to speak against Xie Lian and each acknowledged him apprehensively, all of them feeling like they just had a nightmare. Only then did they notice that they acted as if they were possessed. There were so many dead people, how did they still only have money in their minds? Thinking back, they all thought it horrifying. The night before, everyone was doing the same thing; with a mob and a leader, they all rushed in without thinking. Now that they harboured fear in their minds, they very earnestly repented and prayed for blessings.

The day hadn't yet broken, and fearing that there might be wolves and others stirring trouble, even though Nan Feng had just run a huge circle around the whole mountain, he had to take this large group of people down the mountain. He didn't complain, however, and arranged with Xie Lian to discuss afterwards what was to be done of that Upside-Down Corpse-Hanging Forest.

When that bandaged boy woke up, he sat next to Xiao Ying's corpse once more, hugging her, not saying a word, and so Xie Lian also sat down next to him. He spent a while coming up with a script, but just as he was about to speak to comfort him, Xie Lian suddenly noticed that this boy's head was bleeding.

If it was blood from the Corpse Forest, then it should've dried, but this blood was still dripping, so it could only be that he was injured.

Right then, Xie Lian told him, "Your head is wounded, take off your bandages and let me take a look."

That boy slowly looked up, and those bloodshot eyes glimpsed at him, like he was scared and hesitant. Xie Lian smiled gently.

"Don't be afraid. If there's a wound, then it must be dressed. I promise I won't be scared off by you."

That boy hesitated for a moment, then turned around, and circle by circle he slowly unwrapped the bandages around his head. His movement was very slow, but Xie Lian waited for him very patiently, and was already pondering the issues that would come after.

"This boy for sure can't stay at Mount Yujun anymore, but where can he go? He can't come back to the heavens with me, and I don't even know when my next meal is. I'll have to think of a dependable way to settle him. And, the Green Ghost, Qi Rong..."

Just then, that boy had finished removing the bandages and turned around.

And just as Xie Lian saw that face in its entirety, he felt all the blood in his veins had drained thoroughly.

Ch.12: Red-Clad Ghost; Burning of the Martial and Civil Temples

On the face of the boy, as Xie Lian had first suspected, there was a field of serious burn scars. Except, beneath the bloody scars, there were traces of three to four tiny faces.

Those faces were no bigger than the palms of a baby, and they were scattered crookedly across his cheeks and forehead. After being burnt, the features on each tiny face were shriveling in pain, as if screaming in agony. The sight of these weird, screaming faces squeezing and squirming on a regular human face was indeed more horrifying than any demon!

Xie Lian felt as though he was plunged into a nightmare the instant he saw this boy's face. A fear so immense paralyzed him until he couldn't recall standing up, nor tell what the expression on his face was, but it must've been intimidating. The boy was already on tenterhooks as he slowly removed his bandages. After seeing Xie Lian's reaction, he took a couple steps back, as if aware of Xie Lian's inability to accept this face of his. He suddenly covered that horrifying face and leapt up from the ground, then he let out a shout and fled into the deep woods.

Xie Lian finally came around and shouted, "WAIT!" He called out as he chased after him, "Wait! Come back!"

But Xie Lian was dumbstruck for a good moment before he came around after all. The boy was obviously familiar with the mountain paths, and he was used to escaping in the dark, so it took him no time to vanish completely. No matter how Xie Lian yelled for him, he wouldn't show himself. There was no one around to help Xie Lian search and his powers were exhausted, so there was no way he could contact the others. He ran all over the mountain, searching for a good part of the hour to no avail.

A cold breeze blew past and cleared his mind a little. Knowing that running around aimlessly like a headless fly served no purpose, Xie Lian forced himself to calm down.

"Maybe he'll go back to take Xiao Ying's body," Xie Lian thought as he returned to the Ming Guang temple. But then, he stopped in his steps.

Many men dressed in black, with grave expressions, had gathered in the woods at the back of the temple, and they were in the midst of carefully unloading those forty-something upside-down corpses. A tall man with folded arms before the woods was overseeing the operation. When he turned his head around, it was the exquisite but cold face of a youth. It was Fu Yao. It looked like he had made a trip back and brought along a number of helping hands from the Palace of Xuan Zhen.

Xie Lian was about to speak but was interrupted by the sound of footfalls behind him. Nan Feng had returned from sending the villagers away.

On seeing the situation, Nan Feng glanced at Fu Yao and said, "Didn't you run away?"

Displeased, Fu Yao raised his eyebrows at the offensive comment.

Xie Lian didn't want another argument to start, so he said, "I asked him to find reinforcements."

Nan Feng sneered. "Well, where are they? I thought you could at least ask your general to come?"

Fu Yao replied mildly, "When I went back, I heard General Pei Junior had already come to the scene, so I didn't bother our general. Even if I did, he's probably too busy to come anyway."

Actually, based on Xie Lian's understanding of Mu Qing, Xie Lian was pretty sure that he wouldn't come even if he had the time. But under the present circumstances, he was too tired to care.

"Please stop fighting for a moment and help me find the bandaged boy."

Nan Feng frowned. "Wasn't he with you, guarding that girl's body?"

"I scared him off after asking him to remove his bandages," Xie Lian replied.

Fu Yao smirked. "Please, your crossdressing isn't that terrifying."

Xie Lian sighed. "It's all my fault for being in a stupor. Lady Xiao Ying's death was already a big shock to him. He probably couldn't take the blow of thinking that I was scared of his face, so he ran off."

Fu Yao wrinkled his nose. "Is he really that ugly?"

Xie Lian replied, "It's not a matter of ugliness. He...has the Human Face Disease."

Hearing those three words, both Nan Feng and Fu Yao froze.

They finally understood why Xie Lian was shocked.

Eight hundred years ago, a plague swept through the Kingdom of Xianle, and it wiped out the nation. Those who caught the plague would first have small warts develop all over their bodies, then as the warts swelled, the skin would grow rugged. That swollen part would slowly become uneven, with three indentations and one protrusion, just like...eyes, mouths, noses. The facial features would then metamorphize until it eventually took on the shape of a human face. If they let it be, then more and more human faces would grow on their bodies. It was said that some of these human faces, once fully-formed, could speak and even scream.

They called this the Human Face Disease.

Fu Yao's expression went through a myriad of changes as he put down his folded arms. "That's impossible! That thing was extinguished hundreds of years ago! There's no way it can reappear!"

"I'm not mistaken," Xie Lian only said.

Nan Feng and Fu Yao couldn't refute. No one could refute this if it came from Xie Lian.

Xie Lian continued, "There are many burn scars on his face, probably from self-induced burning to get rid of the faces."

The first reaction of those who contracted the disease was usually to slice off the faces with knives, or burn them off with fire; any means possible to rid themselves of those faces.

Nan Feng dropped his voice. "The boy is probably not a normal human being, then; he has to be at least a few hundred years old. Everything else aside, is he contagious?"

Even though this was a severe headache, it was a question Xie Lian considered calmly and logically. So he said with conviction, "No. The Human Face Disease is highly contagious. If he was still contagious, then the entire mountain would've been infected by now, considering how long he had been hiding here. His condition should already be...cured. Only the scars remain."

They couldn't afford to be careless. Fu Yao seemed to have some real influence in the Palace of Xuan Zhen, and was able to call forth capable hands to help with the search. But no matter how deep they dug or how far they looked, they could not find any traces of the bandaged boy. Perhaps he had already fled Mount Yujun and vanished into the sea of people. The best they could do now was to return to the heavens and request the Palace of Ling Wen conduct a search, and wait for news. Fortunately, the boy was not contagious, but Xie Lian thought of how horrifying the boy looked; if he was discovered after he left the mountains, he might end up hunted as a monster. They must find him soon!

Without further delay, Xie Lian picked up Xiao Ying's body and descended the mountain. Since he was slightly out of it, he didn't realize he brought the body into the teashop until the Tea Master yelled at him. Xie Lian immediately apologized and went back out to entrust Xiao Ying's burial to someone else before re-entering the teashop. After settling everything, he sat down and heaved a soundless sigh.

This case was finally over, but Xie Lian thought that the few days since he ascended felt longer than an entire year of him collecting junk in the mortal realm. Climbing, jumping, flying, screaming, tumbling, disguising and performing; his bones were going to collapse. Even then, there were still many mysteries and aftermaths left behind for him to deal with. Maybe he'd raise a bard banner, and roam the world telling tales of how collecting junk was better than ascension.

Fu Yao lifted the hem of his robe and sat down next to him. Alas, he could no longer keep it in, and rolled his eyes. "How much longer are you gonna wear that thing?"

It felt incredibly familiar to see his eyes roll. Xie Lian finally took off the wedding dress, wiped away his makeup, then realized dejectedly, "Was I talking to General Pei Junior in this dress the whole time? Nan Feng, why didn't you remind me?"

“Probably because you looked so happy in it,” Fu Yao replied.

After running errands all day, Nan Feng finally sat down for a rest too. “Don’t worry about it. General Pei Junior won’t care. You can dress ten times weirder and he won’t bat an eyelash or tell anyone.”

Xie Lian was grateful for all the errands Nan Feng ran and poured him some tea. He thought about how cool-headed General Pei Junior was in the face of Xuan Ji’s madness.

He commented, “General Pei Junior is certainly calm and collected, very composed.”

Nan Feng took a sip of the tea and said, “He may look well-mannered, but he’s like his ancestor—difficult to deal with.”

Xie Lian could see it. Unbelievably enough, Fu Yao agreed too.

“General Pei Junior is a nouveau ascendent of the last couple hundred years, but he’s got a strong tailwind, and climbs the ladder pretty fast. When he was appointed Deputy General by General Pei, he was barely twenty years old. Do you know what he did?”

“He slaughtered an entire city,” Fu Yao replied coolly.

Xie Lian looked thoughtful on hearing this, but he wasn’t surprised. In the Heavenly Court, kings and generals roamed. The whole fighting for and protecting of one’s land was nothing less than heroic, and to ascend, one must first become a hero. However, the path of a hero was always bloody.

Fu Yao concluded, “In the Heavenly Court, there aren’t many who are trustworthy and worth meeting.”

Xie Lian thought it funny that Fu Yao seemed to speak from experience. He probably got bullied all over the place. But then again, even though Xie Lian ascended three times, he didn’t stick around for long, so when it came to understanding these gods, he might actually know less than these two junior officials.

Nan Feng on the other hand, seemed to strongly disagree. “Don’t listen to such inflammatory statements, there’s good and bad everywhere. There are still a number of trustworthy officials in the heavens.”

“Hah! Trustworthy officials? Do you mean your general?” Fu Yao sneered.

Nan Feng responded, “I don’t know about my general, but it’s definitely not yours!”

Xie Lian was long used to this kind of situation. And with other things on his mind, he didn’t have the energy to pull them apart.

The case in the north had concluded. Xie Lian returned to the Heavens, reported that bandaged boy to the Palace of Ling Wen, and placed a request to search for him.

Ling Wen took the request with a grave expression and said, "I will do my utmost to find him. Truly I did not think this journey to the north would open a giant can of worms. Thank you for your hard work, Your Highness."

Xie Lian replied, "I have the two junior officials who volunteered to help to thank, and General Pei Junior as well. I am truly grateful."

"All this is bad relationship trouble caused by Ol' Pei himself, of course Junior has to take care of it. He's used to it, so there's no need to thank him," Ling Wen said. "If Your Highness is not busy, please enter the communication array. We are to have a meeting over what has transpired."

Xie Lian also had many questions he'd like answers to. After leaving the Palace of Ling Wen, he wandered about and found a small stone bridge. The stone bridge crossed a small gurgling stream with crystal-clear waters. He could see the clouds drifting under the water, and through the flowing waters and clouds, there stood the mountains and cities of the mortal realm.

"This is a good place," Xie Lian thought.

And so he sat on the head of the bridge, mouthed the password, and entered the communication array.

It was one of those rare times when the communication array was bursting with liveliness, with voices echoing and reverberating from all directions. The first thing he heard was Feng Xin swearing.

"Holy fuck! Have you all picked a mountain for the sealing yet?! That Xuan Ji is a madwoman, no matter what we ask, she only screams to see General Pei and tells us nothing useful about the location of the Green Ghost Qi Rong!"

General Pei Junior responded, "General Xuan Ji has always been stubborn and intense."

Feng Xin yelled angrily, "General Pei Junior, is your General Pei back yet? Let her meet him. Then get Green Ghost's location out of her and get rid of her!"

Feng Xin had never been good with women, and Xie Lian felt sorry that he was the one given the task of interrogation.

General Pei Junior replied, "It doesn't matter even if they meet. She'll just become more insane."

A voice came through, "Another round of upside-down corpses...Qi Rong really is too crass. Disgusting."

“Even the ghost realm thinks he’s vulgar. He’s truly the most asinine!”

Words between the officials flew seamlessly around in the array, it was clear that they were all on familiar terms with one another. As a newcomer who’d only just ascended again after an eight-hundred-year absence, Xie Lian should have laid low and remained silent, but after a while, Xie Lian still couldn’t hold it in.

He asked, “Everyone, what was with the upside-down corpses? Was the Green Ghost Qi Rong in the area too?”

Xie Lian rarely spoke in the communication array, so his voice was foreign to many and the officials did not know whether to respond. Surprisingly enough, the first to answer him was Feng Xin.

“The Green Ghost Qi Rong wasn’t at Mount Yujun. However, the upside-down corpses were offerings Xuan Ji presented to him, as per his order.”

“Xuan Ji is a subordinate of the Green Ghost?” Xie Lian asked.

“Correct,” General Pei Junior replied. “Xuan Ji passed away many hundreds of years ago. She held a grudge but was too powerless to raise hell until just over a hundred years ago when the Green Ghost Qi Rong took a liking to her and took her under his wing. Only then did her spiritual powers improve by leaps and bounds.”

What he really meant was the chaos Xuan Ji caused was not General Pei’s fault, because she wasn’t originally this strong. All blame should go to the Green Ghost Qi Rong instead, since he was the one who took her under his command and gave her the power to harm humans. Everyone was already of the opinion that this sin was all General Pei’s to bear, but no one said it out loud. Yet he noticed, and spoke of it so openly in a reminder, that it shut everyone up and made them hide their real thoughts deeper within.

Xie Lian then spoke up again, “Has Mount Yujun been thoroughly inspected? What about the child spirit?”

This time, Mu Qin’s voice rang out. He said in an indecipherable tone, “Child spirit? What child spirit?”

Xie Lian thought Fu Yao had probably not reported every detail, maybe his volunteering to help was even done in secret. So, without mentioning Fu Yao to spare him any unnecessary problems, Xie Lian explained.

“When I was in the wedding sedan, I heard the giggles of a child who sang nursery rhymes as a word of caution. The two junior officials next to me didn’t notice, which means that this child spirit must have remarkable powers.”

“There were no child spirits found on Mount Yujun,” Mu Qing stated.

Xie Lian was confused. Perhaps the child spirit had specially come just to warn him? Thinking of this, Xie Lian was suddenly reminded of another matter that had been on his mind all this time.

He asked, "Speaking of which, I met a young man who can control silver butterflies at Mount Yujun. Does anyone know who he is?"

The noisy communication array suddenly fell completely silent. Xie Lian was expecting this reaction, so he simply waited.

A moment later, Ling Wen asked, "Your Highness, what did you say just now?"

Mu Qing said coldly, "He just said, he met Hua Cheng."

Upon finally learning the name of that young man in red, Xie Lian felt his spirits lift inexplicably. He smiled.

"So he's called Hua Cheng? Hm, it's a fitting name for him."

The tone of Xie Lian's voice rendered all the officials even more speechless. Another moment passed before Ling Wen cleared her throat.

"Um...Your Highness, have you ever heard of the Four Calamities?"

"Much ashamed, I only know of the Four Famous Tales," Xie Lian thought to himself.

The so-called Four Famous Tales referred to the extravagant stories of the deeds of four gods prior to their ascension: The Young Lord Who Poured Wine; The Prince Who Pleased God; The General Who Snapped His Sword; and The Princess Who Slit Her Throat. Of course, the "Prince Who Pleased God" alluded to the martial might of the Crown Prince of Xianle.

Being ranked as the Four Famous Tales did not necessarily indicate the four were the strongest of the gods; it was simply because their tales were the most well-known and most talked about. Xie Lian had always been slow on the uptake when it came to news from the outside world; he could even be said to be out of touch with the outside world, and ignorant of the state of affairs. He had only known about the Four Famous Tales because he was one of the four. The Four Calamities was something that probably grew popular later, but Xie Lian had never heard of it before. Since it included the word "Calamity", it couldn't be anything good.

"Much ashamed, but I've never heard of them. Who are the Four Calamities?"

Mu Qing said coolly, "Your Highness walked the mortal realm for hundreds of years, and yet you are so ill-informed. I'm really curious to know what you've been doing all this time?"

Eating, sleeping, busking, collecting junk, duh?

Xie Lian smiled. "It's not easy being mortal. There's plenty of things to busy myself with, and they are all complicated. It's not easier than being a heavenly official."

Ling Wen spoke up, "Please remember, Your Highness, the Four Calamities are: Ship-Sinking Black Water, Night-Touring Green Lantern, White-Clothed Calamity, and Crimson Rain Sought Flower. They are the four Ghost Kings of the ghost realm, causing endless headaches to all in the heavenly realm."

Humans become gods when they ascend; ghosts when they fall.

The gods created heaven to reside in, drawing a clear boundary between themselves and mortals. They watched from above and ruled from beyond reach. The ghost realm, on the other hand, was not separated from the mortal realm. Monsters, demons, ghosts, and mortals shared one earth; some ghosts hid in the darkness, and some pretended to be humans as they walked among the people and roamed the mortal realm in disguise.

Ling Wen continued, "Ship-Sinking Black Water refers to a water ghoul. Although he has reached Supreme status, he's fairly low-key and rarely starts trouble. Not many have seen him before, so we won't mind him for now.

"Night-Touring Green Lantern refers to that vulgar, corpse-hanging Green Ghost Qi Rong. He's the only one in the four not yet a Supreme. He's probably included because he's always causing trouble and is really quite annoying. Or maybe because four names are easier to remember, so he's just there to pad the numbers. He's also insignificant.

"White-Clothed Calamity should be someone Your Highness is familiar with. He's also known as White No-Face."

Hearing the name, Xie Lian, who was sitting on the stone bridge, suddenly felt a stab of pain in his heart that spread all over his body. His hands began to shake, and he unconsciously folded them into fists.

Of course he was familiar.

They say when a Supreme was born, it could destroy an entire nation and throw the world into chaos. The first country White No-Face destroyed was Xianle.

"Anyway, White No-Face is already defeated. Even if he still exists somewhere in this world, he'd be the last person anyone would expect to steal the limelight.

"Your Highness, the silver butterflies you saw at Mount Yujun are also called wraith butterflies. Their master is the last of the four, and one the world does not want to incur the wrath of—Crimson Rain Sought Flower, Hua Cheng."

In the Heavens, "notoriety" is the word to describe the Heavenly Martial Emperor, and the Crown Prince of Xianle. Although the meaning of "notoriety" was completely different for the two, the word still resonated equally. However, in the ghost realm, there was only one worthy to be called “notorious”, and that was Hua Cheng.

If you wanted to learn about a god, simply walk into his temple and take a look at the way he was dressed and the weapons he wielded, and you’d more or less understand him. If you wanted to know more, simply listen to folktales, plays, and stories passed down by word of mouth. A god’s mortal past and deeds were well-documented. Ghosts on the other hand, not so much. The kind of person they were while still alive, and their appearance at present, were all a mystery.

The name Hua Cheng was very obviously fake, and his appearance was most likely fake too. In the rumours, he was sometimes a twisted boy given to capricious mood changes, sometimes a gentle and elegant handsome young man, and sometimes a gorgeous seductress with a vicious, deceptive heart, anything goes! As for his true self, the only thing one could be sure of was that he dressed in red, and often appeared during a bloodbath with silver butterflies questing between his sleeves.

And when it came to Hua Cheng’s backstory, there were endless different versions. Some say he was born crippled without a right eye and was bullied and humiliated since birth, so he was filled with hatred for the world; some say he was a young soldier who died in a lost battle for his country, and later came to walk the earth in resentment; some say he was a fool who was tormented by the death of his love; some even say he was a monster. In the most outrageous version, supposedly—only supposedly!—supposedly, Hua Cheng ascended and became a god but immediately jumped back down on his own and became a ghost. But this was merely a version that wasn’t widespread. No one knew if it was true or false, and not many believed it. It had to be false, though; even if it was true, it’d be a complete embarrassment for the heavens that someone would rather ditch the heavenly official role to become a ghost. Either way, the more diverse the stories were, the more mystery he was shrouded in.

There were also many reasons for the gods to fear Hua Cheng. For example, his behaviour was unpredictable; sometimes he would carry out a massacre in cold blood, and sometimes he would do odd acts of kindness. He also wielded a great deal of influence in the mortal realm and had legions of followers.

That’s right. Mortals worshipped gods to ask for blessings and protection so that they could escape the evils from the ghost realm, and this was how the gods came to gain plenty of followers. Yet, Hua Cheng, a ghost, had such a large following on earth that he could influence the world single-handedly.

Here was a story that must be told.

When Hua Cheng first appeared, he did something notorious.

He openly challenged thirty-five heavenly officials. The challenge was to spar with the martial gods and debate with the civil gods. Thirty-three of the thirty-five thought it hilarious, but were also infuriated enough to take up his challenge, thinking they could join forces to teach this little devil a thing or two.

The first to step up to the plate were the martial gods.

The martial gods were the strongest of the heavenly officials; each had plenty of believers, and they were all powerful. In the face of a newborn ghost, it was a sure win.

Instead, it turned out to be a complete annihilation. Even their weapons were completely smashed into pieces by Hua Cheng's freakish scimitar.

It was only after the battle that they found out Hua Cheng was born of Mount Tong'lu²⁰.

Mount Tong'lu was a volcano. What was significant was that there is a city in the mountains, called Gu²¹. The City of Gu wasn't a place where people cultivated poison, but rather, the city itself was a great venom.

Every few hundred years, tens of thousands of ghosts descended upon the City of Gu to butcher one another until at last only one remained, and thus formed the venom. It usually ended in complete elimination, but those who were capable enough to make it out alive would emerge as Ghost Kings. Only two such ghosts have ever made it out of the City of Gu these few hundreds of years, and as expected, these two both became the well-known Calamities.

Hua Cheng was such a Ghost King.

After the defeat of the martial gods, it came time for the civil gods to rise to the challenge. Surely Hua Cheng could fight, but not debate?

Unfortunately for the civil gods, they could not defeat him. Hua Cheng could recite the classics and debate the moderns. He was sometimes polite, sometimes vicious, sometimes stubborn, sometimes incisive, and sometimes quibbling. He was truly a great speaker of sophistication and bullshit. He verbally abused the civil gods from top to bottom, past to present, and infuriated them so much that the waterfall of blood they coughed out washed the skies red.

Hua Cheng gained fame overnight.

What was truly frightening, however, was that after the challenge, Hua Cheng demanded all thirty-three officials make good on their word. Before the challenge, it was decided that if Hua Cheng were to lose, he would offer up his own ashes. If the officials were to lose, they must descend from the heavens and return to being mortals. If it wasn't for his arrogant attitude and his decisive stake, and the conviction of the thirty-three officials that they would not lose, they would never have accepted such terms.

²⁰ "Tong'lu" means "Copper Kiln", so Mount Tong'lu is basically a giant furnace.

²¹ "Gu" means "venom".

In the end, all thirty-three gods ate their own words, and no one honoured the terms. It was humiliating to break their promises, but when they thought about it, if only one of them was defeated it'd be an embarrassment; if all of them were defeated and humiliated, then no one would lose face. They could even turn around and mock the other party! So they all came to a tacit understanding to pretend that nothing had happened. Mortals were forgetful anyway, they would forget this in fifty years or so.

They were not wrong about the mortals, but they were wrong about Hua Cheng.

The gods refused to fulfil their promises? That was fine, he would give them a hand.

So, Hua Cheng burnt every single temple and shrine of all thirty-three gods.

This was the stuff of nightmares for all the gods in the heavens -- the red-clad ghost's burning of the thirty-three martial and civil gods' temples.

Temples and followers were the main source of power for heavenly officials; where would followers go to pray if there were no temples? If they didn't pray, there wouldn't be merits. The massive loss of temples and merits greatly crippled the heavens. To rebuild would take at least a hundred years, and even then it wouldn't be the same as before. This was a catastrophe greater than passing one's own predetermined Heavenly Calamity²². The number of temples and shrines of these heavenly officials combined were at least tens of thousands, but Hua Cheng managed to burn them all in one night. How? No one knew, but he did it.

He was truly insane.

The gods cried foul to the Heavenly Martial Emperor, but there was nothing he could do. The heavenly officials themselves accepted the challenge and the terms, and Hua Cheng was cunning enough to only destroy temples without hurting anyone. It was like he dug a hole and asked the gods to jump, and the gods themselves dug the hole bigger and dove in. So what could they have done, the way things were now?

Originally the thirty-three heavenly officials wanted to show the world the defeat of this insignificant devil, so they broadcasted the challenge in the dreams of many royals and nobles to display their strength and might before their most devout believers. But all the royalties and nobles saw was their miserable defeat. When the mortals woke up, they swapped from worshipping the heavenly officials to the Ghost King. The heavenly officials who lost both their temples and believers soon grew weaker and weaker, until they were erased from existence. It wasn't until a new wave of ascensions that those empty positions were filled up again.

Ever since then, the name Hua Cheng was feared in the heavens. Even just hearing any mention of red robes or silver butterflies brought cold sweat to many. Some feared he would challenge them then burn their temples if they were to incur his displeasure; some were blackmailed into silence and inaction because he had them by the balls; and some even oddly respected him because of how wide his reach was in the mortal realm. Sometimes, they even had to ask him for help in paving the way for them while they carried out their duties.

Thus, the heavens feared, hated, and respected this Ghost King.

Among the thirty-five gods who were challenged, the two who declined were General Xuan Zhen, Mu Qing, and General Nan Yang, Feng Xin.

They thought the challenge was beneath them and didn't care for it. Turns out, it was the right decision to make. But even then, Hua Cheng hadn't forgotten about those two. Many Zhongyuan Festival²³ patrols ended in fists and blood when both parties crossed paths with each other, and those crazy, maniacal silver butterflies left an everlasting impression on both men.

Hearing this, Xie Lian thought of those fluttering silver butterflies that danced around him playfully. He couldn't picture them as described in the rumours.

²³ [中元節] Zhongyuan Jie, or the Ghost Festival, falls on the fifteenth day of the seventh month of the Lunar Calendar. (This usually falls around August/September on the Western Calendar.) The seventh month is ghost month, when the gates to the underworld are open, so the gods patrol more diligently. The festival celebrates the underworld, and offerings are made to the dead to appease their spirits and help them move on. Read more about it here: https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Ghost_Festival

Ch.13: Maple-Red Clothes; Snow-White Skin

Of course, those were the words he would never say out loud. But no wonder Nan Feng and Fu Yao's faces changed when they heard about the silver butterflies. They must've had a hard time at the hands of the silver butterflies' master, together with the two generals they served.

"Your Highness, d-d-d-did Hua Cheng do anything to you?" an official asked, as if Xie Lian should be missing an arm or a leg.

"He didn't really do anything, just..." Xie Lian stopped.

Just what? He couldn't possibly say Hua Cheng only just hijacked his sedan, held his hand, and strolled with him in the woods?

Xie Lian reorganized his thoughts and said, "He broke Xuan Ji's spiritual array at Mount Yujun and took me inside."

A wave of muttering swept through the crowd.

After a while, an official asked, "What do you all think of this?"

Just from the voice alone, Xie Lian could imagine how the various officials looked as they shook their heads and opened their palms.

"WHO KNOWS??!?"

"NO ONE KNOWS WHAT HE WANTS! HE'S PLAYING WITH US!"

"What the hell is he thinking? No one can read that Hua Cheng...."

Although Hua Cheng had been ubiquitously known as the devil incarnate, Xie Lian didn't think Hua Cheng was that scary. And all things considered, Xie Lian had Hua Cheng to thank for his help in the northern case this time around. Either way, his first mission after ascension was complete.

It was predetermined that all merits from the northern case would be counted under Xie Lian's name, but that old mayor was so overwhelmed with grief over the death of his daughter that he didn't actually remember to recompense prayers until much later, and the merits were discounted. Yet somehow, a little bit here, a little bit there, and a lot of oversight everywhere, Xie Lian was somehow able to repay the eight million, eight hundred and eighty thousand merits.

Xie Lian was at last debt-free! Feeling light and high-spirited, Xie Lian decided he'd now focus on being a good god, and it would be great if he could make acquaintances or friends with other heavenly officials. Although the heavenly court communication array was generally peaceful, it would turn boisterous once things got busy. Sometimes if an official was feeling good or had encountered something interesting, they'd share in the array, and there'd be merriment. Although Xie Lian didn't recognize most of the voices, he would listen silently. But he couldn't always remain invisible! After a while, he'd randomly join the conversation:

"That's really quite interesting."

"I read this pleasant verse in passing, and thought I'd share with everyone."

"Here's an effective cure for back and leg pains, thought I'd share with everyone."

Unfortunately, every time he'd share these mindfully-selected, physically and mentally beneficial tips, the communication array would go silent. Until finally, Ling Wen couldn't take it anymore and told him privately:

"Your Highness, the things you're sharing in the communication array are nice, but even those who are hundreds of years older than you wouldn't share those kinds of things."

Xie Lian felt a little depressed. He wasn't even that old, so how did he end up becoming the old man among the heavenly officials, who couldn't keep up with the trending topics of the youngsters? Probably because he'd been away for too long, and always lived a solitary life without a care for the outside world. Alas, it couldn't be helped, so whatever. He gave up, and became less depressed.

But there was another problem. Until now, there were still no new shrines built for him in the mortal realm. Maybe there were, but the heavens hadn't found them, so there weren't any records. Even old Lords of the Ground and Soil had shrines. As a formally-ascended official, one of three times at that, having neither shrine nor temple nor followers was pretty awkward. But, as awkward as it was, it was only other heavenly officials feeling awkward for him. Xie Lian personally thought it wasn't that bad.

And one day, on a whim, he suddenly thought: "If no one worships me, I'll just build my own shrine!"

No one knew how to respond to this.

What kind of god would build his own temple to worship himself?? It was pure tragedy at this point.

No matter. Xie Lian was used to receiving awkward silence the moment he spoke, and thought amusing himself wasn't anyone's business anyway. It would make for an entertaining anecdote, too, so he jumped back to the mortal realm.

This time, he landed in a small village in the mountains called Puqi²⁴.

²⁴ "Puqi" means "water chestnut".

Rather than a village, it was more like a hillside hamlet. With green trees and clear waters, it was a pleasant country scene with continuous stretches of rice paddies. With such beautiful scenery, Xie Lian thought he landed in a really good place this time. There was a small, dilapidated shack on a hill, and upon asking around, Xie Lian learned that it was a decrepit place that no one lived in anymore. Once in a while, a vagrant would sleep a night in it, so the villagers told him to make himself at home. Well, wasn't that just perfect for him? Xie Lian walked towards the shack.

As Xie Lian walked closer, he realized that the shack looked decrepit from afar, but it was literally crumbling on closer inspection. Two of the four columns that held up the rectangle-shaped shack were probably rotted through. When the wind blew, the entire shack would shake and creak, possibly ready to collapse at any time. But, it was still within Xie Lian's range of acceptance. He went in for a look and began to tidy up the place.

The villagers were quite surprised to see that someone was actually going to settle in that shack, and all came to check Xie Lian out. They gave Xie Lian a huge, warm welcome. Not only did they donate a broom to help with cleaning and watched as he swept until he was covered in dust, they even gave him a basket of freshly-picked water chestnuts. With their skin peeled off, the water chestnuts were white and crisp, fresh and juicy. Xie Lian squatted in front of the doorsteps and munched on his water chestnuts, then put his hands together, thankful for this blessing. He decided to call this place Puqi Shrine.

Puqi Shrine already had a table inside that could be used as the altar, after a couple of wipe-downs. Xie Lian busied himself with cleaning this and that, and the villagers soon realized that this young man was building a shrine of sorts. Curiosity overtook them and they questioned him.

"Which god are you going to worship?"

Xie Lian cleared his throat and said, "Yes. Um. This shrine will be for the Prince of Xianle."

Everyone's face went blank. "Who's that?"

Xie Lian replied, "Um...I don't know either? He's a prince. I think."

"Ooh. What does he do?"

"Probably watches over you, and keeps you safe."

While collecting junk in passing.

The villagers asked excitedly, "Then, does this prince oversee the blessing of wealth?"

"It'd already be pretty good if you don't get blessed into debt," Xie Lian thought to himself, and gently replied, "I'm afraid not."

The crowd started throwing suggestions at him.

“Why not worship the Water Master? For wealth! It’ll bring in good money!”

“What about Ling Wen-Jun? Then maybe our village will produce a scholar!”

A girl shyly offered, “Um...What about...What about...”

Xie Lian maintained his smile. “What about?”

If Xie Lian really built a Ju Yang Shrine, Feng Xin would probably shoot him dead on the spot with an arrow.

After roughly cleaning his shrine, all that was left that Xie Lian needed were an incense burner, some fortune shakers, and other miscellaneous sundries. But Xie Lian forgot the most important thing—the statue of a god.

He put on his bamboo hat and stepped foot out the door—oh yeah, there was no door either. He pondered for a moment. This shack definitely had to be repaired. And so Xie Lian wrote and put out a sign out front: Please kindly donate to the renovation of this shrine for accumulation of good merits.

Xie Lian went on his little journey and entered town. To do what? To eat, and do what he did best.

In fairytales, gods didn’t need to eat. But in truth, it was hard to say. The Almighty could certainly extract and absorb the necessary spiritual energy directly from sunshine and rain dew, but the problem was—it wasn’t a matter of ability, but rather, why would you?

Some gods, due to their cultivation methods, required clean internal organs and could not touch even a drop of mortal grease. If they were to ingest mortal sustenance, it would be as if they had food poisoning and they would get diarrhea. Thus, they would only ingest cleanly-grown spiritual fruits, or magical beasts that had life-prolonging and power-strengthening effects.

Xie Lian didn’t have those problems. With the curse collar on, he was no different than a mortal. He could eat anything, and through experience, nothing he ate could kill him either. Even if it was a bun that had been set aside for over a month, or a cake that had gone moldy, he could eat it all without harm. With such a body, he could pretty much get by with just collecting junk. In comparison, building a shrine cost him money, while collecting junk made him money; so ultimately, truly, collecting junk was better than ascension.

Xie Lian had the looks and grace of a saint, so he even got the upper hand when collecting junk. It took him almost no time to collect a giant bag of scraps. On the way back, he saw an old ox cart that was piled high with hay. The cart seemed to look like one he saw before, from Puqi Village, so it should be going the same way as him. He asked for a ride, and the cart driver tilted his chin to signal him to get on. Carrying a big bundle of junk, Xie Lian climbed on to take a seat. It was only when he settled down that he realized there was someone else lying on the other side of the tall stack of hay.

This person, whose upper body was hidden behind the hay, had his left leg up over his right. It seemed as though he was lying there with his arms pillowing behind his head, taking a rest. He looked so carefree and at ease that it made Xie Lian a little envious. That tight pair of black boots on a pair of long legs was a sight pleasing to the eyes, and it reminded Xie Lian of a different pair that walked with him at Mount Yujun. Xie Lian could not help but sneak several more looks to confirm that there were no silver chains on those boots, which seemed to be made out of some animal's pelt.

"This is probably the son of some aristocrat coming out to play," he thought.

The cart shook as it drove. Xie Lian pushed back his bamboo hat and took out a scroll to read. He didn't really care for worldly affairs, but after having created too many awkward situations, he figured he'd better study up a bit. The cart rattled and time passed. Looking up, they were traversing through a maple grove, a sea of flaming red in a field of green. The rustic charm of the mountainous countryside, with fresh grass that refreshed the mind, was extremely intoxicating. But, Xie Lian could not help but give a slight start.

A long time ago, in his youth, when he cultivated at the Royal Holy Pavillion, the entire mountain of maple was like this: shimmering like gold, intense like fire. The unforgettable sight before him now inevitably took him on a trip down memory lane. Xie Lian watched for a long time before looking down at the scroll.

The first few lines on the scroll were thus:

The Prince of Xianle, ascended thrice as: a Martial God; a Misfortune God, a Rubbish God.

"..."

"Well, alright," Xie Lian said out loud. "If you think about it, a martial god is no different than a rubbish god. All gods are equal. All beings are equal."

A snicker came from behind, and a voice said, "Is that right?"

The youth on the other side of the cart lazily drawled, "People naturally love saying that all gods are equal and all beings are equal, but if that was true, then all those different gods wouldn't even exist."

Xie Lian looked at the young boy, who was still languishing there without showing any intention to get up. The boy had probably interrupted out of boredom.

"You're probably right," Xie Lian smiled and said.

Xie Lian returned to his scroll and continued reading.

"Many believe that, as the God of Misfortune, any paintings or writings of the Prince of Xianle have the powers of a curse. If placed on the back of a person, or on the main entrance of a household, then the cursed person or household will run into all sorts of bad luck."

"..."

It was hard to tell whether this was the description of a god or a ghost.

Xie Lian shook his head. He couldn't bear to read on any more about himself. It was probably better to read about other prominent gods of today, so he wouldn't be discourteous if he ran into them and ended up not being able to tell them apart. A villager had mentioned the Water Master earlier, so Xie Lian moved on to find info on the Water Master.

"The Water Master Wudu: controls water and wealth. Most merchants have a Water Master shrine in their stores and homes to pray for abundant wealth."

Xie Lian thought it strange. "How does the God of Water relate to wealth?"

The youth behind the hay responded, "Merchants use the waters to transport goods, so they always pray to the Water Master for peace and safety, promising this or that. After a while, the Water Master became the God of Wealth."

A pro was giving him answers. Xie Lian turned around.

"Really? Interesting. The Water Master must be very powerful then."

The youth smiled mockingly. "Yeah, the infamous 'Water Tyrant'."

Hearing his tone, Xie Lian didn't think the boy thought highly of that heavenly official. It didn't sound like he was complimenting him either.

"The 'Water Tyrant'?"

The youth replied languidly, "It all depends on him whether a ship can sail. No offerings, no sail. That's how he received that nickname. Kinda like General Ju Yang and the Sweeping General."

Infamous gods usually had a nickname or two in between the realms; for example, Xie Lian was known as the Laughingstock of the Three Realms, the Infamous Freak; the Jinx, the Outcast, cough, cough, etcetera. Usually, it was fairly disrespectful to use those nicknames on heavenly officials; like if anyone were to call Mu Qing the Sweeping General, he'd surely fly into a rage.

Xie Lian made a note to himself what not to call the Water Master, and said, "I see. Thanks so much for your enlightenment."

He stopped and thought this youth to be a rather intriguing conversationalist. He continued, "My friend, you look young, but you know a lot."

The youth replied, "Nah. Just bored. I read whatever when I'm free."

In the mortal realm, it was easy to find books on lore that spoke of the stories of gods and ghosts, the subjects ranging from their kindness and grudges to trivialities. Some were real, and some fake. It wasn't odd that the youth knew so much.

Xie Lian put down his scroll. "Then, my friend, you know about gods, but do you know about ghosts too?"

"Which ghost?" the youth asked.

Xie Lian replied, "Crimson Rain Sought Flower, Hua Cheng."

The youth chuckled and finally sat up when he heard that name. He turned around and Xie Lian's eyes suddenly lit up.

The youth was about sixteen or seventeen years old. His tunic was redder than maple leaves, and his skin was white like snow. With eyes as bright as stars, he looked askance at him with a smile. He was exceptionally handsome, but there was an inexplicable hint of wildness in his looks. His hair was tied in a loose ponytail, crooked and carefree.

The cart was just driving through the forest of flaming red maples, where maple leaves were dancing their way to the ground. A leaf playfully landed on the shoulder of the youth and he blew it off softly, then looked up at Xie Lian, speaking with a shadow of a smile.

"What do you want to know? Ask away."

Ch.14: Maple-Red Clothes; Snow-White Skin 2

He looked as though he was bantering, but he had the inexplicable composure of an omniscient being. Though he sounded youthful, his voice was deeper than was typical for his age, pleasant to the ears.

Sitting upright on the cart, Xie Lian watched him thoughtfully for a moment, then said, “‘Crimson Rain Sought Flower’ is quite the name. Do you know where it came from, my friend?”

Out of respect, Xie Lian didn’t say “my little friend”.

The youth sat up casually, propped an arm up on a raised knee, and fixed his sleeves. He replied drolly, “Nothing major, really. Just that, there was once an incident where he cleaned out the nest of another ghost, and a shower of bloody rain poured from the skies. He saw a flower was getting battered by the bloody rain, so he stopped to shield it with his umbrella.”

Xie Lian pictured it in his head, and imagined an act of elegance under the rancid shower. He then thought about the burning of those thirty-three temples and laughed.

“Does Hua Cheng pick fights often?”

The youth answered, “Not often. Depends on his mood.”

“What was he like before death?” Xie Lian asked.

“Definitely not a good person,” the youth replied.

“What does he look like?”

The youth raised his eyes to look at him when he heard the question, tilted his head, and stood up before sitting down next to Xie Lian.

“What do you think he looks like?” He turned the question on Xie Lian.

Seeing the youth up close, Xie Lian thought he was too handsome for words, but his beauty was deadly like a sword, sharp and mesmerizing, making it hard to look at him head-on. Xie Lian stared for a moment then lowered his eyes in defeat.

He turned his head slightly and continued to ask, “If Hua Cheng is a big-shot ghost, I’m sure he has many forms, and changes often.”

The youth arched his brows at Xie Lian turning away, and replied, “Yeah, but there are still times when he would use his real face. Of course, we’re talking about the real man himself, not clones.”

It might be his imagination, but Xie Lian thought the distance between the two of them seemed to be a little wide, so he turned his face back around.

“Then, I feel his true form is probably a youth like you.”

The youth lifted his lips slightly. “Why do you say that?”

Xie Lian replied, “No reason. You say whatever and I think whatever, so whatever.”

The youth laughed. “Who knows? But, he’s blind in one eye.” He pointed to his right eye. “This one.”

That was nothing outrageous. Xie Lian recalled one of the many backstory versions where Hua Cheng wore a black eyepatch to hide that missing eye, and asked, “Do you know what happened to that eye?”

“That’s a question everyone wants the answer to,” the youth replied.

Others asked because they wanted to know what Hua Cheng’s weakness was, but Xie Lian asked purely out of curiosity. He didn’t say anything and the youth continued.

“He dug it out himself.”

Xie Lian was taken aback. “Why?”

“A moment of madness,” the youth answered.

...He could dig out his own eye when struck by madness. Xie Lian was now more curious than ever about this Crimson Ghost King. It couldn’t have been something as simple as a moment of madness, but there were probably no more details in regards to that story.

Xie Lian pressed on, “Does Hua Cheng have any kind of weakness?”

Xie Lian wasn’t expecting the youth to have the answer, it was just a casual question. If Hua Cheng’s weakness was so easily known, then whatever the rumored weakness was couldn’t possibly be true.

But the youth answered immediately, “His ashes.”

If one got a hold of a ghost’s ashes, one could take command of said ghost. If the ghost disobeyed, then by getting rid of the ashes, the ghost would, too, dissolve, and its soul disintegrate. This was common knowledge, but using it on Hua Cheng seemed fruitless.

Xie Lian smiled. “There’s probably no one who can obtain his ashes, so this weakness doesn’t count.”

“You never know,” the youth said. “There are circumstances where a ghost voluntarily gives away his ashes.”

“Like the bet he had with those thirty-three heavenly officials?”

“Yeah, right,” the youth scoffed. He didn’t need to say the words for Xie Lian to understand that he meant there was no way Hua Cheng would have lost. He continued, “There’s a custom in the ghost realm where, if a ghost has a chosen someone, they would entrust their ashes to that person.”

That was like handing over one’s life to another person. Such passion, what charming tales.

Xie Lian excitedly said, “I didn’t know the ghost realm had such a romantic practice?”

“There is such a tradition,” the youth said. “But not many dare to practice it.”

Xie Lian thought as much. It wasn’t only ghosts who deceived humans; there were humans who deceived ghosts, too. There must be endless tales of betrayal and abuse.

Xie Lian sighed. “It’s definitely painful to think about. To have given everything for love, and lose everything in return.”

The youth laughed out loud. “What’s there to be afraid of? If it were me, I’d have no regrets giving away my ashes, destroyed or not!”

Having chatted for so long, Xie Lian suddenly realized that they hadn’t even introduced themselves. “My friend, what’s your name?”

The youth raised one hand over his forehead to block out the rays of the blood-red sunset, and squinted his eyes as if loathing the sun. “Me? I’m the third in the family. They call me San Lang²⁶.”

He didn’t say his full name, and Xie Lian didn’t bother to probe.

“My family name is Xie, name is Lian. Are you heading to Puqi Village, too?”

San Lang laid back into the hay, put his arms behind his head, and crossed his legs. “Dunno. I’ve no destination in mind.”

It sounded as if there was a story to his words, so Xie Lian gently asked, “What’s the matter?”

²⁶ San Lang means “third youth”. There are a number of expressions involving “San Lang”, probably because in stories, the third time’s the charm. It’s also (very rarely since it’s old) a term of endearment women use for their lovers, derived from the Tang Dynasty.

San Lang sighed. "My parents were quarrelling and kicked me out. I walked for a while, but had nowhere to go. I almost passed out from hunger on the streets before finding a place at random to lie down."

The clothes on the boy's back looked simple, but they were of high quality. With the knowledgeable way he spoke and how carefree he appeared, Xie Lian had long since thought he was a boy from a wealthy family. It must be quite difficult for a respectable young man to wander so long on his own. Xie Lian understood that feeling. Hearing he was hungry, Xie Lian searched through his sack, but only found a small steamed bun. Good thing it hadn't turned hard yet.

"Want it?"

The youth nodded and Xie Lian gave him the bun. San Lang took a look at Xie Lian.

"What about you?"

"I'm alright. Not hungry yet," Xie Lian replied.

San Lang pushed the bun back. "Then I'm alright too."

Xie Lian looked at him, then split the bun in half and gave him half. "You can have half, and I'll have the other half."

Seeing this, San Lang accepted the steamed bun and started munching. Watching him sit and eat a simple bun obediently, Xie Lian felt like he was abusing the boy.

The ox cart drove slowly over the rugged hills as the sun gradually set and the two chatted in the back. The more they spoke, the more Xie Lian thought San Lang to be an extraordinary youth. At such a young age, his diction and behaviour were already mature and intelligent, calm and collected, as if there was nothing in this world he didn't know, and nothing could stump him. Xie Lian thought he was wise beyond his years, but still possessing the guise of youth.

Xie Lian said he was the Shrine Master of Puqi Shrine, and San Lang asked, "Puqi Shrine? Sounds like there are plenty of water chestnuts to eat! I like them. Which god is it for?"

Having gotten asked that troublesome question again, Xie Lian cleared his throat and said, "It's the Prince of Xianle. You probably don't know him."

San Lang smiled but before he could say anything, the ox cart shook violently.

The two rattled with the cart, and Xie Lian reached to grab San Lang, fearing he might fall. But just when his hand touched San Lang, the youth shook off his hand as if burnt. There was only a slight change in his expression, but Xie Lian saw it and thought, maybe this boy actually disliked him? They had such a good time chatting all this way though, hadn't they? But now wasn't the time to ponder.

Xie Lian stood up and looked around. "What's going on?"

The old driver responded, "I don't know! Old Huang, why aren't you moving? Go on now!"

The sun had set by now and the ox cart was still in the deep woods, now filled with darkness. That Old Huang ox just stood there, stubbornly refusing to move no matter how the old driver urged it. It kept mooing, wanting to dig its head into the earth, and flicking its tail like a whip. This didn't feel right. Xie Lian was about to jump off the cart when suddenly, the old driver pointed straight ahead and screamed.

Further up the road, a number of hovering green flames gathered and burned, floating through the woods. A group of white-clad figures slowly made their way towards them while holding their heads.

Seeing this, Xie Lian cried, "Protect!"

Ruoye flew out from his sleeve and wrapped itself in a circle around the ox cart from above, protecting the three plus the one beast.

Xie Lian turned back and demanded, "What day is it today?"

The old driver hadn't responded before the youth spoke up from behind.

"It's Zhongyuan."

The middle of the seventh month, when the gates to the underworld opened. He didn't check his calendar before coming out today, and it just happened to be the Zhongyuan Festival!

Xie Lian's voice dropped. "Stay close to me. We've run into evil tonight. If we go down the wrong path at the fork, we'll never return."

Ch.15: Maple-Red Clothes; Snow-White Skin 3

Those figures were dressed in white prisoner garb and bore no heads. It appeared they were newly-executed criminals, every one of them holding a head in their hands. They wobbled slowly towards the ox cart as their heads buzzed in those boney arms.

Xie Lian instructed the other two on the cart in a low voice, "In a moment, when they approach, do not make a sound."

San Lang tilted his head. "Gege²⁷, I can't believe you're a man with superpowers!"

He sounded greatly interested, and Xie Lian replied, "Not really superpowers, I only know a teeny bit of tricks. They can't see us now, but it'll be hard to say when they get close."

That old cart driver's eyes were already wide with fear after seeing the flight of a silk cloth, and now that there were headless walkers, his eyes were about to roll back in terror. He shook his head repeatedly.

"Nononono, I don't think I can hold my voice in! Daozhang, what should I do?!"

"...Then, there's another way, too. I apologize in advance."

Then he swiftly swung his hand and tapped a point on the old man's back, and instantly he slumped and passed out. Xie Lian caught him lightly and laid him down flat on the ox cart while he himself assumed the driver's seat. Suddenly, he sensed a strange movement behind him, and when he turned back to look, he saw that youth had also followed after him and settled right behind his person.

Xie Lian asked, "Are you alright?"

San Lang propped up his chin. "Of course not. I'm scared."

Although his voice didn't have a single trace of fright, Xie Lian still comforted him, "Don't be scared. You're behind me, nothing will harm you."

That youth smiled, not saying a word. Xie Lian suddenly realized the youth was actually staring at him. A moment later, it finally dawned on him that what this youth was staring at was actually the cursed shackle around his neck.

This cursed shackle was like a black collar bound to the neck, completely inconceivable. It could easily cause one to make bad conjectures. Xie Lian pulled at his collar lightly, even though that couldn't hide anything.

²⁷ "Gege" is a familiar address for older brother.

The skies had darkened, and that youth's expression could no longer be seen. Xie Lian picked up the reins to gently urge that ox. That group of ghosts in criminal garb walked over and were wanting to pass, but kept sensing there was something blocking the middle of the road, so they all cursed up and down.

"What the hell's going on? Why can't we pass?!"

"Yeah! What the hell! Is it haunted?"

"Fucking hell, we're the ones doing the haunting, alright?"

Xie Lian finally soothed the ox, and the cart silently passed by this band of headless criminal ghosts. Listening to the heads banter, Xie Lian thought them rather hilarious. They were full of petty woes:

"Um, did you make a mistake? How come it feels like the one holding your head is my body?"

"You're the one whose body grabbed the wrong head!"

"Hurry and switch back then, you guys..."

"How come the cut around your neck ain't clean?"

"Sigh, the executioner was a newbie. It took him five to six tries before he managed to chop my head off. Made me think he did it on purpose!"

"Your family probably didn't tip him well enough. Next time don't forget to pay the guy, and he'll give you one clean chop!"

"THERE IS NO NEXT TIME!"

...

The fifteenth day of the seventh month was the Zhongyuan Festival—the biggest festival for the ghost realm. On this day, the gates to the underworld opened, and all manner of spirits, ghosts, monsters, and demons rushed out to play. Mortals should avoid them at all cost; especially on a night like this, it was best to stay home with every door and window shut. But Xie Lian had always had rotten luck. Even just drinking water and the water could get stuck between his teeth; even wearing holy repellent gear, ghosts would still appear, like right now. Ghost fires flared all around them; several were playing tag, some were expressionlessly mumbling to themselves in a corner trying to catch the offerings and paper money burnt for the afterlife by mortals²⁸.

²⁸ It's folk custom to burn paper money and other paper imitations of daily objects for the deceased, in the hopes that they will receive them and use them for the afterlife.

A scene like this certainly epitomized the word “pandemonium”. Xie Lian crossed through the middle, thinking that from now on he must pay more attention to the calendar when going out. Suddenly, a screech that sounded like a chicken being butchered cried out.

“OH NO! OH NO! GHOSTS ARE BEING MURDERED!”

This scream made all the ghosts anxious.

“WHERE, WHERE? WHERE ARE THEY MURDERING GHOSTS?!”

The ghost that screeched answered, “I’m scared out of my wits! I found so many shattered ghost fires over there, they were all brutally crushed, what hostility!”

“All shattered? Then they’re truly broken beyond saving! That really is too much!”

“Who did it? Could it be...have monks and cultivators infiltrated us?!”

That band of headless people started shouting.

“AH! Now that you’ve mentioned it, weren’t we blocked by something on the road earlier with no way of passing? Could that have been...”

“Where, where?”

“Right there!”

Xie Lian cried “oh no!” mentally.

The next second, a large group of monsters, demons, and ghosts surrounded the ox cart, each of their faces savage. They said maliciously, “I smell the steaming smell of yang...”

They couldn’t hide any longer!

It was already unreasonable for a live human to be crashing in on a band of ghosts on Zhongyuan Festival, as if Xie Lian wanted to actually fight with such a large mob of creatures.

He urged the cart and shouted, “GO!”

That ox was terrified and was already stomping its hooves anxiously while it stood. Once it heard the shout, it didn’t need to be ordered twice before it pulled the cart into a mad dash.

Xie Lian didn’t forget to grab at the youth sitting behind him. “SIT TIGHT!”

He withdrew Ruoye and conveniently whipped out the path of escape. An ox cart suddenly revealed itself amidst a circle of ghost fires and dashed out of the siege. Those green-faced, teeth-baring, limbs-missing ghosts screeched behind the cart.

“THERE REALLY IS A CULTIVATOR!!! DAMN CULTIVATOR IS TIRED OF LIVING!!!”

“A live human actually dared to crash our Zhongyuan gathering, you can’t blame us for anything!”

“GET THEM!”

Xie Lian was gripping onto the reins with one hand as his other hand fumbled out a large handful of paper talismans. He threw them onto the ground.

“HINDER!”

Those were Stumbling Charms, excellent tools for escape. A series of small rumbling noises could be heard; with every rumble, an obstacle was set up for that band of ghosts, stalling them for a small bit of time, but only a small bit. Even having used up so many talismans, it wouldn’t take half an incense time before they caught up. Xie Lian was driving the cart down the mountain path in an escape as though his bum was on fire when he suddenly called out.

“STOP—!”

Turns out that old ox had pulled the cart to a fork in the road. Xie Lian saw there were two pitch-black mountain paths ahead and immediately pulled the reins back.

Now he had to be extra careful here!

On the night of the Zhongyuan Festival, sometimes when people strolled, they might discover a road that had never existed before. Such a road should never be taken, because if wrongfully walked, they would enter the ghost realm and never return.

Xie Lian had only just arrived in the area and didn’t know which path was the right one to take. Then, he remembered the large bag of junk he collected. The miscellaneous items he purchased earlier in the day included a fortune shaker²⁹. So he thought, why not try and shake out a fortune to decide? Thus, he fumbled for the fortune shaker and shook it in his hands with a clattering sound, mumbling as he shook.

“By the Heaven Official’s Blessing, No Paths are Bound! Every Road Leads to Heaven, May They All be Walked! The first stick left, the second stick right! We’ll go the path with the best fortune!”

Just as the words left his lips, clack, clack!, two sticks fell out of the shaker, but when he picked them up and looked, he fell silent.

The worst of bad luck.

²⁹ A fortune shaker is a wooden jar full of thin bamboo sticks, with varying degrees of good and bad luck inscribed on the bottom ends. The idea is to shake the jar with a wish in mind, and the first stick that drops out will dictate the outcome of the wish.

Both sticks were the worst of bad luck; both roads were perilous, so didn't this mean they were going to die no matter what?

Xie Lian felt a little exasperated and shook the shaker furiously once more with both hands. "Dear fortune shaker, this is our first meeting, why are you so heartless? I'm going to try again. Please give me some face this time."

Clack, clack. Two sticks again this time, and when he picked them up, they were both still the worst of bad luck!

"Let me try?" San Lang spoke up suddenly.

It couldn't end up worse than his, anyway, so Xie Lian passed the fortune shaker over. San Lang received it with a single hand and casually gave it a shake. Out fell two fortune sticks, and he picked them up and handed them to Xie Lian without even so much a glance. Xie Lian gave them a look, and they were both, amazingly, the best of good luck. He couldn't help but be awed. Since, having reached such a stage of misery, it seemed oftentimes those around him would also have their fortunes affected by his crummy luck. Who knew if that was actually true, but either way it was a complaint he'd hear frequently. Yet this youth wasn't affected in the least, and a casual shake could have him shake out two of the best of fortunes!

Since both fortune sticks showed the best of good luck, Xie Lian picked a path randomly, and drove the cart as he praised sincerely.

"My friend, your luck is really quite good."

San Lang casually tossed the fortune shaker to the back and smiled. "Really? I think my luck is pretty good, too. It's always been so."

Having heard him say "it's always been so", Xie Lian thought that the difference between people truly was as great as heaven and earth. After running for a while, suddenly, wails and hollers could be heard from all around.

"CAUGHT HIM! HE'S HERE!"

"EVERYONE COME HERE! THAT DAMN CULTIVATOR IS HERE!!!"

Ghost head after ghost head all popped out.

Xie Lian spoke up, "Ah, I can't believe we still picked the wrong path."

The effect of the Stumbling Charms was over; they were still surrounded after all!

There were at least hundreds in this mob of monsters and ghosts, surrounding them in wave after wave, and the numbers were still increasing. Xie Lian really didn't know why there were so many inhuman creatures gathered here, but there wasn't any time to wonder.

Xie Lian said warmly, "It wasn't my intent to disturb everyone, I pray you will all show us mercy."

A headless ghost spoke up, "CHE! Stinkin' cultivator. Why didn't you show mercy first? The one who broke and dispersed a bunch of ghost fires over there was your doing, wasn't it?!"

Xie Lian replied innocently, "It wasn't us. Truth be told, I'm but a lowly scrap collector."

"DON'T TRY TO ARGUE! What kind of scrap collector looks like you? You're clearly a cultivator! Besides you, who here could be a cultivator that could do such a cruel thing??"

"It doesn't have to be a cultivator to break and disperse ghost fires," Xie Lian reasoned.

"Then what can it be? Ghosts?"

Xie Lian quietly placed his hands into his sleeves. "That's not impossible."

"HAHAHAHAHAHahaha damn cultivator! You...you...you..."

The band of ghosts who were laughing and howling to the skies suddenly stopped in their tracks.

Xie Lian wondered, "What about me?"

He might've asked a question, but they hadn't just stopped in their tracks now. They all stared at Xie Lian as if they were seeing something exceedingly terrifying. Their mouths were either wide open or shut tight, and a number of the heads held in the felons' hands were even dropped onto the ground.

Xie Lian ventured, "Everyone? Are you all..."

Yet unexpectedly, before he finished his question, the band of ghosts all fled the scene, like the wind blowing away remnants of clouds.

Xie Lian was taken aback. "What the???"

He hadn't even taken out that bundle of talismans he clutched in his hand in his sleeve yet, and he was found out? Were they really that sharp? And those weren't even particularly powerful talismans, either. Xie Lian felt incredulous. Was it really him they saw?

Or something behind him?

Having thought this, he turned his head back and looked behind him.

Behind him, there was only the passed-out ox cart owner and that carefree, red-clad youth who was still propping up his cheek.

Seeing him look over, San Lang smiled and dropped his hand. "Mister cultivator, you're amazing! Those ghosts were all scared away by you."

"..." Xie Lian smiled back. "Really? I didn't realize I was actually this amazing."

Then he pulled at the reins a couple times, and the wheels of the ox cart began to roll slowly once more. The road after that was smooth, and it didn't take an hour before the ox cart slowly pulled out of the forest and came to an open mountain path. Down below the hills, the warm glow of lights illuminated Puqi Village.

That really was the path of "best of luck", with a close call but no actual danger.

A night breeze brushed by, and Xie Lian turned his head back once more. San Lang seemed to be in a very good mood and had laid down, watching the moon with his hands pillowed behind his head. Beneath the faint moonlight, that youth's complexion looked surreal.

After humming for a moment, Xie Lian smiled. "My friend."

"What is it?" San Lang replied.

"Have you ever had your fortune told?" Xie Lian asked.

"No?" San Lang replied, turning to face Xie Lian.

"Do you want me to give you a session?"

San Lang looked at him and smiled. "Do you want to give me a session?"

"A little bit," Xie Lian said.

San Lang gave a slight nod. "Sure."

He sat up, his body leaned slightly towards Xie Lian. "How do you want to read my fortune?"

"How about palm-reading?" Xie Lian suggested.

Hearing this, the corners of San Lang's lips curled. It was hard to tell what that smile meant, but he only replied with, "Sure."

Then, he extended his left hand to Xie Lian.

This left hand was long and shapely, clean and elegant, a beautiful hand. It wasn't a vulnerable kind of beautiful, but rather, there was strength hidden beneath the muscles. It was a hand that one wouldn't want to have choking their throat. Xie Lian was mindful of not touching San Lang due to the slight change in the latter's expression the last time they touched, so he simply looked down to study the hand up close.

The moon above was bright, but not too bright, yet even in the midst of night, it wasn't too dark either. Xie Lian thoroughly scrutinized the hand before him as the ox cart languidly climbed the hills. The wheels and the wooden shafts creaked as they rolled.

"So?" San Lang asked.

Xie Lian took his time, then slowly said, "You've got a good hand."

"Oh yeah? How so?" San Lang asked.

Xie Lian raised his head and said warmly, "You have a strong character, quite stubborn, but whenever you run into obstacles you remain true to yourself, and are able to transform the bad to good. You have a limitless well of good fortune; your future is bright and full of success."

All of that was complete bullshit, made up on the spot. Xie Lian had never learned palmistry. Once upon a time, when he was still banished, he often regretted not learning palmistry or face-reading at the Royal Holy Pavillion. If he had the skills, then earning pennies on the streets wouldn't have been so hard, and he wouldn't have to busk or shatter boulders on his chest. What he really wanted to see wasn't the fortune of this youth, but rather whether his hands had fingerprints and palm prints.

Normal ghosts and monsters could fabricate fake bodies and pretend to be human, but their craft was rough and often overlooked minute details, such as fingerprints and palm prints. However, the body of this youth appeared altogether normal; unperturbed and with clear palm prints. If he was a ghost in disguise, then he had to be of a calibre greater than a Savage to create such a flawless disguise. But why would a Ghost King of such special status spend his time traveling with Xie Lian on an ox cart to visit Puqi Village? Just as how heavenly officials were busily working like machines, Ghost Kings should have their hands full too!

Xie Lian pretended to be confident in his fortune-telling and sweated through his bold-faced lies until he couldn't come up with anything else. San Lang watched him unblinkingly the whole time, sitting through his nonsense with an intrigued smile, and chuckled under his breath.

"Got any more? Hm?" San Lang asked.

No way, did he want Xie Lian to make up some more? "Is there something else you want me to look at?"

"Don't fortune-tellers always tell about love and marriage?" San Lang asked.

Xie Lian cleared his throat and replied solemnly, "To be honest, I'm actually not that great at fortune-telling, so I don't know how to predict relationships. But I don't imagine you have anything to worry about."

San Lang arched his brows. "Why do you say that?"

Xie Lang grinned. "There must be many girls who crush on you."

"And why do you suppose so many girls must like me?" San Lang asked.

Xie Lian was about to answer before he realized that this kid was manipulating him into praising him. Helpless and amused, Xie Lian didn't know what to say and rubbed his forehead.

"San Lang..."

This was the first time Xie Lian ever called San Lang by name, and the youth laughed delightfully, letting Xie Lian off the hook. The ox cart had finally laboriously entered the village, and Xie Lian turned around and hurriedly got off the cart with his hand lightly supporting his forehead. San Lang followed behind and jumped off. Xie Lian finally looked up and realized with a start that San Lang was actually a head taller than him! It wasn't obvious when the youth was lazily lying in the hay, but standing tall, the two couldn't see eye to eye on even ground.

San Lang stood before the cart and stretched, and Xie Lian asked, "San Lang, where will you go now?"

"Don't know. Maybe sleep on the streets. Or a cave will do," San Lang sighed.

"That won't do..." Xie Lian said, concerned.

San Lang shrugged. "Can't be helped. I've no place to go." Then he grinned. "Thanks for telling my fortune. I'll count on your good words. See ya later."

Xie Lian felt bad about his fortune-telling, and seeing that the youth actually turned to leave, he quickly called after him. "Wait! Why don't you come to my shrine, if you don't mind it?"

San Lang stopped in his tracks and turned halfway around. "Is that okay?"

Xie Lian explained, "The place wasn't originally mine anyway, and I heard it housed a number of passersby. It's just probably much shabbier than what you're used to, I'm afraid you wouldn't be comfortable."

If this boy really was a runaway young master, Xie Lian couldn't possibly let him run around the streets aimlessly. He strongly suspected that San Lang may have only eaten that half a bun all day today, and youth or not, he would collapse somewhere if he kept that up. Hearing Xie Lian, San Lang turned his body around and said nothing, but walked up close to Xie Lian and leaned forward. Xie Lian didn't understand what he was up to, only that the distance between the two shortened too fast. He suddenly didn't know what to do.

Then that youth straightened back up and lifted the giant bag of junk in his hand.

He said, "Then, let's go."

Ch.16: Maple-Red Clothes; Snow-White Skin 4

Xie Lian was stunned right there and then. He watched as the lanky youth walked away with his giant bag of junk as if it was the most natural thing to do in the world, and it made him mutter “forgive my sins” inwardly. San Lang strode a few steps over and walked out. Xie Lian was about to follow him, but remembered at the last second that the old driver was still asleep in the ox cart. He went back around and woke the old man, advising him to keep the incident tonight a secret. After witnessing his powers, the old man didn’t dare to say no, and hurriedly dragged his Old Huang home.

There was only a roll of straw mat left on the cart. Xie Lian carried it on his back, turned around, and saw that San Lang had already started climbing the hill towards Puqi Shrine with his bag of random junk.

Nearing the crooked, shaky shack that was Puqi Shrine, San Lang lowered his head and puffed out a laugh, as if seeing something amusing. Xie Lian approached and saw that he was looking at his sign requesting for donations, and cleared his throat.

“As you see, that’s it really. That’s why I said you might not be comfortable here.”

“It’s not too bad,” San Lang said.

In the past, it had always been Xie Lian who told others “it’s alright; not too bad.” Hearing it from someone else for the first time made him feel rather complicated. The Puqi Shrine door had already long gone rotten, so Xie Lian had torn it down and replaced it with some curtains.

He lifted the drapes and said, “Come on in.”

And San Lang entered the shrine with him.

There wasn’t much in the small shrine; only a long altar table, two small stools, a small cushion, and a donation box. Xie Lian reached for the bag in San Lang’s hands, took out the fortune shaker, incense burner, some paper and miscellaneous stationary, and placed them on the altar table. Then he lit up a used red candle someone had stuffed into his hand while he was collecting junk, and the shrine brightened instantly.

San Lang picked up the fortune shaker, playfully gave it a shake and then put it down. “So...is there a bed?”

Xie Lian silently took down the straw mat from his back and unrolled it to show him.

San Lang raised his brows and asked, “There’s only one?”

Of course Xie Lian didn’t think he needed more than one, since he had only met the boy on his way back. So he said, “If you don’t mind, we can squeeze a bit for the night.”

“That works too,” San Lang said.

Xie Lian then reached for the broom and swept the floor while San Lang looked around some more. “Gege, aren’t you missing something in this shrine?”

Xie Lian had just finished sweeping and was kneeling down on the mat when he heard this. He answered as he padded their bedding, “Other than followers, I don’t think there’s anything missing.”

San Lang crouched down too, a hand propping up his chin. “What about the divine statue of the god?”

His words reminded Xie Lian. How did he forget the most important thing for a shrine—a god’s statue??

A shrine without its idol is no shrine. Although one could say the god himself was present, he couldn’t possibly just sit up on the altar all day every day. Xie Lian contemplated for a moment, and came up with a solution.

“I bought some paper and ink today. I’ll paint a portrait tomorrow.”

Painting a portrait of himself to hang in the shrine he built for himself to pray to himself. If the heavenly court caught wind of this, they’d probably laugh at him for another ten years. But the cost of commissioning a sculpture was rather hefty, and that took time, too. So Xie Lian would rather be laughed at for ten years and save money instead.

Unexpectedly, San Lang spoke up, “A portrait? I know how to paint one. Need my help?”

Startled, Xie Lian smiled. “Thanks, but I’m afraid you don’t know how to paint the Prince of Xianle, am I right?”

After all, most of his portraits were burnt and destroyed eight hundred years ago. No matter how many were left now, not many people would have seen them before.

San Lang replied, “Of course I do. Weren’t we talking about him earlier on the cart?”

Xie Lian remembered the conversation. That was indeed the case. Earlier, he had said, “you probably haven’t heard of him before”, but San Lang did not respond. Hearing him speak now, Xie Lian was surprised. He finished with the bedding and sat up straight.

“San Lang, don’t tell me you really know him?”

San Lang sat down on the mat and replied, “I do.”

Xie Lian thought that when San Lang spoke, his expression and tone of voice were quite fascinating. He was always smiling and laughing, but one could never tell whether his smiles were genuine or were actually mocking the other party for being an idiot. Having listened to him on the way back, Xie Lian was rather interested in San Lang’s appraisal of him.

Xie Lian moved to sit next to him and asked, "So, what do you think about this Prince of Xianle?"

Both men looked at each other under the lamp. The flame of the red candle flickered slightly. San Lang had his back to the candle light, and it was hard to see his exact expression with his eyes immersed under the shadows.

After a moment, he replied, "I think the Heavenly Emperor must not like him."

Xie Lian wasn't expecting this answer, and paused. "Why do you think that?"

"Why would he have banished the prince twice, then?" San Lang replied.

Xie Lian smiled a little and thought, "Indeed the thinking of a child."

He lowered his head and slowly removed his belt. "I don't think this has anything to do with like or dislike. There are many things in this world that can't be explained through like and dislike."

"Hn."

Xie Lian turned around, removed his white boots, and continued, "Besides, one needs to be punished for making mistakes. The Heavenly Emperor was simply doing his duty."

"Perhaps," San Lang responded noncommittally.

Xie Lian took off his outer robes, folded them, and was ready to place them on the altar table. Wanting to say more, he turned around, only to see San Lang's eyes staring at his ankles.

It was hard to describe that gaze; it was icy but searing, scorching but with a hint of chill. Xie Lian looked down and immediately understood. On his right ankle was a black cursed shackle.

The first curse was around his neck, and the second, around his ankle. Both curses were placed in areas not easily concealed. In the past, if anyone asked, Xie Lian would lie and say it was for training purposes, but that answer probably wouldn't deceive San Lang.

Thankfully San Lang didn't say anything, and looked away after a while. Xie Lian laid down on the mat, and the youth obediently laid down too without removing a single article of clothing. Xie Lian figured he was probably not used to sleeping on the floor like this, and thought perhaps he'd find a way to get a bed after all.

"Let's rest."

Xie Lian softly blew out the candle and all became dark once more.

The next morning, when Xie Lian opened his eyes, San Lang wasn't next to him. He raised his head and stopped, stunned. On top of the altar, there hung a portrait.

It was a portrait of a man with a golden mask, dressed glamorously in extravagant attire. There was a sword in one hand, a flower in the other. It was a beautifully and vividly-painted portrait of the God-Pleasing Prince of Xianle.

It had been years since Xie Lian saw a painting of himself like that, and he stared at it blankly for a long time before getting up. He got dressed, then pulled back the curtain. San Lang was just outside, hiding in the shadows alongside the shrine, twirling the broom in his hand and watching the sky with a bored expression.

It seemed this youth really didn't like the sun. The way he was watching the sky was as if he wanted to pluck the sun and smash it into pieces. All the fallen leaves around the shrine had been swept into a mound next to the entrance.

Xie Lian went out of the door and asked, "Did you sleep well last night?"

San Lang was still leaning on the wall, but turned his head over and said, "Not bad."

Xie Lian walked over, took the broom from his hands, and asked, "San Lang, did you paint that portrait in the shrine?"

San Lang replied, "Uh-huh."

"It's really well done," Xie Lian praised.

San Lang's lips lifted, but he didn't say anything. Maybe because he slept all over the place last night, his ponytail this morning seemed to be even more crooked, loose and casual. It actually looked quite nice; casual but not messy, rather playful.

Xie Lian pointed at his own hair and asked, "Want me to help you with that?"

San Lang nodded and went back inside with Xie Lian. When San Lang sat down, Xie Lian let down his black hair and quietly started examining it.

Even if the palm prints and fingerprints were perfectly detailed, ghosts always had one flaw in their body creation. The hair of a living person was uncountable, and it came in individual strands that were intricate and distinct. The fake bodies created by ghosts had hair that was either a black blur, or a pasted mass like long strips of fabric. Sometimes...they just went bald.

Xie Lian had checked his palm prints and fingerprints the night before, and he had initially already lowered his guard. But seeing the portrait this morning raised his suspicions again.

How could an average man know how to paint this portrait?

Yet when he combed his fingers gently through San Lang's hair, Xie Lian couldn't find anything amiss. After a while, San Lang let out a laugh as if he was ticklish from the touch. He turned his head slightly, and looked at him out of the corner of his eye.

He said, "Gege, are you going to tie my hair? Or are you thinking of doing something else?"

With his hair down, San Lang still looked handsome, but there was an added air of wickedness. His teasing brought Xie Lian out of his momentary musing.

Xie Lian smiled and said, "Alright, alright," and quickly finished tying his hair. But after that was done, when San Lang looked at his own reflection in the bucket of water in the corner, he turned back to Xie Lian with quirked brows. Xie Lian took a look and coughed.

The ponytail was lopsided before. After Xie Lian re-tied it, it was still crooked.

Although San Lang didn't say anything and merely stared at him, Xie Lian felt he hadn't felt this embarrassed in centuries. He put down his hands and was just about to suggest they try again when suddenly there was commotion outside. Sounds of footfalls approached and several loud bellows rang out.

"GREAT IMMORTAL!!!"

Bewildered, Xie Lian ran to the door just in time to see his shrine surrounded by a large crowd, everyone's faces red and excited. The village chief sped ahead towards Xie Lian and grabbed his hand.

"A GOD! A GOD HAS DESCENDED UPON OUR SMALL VILLAGE! WE ARE SO THANKFUL!!!"

Xie Lian: "?????"

The rest of the villagers also followed the chief and surrounded Xie Lian.

"Welcome to Puqi Village, Great Immortal!"

"My lord! Can you bless me with a wife?"

"My lord! Can you bless my wife with a child?"

"My lord! We have fresh water chestnuts for you! Do you want water chestnuts?! After eating, can you conveniently bless me with a good harvest this year?!"

The villagers were so enthusiastic and passionate that Xie Lian had to take a few steps back, and he sweated. It seemed that old driver from the night before had a big mouth! Xie Lian had told him not to tell, but the instant morning arrived, news had already spread all around the entire village!

The villagers had not a clue the kind of god worshipped in Puqi Shrine, but still they all crowded in wishing to light incense in prayer. It didn't matter who it was, a god was a god, and prayers do no harm. Xie Lian had initially expected tumbleweeds and crows at the shrine, with only a few coming to offer prayers, so he didn't think to prepare a lot of incense. Who knew that with such hubbub, all the incense was gone in a second. The little incense burner was filled to the brim, its heavy smoke enveloped the shrine. Xie Lian had not smelled this scent in a long time and choked on it.

As he choked, he said, "Everyone, this shrine doesn't bless you with wealth, really, please stop wishing for wealth! The result will be unpredictable..."

"I'm sorry, this shrine doesn't bless you with a good marriage either..."

"No no no, it doesn't grant pregnancies either..."

San Lang stopped caring about his sloppy hair and sat next to the donation box, one hand propping up his chin, the other grabbing water chestnuts to eat. Many village girls saw him and blushed.

They said to Xie Lian, "Um, do you grant..."

Xie Lian didn't know what they were going to ask, but felt instinctively that it must be stopped immediately, and cried "No!"

At last when the crowd dispersed, the altar was filled with fruits and vegetables, even rice and noodles. No matter how this had happened, it was still a good abundance of offerings. Xie Lian swept the floor and took out the trash and San Lang followed him out.

"The shrine is doing pretty well."

Xie Lian shook his head and kept sweeping around. "This was an unexpected turnout. Normally, there shouldn't be more than one or two passersby every month."

"How can that be?" San Lang asked.

Xie Lian glanced at him and smiled. "This was probably thanks to your good luck."

Saying so, he recalled that he wanted to change the door curtains, so he took out a new curtain to drape the front entrance. He stepped back to look at his work and noticed San Lang stood still before it.

"What's wrong?"

San Lang stared at the curtains thoughtfully. Following his gaze, Xie Lian realized he was looking more at the seal drawn onto the fabric.

It was a seal that Xie Lian had drafted in passing before, complex and rigid. Originally, it was for warding off evil and to shield from intrusions, but since it was Xie Lian himself who drew it, who knew if it might attract bad luck instead. Since there was no door though, it was still safer to have a protection ward just in case.

Seeing this boy fixed in place before the curtain with the seal, Xie Lian's mind stirred.

He called out, "San Lang?"

Could it be that the seal had blocked San Lang out of the door, preventing him from entering the shrine?

Ch.17: Puqi Shrine Talks the Guile Tales of the Half Moon Pass

San Lang glanced at him and flashed a smile. "I'm gonna head out for a bit."

He turned and left after having tossed those words out casually. Xie Lian should have chased after him to ask about it, but he had a strange feeling that since San Lang had said he would leave for "a bit", then for sure he wouldn't be gone for too long; he would definitely still return. Thus, Xie Lian went back inside the shrine.

Xie Lian started rummaging through his large bag of junk and dug out a wok and a butcher knife. He eyed the vegetables on the altar and stood up. After one incense time³⁰, there was the sound of footfalls approaching the shrine, as expected. One could imagine from those unhurried footsteps that it was a particular young man, strolling leisurely. The two objects in Xie Lian's hands had now transformed into two plates of food. He looked over them and heaved a long sigh, unable to bear the sight of their tragedy. He set the plates down and went out for a look. Sure enough, he saw San Lang again.

Outside the shrine, perhaps it was because of the blazing sun, but San Lang had his red tunic peeled and tied around his waist. It revealed his white undershirt, its sleeves pulled back, looking rather clean and tidy. His right foot stepped on top of a large wooden board, and he had a hatchet in his left hand. The hatchet was probably borrowed from one of the neighbours; it looked blunt and heavy, but he wielded it so easily, it was as if it was a very sharp blade. San Lang nonchalantly hacked at the board, shaving off wood like dough. He peered from the corner of his eyes and saw Xie Lian come out.

"Just making something," he said.

Xie Lian watched San Lang work, and realized he was making a door! It was just the perfect size, detailed and exquisite. Xie Lian thought that, since he must've come from a wealthy family, San Lang wouldn't be the physical labour type, but that was obviously not the case. There was definitely more to him than meets the eye.

"Thanks for your hard work, San Lang." Xie Lian said.

San Lang simply smiled, threw down the hatchet, and installed the door. He knocked on it twice and said, "If you're going to draw a seal, at least draw it on a proper door. Works better."

Then he swept aside the curtain and entered the shrine.

It seemed that the seal on the curtains really had no effect on him, and he didn't even care for it.

³⁰ One incense time is about five minutes.

Xie Lian closed the new door behind him, but couldn't help but open it again, then close it. He opened and closed it again. Then again. Amazed by how well it was made, Xie Lian opened and closed the door several times before suddenly realizing how foolish he was being. San Lang had already sat down inside, and Xie Lian left the door to bring out steamed buns the villagers had offered earlier in the morning onto the altar table.

San Lang took a look at the buns and didn't say anything. He merely chuckled softly as if he knew something, but Xie Lian ignored him and reached over to pour two bowls of water. Just as he was about to sit down, he saw San Lang rolling up his sleeves. There was a small line of tattoo with markings of strange characters on his arm. San Lang noticed his gaze, and pulled down his sleeves then smiled.

"It was done when I was young."

It was obvious San Lang didn't want to speak more on the subject, so Xie Lian didn't pursue it. He sat down and looked up at the portrait again.

He said, "San Lang, you paint so well. Did someone at home teach you?"

"No, I just do it for fun." San Lang poked at the buns with his chopsticks.

"How do you even know how to paint the Prince of Xianle?" Xie Lian asked.

"Didn't you say I know everything? Of course I know how to paint him too." San Lang laughed.

This was a shameless way of answering, but San Lang evidently didn't care if his answers would make Xie Lian suspicious, nor was he afraid of being questioned, so Xie Lian smiled and dropped the subject.

Just then, there was a loud commotion outside the shrine. Both of them raised their heads at the same time and exchanged looks. Someone started knocking on the door urgently, shouting.

"Great immortal! Something's happened! Great immortal, help!"

Xie Lian opened the door and saw a number of villagers surrounding his door. The Chief saw the door open, and called out in relief.

"Great immortal! This person looks like he's dying! Please save him!"

Hearing this, Xie Lian rushed to the group of villagers standing in a circle around what appeared to be a cultivator. He was unkempt and disheveled, with sand all over him, and his robes and shoes were tattered. It seemed he had been running for his life for a long time before collapsing in the village, where the villagers brought him to the Puqi Shrine in a hurry.

Xie Lian told the crowd, "Don't worry, he's not dead."

He knelt down and felt the man's pulse and various pressure points. On his body Xie Lian found a number of magical accessories, like the eight trigrams map, a steel sword, and so on. This man didn't appear to be an ordinary cultivator, and Xie Lian's heart sank.

Not long later, the cultivator slowly opened his eyes, and asked in a croaking voice, "... where am I?"

The chief exclaimed, "This is the village of Puqi!"

The man mumbled to himself, "... I'm out, I'm out...I've finally escaped..." He looked around him and widened his eyes, screaming in fear. "S-SAVE ME! HELP!"

Xie Lian had expected this reaction, and gently asked, "My friend, what's going on? What are you running from? Don't be afraid, take your time to say it clearly..."

"Yeah, don't be scared! We've got a god on our side, he'll definitely solve all your problems!"

Xie Lian, "???"

None of these villagers actually saw him perform any miracles, but they had certainly become quite devout, and there wasn't much Xie Lian could say.

"Solve all problems? There's no guarantee at all..."

Xie Lian asked the cultivator, "Where did you come from?"

"I...I've come from the Banyue³¹ Pass!" that cultivator replied.

The villagers looked at each other.

"Where's that?"

"Never heard of it before!"

Xie Lian explained, "The Banyue Pass is in the northwest, a fair distance away. How did you make it over here?"

"I...I've finally escaped and came here..."

His words were incoherent and his mood unstable. In such a situation, the more people around, the harder it was to speak with everyone talking at the same time.

So Xie Lian said, "Let's talk inside."

³¹ "Banyue" means "half moon".

Xie Lian easily lifted the cultivator up from the ground and helped him into the shrine. He turned to say to the villagers, "Everyone, please return. Don't watch anymore."

"Great immortal, what's happened to him?"

"Yeah, what's going on?"

"If there's anything we can do to help..."

The villagers were very enthusiastic, but that was precisely what was making this more difficult.

Without any choice, Xie Lian told them seriously, "He...may be bewitched."

Upon hearing this, the villagers were greatly alarmed. Bewitchment was no joke! Better not stick around. The crowd broke up and everyone hurried away. Xie Lian didn't know whether to laugh or cry, and shook his head. He closed the door; San Lang was still at the table playing with his chopsticks, and he eyed the cultivator closely.

"Don't worry about him. Keep eating," Xie Lian told him. He then set the man down on the other stool while he stood. "My friend, I'm the Shrine Master here, and also something of a cultivator. Don't be nervous, you can tell us if there's anything. I can perhaps give you a hand if there's anything I can help with. You mentioned the Banyue Pass?"

The cultivator took a few gasps of air. After coming to a place with fewer people and listening to Xie Lian's comforting words, the man finally calmed down.

"Have you ever heard of the Banyue Pass?"

"I have," Xie Lian said. "It's a city³² built within an oasis in the Gobi Desert. It received its name from the beauty of its night scenery. When the moon half-hangs in the night sky, I hear it's a sight to behold."

"Oasis? Beauty?" The cultivator shook his head. "That's all from over two hundred years ago! Half Moon? More like Half Dead."

"What do you mean?" Xie Lian asked.

The man's face turned white as a sheet. "Because at least half of those who pass through its gates will disappear!"

Xie Lian had never heard of this before. "Who did you hear this from?"

"I didn't hear it from anyone! I saw with my own two eyes!" The man sat up straight. "There was a merchant group needing to cross the desert. They knew that place wasn't safe, so they hired my entire sect to guard them on their journey. But..." He cried angrily, "But in the end, I'm the only one left!"

³² Walled City, and in this case, City-State.

Xie Lian waved his hand, gesturing to him to relax. "How many were you?"

"With my sect plus the merchant group, we were about sixty people!"

Sixty. In the one hundred years Xuan Ji wreaked havoc, only two hundred or so people lost their lives, according to Ling Wen's records. But from what this cultivator said, this matter had been going on for over a hundred years. If so many people went missing every time over the course of a couple hundred years, then the numbers would be significant once they were added up.

"When did the Half Moon Pass become the Half Dead Pass?" Xie Lian asked.

The cultivator replied, "Maybe about a hundred and fifty years ago? It was right after it became the den of a ghost."

Xie Lian wanted to ask about the demon in more detail, but couldn't stop the feeling that there was something not right, and it wasn't sitting well with him. At this point, there was no way to hide that strange feeling in his heart. He furrowed his brows and became silent.

Suddenly, San Lang spoke up, "You escaped from the Banyue Pass, and never stopped running until now?"

"Yeah! Sigh, barely survived!" That cultivator sighed.

"Really." San Lang stopped talking, but Xie Lian already understood what was amiss.

He turned around and said warmly, "You must be thirsty, having escaped all this way?"

The man paused, but Xie Lian had already placed a bowl of water in front of him.

"Here. Have some water."

Looking at the water, hesitation flashed across the man's face. Xie Lian stood next to him, hands crossed in his sleeves, waiting patiently.

This man traveled far from the northwest, and was running for his life no less. He should be starving and parched. From the looks of him, it didn't seem like he ate or drank anything the entire way. Yet when he woke, all he did was talk, and never once asked for a single drop of water or a bite to eat. He had no visible craving when faced with the food and water on the altar after entering the shrine. Heck, he didn't even spare a look at any of them.

Truly, very unlike the living.

Ch.18: Puqi Shrine Talks the Guile Tales of the Half Moon Pass 2

Under Xie Lian's and San Lang's gaze, the cultivator held up the water bowl to his lips and bent over to slowly gulp the water down. He did not look as if he was satisfying his thirst. Instead, he looked cautious and guarded. As he drank, Xie Lian could hear sloshing sounds, as if water was being poured into an empty bottle.

At that moment, Xie Lian knew what he was. He seized the man's arm.

"You don't have to drink anymore."

The cultivator's hand trembled as he looked at Xie Lian in bewilderment.

"Drinking wouldn't help anyway, right?" Xie Lian smiled.

The man's expression instantly changed hearing this. He unsheathed his steel sword with his other hand, and swung it towards Xie Lian. Without changing his stance, Xie Lian raised his hand and easily flicked the sword aside. Seeing that Xie Lian was still tightly gripping onto his hand, the cultivator gritted his teeth and extracted it from his hold suddenly. Xie Lian felt the arm in his grip suddenly go limp like a balloon deflating as it slipped away from his palm. The moment the cultivator broke free, he ran towards the door, but Xie Lian wasn't concerned. In this undisturbed space without people around, Ruoye could drag him back instantly even if he fled a good distance away. But just as he raised his other hand, a sharp blast of air whipped by him.

It was as if someone had shot an arrow behind him. It pierced the man through his stomach and nailed him to the door. Xie Lian looked over, and it turned out to be a chopstick! He turned back for a look. San Lang stood up from the altar and walked past him to pull out the chopstick.

San Lang waved the chopstick at Xie Lian and said, "This got dirty. I'm gonna throw it out."

Even with such a serious wound, the cultivator did not groan in pain, he simply silently slithered down from the door. Fluids flowed from his abdomen; it wasn't blood, but the water he had just drank.

Xie Lian and San Lang knelt down next to the body, and Xie Lian felt around the wound. He felt as though this wound was like a blown-up balloon that had been pricked. Cold air was leaking out of it, and the cultivator's "corpse" gradually changed. Earlier, he was clearly a buff man, but now he'd shrunk a size down. His face and limbs shrivelled even as he continued to shrink. He looked more like an old man now.

"It's an empty shell," Xie Lian noted.

Some ghosts, if they could not transform into a perfect human form, would create these empty shells. They would use realistic components to meticulously create a fake skin bag. These skin bags often used real, living humans as references. Sometimes they would even use human skin directly to make the skin bags; naturally, their palm prints, fingerprints, and hair would all be flawless. And if the ghosts themselves did not wear these skins, there wouldn't be any evil aura stuck to them, so they would not need to heed those evil-repelling spells and talismans. This was why the seal of the door did not block the cultivator outside earlier.

However, these kinds of empty shells could be easily seen through. After all, they were hollow on the inside. If there was no one wearing the skins, then they could only follow instructions of the manipulator like puppets. The instructions couldn't be overly complicated, either; they had to be simple, repetitive, and set up beforehand. Therefore, the expressions and behaviour of those skin bags were lifeless and sluggish, unlike real humans. For example, they could only repeat certain phrases, do certain repetitive things, or answer their own questions. If one asked too many questions, they wouldn't be able to answer, and would end up exposing themselves.

Of course, Xie Lian had more practical ways of exposing those skin bags: just let them drink some water or eat something. After all, skin bags were hollow, without any organs; if they ate or drank, it would be like throwing something or pouring water into an empty can. The echo could be clearly heard, and it was a sound very different than that of a human consuming food and water.

The corpse had completely deflated into a pile of withered skin. San Lang poked at it with his chopstick and threw it away.

"This shell is rather interesting."

Xie Lian knew what he was talking about. This cultivator's expressions and movements were more than realistic. He had conversed with them animatedly, gestured wildly, responded emotionally, very much like a real person. Whoever was behind its control had to be quite powerful.

Xie Lian glanced at San Lang. "Looks like you're quite knowledgeable about these wicked arts too, San Lang."

San Lang smiled. "Not too much."

This empty shell came to Xie Lian specifically to tell him about the Banyue Pass. Whether it was fake or real, its intention was obviously to lure him there. To play it safe, he would have to inquire about it in the communication array. Xie Lian pinched his fingers and calculated the power he had left; there should still be enough to use it a few more times, so he formed a seal with his hands to enter the communication array.

The communication array was livelier than usual, and it was not because of deities bustling around with official duties. Rather, it seemed everyone was playing some sort of game, laughing and shouting. Xie Lian was taken aback.

Just then, Ling Wen reached out to him. “Your Highness is back? How were your days down in the mortal realm?”

Ling Wen replied, “The Wind Master has just returned and is giving away merits. Why don’t you go and see if you can grab any?”

Sure enough, Xie Lian could hear the many officials cheerfully shouting.

“I GRABBED A HUNDRED MERITS!”

“How come I only managed to get one...”

“A THOUSAND! A THOUSAND!!! THANKS, WIND MASTER!! HAHHAHAHAH...”

It was like catching money raining down from the skies, Xie Lian thought. His donation box was empty, but for one, he didn’t know how to make a grab for those merits, and second, the officials must be very familiar with each other to play those sort of casual games. Xie Lian wasn’t on good terms with many, and didn’t think it was appropriate for him to join, so he paid it no mind and called out to the crowd.

“Does anyone know of the Banyue Pass?”

The laughing and shouting came to a sudden stop and silence ensued.

Once again, Xie Lian felt depressed.

It was fine if no one responded to his little snippets if they were odd or awkward; the other officials didn’t share those either, and he indeed seemed to be out of tune with them when he did so. But this was official business. The communication array was a place where heavenly officials often made requests for information on ghosts or mystic issues. If something came up or someone asked for assistance, everyone pitched in, giving suggestions or giving a hand. Those without anything to add would say “I’ll ask around when I’m free.” Banyue was work, so there was no reason why no one responded?

Just then, someone shouted, “WIND MASTER JUST THREW OUT TEN THOUSAND MERITS!!!”

The communication array came alive again, and the officials went away to grab for more merits, thoroughly ignoring Xie Lian. This made him realize there was probably more to this than it appeared, and the court would never respond. This Wind Master was certainly quite affluent, Xie Lian thought, throwing away tens of thousands of merits like that. He was about to exit the communication array when Ling Wen called out to him privately.

“Your Highness, why did you mention the Banyue Pass?” Ling Wen asked.

Xie Lian recounted his encounter with the skin bag. "That empty shell pretended to be a survivor from the Banyue Pass, it has to have a motive. I wasn't sure whether his words were true, so I came in to ask. What's going on with that place?"

Ling Wen was quiet for a moment before she said gravely, "Your Highness, I advise you to stay away from this matter."

Xie Lian had thought she might say something similar. Otherwise, a matter like this wouldn't have lasted for over a hundred and fifty years, and have the court go silent just because he asked.

"Is it true that half the people go missing every time they traverse through Banyue?"

Ling Wen was silent again. "It's not easy for us to speak on this matter."

Xie Lian heard the deliberation in her words. There might be something putting her on the spot, so he said, "Alright, I understand. If it's inconvenient, then we shall not speak of it again, and we have never spoken in private on this subject either."

Xie Lian withdrew his divine consciousness and left the communication array. He rose to his feet and used the broom to sweep the fake skin to the side. After mulling over Ling Wen's words for a moment, he raised his head and looked at San Lang.

"San Lang, I'm afraid I will be going on a long journey."

Ling Wen's attitude was enough to show that this matter implicated too much. Since this empty shell came to him on its own, then it must have wanted to lure him there. It was definitely not a good place to be at.

Yet San Lang said, "Sure thing. Gege, bring me along too, if you don't mind!"

Xie Lian wondered curiously, "It's going to be a long and difficult journey, so why do you want to come?"

San Lang smiled. "Do you want to know about the Banyue Pass?"

Xie Lian paused, then said, "You know about that too?"

San Lang crossed his arms and replied languidly, "The Banyue Pass was originally not known as Banyue Pass. The Banyue Pass was where the Kingdom of Banyue used to be located two hundred years ago."

He sat up straight, eyes going bright. "The Wicked Cultivator of Banyue was..."

Xie Lian placed the broom against the wall and was about to sit down to listen when a knock on the door came.

It was already evening, and the villagers were hiding in their homes after hearing there was bewitchment about, so who was knocking? Xie Lian stood by the door and held his breath briefly, but he didn't see the seal reacting. Another knock came. It sounded like there were two people outside.

Xie Lian contemplated for a moment then opened the door. Sure enough, two young men dressed in black stood at his door, one handsome, one elegant. It was Nan Feng and Fu Yao.

Xie Lian said, "You two...."

Fu Yao rolled his eyes, and Nan Feng blurted out, "You're going to the Banyue Pass, aren't you?"

"Where did you guys hear that?" Xie Lian wondered.

Nan Feng said, "Some officials were talking about it. I heard that you asked about the Banyue Pass in the communication array today."

Xie Lian understood their intentions and crossed his hands in his sleeves. "I see. 'I volunteer', right?"

Both junior officials' expressions contorted as though they had a toothache. "...Yes."

Xie Lian couldn't help but smile, and said, "I get it, I get it. But I want you two to understand that, should there be any issues or crises en route, you're welcome to run away any time."

Xie Lian stepped aside to invite them inside to discuss the journey in detail. But then, when the two saw the carefree teen sitting inside, their initially grim faces instantly turned ashen.

Nan Feng charged in, pushed Xie Lian behind him, and shouted, "STAND BACK!"

Ch.19: Puqi Shrine Talks the Guile Tales of the Half Moon Pass 3

“What’s wrong?” Xie Lian asked, startled.

San Lang stayed in his seat, spread open his hands, and also asked, “What’s wrong?”

Fu Yao furrowed his brows and demanded, “Who are you?”

“He’s a friend of mine. Do you know each other?” Xie Lian answered instead.

San Lang, looking completely innocent, asked, “Gege, who are these two?”

Hearing San Lang call Xie Lian “gege” made Nan Feng’s lips twitch and Fu Yao’s brows spasm.

Xie Lian raised his hand and said to San Lang, “It’s nothing, don’t worry.”

But next to him Nan Feng shouted, “DON’T SPEAK TO HIM!”

“What? Do you know each other?” Xie Lian asked again.

“...”

“...No,” Fu Yao said coldly.

“If you don’t, then what are you...”

Before Xie Lian could finish his sentence, he sensed lights flashing next to him. He looked back without giving it too much attention. The other two had produced balls of divine energy in their palms at the same time. An ill sense of foreboding overcame Xie Lian, and he grabbed at them in alarm.

“Stop! Stop! Don’t act rashly!”

The bulbs of divine energy were pulsing, staticy and dangerous, definitely not something a normal person could make. San Lang clapped a couple times in polite appreciation.

“Amazing! Absolutely magical.” It was truly the most insincere compliment.

Xie Lian finally caught Nan Feng and Fu Yao’s arms to stop them from firing.

Nan Feng turned to him angrily and questioned, “Where did you meet him? What’s his name? Where does he live? Where is he from? Why is he with you?”

Xie Liang answered, “We met on the road, his name is San Lang. I don’t know anything else, only that he has nowhere to go, so I let him stay. Will you two please stop?”

“YOU—!” Nan Feng couldn’t speak, it was as if he wanted to scream at Xie Lian but forcibly swallowed his words. “You let him in despite knowing nothing?! Aren’t you afraid that he might be scheming something?”

Why did Nan Feng’s tone sound like his dad? If it was any other heavenly official or another person, if they heard someone younger say anything in such a manner they would’ve been displeased already. But first, Xie Lian was already used to all kinds of rebukes and taunts, so he felt nothing; and second, he knew that those two meant well, and were only saying things out of worry, so he didn’t mind.

At this time, San Lang cut in. “Gege, are they your servants?”

Xie Lian replied warmly, “The term ‘servants’ isn’t quite right. To be more precise, they should be helpers, I guess?”

San Lang smiled back. “Really?”

The youth stood up, grabbed an object, and threw it at Fu Yao. “Then, why don’t you help out?”

Fu Yao didn’t clearly see what was thrown at him before he caught it. Once it was in his hand and he saw what it was, his temper surged to his head.

That boy threw him a broom!!!

Fu Yao looked as if he wanted to crush both the broom and the teen into powder, and Xie Lian hurriedly took the broom from Fu Yao’s hands.

“Calm down. Calm down. I only have one broom—”

Before Xie Lian could finish his words, he was cut off by a burst of white energy shot out from Fu Yao’s hand as he bellowed, “REVEAL YOURSELF!”

San Lang stayed where he was, arms still crossed in a relaxed posture, but tilted his head just slightly as the beam of energy narrowly missed him and smashed one of the altar table legs. The table collapsed with a loud crack and all the plates crashed onto the floor in a heap. Xie Lian rubbed his temple and thought this had to stop. With a wave of his hand, he released Ruoye and tied up Nan Feng and Fu Yao. Both men struggled, but failed to break free.

Nan Feng shouted, “What are you doing?”

Xie Liang made a gesture for a time-out.

“We’ll talk outside. Outside.”

Then he waved his hand and Ruoye flew out, dragging the two in tow.

“I’ll be right back,” Xie Lian said to San Lang, then closed the door behind him.

At the front of the shrine, Xie Lian called back Ruoye, took the sign at the entrance, and set it down in front of the two junior officials.

“Read this. Then tell me what this says.”

Fu Yao read aloud, “Please kindly donate to the renovation of this shrine for accumulation of good merits.” He looked up at Xie Lian. “Donations for renovations? You wrote this?? You are at the very least an ascended heavenly official, how can you write such a thing? Where’s your dignity?”

Xie Lian nodded. “That’s right, I wrote it. If you guys keep fighting inside, then I will be asking for donations for construction, not renovation. By then I would have even less dignity.”

Nan Feng pointed to the shrine. “Your Highness! You don’t think that boy isn’t the least bit odd?”

“Of course I do,” Xie Lian said.

“You know he’s dangerous, but still you keep him by your side?” Nan Feng demanded.

Seeing that they had no intent to donate, Xie Lian placed the sign back by the door and replied, “Nan Feng, that’s where you’re wrong. There’s all kinds of people with various temperaments and mannerisms in the world; odd doesn’t mean dangerous. Look at me. I’m odd in everyone’s eyes, but do you think I’m dangerous?”

“...”

Nan Feng really couldn’t defy that logic. Xie Lian clearly had the saintly look of an immortal, and yet he still collected scraps all day. If he was not odd, then no one was odd.

Fu Yao said, “Aren’t you afraid he has ulterior motives?”

He slowly asked, “Do you think I have anything worth enough for him to scheme for?”

Nan Feng and Fu Yao were stumped.

Indeed, schemes against another often were designed because a person was coveting another’s treasure. Tragically, they honestly couldn’t think of anything belonging to Xie Lian that was worth scheming for. He had no money and no treasures. The boy couldn’t be eyeing that junk he collected every day, could he?

Xie Lian continued, “Besides, it’s not like I haven’t tested him.”

The two junior officers stared at him.

“How did you test him?”

“How did it go?”

Xie Lian explained his previous attempts. "The results are inconclusive. I've already done so much. If he isn't a mortal, then there's only one other possibility."

A Supreme!

Fu Yao sneered, "Who knows. Maybe he is a Supreme."

Xie Lian said softly, "Do you think ghost kings are so idle like us, that they'd come to a small village to collect junk with me?"

"We aren't idle!"

"Okay, okay, okay....."

On top of the small hill, outside the shrine, the three heavenly officials could hear the sound of that teen moving about easily without worry within the shrine, as if he wasn't the least bit worried over anything.

Nan Feng said in a low voice, "No. We still have to think of a way to test if he's a Supreme."

Xie Lian rubbed his forehead. "Go ahead and try, but don't go overboard. What if he really does turn out to be a runaway young noble? I get along pretty well with this little friend, so be nicer. Don't bully him."

The "don't bully him" made Nan Feng screw up his face, and Fu Yao's eyes rolled to the back of his head. Xie Lian nagged a bit more before reopening the door. San Lang was checking out the broken table leg, and Xie Lian cleared his throat to get his attention.

"Are you alright?"

"I'm alright," San Lang smiled. "Just checking to see if we can fix this table leg."

"Everything just now was all a misunderstanding, please don't mind them," Xie Lian said warmly.

"Since you say so, I won't mind. Maybe they thought I looked familiar."

Fu Yao said frostily, "Yeah. Quite familiar. Probably why I was mistaken."

San Lang grinned. "What a coincidence! I think you two look rather familiar too!"

"..."

Although on high alert, Nan Feng and Fu Yao were no longer reacting violently.

Nan Feng said gloomily, "Make some room, I'm going to conjure a Distance-Shortening array."

The Distance-Shortening array was a spell that could compress thousands of miles into one step, infinitely convenient. However, each use would consume a significant amount of power.

Xie Lian rolled up the straw bedding mat on the ground and said, "Why don't you draw it here?"

With all the commotion earlier, Fu Yao didn't have the chance to look at the shrine properly. Now that he had spent some time in the dilapidated shack, he looked around, feeling incredibly uncomfortable. He wrinkled his brows.

"You live in a place like this?"

Xie Lian grabbed a stool for him to sit and replied, "I always live in places like these."

Nan Feng paused briefly when he heard this, then went back to drawing the array. Fu Yao didn't sit down, but his expression also turned complicated. He mostly looked surprised, but there was a tiny part that looked smug. He quickly neutralized his expression.

"Where's the bed?"

"This is it," Xie Lian replied, hugging his straw mat.

Nan Feng looked up to glance at the mat, then lowered his head again. Fu Yao side-eyed San Lang, who was standing aside.

"You two are sleeping next to each other?"

"Is there a problem?" Xie Lian asked pointedly.

Finally, Nan Feng and Fu Yao couldn't come up with anything else to say, so no more problems. Xie Lian turned to San Lang to continue their earlier conversation.

"Sorry we were interrupted before. San Lang, what's going on at Banyue? Do tell."

San Lang had been staring at them earlier, looking to be deep in thought, his eyes dark, and had only just snapped out of it when he heard Xie Lian call to him. He gave Xie Lian a small smile.

"Alright." San Lang sorted his thoughts, then spoke, "That Ghost of Banyue was the Guoshi of the ancient Kingdom of Banyue, one of the Dual Wicked Masters."

"Dual means there's two of them. Who's the other one?" Xie Lian asked.

San Lang, having all the answers, replied, "Another wicked cultivator from the Midlands named Fangxin."

Xie Lian widened his eyes, but didn't say anything, and continued to listen.

Turns out, the people of Banyue were a brutish warrior race who frequently enjoyed invading nearby lands. They seized an important checkpoint between the Midlands and the West Region, and the two countries constantly fought over the border. Battles, skirmishes, the conflicts were neverending. Their guoshi was learned in the demonic arts, and the soldiers of Banyue trusted in it with all their hearts, willing to follow after the guoshi until the ends of the earth.

However, two hundred years ago, a dynasty from the Midlands finally dispatched an army to invade and leveled the Kingdom of Banyue.

Although the Kingdom of Banyue was annihilated, the resentment of the guoshi and the soldiers would not disperse, and they remained behind to haunt the place. The Kingdom of Banyue was built upon an oasis, but after its fall, it was as if the aura of evil permeated and rotted through the greenery. Soon, it was swallowed by the Gobi Desert. Some say they still saw shadows of Banyue warriors, giant and terrifying, with maces in hand, patrolling what once were the gates of Banyue. Thousands of civilians who used to live there gradually migrated, unable to make a living in a dying oasis. This was when the rumours of disappearing travelers started to spread. All those who had come from the Midlands wishing to pass through must leave behind half their assets as “toll”—human lives!

Fu Yao smiled without mirth. “This young master sure knows a lot.”

San Lang smiled back. “It’s nothing. You just don’t know very much, that’s all.”

“...”

Xie Lian snorted in spite of himself, amused by San Lang’s sharp tongue.

San Lang continued lazily, “This is just based on unofficial history and ancient records of strange, supernatural occurrences; who knows if the Guoshi of Banyue is real. Maybe the Kingdom of Banyue doesn’t even exist.”

Ch.20: Shortened Distance; Adrift in Sandstorms

“Even though it’s rogue records and rumours you read, the Kingdom of Banyue certainly exists,” Xie Lian spoke up.

“Oh yeah?” San Lang hummed.

Just then, Nan Feng completed the array on the ground and called out to the others in the room. “It’s done. When shall we go?”

Xie Lian quickly packed a small bag and came to the door. “Let’s go now.”

He placed his hand on the door and recited: “By the Heaven Official’s Blessings, No Paths are Bound!”, then gently pushed.

When the door was pushed open, it was no longer a small hillside village outside. What replaced it now was a wide city avenue.

As wide as the streets were, there was barely anyone on the road, maybe one or two pedestrians every now and then. This wasn’t because it was late in the evening, but because the population in the far Northwest was already small, on top of being this close to the Gobi Desert. Even in broad daylight, there wouldn’t be many walking about. Xie Lian closed the door behind him, and it was no longer Puqi Shrine on the inside, but a small inn. This one step certainly was over thousands of miles; the miracle of the Distance-Shortening array.

A couple of pedestrians walked by, staring at them and whispering to themselves, appearing quite guarded.

San Lang spoke up from behind Xie Lian, “According to historical records, when the moon sinks in the sky, follow the north star and you will come upon the Kingdom of Banyue. Gege, look.” San Lang pointed to the sky. “There’s the Polaris.”

Xie Lian looked up and smiled. “It’s so bright.”

San Lang stepped closer to stand beside Xie Lian, took a glance at him, then looked up too. “Yeah. It seems the night sky in the Northwest is somehow more vast than the Midlands.”

Xie Lian agreed, and the two became immersed in a discussion on stars and night skies. Meanwhile the two junior officials behind them watched on in disbelief.

Nan Feng questioned, “Why is he here too?”

“The door you created looked so magical, I followed along to check it out,” San Lang replied innocently.

“Check it out?! DO YOU THINK THIS IS A TOUR?!” Nan Feng shouted angrily.

Xie Lian rubbed his forehead and said, “Let it go. Since he’s here, he’s here. He won’t eat your rations, I should have enough. San Lang, stay close to me, don’t get lost.”

“Okay,” San Lang responded, looking obedient and good.

“THIS ISN’T A QUESTION OF RATIONS????”

Xie Lian sighed. “Nan Feng, please keep it down. It’s the middle of the night, everyone is sleeping. Let’s just focus on the task at hand and stop sweating the small stuff. Let’s go, let’s go.”

...

The four followed the north star and traveled northward. After walking nonstop for an entire night, the towns and greenery along the way became more and more sparse, and the ground slowly gave way to sand. Finally, they reached the Gobi Desert. Although the Distance-Shortening array could cross over thousands of miles in one step, it used an exhaustive amount of power. The further one went, the more power it sapped, and the time it took to restore power also lengthened. This one step Nan Feng helped them take would require at least several hours to recover from. To conserve strength in case of unforeseen battle, Xie Lian decided not to have Fu Yao perform the same conjuring. For a journey such as this, someone must have their powers at full strength.

In desert climate, the difference between night and day was extreme; the nights were freezing to the bone but not too bad, but when it became day it was another story. The sky was clear and cloudless, giving way to a scorching sun. It was as if they were walking in a steaming oven, cooking them alive from the ground.

Xie Lian led the way, using the direction of the wind and small vegetation growing under boulders to find their path. After a while, he looked back, worried that someone may not be able to keep up. Nan Fen and Fu Yao were obviously fine, immortal and all. Seeing San Lang, though, made him laugh.

Under the blazing sun, the youth had peeled off his outer red tunic and was using it to lazily block off the sun, looking tired and cranky. His skin was pearl white, his hair coal black, and with the red tunic covering his face, his features seemed even more accentuated.

Xie Lian removed his bamboo hat and put it on San Lang’s head. “Here, I’ll lend it to you.”

Surprised, San Lang laughed and said, “it’s alright,” and returned the hat to him. Xie Lian didn’t argue; if the boy didn’t need it, there was no need to push.

“Let me know if you need it, then.” Xie Lian straightened the hat on his head and continued walking.

After a while, the group noticed a small grey building in the midst of all the sand. Upon closer inspection, it appeared to be an abandoned inn. Xie Lian looked to the sky, seeing that it was just past noon and time for the worst of the heat. They had walked all night, it was time for a break. Xie Lian led the group inside, and they found a table to sit at and settle.

From his bag, Xie Lian took out a water bottle and handed it to San Lang. "Do you want some?"

San Lang nodded. He reached for the water bottle and drank from it before Xie Lian took it back to drink himself. He gulped down the cool water, his Adam's apple rolling up and down, feeling incredibly refreshed and energized. Next to him, San Lang had his arm propping up his chin, stealing glances as Xie Lian drank.

A moment later, he asked, "Is there any more?"

Xie Lian wiped away the bit of water that was caught on his moistened lips, then nodded and passed over the water bottle again. San Lang was about to reach for it when another hand blocked him from the water bottle in Xie Lian's grip.

"Hold on," Fu Yao said.

He retrieved his own water bottle from his sack and put it on the table, pushing it towards San Lang. "I have one too."

Xie Lian immediately knew what he was planning.

Knowing Fu Yao's personality, there was no way he would ever share his water bottle. He and Nan Feng were talking about testing San Lang the night before, so the liquid in the bottle must be Unmasking Water.

If a normal human was to drink a potion such as this, then nothing would happen; however, if they were anything but human, the Unmasking Water would force its drinker to reveal their true form. Since Nan Feng and Fu Yao wanted to test to see if this youth was a Supreme, then the effects of this potion must be considerable.

San Lang smiled. "Gege and I can share one bottle, it's fine."

Fu Yao and Nan Feng eyed Xie Lian, and Xie Lian thought, "What are you both staring at me for?"

Fu Yao said coldly, "His is almost empty, no need to be so polite."

"Really? Then you two drink first, don't worry about me," San Lang declined.

"..."

Those two both fell silent. A moment later, Fu Yao tried again, "You're a guest, you go first."

Fu Yao sounded polite and well-mannered, but Xie Lian thought he must've squeezed those words out from between his teeth. San Lang also made a gesture of welcome.

"You two are followers of the host, please drink first, otherwise it'd be indecent of me."

Xie Lian watched the three of them play the silly game of false pleasantries and pitied the sad water bottle being roughly pushed around the table. He shook his head; he could feel the poor table tremble from their power play and feared it may not have long to live.

Finally, Fu Yao snapped and sneered, "You not accepting this water means you have a guilty conscience!"

San Lang replied with a smile, "You're unfriendly and refused to drink first. Who knows if you've poisoned the water? Maybe you're the ones with the guilty conscience?"

Fu Yao pointed at Xie Lian. "You can very well ask him whether this water is poisoned!"

"Is this water poisoned, gege?" San Lang turned to Xie Lian.

It was quite the cunning question. Technically the Unmasking Water was a potion that exposed one's true form and didn't harm real people.

Xie Lian replied slowly, "It's not poisoned, but..."

Fu Yao and Nan Feng focused their glare on San Lang, and he surprisingly let go of his grip on the bottle.

"Alright." San Lang grabbed the bottle and shook it playfully in his hand. "If gege says it's okay, then there's no problem."

He gulped down the contents of the bottle in one go. Xie Lian didn't think he'd be so straightforward and was shocked. Nan Feng and Fu Yao were stunned too and tensed immediately. Yet who knew, after San Lang drank all of that Unmasking Water, he shook the bottle again, then threw it over his shoulder where it crashed and shattered.

"Tastes bad."

Shock flashed across Fu Yao's face when he saw the Unmasking Water did nothing to San Lang. A moment later, he said impassively, "It's only water, what difference is there?"

San Lang reached for the water bottle next to Xie Lian's elbow again and replied, "Of course it's different. This one tastes much better."

Xie Lian chuckled. San Lang really didn't care for any challenges going his way, nor did he care about his true identity, so other than entertainment, this fight was meaningless. Xie Lian thought that this would be the end of it at first, but Nan Feng stood up and dropped a sword onto the table with a loud clang.

With such a strong battle aura surrounding him, at first Xie Lian thought Nan Feng intended to end San Lang for good and was speechless for a moment.

“What are you doing?”

“The road ahead is dangerous,” Nan Feng stated in a low voice. “This is a gift for the little buddy, for self-defense.”

The sheath of the sword was ancient in design and bore wear and tear from the ages. It was no ordinary sword. Xie Lian’s eyes widened in recognition, put his hand over his forehead and turned away.

He muttered to himself, “It’s Hongjing³³!”

The name of this sword was indeed “Hongjing”. This sword was a sacred sword. While it could not fight evil, no evil could escape its spiritual mirror. Should any non-human entities pull it from its sheath, the blade would turn red as if covered in blood, and the crimson blade would reflect the true form of that which unsheathed it. Whether you were Savage or Supreme, none shall escape!

There were no young men who would not be interested in swords or horses, so San Lang appeared rather excited. “Ooh, let me see!”

Sheath in one hand, hilt in the other, San Lang pulled at the sword. Nan Feng and Fu Yao stared intently. But when merely three inches of the sword was pulled out, San Lang laughed.

“Gege, are your servants playing a joke on me?”

Xie Lian cleared his throat and turned back around. “San Lang, I already said they’re not servants.” Then he turned around again.

“Who’s joking around with you,” Nan Feng said coldly.

“How can one self-defend with a broken sword?” San Lang sheathed the sword and threw it back onto the table.

Nan Feng’s face froze for a moment, then he immediately picked up the sword to check. He pulled it out of the sheath and heard a clunk, and suddenly, in his hand was now a sharp and chilling...broken sword.

Hongjing was broken from three inches down!

³³ “Hongjing” [紅鏡] means “Red Mirror”.

Nan Feng's face changed colours and he turned the sheath upside-down. There was the clattering sound of a mess of clinks and clanks; what was left of the blade within the sheath was now broken into bright and sharp little fragments.

The Hongjing sword was a powerful weapon that could expose its enemies, that wasn't a lie. But Nan Feng had never heard of any technique that could break it from within the sheath!

Nan Feng and Fu Yao both pointed at San Lang and cried, "YOU—!!!"

San Lang snickered and threw himself back into his chair, pushed back and put his feet up on the table, then tossed one of the broken pieces in his hand in the air to play. "I'm sure you guys didn't do this on purpose, and just weren't careful enough with it on the road. Don't worry about me, I don't need some broken sword as protection. Keep it for yourselves."

As for Xie Lian, he simply couldn't look at Hongjing directly. The sacred sword used to be part of the collection of Jun Wu, the Martial Heavenly Emperor. During his first ascension, Xie Lian once visited Jun Wu's palace and thought despite its lack of combat power, Hongjing was an interesting sword, so Jun Wu gifted it to him. After the first banishment, there was a time when things had gotten really hard, and Xie Lian gave the sword to Feng Xin to be pawned.

That's right. Pawned!

Money made from pawning Hongjing was enough to fill their stomachs for a number of meals. Xie Lian had pawned off too many treasures during that time, and he had forced himself to forget every single one of them, lest his heart bled with regret. Feng Xin remembered the sword after his ascension and couldn't bear having a sacred sword lost amongst mortals, so he found it again. It was sharpened, cleaned, and hung in the Palace of Nan Yang, and now it was brought down by Nan Feng. In any case, whenever Xie Lian saw that sword he'd feel a dull pain, and could only look away.

He could sense that the other three were about to start bickering again and shook his head, instead carefully observing the weather outside. The wind was picking up, Xie Lian noted. There might be a sandstorm later on. Should they continue on? Would they be able to find shelter?

Just then, over the golden sand, two shadows suddenly flashed by.

Xie Lian straightened up immediately.

Two silhouettes, one black, one white, strolled unhurriedly but rapidly, as if they were gliding through clouds. The one dressed in black was slender and elegant; the one dressed in white, on the other hand, was a female cultivator, a sword on her back and a whisk in hand. As they sped by the abandoned inn, the black figure never looked back once, but the white figure glanced over and smiled in that flash of a moment. It was forebodingly creepy.

It was only because Xie Lian had been keeping an eye on the outside that he caught that scene, but the other three probably only saw their retreating backs.

Nan Feng stopped his bickering instantly and rose. "Who was that?"

"Don't know, but they're not ordinary people," Xie Lian replied and stood up too. "The wind is picking up. Stop playing around, and let's go as far as we can."

Although the bickering trio constantly argued, they had nevertheless steeled their hearts to do what they came out to do. So, they immediately cleaned up the pieces of Hongjing before heading out the door.

The four of them continued their trek, now against a blowing headwind. They walked for another four hours, wind howling in their ears, but the leeway they made was incomparable to the same distance they were able to cover earlier in the day. The whipping gusts grew stronger, throwing sand in their faces and bodies, beating at any uncovered skin. The more they advanced, the more difficult it became. Gusts became deafening gales and whirling sand wrapped the air around them, blinding their path.

Xie Lian, holding his bamboo hat down, called out, "This sandstorm doesn't feel right!"

No one answered him and Xie Lian looked back, afraid that someone might be lost. But all three were present and following him, just no one had heard him. The gales were so strong his voice was swallowed up. He wasn't particularly worried about Nan Feng and Fu Yao; even with crazed winds whipping the two walked steadily, full of killing intent. San Lang, on the other hand, followed closely behind Xie Lian, never more than five steps away.

Even with so much sand blowing and thrashing about, San Lang remained calm and collected, arms folded behind him as he walked. His red tunic and black hair danced wildly in the wind, as if he hadn't any care in the world. Xie Lian could feel how hard the sand was hitting his face, and was worried by how little San Lang seemed to mind. He opened his mouth to tell the youth to watch out for sand getting in his eyes and sleeves, but figured he wouldn't hear anything he'd say, so Xie Lian reached over directly to help fold in his sleeves, patting down to make sure no sand would get in. San Lang was taken aback by the sudden gesture.

The other two behind them approached, and with everyone closer to a better hearing range, Xie Lian tried talking again. "Be careful, everyone. This wind came out of nowhere, it's not right. There may be evil blown into this."

"It's just a little sandstorm, how evil can it be?" Fu Yao said.

Xie Lian shook his head. "The wind is alright. There may be more than sand in the gusts though."

Just then, a powerful gust whipped by, blowing off Xie Lian's bamboo hat. If it flew off, it would disappear in the desert forever! But San Lang reacted immediately and grabbed the hat in time with an abnormally fast hand. He returned the bamboo hat to Xie Lian once more, and Xie Lian thanked him.

He re-tied the hat onto his head before he said, "We should probably find shelter for the time being."

Fu Yao disagreed, "If there's evil in this storm trying to stop us from advancing, then we must continue!"

Before Xie Lian could say anything, San Lang burst out laughing.

Fu Yao raised his head and asked coldly, "What are you laughing at?"

San Lang folded his arms and chuckled. "Does being subversive give you the satisfaction of feeling unique and independent?"

Xie Lian had always thought that it was hard to tell when San Lang's laughs were sincere, but this time there was definitely not a single trace of sincerity. Fu Yao's eyes grew dark and Xie Lian raised his hand to stop another impending argument.

"Stop right there, you two. If you've got things to say, you can say them later. It won't be funny if the wind blows stronger."

"What? Think it'll blow you away?" Fu Yao mocked.

"That may very well ha—"

Xie Lian didn't finish his sentence before the three in front of him suddenly vanished.

Actually, they weren't the one who vanished, but him—another powerful gust had carried him away for real!

A twister!

Xie Lian spun madly in the sky. He threw out his arm and cried, "Ruoye! Grab hold of something dependably solid!"

Ruoye shot out from within Xie Lian's sleeve, and in the next moment, he could feel the other end of the white bandage sink, as if it was tied onto something, and it yanked him to a stop. After finally stabilizing himself in the crazed wind, Xie Lian realized that he had been blown over ten feet above ground!

Xie Lian was now like a kite, attached to the ground by only a single thread. With sand whipping at his face, Xie Lian held fast and tried to see what exactly Ruoye had tied itself to. Squinting and blinking, Xie Lian finally recognized a red silhouette. The other end of Ruoye seemed to be wrapped around the wrist of the youth in red.

Xie Lian told Ruoye to grab hold of something dependably solid, and it grabbed onto San Lang!

Ch.21: Shortened Distance; Adrift in Sandstorms 2

Xie Lian didn't know whether to laugh or cry and was about to command Ruoye to grab onto something else when the weight on his arm suddenly became lighter. Xie Lian's heart sank. This wasn't the feeling of Ruoye being released, but something much worse.

Sure enough, the red silhouette suddenly grew closer and was soon within reach.

San Lang had been dragged into the windstorm too!

Xie Lian shouted "don't panic!" to him, but the moment he opened his mouth, he got another mouthful of sand. At this point, Xie Lian had gotten used to eating sand. He was trying to tell San Lang not to panic, but in all honesty, he didn't think the boy would panic in the slightest. Ruoye continued to withdraw back to Xie Lian, closing the distance between him and the boy who had just been blown into the sky. As he suspected, San Lang didn't look the least bit anxious; appearing as if he could calmly open up a book and read right then and there. Xie Lian wondered if San Lang had gotten dragged in on purpose.

Ruoye wrapped itself around the waists of the two to rope them together. Xie Lian then commanded:

"Go, try again, but don't bring up any more people!"

The silk band shot out once again but this time it grabbed onto...Nan Feng and Fu Yao!

Xie Lian felt drained. "Ruoye," he said tiredly. "I said no people, but I didn't mean it so literally...alright."

Xie Lian twisted himself towards the ground and shouted: "NAN FENG, FU YAO! HANG ON! HANG ON TIGHT!"

Down below, of course Nan Feng and Fu Yao did their utmost to try and anchor themselves. But the winds were simply too strong, and soon, without any surprise, another two silhouettes joined them in the twister. Now all four of them, tied together by Ruoye, were swirling about in the twister, getting pulled higher and higher off the ground, winds and sand meshing and blowing about.

"How did you both get blown up here too?" Xie Lian shouted, enduring all the sand going into his mouth.

"Ask your dumb Ruoye!" Fu Yao yelled back, also getting mouthfuls of sand as he spat these words.

Xie Lian seized his “dumb Ruoye” with both hands, and said woefully, “My dear Ruoye, all four of us are counting on you now. Please, don’t grab the wrong thing again. Now go!”

Xie Lian miserably released Ruoye once more.

“STOP RELYING ON THAT TOY! THINK OF SOMETHING ELSE!” Nan Feng roared.

But just then, Xie Lian felt a tug from the other end of the silk band, and lit up. “Wait! Give it one more chance! It’s caught something!”

“IT BETTER NOT BE A RANDOM PASSERBY! LET THE POOR PERSON GO!” Fu Yao roared too.

Xie Lian was also afraid of the same thing. He tugged back at Ruoye, but it remained taut and firm, and Xie Lian let out a breath of relief.

Against the crazed twister, Ruoye rapidly shortened, and lugged the four out of and then away from the windstorm. Gradually, Xie Lian could make out the contours of something large, black, and half-round down below; the size of a small temple. When they finally touched ground, Xie Lian saw that this round structure was actually a giant boulder.

In the midst of the windstorm, this boulder was like a fortress; the perfect shelter. While on the road earlier, however, none of them had seen a rock like this. Who knew how far the twister had taken them? When they landed, they immediately circled around to the back of the boulder to hide from the wind. The moment they went around, understanding dawned on Xie Lian.

He cheered: “Thank the Heaven Official’s blessings!”

Turns out, behind the back of this boulder, there was a hole. The hole was as wide as two doors combined, but the length of half a person. Although a bit short, it was still possible to enter if one bent down. The hole’s opening was jagged and slant, but appeared to be more haphazardly man-made rather than naturally formed. When Xie Lian entered, he discovered that the inside was actually hollowed out, and quite deep. It was dark further inside, so he didn’t bother trying to look around and settled down where there was light. He patted the sand off of Ruoye, and wrapped it back on his arm.

Nan Feng and Fu Yao were both spitting out sand, covered in it from head to toe; from their eyes to their ears to their mouths and noses, and all over their clothes. They peeled off their outer robes and shook them out, dumping small mounds of sand onto the ground in the process. Out of the four of them, only San Lang looked unruffled. He lazily dusted himself off and was proper again. Other than his lopsided ponytail, his carefree form remained unaffected.

That ponytail had been tied by Xie Lian and was askew to begin with, so a little wind made no noticeable difference anyway.

Nan Feng wiped his face and started cursing while Xie Lian dumped sand from his bamboo hat.

“Sigh, I didn’t think you two would get pulled in as well. Why didn’t you use the Thousand-Pound Weight spell?”

“We did! It was useless!” Nan Feng spat angrily.

From the side, Fu Yao was still shaking sand out of his outer robe and said nastily, “Where do you think we are? This is a desert in the Northwest, not the main domain of my general.”

Nan Feng continued, “The North is the territory of the two Generals Pei, and the West belongs to Quan Yizhen. You won’t find a Nan Yang temple within a hundred-mile radius of this place.”

There is a saying, that even a powerful dragon cannot win against the local overlord snakes. As Nan Feng and Fu Yao represented generals of the Southeast and Southwest, their powers were restricted outside of their own territories.

“That’s really quite hard on you guys.”

Xie Lian watched their annoyed faces and felt sympathy for them, thinking this might have been their first time getting pulled into a twister and tumbled about.

San Lang sat down next to him. With a hand propping up his cheek, he asked, “So are we just gonna sit here until the storm blows over?”

“Looks like that’ll have to be the case,” Xie Lian turned to him and replied. “As strong as that twister is, it can’t possibly blow a giant rock into the sky.”

“You never know. Like you said, there’s something off about that wind.”

A sudden thought came to Xie Lian. “San Lang, may I ask a question?”

“Go ahead,” San Lang replied.

“That Guoshi of Banyue, is it a man or a woman?” Xie Lian asked.

“Did I not mention earlier? They’re a woman.”

Just as he suspected, Xie Lian thought. He said, “Earlier, when we were resting at the abandoned inn, didn’t we see two figures pass by? The one in white was a woman cultivator.”

Fu Yao looked doubtful. "It's not easy to identify whether it was a man or woman by those robes, and that individual looked taller than your average woman. Are you sure you saw right?"

"I'm absolutely sure," Xie Lian said. "So I thought she might be the Guoshi of Banyue."

"It's possible," Nan Feng said. "But there was another black-clad figure traveling next to her; who could that be?"

"Hard to say, but that person was walking even faster than she was. Their strength is definitely not below hers," Xie Lian said.

"Could it have been the other evil guoshi, Fangxin?" Fu Yao wondered.

"I think in regard to that, the whole 'Dual Wicked Masters' title is given only because, historically, what they've done is similar; both equally evil. So, people connected them together as a pair to remember them more easily. Like the whole 'Four Famous Tales', or the 'Four Great Calamities'; even if there aren't four, they are made four because it's simpler."

Hearing this, San Lang burst out laughing. Xie Lian stared at him.

"It's nothing," San Lang said, "I just thought what you said made sense. One of the four in the Four Great Calamities is certainly only there for the headcount. Please continue."

Xie Lian continued: "In reality, the Dual Wicked Masters don't have any relation to each other. I've heard of Master Fangxin; he was the Guoshi of Yong'an, born at least a hundred years earlier than Master Banyue."

"You don't know of the Four Great Calamities in the ghost realm, but you know about Master Fangxin of Yong'an in the mortal realm?" Fu Yao asked in disbelief.

"I overhear these things while collecting junk in the mortal realm. It's not like I collect junk in the ghost realm, so of course I don't learn anything about them," Xie Lian explained.

The wind outside the hole seemed to be dying down. Nan Feng walked closer to the opening of their shelter, patting the rocky surface here and there, inspecting it.

"Why would there be a hollow rock like this in the middle of a desert?"

He thought the boulder to be rather suspicious, but Xie Lian didn't think this to be so.

"They're not rare. Back then, the people of Banyue would build shelters like this to hide from sandstorms, or even for passing nights while out grazing their livestock. Some holes weren't dug, but rather were blown out," Xie Lian said.

“How could they graze in a desert?” Nan Feng asked, confused.

Xie Lian smiled. “It wasn’t all desert here two hundred years ago. There used to be an oasis.”

“Gege,” San Lang called.

“What is it?” Xie Lian turned his head to reply.

San Lang raised his hand and pointed. “The rock you’re sitting on seems to have writing on it.”

“What?”

Xie Lian looked down, then stood up and found that where he had previously sat was actually a stone slate. After wiping off the layer of dust, there were indeed letters on its surface. The characters were carved lightly in a vertical manner; with the slate half-buried in the sand, the words were faint and shrouded in the darkness.

If there were writings here, then they must be inspected!

“I don’t have much power left. Can anyone lend me a palm light? Thanks!” Xie Lian asked.

Nan Feng snapped his fingers and a small burst of flame ignited in his palm. Xie Lian stole a glance at San Lang, but he didn’t appear surprised. Xie Lian supposed that after seeing the Distance-Shortening array, there wasn’t much more to be surprised about. Nan Feng moved his palm to where Xie Lian directed him to brighten the writing on the stone slate. The characters were odd, as if drawn by a toddler; slanting and wild.

“What the hell is this?” Nan Feng wondered.

“Banyue script, duh,” San Lang replied.

“I’m sure he meant the meaning of those words,” Xie Lian said. “Let me see.”

Xie Lian cleaned off more dust and sand from the stone slate, and revealed the first column of writing with the largest characters. They must make the heading. The same characters also appeared repeatedly in various sections of the text’s body.

Fu Yao approached and also produced a palm torch. “You know how to read Banyue script?”

“Truth be told, I collected junk in Banyue before that whatever Wicked Master of Banyue came about,” Xie Lian replied.

The seven to eight people shivered for a while before an elder of fifty or so years stammered: "We're a merchant caravan passing through the area. Just normal merchants. The sandstorm is too big, so we're hiding in here for the time being."

He was the most composed in the group, and by the looks of it, he should be the leader.

Nan Feng asked, "If you're normal merchants, then why are you sneaking around and hiding?"

That elder was about to respond when a youth of about seventeen years shouted, "We weren't planning on sneaking around! But you guys suddenly rushed in; who knows whether you're good or evil? Then we keep hearing you talk about the Wicked Master of Banyue, some ghost realm, and igniting fire in your palms; we thought you guys were the Banyue soldiers out patrolling and hunting for flesh! No way we'd make a sound!"

"Stop talking, Tian Sheng," the old man hushed the boy, afraid that he might offend the other party.

The youth had thick brows and large eyes, the face of a tiger. But he shut up immediately the moment an elder spoke. Xie Lian put down his hands, his ears no longer ringing, and smiled brightly to relax the atmosphere.

"It's all a misunderstanding. Let's all relax and not panic."

He paused before continuing to explain.

"We're not Banyue soldiers. This servant is only a cultivator from a small shrine. These are...people...from my shrine. We only know small tricks, nothing fancy. You're normal merchants, and we're normal cultivators without malicious intent. It just so happens that we all entered the same shelter to hide away from the same sandstorm."

Xie Lian's voice was soft and gentle, each word spoken slowly to calm everyone's nerves. After much explanation and reassurance, the merchant party finally relaxed.

Suddenly, San Lang laughed. "I think they're being way too humble. Those merchants aren't as simple as they say they are."

No one understood what he meant and looked at him in confusion.

"Don't at least half the travelers go missing when trekking through the Banyue Pass? To cross this land when knowing this rumour; surely you're all extraordinarily brave. Nothing normal about you."

"That's not all true, young man," the elder responded. "Some caravans have passed through without harm before!"

“Oh?” San Lang hummed.

“As long as you find the right guide, and go around the Banyue territory, then all is well. So, this time we sought out and found a local to lead us,” the elder said.

“Yeah!” that youth Tian Sheng spoke up. “It all depends on the guide! We owe everything to A-Zhao-ge! If not for him, we wouldn’t have been able to avoid all those quicksand pits. When the sandstorm started, he knew exactly where to bring us to hide, otherwise we would be buried alive in sand by now!”

Xie Lian took a glance. This A-Zhao who guided them looked rather young, seemingly in his twenties, with a clean, respectable face. When he was praised by the other two, he didn’t make a show of it, only turning away glumly.

“It’s nothing. Just doing my duty. Hopefully when the wind dies down none of the camels or shipments will have been damaged.”

“They’ll be fine for sure!”

The merchants were all very optimistic, but Xie Lian had a feeling things weren’t as simple as they all thought.

If all trouble could be avoided by simply not crossing into Banyue territory, then did all the former travelers who lost their lives die because they didn’t believe in the rumours?

Xie Lian gave it some thought, and said to Nan Feng and Fu Yao in a quiet voice: “This is too sudden. Once this storm passes, we’ll need to make sure these people pass safely before going to the Banyue ruins.”

Then, Xie Lian looked back down to continue deciphering the Banyue writing on the stone slate. He recognized the word “General” earlier, but that was because it was a word often used. It had been two hundred years since he last visited the Kingdom of Banyue. Even if he was fluent then, it had all been forgotten since. To suddenly pick up the burden of translation really required time and patience.

Just then, San Lang said: “Tomb of the General.”

Xie Lian remembered now. The last character was the word for “Tomb”; “Grave”, “Burial”, and other similar terms. He turned to look at him, amazed.

“San Lang, do you know Banyue script, too?”

San Lang smiled. “Not much. I only know a few words because they’re interesting.”

Xie Lian was already used to him saying that. The word “tomb” was not one often used; if San Lang really only knew “not much”, how would he happen to know exactly just what this one character meant? His “not much” had come to mean “ask away”, and Xie Lian seized the chance.

“Excellent! Maybe the characters you recognize happen to be the ones I don’t know. Come closer and let’s examine this together.”

Xie Lian waved his hand lightly to beckon, so San Lang went over. Nan Feng and Fu Yao stood next to them, lighting the tomb for them to read with their palm torches. Xie Lian lightly touched the words with his fingers, reviewing the writing in low voices with San Lang, softly reading the words. The more they read, the more amazed they looked, before gradually becoming more glum.

The merchant boy Tian Sheng was young after all, and youths were prone to curiosity. After the slight altercation earlier, it was as if they had become familiar, so he called out:

“Gege, what does it say on the rock?”

Xie Lian snapped out of it and replied: “This stone slate is a memorial; it tells the story of the life of a general.”

“A Banyue general?” Tian Sheng asked.

“No, a Midlands general,” San Lang answered.

“A Midlands general?” Nan Feng was puzzled. “Why would the people of Banyue build a memorial for a Midlander? I thought the two kingdoms were constantly at war with each other.”

“This general is special,” San Lang replied. “Although the memorial calls him a general, he was actually no more than a captain.”

“But was he promoted to general later?”

“No. At the beginning, he led troops of hundreds, before dwindling to a troop of seventy, then to fifty.”

The feeling of being demoted to the point of nothing was quite familiar to Xie Lian, and he could feel eyes on him. He pretended not to notice, and continued to decipher the Banyue writing.

Tian Sheng couldn't understand, and continued asking. "What kind of official gets demoted lower and lower in rank? As long as he didn't make any major mistakes, there should only be delays in promotion, not demotion? How much of a failure do you have to be?"

"..."

Xie Lian rolled his right hand into a fist and raised it to his lips. He faintly cleared his throat and replied in a stern voice. "Young man, receiving continuous demotion is not as rare as you think."

"Huh?"

San Lang chuckled. "It's true. It happens a lot." He paused before continuing. "This captain got demoted time and time again not because he was incapable or incompetent for duty. Despite poor relations on both sides of this conflict, instead of winning battles on the battlefield, he kept getting in the way."

"What do you mean, 'getting in the way'?" Nan Feng asked.

"He prevented his enemies from killing Midland civilians, and he also blocked his own army from killing the people of Banyue. Every time he did this, he got demoted a rank."

San Lang spoke lightheartedly, and the seven to eight merchants sat closer to him like it was story time. Soon they got into it and started commentating.

"I don't think the captain did anything wrong!" Tian Sheng remarked, "It shouldn't be a problem if you let soldiers kill each other but not civilians, right?"

"He's too blindly kind for a soldier, but overall, he didn't commit any crimes?"

"Yeah, he's saving lives, not killing people!"

Xie Lian smiled at all the comments.

The merchants before them never lived a day at a battle-torn border, and were not the same people of two hundred years ago. The Kingdom of Banyue had long perished. It was easy for them to say this, criticize that, even compliment, but the actions of that captain weren't so easily forgiven back then, not with a simple remark of "he's just blindly kind".

Within the group, only A-Zhao understood better; probably because he was a local.

"Now is now, two hundred years ago is two hundred years ago. To only receive demotion was already a blessing for this captain."

Fu Yao, however, clicked his tongue. “Laughable.”

Xie Lian could pretty much guess what he was about to say, and rubbed his forehead.

As he expected, Fu Yao looked rather troubled under the light of the flickering flames. “One must do the duty as demanded by their position. If he became a soldier, then he must always remember to defend his country, and kill enemies on the front lines. Casualties are inevitable in war. Such soft-heartedness has no place in war, and will only drag down his fellow soldiers. His enemies will also think him foolish. No one will thank him in the end.”

Fu Yao’s words had irrefutable logic, and silence soon filled the cave.

He continued drily, “People like that only have one end—death. They will either die in battle or at the hands of their own people.”

After being struck speechless for a moment, Xie Lian broke the silence. “Yeah. You’re quite right. He did die.”

Tian Sheng was shocked. “Ah! How did he die? Was he really killed by his own people?”

Xie Lian chewed on his words, but still replied in the end. “Not really...here it says that there was once a battle when both sides clashed, and as they fought, this man’s boot laces came loose and he stepped on them, tripped, then...”

Everyone in the cave had thought the death would have been tragic but heroic, so they were all taken aback at first; thinking: what kind of death was that? Then, laughter exploded.

“HAHAHAHAHAHAHAHAHAHAHAH!”

“Is that so funny?” San Lang arched his brows.

Xie Lian also piped up. “Ahem. Yeah, it’s rather tragic. Let’s be more sympathetic and not laugh, yeah? We’re in his tomb after all, let’s give him some face.”

“I don’t mean anything malicious by laughing!” Tian Sheng immediately claimed. “But his death is just...so...hahah...”

There was nothing Xie Lian could do. Reading the epitaph to this point, even he wanted to laugh, so he didn’t comment and continued to translate.

“In any case, even though this captain didn’t have a good reputation in the army, the border citizens were all very grateful for his efforts and called him ‘General’. They built this simple stone tomb for him, and erected a stone slate to remember him by.

“Later, the people of Banyue discovered another miraculous thing about this memorial: as long as one kowtows before this stone slate three times, one can transform all disasters met in the Gobi to good fortune,” San Lang completed the translation.

His tone of voice was mysterious and meaningful, very convincing. His expression was also serious, so when the group heard, several of them immediately started prostrating, muttering that they’d rather believe it true than not. Xie Lian however, was confused.

“Wha - ? Is that written here? Is it really that magical?”

San Lang smiled softly and said in a lowered voice: “No. I made that up. But since they laughed earlier, their prostrating now should make up for it.”

Xie Lian looked back at the stone slate and saw that it was indeed the end of the epitaph and there were no more words. At first he was feeling a bit woeful, but now he thought it funny, and whispered back, “Why are you so mischievous?”

San Lang stuck out his tongue, and the two chuckled.

Just then, someone shrieked, “WHAT’S THIS???”

The shriek echoed in the cave, sharply reverberating against the walls, causing all the hairs to stand.

Xie Lian instantly turned toward where the shriek came from and demanded, “What happened?”

Where the merchants were once sitting, everyone had scrambled in a flash, scurrying away in fear and alarm.

“SNAKE!”

Nan Feng and Fu Yao moved their palms toward the commotion and lit up the ground in that direction. Curled on the sandy floor was a slender, brilliantly-coloured snake!

“Why is there a snake?!” The crowd was growing increasingly anxious.

“Why...why did this snake not make any noise when it slithered out?”

When the flames lit up over the snake it instantly became alert and raised itself to a position of attack. Nan Feng was about to torch it when someone leisurely strolled over, and easily snatched the snake with his left hand, clutching it at its heart.

He brought it closer to observe it and said, “Isn’t it normal to have snakes in the desert?”

Someone this unscrupulous and gutsy was, of course, San Lang. They say to fight a snake, seize it where the heart is; if pressed here hard enough, no matter how venomous its fangs, it'd be helpless. The snake wrapped its long tail around San Lang's left arm meekly. At closer range, Xie Lian could see clearly: the snake had translucent skin, its vivid red insides mixed with visible threads of black, resembling inner organs; rather disgusting. The tail was the colour of flesh, segmented like layers of a hard shell; unlike that of a snake, more like a scorpion.

Seeing this, Xie Lian's face changed, and called out: "Watch out for its tail!"

Before Xie Lian finished his sentence, the long snake body that was wrapped around San Lang's left arm suddenly let go. The tail snapped backwards, and tried to stab viciously towards San Lang.

Venomous as the tail was, San Lang's right hand was faster, and easily caught the tail. Now holding both head and tail, San Lang showed off the snake to Xie Lian like it was an interesting toy, laughing.

"This tail is pretty cool."

On the end of the tail grew a long flesh-red needle. Xie Lian sighed in relief.

"I'm glad you weren't pricked. Looks like this is a scorpion-snake."

Nan Feng and Fu Yao had come near to observe the snake too. "Scorpion-snake?"

"That's right," Xie Lian said. "It's a rare poisonous vermin found only in Banyue; scarce in numbers. I've never seen them before, but I've heard of them. Body of a snake, tail of a scorpion, its venom is the strength of both combined, and if bitten or pricked..."

Xie Lian trailed off, watching San Lang twisting the snake, pulling and squeezing it as if it was a towel, stopping short of tying it into a bow. Xie Lian was speechless for a moment.

"San Lang, stop playing with the poor thing, it's dangerous."

San Lang laughed. "Don't worry, gege, it's nothing. The scorpion-snake is the symbol of the Banyue Guoshi; gotta take this rare chance to examine it!"

"The symbol of the Banyue Guoshi?" Xie Lian asked in awe.

"That's right," San Lang said. "Apparently, it was because the Guoshi could control these scorpion-snakes that the people of Banyue believed in her powers and worshipped her."

Hearing the word "control" brought alarm to Xie Lian. When it came to controlling anything, whatever it may be, it usually came in mass numbers.

“Everyone, leave this cave! There may be more than one scorpion-snake...”

“Aaahh!!!”

A voice cried out before Xie Lian could finish his words.

“SNAKE!” Other voices started yelling. “So many snakes!!!”

“Over here too!”

From within the shadows, seven or eight scorpion-snakes soundlessly slithered into the cave. They came so swiftly and quietly from unknown crevices, but they didn’t attack, only watching, judging. Soundless in both movement and attack; not even hissing from their tongues. Nan Feng and Fu Yao released two fireballs and shot them towards the snakes; exploding flames inside the cave.

“Get out!” Xie Lian yelled.

No one needed to be told twice, and all ran outside. Luckily, it was still light out and the twister had long passed; the wind having died down. The group of them escaped out into open ground and kept running.

As they ran, someone spoke up: “That stone memorial is too scary! How come after we kowtowed three times we still ran into stuff like that??”

Xie Lian was thankful that they didn’t know those last words were fabricated by San Lang. But, then he heard someone else say: “Yeah! It’s pretty much the same effect as worshipping that Scrap Immortal! The more you pray, the more unlucky you become!”

“...”

In a place where barely any sticks could hit him, he would still get shot by an arrow. Xie Lian was speechless.

Suddenly, Tian Sheng yelped in alarm, “UNCLE ZHENG!”

That elder he had been assisting had collapsed.

Xie Lian darted over. “What happened?”

Pain filled the face of old man Zheng, and he raised a shaky hand. Xie Lian grabbed hold of his hand and frowned, his heart sinking. There was a growing angry swelling that was spreading rapidly down his palm, and within the red and purple bruising, there were two small punctures, barely visible. A wound this tiny would not have otherwise been noticed until it was too late.

“Everyone, check and see if you have any wounds on your bodies!” Xie Lian called out immediately. “If you do, use a rope to tie them off!”

Xie Lian turned the hand over to examine it further, and saw that the red and purple swelling was climbing up the veins of the arm. He was just about to unravel Ruoye when, next to him, A-Zhao ripped a strip of fabric from his own clothing and promptly knotted it tightly on the old man’s bicep to prevent the venom from progressing. Xie Lian was amazed by his speed. He looked up, and Nan Feng wordlessly took out a medicine bottle and popped out a pill for the old man to swallow.

“Uncle! Are you ok?” Tian Sheng cried. “A-Zhao-ge, uncle won’t die, will he?”

A-Zhao shook his head. “To get bitten by the scorpion-snake means certain death within four hours.”

Tian Sheng was shaken. “Then...what do we do??”

Old man Zheng was the leader of the caravan, and the other merchants also started panicking.

“This buddy here just gave him a pill, right?”

“That wasn’t an antidote,” Nan Feng said. “It’s for temporary longevity. The most it can give him is twenty-four hours.”

The crowd became even more distressed.

“Only twenty-four hours?”

“Does that mean we can only sit here and wait for death to come?”

“Is there no saving him from this venom?”

Right then, San Lang walked over slowly. “There is a way.”

Everyone turned to stare at him. Tian Sheng turned his head joyously.

“A-Zhao-ge, if there’s a way, why didn’t you say so? Gave me a fright!”

However, A-Zhao was still silent, and soundlessly shook his head.

“Of course it’s not easy for him to say,” San Lang said. “How could he possibly tell you that the bitten one could only be saved at the cost of everyone else’s lives?”

“San Lang, what do you mean?” Xie Lian asked.

“Gege, do you know the story behind the scorpion-snake?” San Lang asked.

In the legends, many hundreds of years ago, there was once a king of Banyue who, while hunting, inadvertently caught two spirits borne from two venomous creatures: one snake, and one scorpion.

The two venoms cultivated deep within the mountains, ignorant of the world, and causing no afflictions. The king, nevertheless, considered their nature, and believed they would cause evil sooner or later; he planned to execute them. They begged and begged for their lives to be spared, but the king was cruel. He forced the two creatures to mate at one of his many festivities before a drunken audience, and after the festivities, they were still executed.

Only the queen was sympathetic, and pitied the two creatures. In order not to go against the will of the king, she could only cover their corpses with a fern leaf.

The snake and scorpion became vengeful spirits, and cursed the descendants borne from their mating to forever remain in the Kingdom of Banyue to destroy its people. Since that time, the scorpion-snakes are found only within Banyue territory. Should anyone be bitten or pricked, the venom would spread like wildfire and they would die a miserable death.

However, thanks to that one act of kindness from the queen, the fern leaves used to cover its corpse became the antidote for their venom.

“That plant is called shanyue³⁴, and only grows within the borders of Banyue,” San Lang finished.

“Is...is the legend true? Can it be believed?” the merchants asked anxiously. “Little buddy, this concerns life and death, don’t joke around with us!”

San Lang smiled but said nothing, refusing to speak more after telling Xie Lian the tale.

Tian Sheng turned toward A-Zhao. “A-Zhao-ge, is what that red-clad gege said true?”

After humming for a moment, A-Zhao replied. “Whether the legend is true, I do not know. But the shanyue plant does grow within the walls of Banyue, and it is indeed the antidote for the scorpion-snake venom.”

³⁴ “Shanyue” means “the benevolent moon”. The original Chinese uses the term for an unspecified grass; in this translation, “fern” was used.

“Meaning the only way to live after getting bitten is to venture into the Kingdom of Banyue?” Xie Lian said.

No wonder so many caravans would pass through Banyue territory despite knowing the deadly rumours. It wasn't that they were defiant and stubbornly went to seek their own deaths, but rather that if they didn't go they would certainly die!

The scorpion-snake was the symbol of the Wicked Master of Banyue, and they were also controlled by her. The appearance of these snakes was no mere coincidence. With only a few heavenly officials like them here, there was no way they could ensure the absolute safety of the entire merchant group, and there was no knowing how many more snakes may show. Xie Lian raised two fingers and pressed them against his temple, trying to connect with the heavenly communication array to see if he could borrow more junior officials with his thick skin, and have more help in protecting the people. No dice. The connection wouldn't respond.

Xie Lian lowered his hand and wondered: “I didn't use up all of my powers, did I? I calculated this morning, and there was still a small bit left.” He turned to Nan Feng and Fu Yao. “Can either of you try and enter the communication array? I'm blocked.”

After a moment, the other two also looked grim.

“I can't get in either,” Nan Feng said.

It couldn't have been the sandstorm that disrupted their connection? There had been cases where the connection would become frazzled in areas of highly evil auras; potent enough to diminish the powers of various heavenly officials. It seemed as though that was what was happening now.

Xie Lian paced in a circle and wondered out loud: “It might be because we're too close to the Kingdom of Banyue, so the communication array was blocked...”

Just then, in the corner of his eye, there was a flash of red.

Nan Feng and Fu Yao were busy trying to reconnect with the communication array, and everyone else was occupied checking for wounds on their body. The boy Tian Sheng was anxiously holding tightly onto old man Zheng, and didn't notice a wine-red scorpion-snake soundlessly climbing up his spine, curling near the neck, and opening its mouth. However, the fangs were not aiming at Tian Sheng's neck, but at San Lang's arm right next to it!

The snake leaned back, then pounced!

In the speed of a second, before the snake had the chance to sink its fangs into San Lang, Xie Lian's hand shot out and snatched the snake right at the heart with blinding precision.

Given his strength, Xie Lian could crush the snake's heart if he wanted to; rupture its innards and spill its insides. But not knowing whether the snake's flesh was also poisonous, he didn't dare to press harder. Xie Lian raised his other hand to grab for the tail, but the snake was slippery and artful, making it difficult to catch. Xie Lian squeezed but only felt something soft and cold slither between his fingers, and the next moment, a sharp needle pain flared from the back of his hand.

The scorpion tail!

Yet because of the stinger between his fingers, Xie Lian was able to grab hold of the tail and capture the snake properly. He squeezed down hard until it became unconscious. Even having been stung, Xie Lian's face never changed, and tossed it to the ground indifferently.

"Everyone be careful, there may be more snakes around..."

He felt a tight hold on his wrist before he finished his words, and looked to see that it was San Lang who caught hold of him.

"San Lang?" Xie Lian looked at the boy, puzzled.

The reason he sounded confused was because, at this very moment, the expression on this youth's face was quite off: it was indescribably frosty to the point of frightening. His eyes were focused intently on the wound on the back of Xie Lian's hand that had now ballooned thanks to the vicious venom. The small puncture wound had become visibly enlarged, the size of a knife cut, because of the angry swelling.

With a dark expression, San Lang wordlessly snatched Ruoye from Xie Lian's arm and immediately knotted it firmly on his wrist, preventing the venom from advancing. While Ruoye enjoyed snuggling up to Xie Lian, it wasn't all that well-behaved; and yet in San Lang's hands it was so compliant it was like it was dead.

Ever since they had known each other, Xie Lian had never seen San Lang look like this. He opened his mouth to speak, but San Lang turned to pull a dagger off the waist of one of the merchants. Nan Feng saw and knew instantly what San Lang was about to do, and ignited a palm torch. Without sparing a look, San Lang burned the tip of the dagger to disinfect it before turning back to Xie Lian and drawing a cross on the mouth of the puncture wound.

Just as he was about to lower his head to the hand, Xie Lian hurriedly said: "It's okay. The venom is aggressive, sucking it won't do much. I don't want you to get poisoned..."

San Lang ignored him, tightened his hold on Xie Lian's hand, and placed his lips upon it. Xie Lian's hand trembled slightly, and he couldn't explain why.

Next to him, Fu Yao said in disdain, "I can't believe you went and got yourself pricked. What are you doing, catching the snake when the kid might not even have gotten bit? You're just making trouble needlessly."

His words were probably true. Xie Lian recalled the airy way San Lang played with the snake in the cave; he probably wouldn't have even cared for any attacks, and wouldn't have gotten bitten. But just in case. Just in case San Lang didn't notice the snake and got bit. It'd be too late, then.

Xie Lian waved his good hand. "Don't mind it. It's not like it hurts, and I won't die from it."

"You're really not in pain?" Fu Yao asked.

"Really. I don't feel pain anymore," Xie Lian answered truthfully.

Since Xie Lian possessed the worst of luck, every time he ventured deep into the mountains, eight times out of ten he would step onto vipers or run into poisonous insects, and get bitten, stung, jabbed, or poisoned in thousands of ways. Perhaps because of his heavenly status, he couldn't die; at most, he'd run a fever. After three days and three nights of fevers, he'd be right as rain when he woke, and continue on as if nothing happened. Gradually, he became less and less sensitive to pain, and just lived with it.

Right after the words had left his mouth, San Lang finally looked up. The red swelling on the back of Xie Lian's hand had gone down; a stain of blood was red on San Lang's lips. His eyes were extremely cold, and he moved his glare to the unconscious snake on the ground. BOOM! The snake abruptly exploded into a pool of blood and flesh.

The sudden blast surprised everyone, but no one knew who did it. Even if the blood didn't splatter onto anyone, there was still a feeling of unease blanketing everyone.

Tian Sheng, who still remembered that Xie Lian had also gotten stung, asked worriedly, "Gege, you got pricked too! What will you do?"

Xie Lian felt the bandage on his wrist and smiled. "Don't worry, little one. We'll still stick to the plan of going to the Banyue ruins and search for the shanyue fern."

Another merchant asked, "You guys are going? What about us? Should we also send someone to go with you?"

"You can all stay here. Banyue territory is dangerous; the more people there, the more mishaps that can happen. We will find the fern and bring it back to you within twenty-four hours," Xie Lian said.

"For...for real? Thank you so much—!"

"How can we possibly ever..."

A number of merchants started stuttering their thanks, but then their faces changed when Xie Lian continued to speak.

“In order to reach Banyue as soon as possible, I want to borrow your guide temporarily, if that’s alright.”

Naturally, Xie Lian meant A-Zhao. The merchants went from grateful and relieved, to hesitant. Xie Lian knew where they were coming from. They were afraid that Xie Lian might run off with their guide once he found the shanyue fern; even if A-Zhao didn’t run away, timing would still be delayed. Nevertheless, none of them wanted to venture into that wicked place where “at least half go missing”. Their worries were entirely understandable, so Xie Lian added:

“And just in case anything else comes to attack you, Fu Yao will stay until we return.”

A man for a man, now there was insurance that Xie Lian would come back. The merchants finally agreed and nodded.

“Alright. As long as A-Zhao is willing.”

Xie Lian turned to A-Zhao. “Are you open to giving us a hand, my friend? If not, that’s okay, too.”

A-Zhao nodded and said, “Yes. But the Banyue ruins are actually not hard to get to; just keep heading in this direction.”

After bidding the merchants farewell, A-Zhao took the lead with Xie Lian, San Lang, and Nan Feng following right behind.

A while later, Xie Lian inquired, “A-Zhao, do the scorpion-snakes appear frequently in this area?”

“Not frequently. This was my first time seeing them, too,” A-Zhao replied.

Xie Lian nodded and had no more questions. Truthfully, he did live in the Banyue area for a number of years, and this was also his first time seeing a scorpion-snake. A-Zhao’s answer was not out of place.

Nan Feng realized Xie Lian’s intentions and asked in a low voice, “You’re suspicious of this A-Zhao?”

Xie Lian responded in a whisper, “Either way we’ve brought him out. Just keep an eye on him.”

In the past, it was usually San Lang who would talk to him first, but since the incident earlier, the boy hadn’t looked approachable; walking stoically, and silent. Xie Lian couldn’t figure out what was going on and didn’t know how to talk to him, so he kept on walking as well.

The four continued to trek through the vast Gobi Desert. The windstorm had long passed, and without any obstructions, they advanced quickly. Soon, they could see ragged weeds here and there, growing in the cracks of rocks and sand. By the time the sun was setting, Xie Lian finally spotted an ancient fortress on the horizon.

The fortress was difficult to see because it was the colour of sand, camouflaged in the yellowness and becoming one with the desert. Some parts of the fortress walls were also caved in and buried. As they approached, they found the fortress walls were extremely high, towering over hundreds of feet. It wasn't hard to imagine its past magnificence, how grand it must've been.

Passing through the barbican, the four formally entered the Kingdom of Banyue.

Past the gates was a wide and empty city street, with dilapidated houses on each side; rotten beams and broken bricks were strewn about.

Out of habit, A-Zhao cautioned the others, "Please be careful and don't leave the group on your own."

The other three didn't need that reminder. The actual Banyue fortress was probably different than imagined, and Nan Feng wondered, "This is the Kingdom of Banyue? It's smaller than a capital!"

"A desert country is only as big as the oasis it's built on," Xie Lian explained. "At its peak, the population was only just about ten thousand. It's actually pretty lively in a small fortress like this."

Nan Feng continued to observe the surroundings. "It would probably only take a few days to siege a country of this size."

Xie Lian shook his head, "Not necessarily. Don't underestimate the people of Banyue, Nan Feng. Even if their population wasn't more than ten thousand, they kept the number of soldiers at an average of four thousand. There were more males than females; aside from the sick and old, and the farmers, most men joined the army. Besides, most of those soldiers were over nine feet tall, each more violent than the next. With a mace in hand, they would keep fighting even with swords through their chests. They're very hard to fight."

A-Zhao was surprised and glanced at Xie Lian. "This young master seems to know a lot."

Xie Lian maintained his smile and was about to converse some more when Nan Feng posed a question, "What's that wall?"

He was indicating a giant mud-yellow building in the far distance.

"Building" wasn't quite the right word to describe it, because it was a giant enclosure formed by four massive mud-coloured walls without neither doors nor roofs. Each wall was over a hundred feet, and on the very top there was a pole, with something tattered attached, flying in the wind. It was a chilling image.

Xie Lian turned his head and took a look, then said simply, "That's the Sinner's Pit."

By the sound of the name alone, it was obvious it wasn't anything good.

"Sinner's Pit?" Nan Feng frowned.

Humming gravely, Xie Lian explained, "You can think of it as a jail. It's made specifically for imprisoning criminals."

"How does it imprison if there isn't even a door? Throw them in from the top?" Nan Feng wondered.

Xie Lian was just hesitating in answering when San Lang suddenly spoke up.

"They get thrown in. And the pit is full of poisonous snakes and starving beasts."

Hearing him finally speak, Xie Lian felt relieved, but when he looked over to San Lang, the boy met his gaze and turned away.

Nan Feng swore, "That's no fuckin' jail?! That's torture! How cruel! Those people of Banyue were either sick in the head or savage psychos!"

Xie Lian rubbed his forehead. "Not all of them. Some of them were quite endearing..." He paused suddenly, his brows stiffening. "Wait."

The other three stopped, and Xie Lian pointed upwards.

"Look at that pole up on the pit. Is that a person hanging from it?"

In the dimming light of the setting sun and with such distance, it was difficult to see what exactly was hung on the pole. But going closer and scrutinizing the shape, it became obvious it was a scrawny little person in black, their clothes unkempt, dangling in the wind like a ragdoll.

"It's a person," San Lang confirmed.

When A-Zhao saw the hanging person, his face paled. This was such a chilling and peculiar display that even a calm individual like him couldn't bear the sight of it.

Just then, San Lang tilted his head, and said in a low voice, "Someone's here."

He wasn't the only one who noticed. Xie Lian also heard featherlight footsteps approaching. The four immediately moved to hide in the many decaying houses on the roadside. Xie Lian and San Lang entered one house, and Nan Feng and A-Zhao hid in the one across the street. Soon after, at the end of the broken street, appeared the woman cultivator in white.

The woman was dressed in a light white robe, a whisk in her arm, roaming along the street, peering here and there, eyes bright and observant, as if she was in her own backyard garden, and not the Banyue ruins. Strolling right after her was another woman clad in black, her hands behind her back.

The black-clad woman was beautiful yet cold; her eyes piercing, her raven hair long and free, as if radiating chill from her very person. Although she was walking behind the woman cultivator, no one would have mistaken her as a subordinate.

It was the same two women they saw outside the abandoned inn at noon time.

At that time, they had passed by too fast, and Xie Lian couldn't make out the details of the lady in black, but he now saw clearly that she was indeed a woman. If the one in white was the Witch of Banyue, then who was the one in black?

The witch swished her whisk leisurely and spoke, "Now where did those people go? We were careless for one moment and they all disappeared. Do I have to dig them out and kill them one by one?"

As Xie Lian had thought, they were watched the moment they stepped foot into the fortress.

The lady in black approached and stoically said, "You can call your friends to help you kill them."

Those "friends" must have meant the soldiers of Banyue.

The Guoshi of Banyue laughed. "Ha! I don't like calling other people. I like calling you. Aren't you glad?"

The lady in black ignored her completely and said coolly, "There's nothing agreeable about being called out by the likes of you for something like this. Just go."

The Guoshi of Banyue arched her brows but still sped away. Listening to them it sounded as if they were close. They were no ordinary folks, so the lady in black must have some renown. Someone who would be close to the Guoshi of Banyue? A mysterious fellow cultivator? Or was there a queen or general they didn't know about?

Xie Lian was trying to connect the dots rapidly in his mind, but held his breath. Now wasn't the time to be discovered. It looked like the guoshi had an unpredictable personality; if she should find them and excitedly summon her legendary, nine foot tall, mace-wielding Banyue soldiers, then more time would be wasted fighting them. Twenty-four hours. One hour wasted was another hour they'd sink deeper into danger. But, there was no helping his bad luck; whatever he didn't want to happen would always happen. The lady in black was passing the house Xie Lian hid in, but stopped mid-step, and her piercing gaze came sweeping over the decayed shelter.

The Guoshi of Banyue was already further ahead, but noticed that her companion had stopped and came back around. "Hey, are you not coming?"

The lady in black didn't look at her. "You. Step back."

"Alright," the guoshi responded obediently and actually retreated. The lady in black was about to raise her hand when suddenly, a loud rumble blasted from across the street!

Across on the other side, it was the house Nan Feng and A-Zhao hid in that collapsed! The crumbling of one house led the entire strip to cave in. Dust and sand rolled into the air and clouded the whole street. Within, a black shadow leapt out, shot a streaming flame towards the guoshi, but the lady in black rushed forward and blocked the guoshi from harm. With her left hand still behind her, she flipped her right palm and easily absorbed the flames before rebounding it right back. The black shadow parried with her while escaping, and soon disappeared. The guoshi immediately chased after it, but the lady in black gave the house behind another sweeping look before following after the guoshi.

"Bless you, Nan Feng," Xie Lian thanked mentally.

All of this had happened so quickly, but Nan Feng had no doubt known somehow that they were about to get in trouble and created a diversion to lead enemies astray. He was the only one who leapt out, so A-Zhao must still be inside the collapsed house. After making sure the guoshi and the lady in black were indeed gone, Xie Lian dragged San Lang out of their hiding spot and called out.

"A-Zhao, are you still alive? Are you hurt anywhere?"

A moment later, a sulky voice came from under the ruins, "...I'm fine."

Xie Lian was relieved. "Thank goodness."

Although Xie Lian trusted in Nan Feng's ability to control the crash and would no doubt leave enough space for A-Zhao to stay safe, it was still more reassuring to see it with his own eyes. He raised one of the rotten beams with one hand, and after a moment A-Zhao emerged from underneath, covered in dust from head to toe. He patted himself down a bit and returned to his stoic expression.

"Now there's only three of us left," Xie Lian said. "Nan Feng is creating a diversion, so we must move faster. Do you know where we can find the shanyue fern, A-Zhao?"

The young man shook his head and said, "Sorry. I only know where the fortress was, but I've never been here before, so I don't know where the fern can be found."

San Lang spoke up. "They say the shanyue fern prefers shade, is small, its roots thin but its leaves large; like a heart-shaped peach. Why don't you search near a large building?"

"A large building?" Xie Lian contemplated.

If they were talking big, there was no building larger than the palace. In the legend, it was after the festivities that the queen picked a shanyue leaf, which could mean the fern grew in the palace grounds.

The three moved their gaze afar, and in the centre of the fortress there was indeed a palace built of brick and wood.

From the distance, the palace had a grandiose aura, but upon a closer look, it was not in much better shape than the dilapidated houses on the streets. Through the palace gates was a massive garden; perhaps in the past it wasn't a garden, but a palace square. With years of neglect, weeds had flourished and spread.

Indeed, it wasn't sand beneath their feet, but mud. This was most likely the last sign of an oasis that once was; shanyue could very well be growing amongst all the other plants.

"Let's not waste time," Xie Lian said. "We only have twenty-four hours, but be careful of the scorpion-snakes."

A-Zhao and San Lang both hummed in acknowledgement and lowered their heads to start searching through the plants. As they rummaged, it suddenly occurred to Xie Lian that, if the Witch of Banyue could control scorpion-snakes, there should be an abundance of them slithering about in her territory. Ever since they entered the fortress, they had not seen a single snake.

He straightened up and was about to speak when one of his hands felt up a long object.

Looking down again, he found that it was a human leg.

Ch.23: Shortened Distance; Adrift in Sandstorms 4

“WAAAHHHHHHHHHH!!!!”

Xie Lian drew his hand back and was struck speechless.

It came to him that every time he saw or touched anything thrilling in the dark, it was always the other party that'd scream first while he remained silent. But shouldn't he be the one who was the most scared?

The plants in this garden were tall and thick; it was someone who was already hiding and crawling in the weeds whose leg Xie Lian felt. The moment they touched, the leg recoiled and the weeds in front of him bustled.

Someone called out, “Don't hit me! Don't hit me! Gege, it's me!”

Xie Lian scrutinized the wild grass and saw that the one emerged crying “don't hit me!” was the thick-browed, large-eyed Tian Sheng. The boy in turn saw that Xie Lian recognized him and sighed a breath of relief. Xie Lian, on the other hand, wasn't relieved; rather, he became even more alert, and raised his good arm in a defensive stance. In circumstances like these, it was usually more likely that this was an illusion created by something evil.

“Weren't you with the others back in the desert? How are you here? Are you really Tian Sheng?”

Tian Sheng explained hurriedly, “It's me! I'm the real thing! I'm not the only one; three other uncles also came. They're just inside. Look if you don't believe me!”

He pointed towards inside the palace, and sure enough, three men came running out; and they were indeed the men from the caravan. When they saw Xie Lian, they froze in their steps and looked awkward.

Xie Lian puffed a breath before finally rising to his feet and dusted off his white sleeves. “What's going on?”

The merchants looked at each other and no one made any noise. It was Tian Sheng who spoke up after an awkward silence.

“...Gege, after you guys left, Uncle Zheng's pain flared and was really miserable. We didn't know how much longer to wait for you to return, and were afraid that you guys might've gotten lost. A-Zhao-ge said to go straight to get to the Kingdom of Banyue, so we thought the more hands to help the better, so...”

So, what he really meant was the merchants regretted letting them go after all. They were afraid that Xie Lian and company would rob them of their guide after finding the shanyue fern for themselves, so they sent people to come follow after them. Xie Lian imagined that Fu Yao couldn't hold them back, and was probably also too lazy to hold them back. It was impossible to stop stubborn people who refused to listen to reason.

Xie Lian felt rather exasperated. "You're all too reckless. Who knows what there might be, and what might happen in, a fortress like this; and you still came?"

Tian Sheng himself knew that what they'd done made it obvious they didn't trust Xie Lian and felt bad. So he didn't make a sound while hiding in the weeds earlier, as awkward as it was. "Sorry, this concerned a man's life and we couldn't sit still, so..."

No matter. This was a life or death situation, and to be wary was entirely natural. To go so far into danger for an antidote also proved them to be worthy companions. Xie Lian couldn't berate them for this and sighed.

"If you didn't bump into anything weird when entering the territory, then it's your good fortune. But how did you know to come to the palace to search for the shanyue fern?"

Tian Sheng scratched his head and replied, "We didn't know where to start, but in the story the red-clothed gege told, it was the queen who picked the leaves, right? The queen couldn't possibly leave the palace grounds, so I thought we'd come and try our luck."

Well, this kid's mind could certainly spin, and it spun right on target, Xie Lian thought.

Just then, San Lang spoke up from the side, "I found it."

Xie Lian turned to see San Lang striding with his lithe long legs towards him. In his hands were a few turquoise leaves, still with roots attached at the stems.

The leaves were about the size of a baby's palm, in the shape of peaches, slightly pointy at the ends, with roots thin and tiny. Even without A-Zhao to confirm, Xie Lian knew without a doubt that it must be the shanyue fern. Without waiting for Xie Lian to say a word, San Lang grabbed onto his wounded hand and lifted it.

The hand that had been pricked was originally frighteningly swollen, but after San Lang had sucked the poison from the wound, the swelling had gone down significantly; despite it not being fully cleaned of the venom. With Xie Lian's wrist in one hand and the shanyue fern in the other, San Lang closed his palm on the plant, and in a second when he reopened his palm, the fern had been crushed into powder; without him appearing to have exerted any force.

San Lang gently but firmly rubbed the powder onto Xie Lian's hand, and he could feel coolness and relief stinging on his skin.

“Thanks, San Lang,” Xie Lian said.

San Lang didn't respond, however, and after applying the powder, he let go of Xie Lian's hand. Xie Lian couldn't help but think his attitude and this weird atmosphere between the two of them was really peculiar, but didn't know how to ask about it without sounding weird. This wasn't something anyone else would notice, either, and they couldn't possibly understand.

“Gege, are you feeling better? Is the herb working?” Tian Sheng asked anxiously.

Xie Lian snapped out of it and replied, “Much better. It should be the right herb.”

Hearing this, everyone became excited. “Hurry! Let's find more!” Soon, A-Zhao also raised a handful of leaves, crying out, “There's more here!”

The shanyue leaves in A-Zhao's hands were much bigger and fuller than the small, pitiful one San Lang had used earlier, but the shape and marks were all correct, so everyone crowded over and happily exclaimed:

“There's an entire field here!”

“So many!”

“Pick lots! Let's pick a bunch! Do you think we can sell this?”

Noisily, the merchants busied themselves picking the herbs. Xie Lian turned his head to examine his hand for a moment, then tried to start a conversation with San Lang.

“You also searched the same area they're in now, right? Didn't you find any at the time?”

It was obvious Xie Lian was trying to force a conversation, and after having asked the question, he felt himself to be rather pathetic. But San Lang shook his head.

“You shouldn't use the ferns over there.”

“Why?” Xie Lian was curious.

Before San Lang could answer, they heard someone scream. “GO AWAY!”

Everyone stopped, their movements halting.

“Who said that? Who's screaming?”

“It wasn't me?”

“It wasn’t me, either...”

Then they heard that sharp voice again. “Go away! You’re stepping on me...”

Only then did the group notice—the voice came from near their feet!

In a flash, the crowd dispersed from that small field of ferns. Seeing this, Xie Lian walked over. He was used to being the one in the lead when it came to these things. He approached the bush where the shrieking had come from and stripped away the thick weeds. Everyone’s breathing hitched.

Under the weeds, in the mud, was a man’s face.

In a field such as this, a live human being was buried in the mud with only a face showing on the surface!

It was a nightmarish picture, and a couple of merchants held onto each other and screamed.

Xie Lian comforted them in a skilled and practiced manner: “Don’t panic. Everyone calm down. It’s only a face, nothing extraordinary. We all have faces, no?”

That face chuckled. “Oh, did I scare you? Sigh. I frequently scare myself, too.”

After reassuring the others, Xie Lian half-crouched down and examined this face in the mud.

It was a man’s face, without a doubt; quite flat when he wasn’t smiling, but full of wrinkles when he did. Xie Lian couldn’t tell whether he was old or young, and couldn’t say whether he was handsome or not. He couldn’t make much out of this face at all, so he simply asked directly:

“Who are you?”

The face in the mud asked back, “Who are you?”

“We’re merchants passing through,” Xie Lian replied.

The mud face breathed a long sigh. “Merchant passersby. I used to be part of a caravan, too, but that was fifty, maybe sixty years ago.”

The situation just became freakier.

Was a man buried in the grounds of an old fortress ruin for over fifty to sixty years still human?

One of the merchants shakily asked, in trepidation, "Then...then...how did a senior like yourself...come...here?"

The mud face cleared his throat and screwed up his expression. "...I was captured by the Banyue soldiers. I accidentally entered the city. They caught me and buried me here, and made me the fertilizer for their shanyue ferns..."

No wonder the herbs in their hands were big and full! They were fed with live humans!

The merchants immediately dropped all the plants in their hands, feeling as though they were touching corpses.

Xie Lian couldn't help but glance at his hand too, but heard San Lang say, "That one was fine."

It dawned on Xie Lian. That was why even though San Lang had looked through this field earlier, he left it to pick a small, almost withered fern from elsewhere. He probably already saw what was in the soil but ignored the face completely. The herb he applied to Xie Lian's hand was one he found in an area that was much more remote, but clean of corruption.

"San Lang was considerate and careful, thank you, truly," Xie Lian said.

San Lang shook his head, but his face was still gloomy.

Ever since Xie Lian had gotten stung by the scorpion-snake, San Lang had behaved like this. A couple days ago it was all gege this, gege that, but now he barely called him gege anymore. When they first met, San Lang had avoided his touch and seemed wary of contact with Xie Lian, but that seemed to have gone away after spending so much time together. Now, besides sucking poison and applying herbs, San Lang was once again avoiding touching him, and that made Xie Lian feel unsettled.

Just then, the mud face began to speak again. "I haven't seen real people in so many years. Can...can you come closer and let me see you all properly?"

The merchants all looked at each other, everyone thinking they best not do what he asked. After a while, seeing no one stepped forward, the mud face muttered, "What? What. You don't want to? Sigh...what a shame..."

"Why is it a shame?" Xie Lian turned and asked.

"There's something that's been bothering me ever since you all arrived," the mud face said. "So I wanted to confirm with my own two eyes. I want to see each and every one of you clearly to make sure."

"To make sure of what?" Xie Lian pressed.

The mud face replied, "There's someone amongst you I've seen before...fifty to sixty years ago."

A shiver went down everyone's back and made their hairs stand on end.

No mortal in present company should have been aged over fifty. That means whoever this person was, they were not human.

Xie Lian gave a sweeping look across everyone there, from A-Zhao to Tian Sheng. Some were in shock, some stricken with fear, some shaking in anxiety, some speechless and confused. Everyone's reaction was normal and within reason. If one must pinpoint the odd one out, it'd be San Lang. But for him, no reaction was probably the normal reaction.

Xie Lian turned back to the mud face. "Who is this person you speak of?"

The face muscles of that mud face twitched and it gave an exceedingly freaky smile, as if it was using its all to make itself look more reliable; but it couldn't fully conceal the sinister smirk hiding beneath. He beckoned mysteriously.

"You...come closer, and I'll tell you."

Xie Lian believed him eighty percent the first time the mud face asked. The second time Xie Lian was less than inclined to continue doing so. Who knows if this monster was only luring them closer before committing some evil deed? There was no way Xie Lian would pay attention to the likes of him.

Xie Lian pushed himself off the ground and was about to walk away before the mud face raised his voice.

"Do you really not want to know who it is? He will kill all of you."

Ch.24: Dallying HuaLian; Night-Fall in Sinner's Pit

The more the mud face tried to entice them, the more Xie Lian became alarmed.

"Everyone stand back, don't go near him, and don't listen to a single word he says."

The crowd broke up and hurriedly moved away. The mud face continued to chuckle.

"There's no need to be so mean. I'm a human too, I won't hurt you."

"Oh, you're mistaken; you look nothing like a human!" Xie Lian thought.

Just then, one of the merchants suddenly snuck back towards the field, perhaps thinking he must still bring back some herbs for the wounded. He bent down to pick up the bushel of ferns he had dropped in fright earlier, but the mud face twisted and spotted him, a glint in its spinning eyes.

"Oh no!" Xie Lian thought, rushing towards the man. "Don't pick that up! Come back!"

But it was too late. The mud face opened its mouth, and a long, blood-red thing slithered out.

What a long tongue!

Xie Lian grabbed the merchant by his collar and hustled backward with him in tow, but the tongue that flew out was freakish in its length, and barged right into the merchant's ear!

Xie Lian felt the body in his hold convulse violently. The merchant's limbs writhed nonstop, and the man let out a short agonizing scream before falling to the ground. That long tongue dug out a large chunk of something bloody from his ear, and brought it back to the mud face's mouth. The mud face happily chewed and cackled, his laugh so disturbingly loud it filled the entire palace grounds.

"HAHAHAHAHAHAHAHAHAHA!! SO GOOD SO GOOD SO DELICIOUS SO DELICIOUS SO DELICIOUS!! I WAS SO HUNGRY, SO HUNGRY!"

His voice was sharp and shrill, both eyeballs bulging and bloodshot; horrid and obnoxious.

This man, who had been buried for over fifty years in the grounds of an evil-filled kingdom, had already been moulded into its soil and became something other than human. Xie Lian loosened his hold on the deceased merchant, his entire arm shaking. He was about to attack the repulsive monster when the mud face screamed again.

"GENERAL! GENERAL! THEY'RE HERE! THEY'RE HERE!"

A deafening cry, more savage than that of a beast's, echoed in the distance.

A dark shadow dropped from the sky, and landed heavily in front of Xie Lian. The entire palace grounds quaked in its landing. When it slowly stood up, the crowd was jailed in its enormous shadow.

This "man" was gigantic.

His face was as grim as steel, his expression ferocious and turbulent, like the face of a beast. A thin layer of armour draped from his shoulders and reached down at least nine feet. Rather than a man, one could say he was more like a walking wolf. Behind him, more and more similar forms appeared. One, two, three...over ten of these "men" jumped off the roofs of the palace and surrounded them.

Each one of these "men" were large like horses, built like beasts, and carried a sharp tooth-filled mace on their shoulders. They might as well have been werewolves. When they encircled around the intruders in the garden, it was as if a large steel cage had fallen upon them.

They were the soldiers of Banyue!

These soldiers emanated a black aura; undoubtedly no longer alive. Xie Lian was tense, with Ruoye in position ready to attack.

However, when those Banyue soldiers saw them they didn't rush in to kill. Instead they raised their heads and roared in crazed laughter, and howled in a foreign language. The sound of their words were ghastly, guttural and heavy in tongue-rolling. It was the language of Banyue.

Although it had been two hundred years and Xie Lian had pretty much forgotten the language, he did review it with San Lang earlier in the General's Tomb, and the words uttered by those soldiers were loud, simple and vulgar, so they weren't difficult to understand.

He heard the soldiers call the first man "general", their conversations filled with words such as "take them away" and "won't kill for now". Xie Lian took a deep breath to force himself to relax.

He said in a low voice, "Everyone, don't panic. These Banyue soldiers won't kill us for now. It seems they want to take us somewhere else. Don't do anything rash, I can't guarantee I'll be able to fight them. We'll figure this out as we go."

It was clear that those soldiers would be hard to fight, each of them thicker than the next; even with Ruoye in hand, suffocating one would probably take a lot out of him, nevermind ten. With mortals with him, Xie Lian couldn't do anything bold, and could only remain vigilant and protect them the best he could.

San Lang didn't say anything, and the others had already lost all nerve. Even if they wanted to do anything rash, they wouldn't know how, and could only nod tearfully.

Next to them, the mud face screamed again, "General! General! Please let me out! I detained your enemies, let me go home! I want to go home!"

Seeing the Banyue soldiers, the mud face became hysterical, screaming and crying, blabbering nonsense, with some Banyue words mixed in, no doubt learned from the many years he spent buried here. The massive nine feet man they called "general" seemed to have found the squirming mud face deeply disgusting, and swung his mace towards him, smashing his face into a bloody mess, the teeth of his mace piercing his brains. When he pulled up his mace again, the entire body was pulled out with it; fulfilling his wish of "let me out!"

However, the body that was unearthed was not a full human body, but rather, a chilling skeleton!

The merchants screamed in fright. The mud face, bloody after having crumpled off the mace, seemed to have also frozen in fear after seeing his own body.

"What's this? WHAT'S THIS?"

"It's your body," Xie Lian reminded him, seeing that the mud face was numb in disbelief.

This man had been buried in the desert for over fifty to sixty years; his body fertilized the shanyue ferns, until they had cleaned him of his flesh, with only bones remaining.

"How can this be?" the mud face cried. "My body isn't like this! THIS IS NOT MY BODY!!!"

His voice quavered as he cried out, but Xie Lian only thought him tragic and terrifying. He shook his head and turned away.

Next to him, San Lang laughed mockingly. "Is it only now you're not used to your body? What was that thing that came out of your mouth earlier? You didn't think that odd?"

The mud face countered immediately, "That wasn't odd! It was just...a tongue a bit longer than average!"

"Yeah. Sure. Just that much longer, maybe. Haha." San Lang's voice was full of ridicule.

"That's right!" the mud face cried. "It's only just that much longer! It's all because I spent decades trying to live off of insects, forcing my tongue to extend. That must be how it came to be like this!"

Perhaps he was indeed still human when he was first buried, and did his best to survive by swallowing insects with his tongue, but he became less human over time, his tongue grew longer, eating more than just insects; worse things. Having been buried for so long, however, he couldn't see his own true form, and could neither accept nor believe that he was no longer human.

The mud face kept trying to assure an unlistening audience, "There are other people who have long tongues, not just me!"

San Lang laughed again. Watching him, Xie Lian could feel chills hearing him laugh. Xie Lian thought that, sometimes, when this boy smiles, there's a certain cruelty hidden beneath the skin, a coldness that could rip off flesh.

"Do you think you're still human?" San Lang asked.

Hearing the question, the mud face became agitated. "Of course I'm human! I'm human!"

The mud face screamed and tried to move his white, boney limbs all at once, as if trying to crawl away. Finally unearthed, he was mad with joy, cackling, "I'm going home! I'm going home! Hahahahahah—"

Crack.

The Banyue "general" seemed to finally have had enough of this monster's shrill cries, and crushed his bones in one stomp; killing any more of his "I'm human!".

After trampling the mud face, that "general" roared to the others. Then, the Banyue soldiers all raised their maces and growled to Xie Lian's group, and started herding them out of the palace.

Xie Lian walked up front, with San Lang still following close behind. Despite being ushered by ruthless Banyue soldiers, the boy's step was still light and casual, as if taking a stroll. Xie Lian had been meaning to find opportunities to talk to him, and after a while, when the Banyue soldiers went back to conversing amongst themselves, Xie Lian spoke in a low voice.

"Those Banyue soldiers call their leader 'general'. I wonder who it is."

As expected, San Lang had answers to all of his questions. "When the Kingdom of Banyue fell, there was only one general. His name, translated to Hanzi³⁵, is Ke Mo."

"Ke Mo?" Xie Lian wondered at the odd name.

³⁵ Hanzi is the term for Chinese character-writing.

“That’s right,” San Lang said. “Apparently, it was because he was awfully weak when he was young, and was often bullied. He rallied, and built his strength training with large stone mortar plates, and got his name thus.”

Xie Lian rubbed his forehead and thought, “So, he’s a hulk...”

San Lang continued, “Legends have it that Ke Mo was the strongest warrior in the history of Banyue; nine feet tall and extremely powerful. He was a loyal supporter of the Guoshi.”

“Even after death? Is he taking us to the Banyue Guoshi now then?” Xie Lian asked.

“Perhaps,” San Lang replied.

If there were more Banyue soldiers there, how could they escape? Who knows how Nan Feng, who had lured the other two away, was doing? The shanyue fern was now in their hands, but how were they going to deliver the ferns to the wounded within twenty-four hours?

All they could do now was go with the flow, and adapt to any situation that arose. Xie Lian walked and mulled, and noticed that General Ke Mo had been leading them to a remote place at the far end of the fortress. When they stopped and Xie Lian looked up, a colossal wall stood before him like a giant.

Their destination was the Sinner’s Pit!

Although Xie Lian had lived in the Banyue area for a time, he rarely entered town, and had never gotten near the Sinner’s Pit. Seeing it this close, Xie Lian’s heart started pounding.

The mud-yellow walls had a set of stairs along the outside, and while climbing up to the top, Xie Lian scrutinized the pit and tried to look over the depths until he finally understood why his heart was pounding. It wasn’t that this was a place of torture and cruelty, and it wasn’t his worry over everyone getting pushed in. It was feeling the palpitations of a very powerful array at work.

There was a strong array drawn around the entire Sinner’s Pit, and this array only had one purpose—to prevent the fallen from ever surfacing!

That meant that, even if a rope or a ladder was set down into the pit, whoever tried to climb up from the bottom would get cut off halfway through and get thrown right back into the bottom. Xie Lian impassively used the wall as support to climb up the stairs, but was really feeling up the make of the wall. He found that although it looked like the wall was built with mud or concrete, it was actually a much stronger stone, and probably enforced with a layer of magic.

When they reached the end of the stairs and came to the top of the pit, standing along the wall’s eaves, the only word to describe the sight was “awe”.

The entire Sinner's Pit was formed by four encircling great walls. Each wall was about thirty feet in length, twenty feet in height, and four feet in thickness. At the very top of each wall there was nothing; neither gazebos nor railings. Within the enclosure was a deep abyss without a bottom in sight, and with the growing night, there was only blackness and a chilling smell of blood wafting in the air coming from below.

No one dared looking down whilst walking along the railingless eaves that were tens of feet above the ground. After a while they could see the pole that stood in the centre, and atop the pole hung a corpse. It was the same one they had spotted earlier. The corpse was of a small, black-clad girl; tattered and head bowed.

Xie Lian had known that this pole was used especially for hanging criminals that deserved shame and humiliation. Usually, the prison guards would strip the criminals of their clothing and hang the body naked. The criminals would die from starvation or dehydration, and after death the corpse would be left to flail in the wind, burn under the sun, and rot in the rain. When the corpse had rotten completely through, it would fall into the pit itself; an exceedingly ugly sight.

The corpse of that girl didn't seem to be rotten, so it must've not been long since she died. Perhaps it was a local girl that the soldiers captured. To do such a vulgar thing to a young girl, Xie Lian felt thoroughly disgusted. A-Zhao, Tian Sheng, and the others' faces turned white seeing the sight, and paused in their steps, afraid to go forward. Ke Mo didn't bother pushing them onwards, but turned toward the pit and howled.

"Why is he howling?" Xie Lian wondered in his mind, but his question was soon answered.

From the bottom of the dark pit came a chorus of growls in response to the howling. It was like the roars of beasts, bellows of tsunamis, wails of monsters; hundreds and thousands of cries exploding in the ear. The walls trembled with the noise, making those standing on the eaves lose balance. Xie Lian could clearly hear the sound of rocks and debris falling within.

Only criminals were thrown into the Sinner's Pit. Were those the souls of the dead answering Ke Mo?

Ke Mo howled again and Xie Lian paid more attention, listening. This time, Ke Mo wasn't making meaningless noise, and it wasn't curses, either. Instead, it was encouragement. Xie Lian was very sure he heard the words: "My brothers".

After howling, Ke Mo turned to the soldiers watching Xie Lian and the others, and roared another command.

Xie Lian understood. He had said, "Just throw in two and detain the rest."

The others might not have understood what was being said, but the intent of those soldiers was not hard to guess. Everyone looked pale as ghosts. Xie Lian saw that a couple couldn't even stand upright anymore, shaking from fear.

He stepped forward and said in a small voice, "Don't worry. If anything happens, I will go forward first."

Xie Lian thought if they must all fall, then he might as well be the first one to check things out. It couldn't be worse than venomous snakes and beasts or menacing ghosts. He couldn't die from falling, he couldn't die from poison, he couldn't die from bites, and he couldn't die from getting hit. As long as it wasn't some pool of corpse-dissolving water, his body shouldn't be damaged too horribly.

Besides, he had Ruoye with him. Even if he might not be able to escape from the array, he could still use it to catch the others that'd fall after him. Ke Mo had said "detain the rest"; meaning that most others should be temporarily safe. After all, it wasn't easy hunting for prey in the Gobi Desert; they should rather savour them instead of eating everyone in one go! Xie Lian cleared his thoughts, but next to him, someone else couldn't hold their breath any longer.

Ever since they reached the top of the Sinner's Pit, besides San Lang who looked like nothing was out of the ordinary, everyone else was shivering in fear; especially A-Zhao. He must've thought that if he was to die, he'd go down fighting. He closed his fists and charged towards Ke Mo!

This charge looked as if A-Zhao was ready to bring Ke Mo down into the pit with him. Ke Mo was the bigger man, strong like a steel tower, but even he got pushed back three steps from A-Zhao's desperation. He roared in anger, and instantly threw the young man into the dark void. Everyone started screaming, and Xie Lian called after him too.

"A-Zhao!"

Just then, from deep within the chasm came a roaring cheer, and sounds of violent ripping of flesh, like starving beasts fighting for their only meal. It was easy to understand from hearing the noises that the young man A-Zhao would never survive.

Xie Lian did not expect this development and was dumbstruck as well. He had been suspicious that A-Zhao was a subordinate of the Banyue Guoshi; purposely leading travelers astray to the ruins. He was also suspicious that the one who was here "fifty to sixty years ago" was him, but the young man ended up being the first to get killed. With this jump, how could he still live?

Was he faking his own death? But now that they were all enslaved under the control of the Banyue soldiers, if A-Zhao was the Guoshi's subordinate, he'd have the upper hand and could very well reveal his true identity in glory without doing anything extra like this. Why would A-Zhao rush towards Ke Mo and die a meaningless death?

Xie Lian's thoughts were in knots again, and the Banyue soldiers began searching for the next victim. Ke Mo sized them up and pointed at Tian Sheng. Another soldier then moved up and opened his palm, ready to push.

Terrified, Tian Sheng fell to the ground on his knees and cried, "AH! HELP! DON'T TAKE ME! I'M..."

Without any more time to think, Xie Lian stepped forward and said using Banyuenese, "Hold on, General."

Ke Mo was shocked to hear the words from Xie Lian's mouth and waved his hand, stopping the soldiers. "You know how to speak our tongue? Where are you from?"

"I'm from the Midlands," Xie Lian replied.

He wouldn't have minded lying to say he was also a citizen of Banyue, but with how rusty his fluency was, there was no way he could keep up the lie if he conversed too much. Besides, it was also obvious from his looks that he was a Midlander. Ke Mo's question was only from simple confusion. The people of Banyue detested liars more than anything; if Xie Lian was found out, the results would be worse.

"Midlands?" Ke Mo questioned. "Descendants of Yong'an?"

"No," Xie Lian replied. "The Kingdom of Yong'an has long since fallen. There's no more Yong'an now."

But, to those of Banyue, all those who came from the Midlands were pretty much the same. They were all relatives of the descendants of Yong'an. They were annihilated by the army of Yong'an, so the moment he heard where Xie Lian was from, Ke Mo's black face immediately flashed with rage, and many of the Banyue soldiers also started growling, cursing vulgarly at him. It wasn't much more than "vile Midlanders!" and "throw him down", and Xie Lian couldn't care less.

Ke Mo demanded of him: "Our kingdom disappeared in the Gobi for over two hundred years. You are not of our people, why do you know our tongue? Who are you?"

Xie Lian couldn't help but steal a glance at the calm boy behind him, mentally hoping that if his lies fall apart later, maybe he could shamelessly ask San Lang to save him. He cleared his throat and was ready to start gabbering nonsense when just then, another series of enraged growls sounded from below.

It seemed that whatever was down in the pit had finished ripping apart A-Zhao, but was still hungry for more; using their cries to convey their thirst for fresh blood. Ke Mo waved his hand again, ready to have Tian Sheng thrown over, so Xie Lian spoke up.

“General, please take me first.”

Ke Mo had never heard anyone request to go first and his eyes bulged like bells. He asked in disbelief, “You go first? Why??”

Xie Lian couldn’t tell him the truth and say because he wasn’t scared. He thought for a second and came up with a logical answer. “General, those are innocent merchants. There’s even a child!”

Ke Mo sneered. “When your army annihilated my kingdom, did you not think we also had innocent merchants and children?”

The fall of the Kingdom of Banyue was over two hundred years ago, and since then, countless dynasties had come and gone. But, they were the dead whose time had stopped. Hatred and grudges would not fade with the changing of times.

Ke Mo continued, “You’re very suspicious, I will need to question you. You are not going down. Throw in another one!”

There was no helping it. Xie Lian was ready to jump if all else failed, anyway. Behind him, San Lang stepped forward.

Xie Lian’s heart lurched and he turned around.

With his arms crossed, the boy was nonchalantly looking over the dark, bottomless pit with an air of intrigue. This wasn’t a good sign.

Xie Lian called out, “San Lang?”

Hearing his call, San Lang looked over and smiled softly. “It’s fine.”

San Lang took another step forward and was teetering dangerously on the edge. Both Xie Lian’s head and heart started pounding.

He called again, “Wait, San Lang, don’t move!”

At such height, at the brink of the pit, the boy’s red clothes danced in the night breeze. San Lang glanced at him again with a smile. “Don’t be scared.”

“You...come back here first. Come back here and I won’t be scared,” Xie Lian said.

“Don’t worry, I’m just going to leave for a bit. We’ll see each other again soon,” San Lang said.

“Don’t—”

Before he finished, the boy took another step forward, his arms still crossed, then with a light leap, he disappeared into the abyss.

The moment he jumped, Ruoye shot out from Xie Lian’s wrist, a stream of white flash trying to grab hold of the boy’s form. Yet the drop was too swift, and Ruoye returned without even a sleeve corner.

Xie Lian fell to his knees at the edge of the wall and yelled, “SAN LANG!!!”

No response. No noise. After the boy jumped there was not a single noise!

Next to him, many of the Banyue soldiers started yelling instead; all dumbfounded and bewildered. What was with today? In the past, they had to catch their prey and throw them into the pit, but tonight their prey took turns fighting to jump down on their own, and when held back, they jumped anyway?

General Ke Mo yelled to get his soldiers under control. As for Xie Lian, when he saw that Ruoye didn’t catch San Lang, he didn’t take the time to think before taking a leap off the wall himself. But when his body was still in midair, he felt his collar tighten, and he stayed in mid-air.

Turns out when General Ke Mo saw he also jumped, he stretched out his arm and nabbed Xie Lian by the collar, preventing his fall.

“If you want to join me, that’s fine too!” Xie Lian thought, and like a snake, Ruoye shot out once more and wrapped itself up the arm of Ke Mo; then roped his body whole.

Ke Mo saw that white silk band was unpredictably deadly and spirited, and contorted his face and popped his veins. His muscles instantly burst in size, trying to rip apart the fabric tying him down. Xie Lian was at a standstill with Ke Mo when he saw something peculiar from the corner of his eye.

The corpse that was hung on the pole suddenly jerked, and raised her head slightly.

The band of Banyue soldiers also saw the corpse move and started yelling, swinging their maces to attack it. But the black-clad girl somehow untied herself and hopped off the pole, then sped over towards them.

She was like a black wind blowing through the eaves; fast and wicked. The soldiers couldn’t maintain their balance and soon were swept into the Sinner’s Pit one by one, screaming.

Enraged, Ke Mo screamed all sorts of vulgarities at her, many of which were street slangs that Xie Lian couldn't understand well, but he did understand the first words:

"It's that bitch again!"

The swearing ceased in the next moment because Xie Lian suddenly pulled, and brought Ke Mo to fall into the pit with him.

Into the inescapable Sinner's Pit!

Whilst falling, Ke Mo roared with such violence, killing Xie Lian's eardrums, he had to call Ruoye back and gave Ke Mo a kick to get the general further away from him to protect his ears. Then he urged Ruoye to fly upwards to try and grab hold of anything that could prevent him from falling further, or to grab hold of something so that when he hit ground it wouldn't be too painful. But the Sinner's Pit was not built to save, and with such a powerful array at work, there was nothing Xie Lian could find to hold. He thought he was going to crater and flatten like a pancake like he had many times before when suddenly, in the darkness, there was a flash of silver.

The next moment, a pair of hands lightly caught him.

Whoever it was had caught him perfectly, as if this person was made just to catch him at the bottom. With a hand across his back to grasp his shoulders, another under his knees to support his weight, the dreadful gravity of the fall was dissolved to nothing. Still dazed and confounded from falling from such a height, Xie Lian unconsciously held on tight to that person's shoulders.

He called, "San Lang?"

The pit was filled with darkness, nothing could be seen, including the person holding him. But Xie Lian still called that name. The person didn't respond, so Xie Lian patted and squeezed his chest and shoulders just to make sure.

"San Lang, is that you?"

Maybe it was because here at the bottom of the pit the stench of blood was heavy and disorienting, but Xie Lian dazedly continued to feel up the person holding him, until he reached a strong, hard Adam's apple. He came to in shock and immediately reprimanded himself, pulling his hands back. What was he doing??

"It's San Lang, right? Are you alright? Are you hurt?"

It took a moment before he heard the boy's low voice from somewhere very close to him. "I'm fine."

For some reason, Xie Lian felt this voice was curiously different than before.

Ch.25: Dallying HuaLian; Night-Fall in Sinner's Pit 2

"San Lang, are you really alright? Put me down," Xie Lian said.

"No," San Lang replied.

Xie Lian was taken aback by the response. What's going on? Was there something on the ground?

That pair of arms was still holding him tightly, without any intention of letting him go. Xie Lian was going to raise his hand and gently push himself away, but just as he laid his hand on San Lang's chest, he abruptly remembered how he had just been randomly touching him all over, even feeling up his Adam's apple, and quietly withdrew his hand again. It had been hundreds of years since the last time Xie Lian cared about what was "awkward", but now there was a voice in his head telling him that he better stay still and stay decent.

Just then, an enraged, sorrowful wail roared from the other side of the pit. A voice cried, "WHAT HAPPENED TO YOU!?"

Those words were shouted in the Banyue language, and hearing the voice, it was General Ke Mo that Xie Lian had dragged down with him. Since he was already dead, the fall wouldn't have killed him; only blasting a human crater in the ground when he crashed. But when he climbed up from his hole, he started screaming.

"What's going on? My brothers, WHAT HAPPENED TO YOU?!"

When he howled into the pit earlier from the top of the wall, there were hundreds and thousands of voices that answered his call; as if the pit was filled to the brim with angry, menacing ghosts. But right then and there, other than Ke Mo's cries, Xie Lian could only hear dead silence. There wasn't even any sound of breathing, or that of a heartbeat, from the San Lang who was next to him.

Xie Lian's breathing hitched, suddenly realizing what was amiss.

That's right. Even though Xie Lian was pressed against San Lang, he couldn't detect any sounds of his heart beating or his breathing!

Ke Mo roared, "WHO KILLED YOU? WHO KILLED ALL OF YOU?!"

When A-Zhao first fell, there were still horrifying sounds of flesh being ripped apart, but after San Lang jumped, there were no more sounds. Who else could it be?

Ke Mo himself must have realized this, and shouted towards them, "Killing my soldiers, you're dead! I'm gonna kill you!"

Although he couldn't see, Xie Lian could still sense danger rapidly approaching, and jerked his body. "San Lang, watch out!"

"Don't worry about him," San Lang said, still holding him tight. He made a small sidestep and spun around.

In the dark, Xie Lian heard a series of broken clanking sounds, clear and intense, swishing here and there. Ke Mo rushed to capture them but missed the first time, and turned around to attack again; San Lang also easily side stepped again and avoided him. Xie Lian's arms involuntarily climbed up San Lang's chest once more and held on tight to his shoulders, unconsciously clutching at his clothes.

But the arms carrying him were steady; even with all the spinning and side-stepping, the hold was still strong and secure. Xie Lian could feel something cold and hard on those arms that would poke at him every so often, and was a little confused. In the endless blackness, streaks of shimmering silver flashed everywhere, and sounds of a sharp metal inflicting wounds were accompanied by Ke Mo's angry roars.

It was obvious that the Banyue General was heavily wounded by now, but as tough as he was, he refused to admit defeat, and once again rushed towards them.

Xie Lian called out, "Ruoye!"

The silk band answered his call and shot out. A loud "snap" sounded in the air, and Ke Mo seemed to have fallen over from getting smacked by Ruoye.

Ke Mo shouted from the ground, "You two! Two against one! Unfair!"

"You were gonna kill us, who cares if it's two against two against one, or if it's fair or unfair? Saving my life is more important, I'll kill you dead first," Xie Lian thought.

San Lang on the other hand, only sneered. "Even one-on-one, you won't win. You don't have to fight." The last line was directed to Xie Lian, and the words had none of the gibe, mocking tone.

"Alright," Xie Lian responded, but also prompted him, "San Lang, why don't you put me down? I'll be in your way like this."

"You're not in the way. Don't come down," San Lang said.

"Why can't I come down?" Xie Lian asked curiously. This guy couldn't possibly enjoy fighting while carrying someone?

San Lang's answer only had two words: "It's dirty."

“...”

Xie Lian had never imagined that to be the answer; in such seriousness, too. He thought it was kind of funny, but it also made him feel kind of strange. The feeling was hard to describe, but his heart was unmistakably warmed.

“You can’t possibly keep holding me like this?”

“I could,” San Lang replied.

Xie Lian was only joking, but San Lang’s words had no trace of half-heartedness, and suddenly Xie Lian didn’t know what to say. In the time they were talking, Ke Mo had never ceased to attack. Both of San Lang’s hands were firmly holding him, but something else was keeping Ke Mo at bay, whipping him to defeat.

He shouted while slowly backing off, “That bitch made you two...”

He hadn’t finished his words before a large boom sounded off, and the massive man fell to the ground, no longer able to stand.

Xie Lian hurriedly said, “San Lang, don’t kill him! We’ll still need to question him if we want to get out of here.”

San Lang heeded his words and stopped. “I wasn’t planning on killing him anyway, otherwise he wouldn’t have lasted ‘til now.”

Dead silence returned anew to the Sinner’s Pit.

After a moment, Xie Lian asked, “San Lang, did you do all of this down here?”

Even if nothing was visible in the dark, with such an overpowering stench of blood, such an aura of bloodlust, plus the enraged madness of Ke Mo, it was obvious what had happened down here. There was another momentary silence before Xie Lian heard San Lang’s response.

“Yes,” he said.

It was an expected answer. Xie Lian sighed. “How should I say this...”

Xie Lian chewed on his words and organized his thoughts before continuing in a serious tone.

“San Lang, next time you see a pit like this, don’t just jump in randomly. I couldn’t even stop you. Really, I didn’t know what to do.”

San Lang didn't seem to expect this kind of response and let out a confused "eh?". When he spoke again, he sounded a bit odd. "You don't want to ask anything else?"

"What else do you want me to ask?" Xie Lian said.

"For example, whether I'm human," San Lang replied.

Xie Lian rubbed his forehead. "Hmm. I don't think that's necessary."

"Is it not?"

"Is it? It's not important whether you're human or not," Xie Lian said.

"Oh?"

Xie Lian crossed his arms while in San Lang's arms and said, "Relationships should depend on chance and whether we're on the same wavelength, not on identity. If I like you, you can be a beggar and I'll still like you. If I dislike you, you can be the emperor and I'll still dislike you. Shouldn't it be like that? It's simple logic. So, whether you're human or not is irrelevant."

San Lang laughed out loud. "Yeah. You're very right."

"Right?" Xie Lian said, laughing along too. But the more he laughed the more he felt something was off, and it came to him suddenly.

He was still letting San Lang carry him, and the scary thing was, he had gotten used to being in this position without realizing it!

What kind of situation was this??

Xie Lian cleared his throat quietly, and said, "Um, San Lang. We can talk about that later. How about you put me down first?"

San Lang seemed to have chuckled and said, "Hold on."

He carried Xie Lian and walked on for a bit before gently letting him down. Touching ground, Xie Lian could feel hard, flat ground.

"Thanks!"

San Lang made no gesture in response, and after thanking him, Xie Lian looked to the sky.

Above them, the navy blue sky hung a crescent moon; bright and beautiful. Just that, watching the view from a square frame made it feel like one was a frog in a well.

Xie Lian commanded Ruoye to try and reach for the top, but as expected, it was stopped halfway as if it bumped into an invisible wall; Ruoye rebounded, unable to go higher.

“There’s an array drawn around the Sinner’s Pit.” San Lang said.

“I know, but I wanted to try anyway.” Xie Lian said. “I can’t give up until I’ve tried, you know. I wonder how the others are up there. Would the girl in black have also swept them down?”

He retold how the girl hung on the pole suddenly came alive and swept all the Banyue soldiers down into the pit to San Lang. While talking, he stepped on something on the ground, appearing to be an arm, and Xie Lian almost tripped. He steadied himself immediately, but San Lang still reached out and helped to support him, chiding, “Be careful.”

“I told you the ground was dirty,” San Lang added nonchalantly.

Xie Lian now understood what “dirty” meant, and said, “Don’t worry. I want to ignite a palm torch; see what’s happened down here and go from there.”

San Lang didn’t say anything. Just then, from afar, Ke Mo’s cold voice cried again,

“You two, doing the deeds of that bitch; all of the thousands of dead souls of this kingdom will curse you. CURSE YOU!”

Xie Lian turned towards Ke Mo and asked using the Banyue language, “General Ke Mo, who is that...that person you speak of?”

Ke Mo responded with hatred, “Why pretend to ask? That wicked witch!”

“Is it the woman cultivator roaming in the city streets?”

Ke Mo spat angrily on the ground, and Xie Lian took that as a yes.

He continued to question, “Weren’t you a loyal supporter of the Banyue Guoshi?”

Ke Mo was provoked by his words and yelled, “I, KE MO, WILL NEVER AGAIN BE LOYAL TO HER! I WILL NEVER FORGIVE THAT BITCH!!!”

Afterwards he started uttering a string of curses, inflamed and hysterical, his words rapid and incomprehensible, and Xie Lian blanked, unable to follow. He looked to San Lang and quietly called, “San Lang, San Lang.”

San Lang translated, “He’s cursing. He said that woman betrayed his country, opened the fortress gates and let in the Yong’an army to slaughter the city. She’s got the blood of her people on her hands, and of his brothers whom she pushed into this pit. He will hang her dead a thousand times. Ten thousand times.”

“Wait, hold on!” Xie Lian quickly exclaimed.

How could this be? There were two things that didn’t match!

First, “the woman cultivator roaming in the city streets” Xie Lian spoke of earlier was supposed to be the lady in white. But now, Ke Mo continuously called the Banyue Guoshi “bitch”, saying she pushed his brothers into the Sinner’s Pit; earlier, when the black-clad girl swept the soldiers into the pit, Ke Mo swore and cursed her as the same thing. Plus the last bit, “to hang her dead a thousand times”—Xie Lian suddenly realized that they couldn’t possibly be talking about the same person.

Second, it was Banyue Guoshi who had betrayed the Kingdom of Banyue?!

Xie Lian interrupted Ke Mo. “General, the Banyue Guoshi you speak of, was it the girl in black hung on the pole of the Sinner’s Pit?”

“WHO ELSE COULD IT BE, IF NOT HER?” Ke Mo shouted.

“...”

The scrawny, corpse-like little girl in black was the real Guoshi of Banyue! But if that was the case, who was the lady cultivator and her black-clad companion, strolling through the streets looking to kill them?

The girl in black obviously had unmeasurable powers, and could easily sweep dozens of hostile Banyue soldiers off the wall, so why was she hung above the Sinner’s Pit?

Ch.26: Dallying HuaLian; Night-Fall in Sinner's Pit 3

The story was getting more complex and convoluted, Xie Lian thought. He asked, "General, I want to ask..."

"Don't ask anymore!" Ke Mo interrupted. "You killed my soldiers, what more would you want to know? I won't answer. Now fight me!"

"I killed them. He didn't do anything," San Lang said. "You can answer his questions, and fight me."

Well, that was irrefutable logic.

Ke Mo yelled angrily, "You're both taking orders from her, there is no difference!"

Xie Lian immediately said, "General Ke Mo, I think you're mistaken. We've traveled across the Gobi Desert to get rid of the Guoshi of Banyue, how can we be the helpers she sent for?"

Hearing that Xie Lian was actually there to destroy the Guoshi, Ke Mo fell silent. He then asked, "If you weren't helping her, then why did you kill my soldiers?"

Xie Lian explained, "Isn't it because you were throwing us into the pit and we had to defend ourselves?"

Ke Mo yelled angrily, "Nonsense! I didn't throw a single one of you! I even caught you! You all jumped down yourselves!!"

"Yes yes yes, we were jumping into the pit ourselves. General, we're all trapped at the bottom of this pit right now, let's just call it a truce for now, alright? Why did that Banyue Guoshi open the fortress gates to let the enemies in?"

As if Ke Mo would listen to reason. He said, unrelenting, "The two of you are sly and unjust; fighting me two-on-one."

Xie Lian felt a little exasperated. "I only smacked you once. I didn't do much."

He didn't mind being called sly or unjust. If the situation called for it, nevermind two-on-one, he would bring a hundred to beat one down; who cared about one-on-one? But earlier, San Lang obviously had the upper hand even while carrying him, and told Xie Lian not to fight too. Ke Mo seemed to think he could've won if it had been just him and San Lang though, and Xie Lian felt bad for him.

Ke Mo was incredibly uncooperative, but Xie Lian wasn't worried. Ke Mo seemed to be the type that could easily be made to spill the beans, and they had time; not a problem.

San Lang, on the other hand, didn't have the same patience. He lazily said, "You better answer his questions, for the sake of your soldiers."

"You already killed them," Ke Mo said, "It's pointless using them to threaten me."

"They are dead, but their corpses are still around," San Lang replied.

Ke Mo became alarmed, unable to remain sprawled on the ground anymore. "What are you going to do?"

San Lang smirked. "That depends on what you want to do."

Just by his voice, Xie Lian could imagine San Lang arching his eyebrow.

"Do you want their next lives to be fortuitous, or be reborn as a pool of blood?"

Ke Mo stopped, but soon understood what San Lang meant, and exploded, "YOU?!"

The people of Banyue took death and funerals extremely seriously. They believed that, however the deceased looked at the time of their death, that was to be how they would be reborn. For instance, if the deceased was missing an arm, then they would be reborn handicapped. If the corpses in this pit were to be destroyed, then what would their rebirths be like?

General Ke Mo was a purebred Banyue citizen, and couldn't help but be afraid. As expected, on the other side of the dark pit, Ke Mo gritted his teeth soundly in rage, but finally relented helplessly.

"Don't touch their bodies. They were good, brave soldiers. It was already a tragedy to be trapped in the pit for so many years. I don't know if being killed by you is a blessing or not, but I won't have their corpses be humiliated." He paused and asked, "Are you really here to kill Banyue?"

Xie Lian replied warmly, "That is no lie. The more we know, the more chance we'll have of winning. Not much is known about the Guoshi of Banyue on the outside; we have no idea how to fight her. But you have worked under her before in the past, perhaps you can enlighten some things for us?"

Maybe it was because they shared the same enemy - the Guoshi of Banyue - that a sort of bond was developed. Or perhaps in this inescapable chasm, atop the dead bodies of his soldiers, Ke Mo had become disheartened. Whatever the case may be, the general lost the will to attack them.

“You don’t know why she opened the gates? Because she’s against us! She hates us! She hates the Kingdom of Banyue!”

“What do you mean she hates the Kingdom of Banyue? Isn’t Banyue Guoshi a citizen of Banyue?” Xie Lian asked.

“Yes, but not entirely,” Ke Mo replied. “She’s of mixed blood. The other half is from Yong’an!”

“Ah...”

As it turned out, that Banyue Guoshi was born of a Banyue woman and a Yong’an man. Living on the border with endless hatred and skirmishes, things were difficult, and the Yong’an man finally had had enough and moved away from the border, back to Yong’an. Although it was an amicable divorce, the Banyue woman soon passed away from heartache.

They left behind a child of six to seven years in age; without any guardians, the child wandered the streets, hungry and desperate. The couple had received cold shoulders everywhere when they were around, and now their daughter, too, received contempt wherever she went. The people of Banyue were tall and brawny, and saw beauty in strength and liveliness; but this girl was born of mixed blood, and appeared small and scrawny amongst the Banyue children. She grew up being bullied, and became more and more sullen. The Banyue children wouldn’t play with her, but there were some Yong’an children who did pay attention to her.

When this little mixed-blood girl was about ten-something, a riot broke out, and the two armies fought. That battle took many lives, and afterwards, the little mixed-blood girl disappeared.

She had neither friends nor family in Banyue, so no one noticed or cared when she vanished. The next time she appeared was a different story.

In those years, she walked thousands of miles and crossed the Gobi Desert to Yong’an. No one knew what kind of encounters she’d had, but she returned having learned black magic, and could control the venomous creature most feared by the citizens of Banyue—the scorpion-snakes.

Upon her return, though many were impressed, many were also afraid. That was because the girl’s personality never changed; still gloomy and unsociable. There were also many who bullied her in the past; if she were to enter the palace and become a high-ranking official, wouldn’t she one day seek revenge against them?

“I’m sure there were many who spoke poorly of her,” Xie Lian commented.

Ke Mo humphed. “Not just slander, they went to the palace directly to advise the king; saying that she was an evil messenger from the scorpion-snake clan, here to bring ruin to the Kingdom of Banyue. But none of them succeeded.”

Xie Lian guessed, "Did she rush to have those people hung first?"

Ke Mo was even more disgusted. "You, man of Yong'an, why is your mind so full of depraved and vile developments? It was none of that! I protected her!"

Xie Lian was exasperated. "I already said I'm not from Yong'an...alright, whatever."

At the time, Ke Mo was already a distinguished, fierce warrior. There was a time that he took his troops out to annihilate the nest of a band of desert bandits, and brought the girl who was the Palace Sorceress along.

That band of bandits was strong; building their nest below the sands. In that battle, both sides suffered casualties, and while Ke Mo stole the victory, the battle caused the nest below the sands to collapse. With this and the coming of windstorms, they couldn't stay. Ke Mo took a number of soldiers to retreat, but the other group that included the sorceress wasn't able to escape.

Once they retreated to the safe point and waited out the sandstorm, Ke Mo returned anew, hoping to dig out the soldiers to bury them properly. Yet who knew that when he got there, he found the sorceress had, by her powers alone, dug out a sizable hole, and managed to drag all the surviving, wounded soldiers in to hide away from the winds.

All the bodies of the dead were all dug out too, and laid out in a neat order. She had done this all by herself, and when they got there, that sorceress' body was covered in blood, but was still guarding the entrance to that hole silently, hugging her knees waiting for them like a small, little lone wolf.

"After that incident, I thought she was a good woman who did the right thing," Ke Mo said. "I believed that she had never the intention to harm the Kingdom of Banyue, so I became her guarantor with all my might, and fought back all those malicious voices."

In addition, Ke Mo himself grew up bullied and could understand her strife; so naturally, he paid more attention to her. The more attention he paid, the more he realized just how powerful this girl was, and thus endorsed her all the way; helping her reach the position of Guoshi, and becoming what was later recorded as the most loyal supporter of the Guoshi of Banyue.

This lasted until another war broke out, and the Kingdom of Yong'an sent armies to annihilate the Kingdom of Banyue.

"With the two armies clashing and at a lengthy standstill, she conducted a grand ceremony to pray to the heavens, saying it was to bring blessings unto us Banyue soldiers," Ke Mo said.

Thus, the soldiers' will to kill exploded; their battle spirits significantly raised, they defended the fortress gates to the death. There were arrows, giant boulders, boiling oil, swords and blades; the slaughtering was incessantly great.

Yet unexpectedly, just as the fighting was at its height, this guoshi suddenly opened the fortress gates.

With the gates opened wide, millions of enemy troops swarmed into the city like mad. After the trampling of iron steeds, the entire fortress city had instantly become a ritual of blood!

Ke Mo, who was fighting hard against the enemies, went mad with rage when he heard the Guoshi had opened the gates. But no matter how tough he was, one could not win alone against so many.

Ke Mo gritted his teeth. "I only learned then that she had long since colluded with the enemy general, and agreed to let them in at that moment. BUT EVEN IF I WAS DESTINED TO DIE IN BATTLE, BEFORE I DIED, I WAS GOING TO KILL THAT TRAITOR NO MATTER WHAT!!! So I sent a troop of soldiers to charge up the fortress tower, and we dragged her down, hanging her dead over the Sinner's Pit. Hung over that pole!"

After the enemy troops passed, the Kingdom of Banyue became a kingdom of death. Guoshi and the General who died in this battle also became trapped within the ruins, both watching the other in mutual grudge and hate.

Xie Lian asked, "So, General Ke Mo, you led the Banyue soldiers under you to search for the shadows of that guoshi everywhere, and every time you capture her, you'd 'hang her head' over the Sinner's Pit?"

"It wouldn't be anything even if we hung her dead a thousand times, a million times!" Ke Mo exclaimed. "Because she's been apprehending all my soldiers who have turned Savage, and throwing them into the Sinner's Pit! She's set up a powerful array around the pit that only she herself can break, and once you fall, you can never climb back up. And those of us who have been betrayed by her, those soldiers who died wrongfully in battle, hold a deep resentment that only devouring the flesh and blood of those from Yong'an can appease and allow us to slowly pass from this earth with our hatred released. Otherwise they can only howl deep into the long nights without absolution!"

"So is that why you kept capturing people to feed them?" Xie Lian asked.

"What else can we do?" Ke Mo replied. "Have me listen to them wail down below without doing anything?"

"The people you threw down, did you catch them yourselves?"

“We can’t stray too far from the Kingdom of Banyue, but thankfully, her snakes like to haunt, and often crawl out of the ruins to bite people. Those caravans who were bitten would then come into the city to look for the shanyue fern.”

“That mud face in the palace, was it you who buried it?”

“That’s right. That man buried in the earth was originally planning on robbing the riches of the palace. But, all the treasures our kingdom had were all cleaned out by those Yong’an men two hundred years ago.”

“Why did you only bury him instead of throwing him down directly?” Xie Lian asked.

“There’s gotta be fertilizer to grow the ferns, after all,” Ke Mo replied. “Otherwise we wouldn’t be able to hold those scorpion-snakes back. We don’t want to run into those creatures, either.”

“That’s not right,” Xie Lian thought.

If Ke Mo and his party consciously knew to grow and fertilize shanyue ferns, even going as far as using live humans as fertilizer, then it was clear that even though they were no longer alive, their fear of those scorpion-snakes never lessened.

If that was the case, then while they were alive, that fear must’ve been even greater. If that Banyue Guoshi could control a murder weapon as great as those scorpion-snakes, then why would she so easily be dragged down the fortress tower by a bunch of soldiers and be hung to death?

According to Ke Mo, in the past two hundred some years, he had captured the Guoshi over and over, and had hung her dead repeatedly. Either way Xie Lian felt, if it was him, and he had such a killing weapon in his hands, he would never allow the enemy the chance to come near him.

And that the snakes would leave the fortress to hunt was also of interest. Was it an accident? Not likely. More likely, they were purposely trying to lure people into the Pass. Then it was the Guoshi’s intentional doing? Wouldn’t it only be helping Ke Mo catch live humans to feed his soldiers? “Mutual hatred” wouldn’t make sense then.

Were they pretending to be enemies, then? What was the point in that?

And in all of this mess, there was also the mysterious lady in white and her companion. Xie Lian decided to ask more questions.

“General Ke Mo, when we first entered the fortress, we saw two ladies, one in white, and the other in black. Do you know who they are?”

Before there was a response, San Lang whispered, “Shhh.”

Xie Lian didn't know what was going on but closed his mouth immediately. A strange hunch made him look up.

It was the same framed, navy blue sky with a crescent moon. But, next to the moon, he saw a person; a small, black-clad silhouette peered over the edge and was looking down.

After watching them for a bit, the little form suddenly grew bigger—it had jumped down.

As the figure fell, Xie Lian could see clearly that it was the Guoshi who had been hanging on the pole earlier.

Ch.27: Dallying HuaLian; Night-Fall in Sinner's Pit 4

"Ke Mo, what's going on?" the Guoshi asked in the Banyue language as she landed.

The moment she spoke, Xie Lian thought her voice was very different than what he had imagined. Although still cold, her voice was tiny; like the grumblings of a sulky child, not a voice that was cool and powerful. If not for his good hearing, he might not have even heard her properly.

"What's going on?? THEY'RE ALL DEAD!!!" Ke Mo shouted.

"How did they all die?" the Guoshi asked.

"Isn't it because you pushed them all down and trapped them in this godforsaken hell?!"

"Who's here? There's another person," the Guoshi said.

At the bottom of the pit there should be two other "people", but San Lang had neither breath nor heartbeat, so the Guoshi didn't detect his presence. It was also complete chaos on top of the walls earlier, and no one kept track of who fell and who ran away, so she thought there was only Xie Lian.

"It was them who killed all of my soldiers; are you happy now? Everyone you wanted to kill is finally dead!"

The Guoshi was silent, and suddenly a tiny burst of light flared, illuminating a small, black-clad girl with a palm torch.

The girl looked to be fifteen or sixteen, both eyes blackened; not unbeautiful, but just unhappy. Her forehead and cheeks were full of bruises, clear and distinct under the light. The hand controlling the palm torch was shaking, causing the flames to flicker.

If it hadn't been confirmed earlier, no one would think this pale little girl was the Guoshi of Banyue.

The flames in her hand illuminated herself and her surroundings. The ground next to her feet was piled with the armoured corpses of Banyue soldiers.

Xie Lian couldn't help but sneak a look beside himself.

That palm torch in the Guoshi's hand was very small, and did not light up the entire pit, so they were still immersed in darkness. But using the wee light, Xie Lian could still see faintly that the one next to him was dressed in red. It wasn't clear, and he wasn't sure, but he could still somewhat distinguish what was close to him. San Lang was already taller than him, but now, maybe, he seemed taller than before.

Xie Lian moved his eyes up, paused at the neck, then continued upward, stopping at an elegantly-shaped chin.

San Lang's upper features were still hidden in the shadows, but Xie Lian thought the bottom half was distinctly different than before. Still handsome, but the lines were much more defined. Feeling he was being watched, San Lang tilted his head, and his lips curled upwards slightly.

Perhaps he wanted too much to get a better look, to get closer, that without realizing it, Xie Lian took a step closer to him.

Just then, Ke Mo wailed in the distance, seeming to be in shock after seeing the bloody tragedy before him. Xie Lian abruptly snapped out of it and turned to look, and saw Ke Mo was clutching his own head, but despite the general's cries, the Guoshi's expression remained wooden, and she only nodded.

"Good."

In the midst of mourning, hearing those words made Ke Mo rage once more.

"GOOD? What's good?? How do you mean?!"

"Good means we're finally freed," Guoshi said.

She turned to Xie Lian, who was still shrouded in the dark. "Were you the one who killed them?"

"This...was an accident," Xie Lian replied.

"YOU'RE LYING THROUGH YOUR TEETH!" Ke Mo exclaimed.

Xie Lian responded bold-facedly, "Life is full of accidents!"

Guoshi gave him a look, but her expression was unreadable. "Who are you?"

Her words were spoken in perfect Han dialect³⁶, and it wasn't said in an interrogative tone.

"I'm a heavenly official. This one here is...my friend," Xie Lian replied.

Ke Mo couldn't understand their words, but could still tell they weren't fighting, and demanded, "What are you two saying?"

³⁶ Han was the dialect of Yong'an.

The Guoshi looked Xie Lian over, and eyed San Lang for a moment before quickly looking away. She said, "We've never had heavenly officials visit before. I thought you had all already abandoned this place."

Xie Lian had thought they would have to fight the Guoshi of Banyue, but was surprised to find she was this despondent; devoid of any will to fight.

She spoke up again, "Do you two want to leave?"

"Of course we do, but there's an array set in this pit, so we can't." Xie Lian said.

Hearing this, the Guoshi walked to one of the walls, raised her hand and drew something. She turned around and said, "There. I released the array. You two can leave now."

"..."

This was way too easy! Xie Lian really didn't know what to say now.

Just then, a voice called from above, "HEY! IS ANYONE DOWN THERE? IF NOT, I'M LEAVING!"

It was Fu Yao's voice.

Xie Lian heard San Lang tsk next to him, and immediately looked up. There was a shadow of a man looking down into the pit.

Xie Lian shouted, "FU YAO! THERE'S PEOPLE DOWN HERE! I'M DOWN HERE!"

After Xie Lian shouted he also waved, and Fu Yao shouted back from above, "You're actually down there? What's at the bottom besides you?"

"Um...a lot of things. Why don't you come down and see for yourself?" Xie Lian said.

Fu Yao probably thought the same, and blew a large ball of fire into the pit. In an instant, the entire Sinner's Pit was lit up, bright like day, and Xie Lian finally saw clearly the kind of place he'd been standing in.

All around him were mountains of bloody corpses piled high; innumerable bodies of Banyue soldiers stacked on top of each other, faces and limbs blackened, dark blood smearing the bright armours. The corner Xie Lian was standing was the only spot in the entire Sinner's Pit that did not have a dead body.

This was all done in a flash, in the dark, by San Lang after he jumped in.

Xie Lian turned to look at the boy next to him again.

Before, in the dark, he thought San Lang looked taller, and was distinctly different in certain features. But now, under the bright firelight, the one standing next to him was the same handsome youth he'd known. When he saw Xie Lian looked over, he grinned. Xie Lian looked down to check his wrists and boots, and both were also the same as before, having nothing that would cause any jingling sound.

Just then, Xie Lian heard a muffled noise; it was the sound of Fu Yao jumping down.

"Weren't you looking after the merchants?" Xie Lian asked.

Having just entered the pit, Fu Yao wasn't yet used to the stench of blood, and fanned his hand to make the air flow. He replied indifferently, "We waited for over six hours and there was still no sign of you, so we figured something had happened. I drew a circle for them to wait in, and came to check things out myself."

Xie Lian frowned. "The circle won't last long. With you gone, what if they leave the circle thinking you'd left them behind?"

Fu Yao shrugged. "Eight horses can't stop a man who really wants to seek death; I can't stop stubborn people, so nothing. What's with those two over there? Who's who?"

Fu Yao was tense, ready to defend against the two unknowns, but soon discovered astonishingly that Ke Mo was already heavily wounded on the ground, barely able to stand, and the Guoshi of Banyue had her head lowered and was silent.

"That one is the General of Banyue, and the other one is the Guoshi of Banyue. Right now they're..."

Ke Mo suddenly leapt up before Xie Lian could finish.

He had been lying on the ground gathering his strength, and was finally able to jump up with a shout, aiming his fists at the Guoshi of Banyue. A large beefy warrior attacking a little girl; in the past, Xie Lian would have never allowed this sort of thing to happen before him. But Ke Mo had every reason to hate the Guoshi, and she could very well defend herself; yet she didn't, letting herself be thrown around like a broken ragdoll.

Ke Mo shouted at the Guoshi, "Where are your scorpion-snakes? Come on! Let them bite me to death too! Give me that release!"

The Guoshi gloomily replied, "Ke Mo, my snakes don't listen to me anymore."

“Then why don’t they kill you??” he scoffed.

“...I’m sorry, Ke Mo,” the Guoshi apologized softly.

“DO YOU REALLY HATE US THAT MUCH?”

The Guoshi shook her head and Ke Mo became angrier.

“YOU’RE GOING TO BE THE DEATH OF ME! IF YOU DON’T HATE US, WHY DID YOU BETRAY US? YOU SHAMELESS SPY, DISGUSTING MOLE, TRAITOR!!”

Fu Yao watched him strike harder and harder; the blows were all single-sided, and he couldn’t help but frown. “What are they saying? Shouldn’t we go stop them?”

Xie Lian couldn’t watch anymore, either, and rushed forward to stop Ke Mo. “General! General! Why don’t you tell us who that Yong’an thug really is, we’ll...”

Suddenly, the Guoshi grabbed his wrist.

The grip was hard and came unexpectedly, and Xie Lian’s heart dropped, thinking she was going to ambush him, but when he looked back down at her, the Guoshi was on the ground, a small bruise at the corner of her mouth, her head raised, watching him intently. She didn’t say a single word, but her dark eyes were intense with a flaming sense of life.

This demeanour overlapped with an image from a fargone memory. After a pause, Xie Lian blurted, “It’s you?”

The Guoshi’s voice also trembled. “General Hua?”

This back-and-forth stunned everyone in the pit.

Fu Yao rushed forward, knocked Ke Mo out with a punch, and demanded, “You two know each other?”

Xie Lian didn’t answer him. He knelt down, gripped the shoulders of the Guoshi, and examined her face.

Earlier, they stood too far apart and he couldn’t see clearly. Plus, it had been over two hundred years; this girl had matured in that time, and for many various reasons, he didn’t recognize her at first. But now that he looked again properly, it was the same face from his memories.

Xie Lian couldn’t speak for the longest time, and it was a good moment before he sighed. “Banyue?”

The Guoshi quickly clutched at his sleeves, and the gloomy face suddenly came alive with excitement. "It's me! General Hua, do you still remember me?"

"Of course I remember you. But..." Xie Lian gazed at her for a moment and sighed. "But what have you done to yourself?"

Hearing his words, her eyes suddenly filled with pain.

"I'm sorry, Captain...I messed up," she muttered.

In that exchange, there was "General" this, "Captain" that, making it glaringly obvious to the bystanders.

Fu Yao was in shock. "Captain? General? YOU? How did this happen? Then the Tomb of the General is...?" he pushed.

"My tomb," Xie Lian replied.

"Didn't you say you only came to collect junk two hundred years ago???" Fu Yao questioned.

"This...is a long story. That was originally the plan," Xie Lian answered.

Around two hundred years ago, due to some such reasons, Xie Lian couldn't muck around in the East anymore, and decided to stay out of sight for a while. He had planned to cross the Qing Ridge and head to the South to start a brand new life of scraps. Thus, he took up his compass and walked southward.

But the more he walked, the more he thought woefully; how come the scenery was all wrong? There should have been an abundance of trees and greenery, cities and crowds, so how come his path was becoming more desolate?

Suspicions aside, however, Xie Lian stubbornly continued on; he walked and walked and came upon the Gobi Desert. It took a gust of wind blowing a fistful of sand into his face before Xie Lian finally realized that his compass was broken.

The direction it was guiding him this entire journey was wrong!

Since there wasn't anything he could do about the whole thing, he might as well take this chance to visit the desert scenery, and continued walking. Only, he changed course slightly and traveled northwestward, and finally arrived at the border where he settled nearby to the Kingdom of Banyue.

“At first, I was just collecting junk around the area,” Xie Lian said. “But the border was troubled, and with so many skirmishes, there were often runaway soldiers, so the army would draft anyone into recruit to make up the numbers.”

“So you were forced into the army?” San Lang asked.

“Yeah,” Xie Lian replied. “But doing anything at all was more or less the same, so it didn’t matter to me. And then after chasing away some bandits a couple times, I somehow got promoted to Captain. The people gave me face and would call me General, too.”

“Why did she call you General Hua?” Fu Yao questioned. “Your surname isn’t Hua.”

Xie Lian waved his hand and said dismissively, “Don’t worry about it. I randomly made up a fake name at the time. I think it was ‘Hua Xie’³⁷.”

Hearing the name, San Lang’s expression changed slightly, his lips twitching. Xie Lian didn’t pay attention and continued.

“With a battle-torn border came many orphans. When I was free I’d play with them sometimes. One of them...was named Banyue.”

When there were bandits, Xie Lian was surely the bravest soldier, and no one dared block his way, nor did anyone dare to even stand beside him. But when there weren’t, it was as if anyone could order him around.

One day he went and sat by a wall to start a campfire, using his own helmet to cook. As he cooked the smell of it drifted out, and a few enraged soldiers came to kick over whatever it was he was cooking. Xie Lian picked up his helmet with a broken heart, but when he looked back, he saw a small, disheveled, and grimy child crouched behind him, picking at the stuff knocked to the ground with her hands, without caring whether it was too hot, stuffing it into her mouth.

He was shocked. “DON’T! Wait, little kid, you!”

As expected, that little kid scarfed down a few lumps of the stuff she had picked off the ground then dry-heaved heavily, crying loudly. Xie Lian was so shaken that he picked her up upside-down and ran laps until all the stuff she ate came back out. After that was done, he crouched down and wiped away a seat for them.

“Are you alright, little kid...I’m so sorry. But don’t ever tell your parents about this, and next time, don’t pick up any more random stuff off the ground to eat...WAIT, WHAT ARE YOU DOING NOW!”

³⁷ The name “Hua Xie” is meaningless in this particular context, but the character for “Hua” is the same as the one in Hua Cheng’s name.

That child's face was covered in tears, but she still went to pick off the ground again; still wanting to eat. It was only after Xie Lian grabbed her that he realized that the skin of this child's stomach was practically pressed to the back of her bones.

When people starved to this point, anything could be eaten. Even if it was disgusting to the point of tears, she would eat it.

Xie Lian had no choice, and went back to bring her the last of his rations. Then afterwards, he could often see this child stalking him in the shadows nearby.

In his memories, the little girl Banyue was always gloomy; her body and face full of bruises, and when she looked at him, she would stare just so from below. Because she was singled out by the children of the Banyue kingdom, other than Xie Lian, there was only a Yong'an boy living at the border who'd sometimes pay attention to her; so she'd spend her days tagging along behind the two of them.

She rarely spoke, but she was fluent in the Han dialect; so Xie Lian didn't know where she came from. But, she was a random wandering child, so he randomly took her in. When he was free, sometimes he'd teach them songs, sometimes wrestle, sometimes show off his busker move "Shattering Boulders on One's Chest", or something, and they got along quite well.

Xie Lian shook his head. "I had thought the 'Banyue' in the Guoshi's title was the country. I didn't realize it was actually the name of the Guoshi."

"And then?" Fu Yao asked.

"And then...it's pretty much the same as what the memorial wrote," Xie Lian said.

After some silence, San Lang spoke up. "The memorial said you died."

On the subject of that memorial, Xie Lian felt quite bummed out.

Weren't memorials usually praise and exaggerated good deeds to glorify the deceased? All those mentions of the demotions aside, why did it have to so solemnly record the embarrassing way he died???

While they were hiding away from the sandstorm and he read to this part, he could barely look at it straight on. If it wasn't for San Lang, who also understood Banyue script and was watching him, he was going to pretend that segment never existed. Having something like that written down, even he wanted to laugh at it, nevermind other people? That he'd had the nerve to ask those seeking shelter in his memorial to not laugh as they commentated and laughed at his epitaph, it made him feel really bummed.

Xie Lian's forehead was becoming red from all the rubbing. "Oh, that. Um. Of course I didn't die. I faked it."

Fu Yao had a face full of disbelief. Xie Lian explained himself.

"I got trampled on too hard and couldn't get up, so there wasn't any other way besides faking my death anyway."

Truthfully, Xie Lian couldn't quite remember exactly how he "died", nor why that battle broke out in the first place; only that it was over something petty. He really didn't want to fight; victory or defeat was meaningless. But by then his rank could go no lower, and no one would listen to him. In the midst of battle, everyone saw red, so when he rushed out, it was blades and swords coming at him from both sides cutting him down.

Fu Yao questioned, "It must be because you're an eyesore standing in the middle that you raised the ire of both sides, right? Otherwise why would people just cut you down when they see you? Besides, I'm sure you knew there were many who hated you, so why didn't you evade all those people? Why did you have to charge in? I'm sure you could've dodged if you wanted to."

Ch.28: Dallying HuaLian; Night-Fall in Sinner's Pit 5

"I really don't remember, alright!" Xie Lian said.

Even if he couldn't die, he couldn't stand that kind of butchering. Thinking "this couldn't go on!" in his head, Xie Lian resolutely dropped to the ground to fake his death, but even in "death" he was trampled to the point of passing out. It was water choking him that woke him, because corpses were usually thrown into the rivers after battles. Xie Lian went with the river flow, and floated back to the Kingdom of Yong'an like a heap of junk. Afterwards, he took several years to recover from his wounds, picked up an unbroken compass to start off anew, and finally made it to his original destination in the South; and stopped minding what went down in the Kingdom of Banyue.

"I'm sorry," Banyue muttered again.

Fu Yao furrowed his brow. "Why does she keep apologizing to you?"

San Lang suddenly spoke up, "Ke Mo said Guoshi of Banyue left for the Midlands after a clash between the two armies. Were you involved in that?"

With his reminder, and recalling what was written on the memorial, some things were coming back to Xie Lian, but only a small bit.

"Ah, maybe..."

"It was to save me," Banyue said.

Everyone turned to look at her, and she mumbled, "General Hua entered the fray to save me, and got flattened."

"..."

Xie Lian instantly remembered the agony of being trampled by thousands, and he hugged his arms in spite of himself, but when he saw two others watching him with unreadable expressions, he pulled himself back in a hurry and said, "Not flat. Not too flat."

Fu Yao didn't look so smug anymore, and said awkwardly, "Well, aren't you a saint."

Xie Lian waved dismissively. "Nothing of the sort. I think I was just going to pick the child up and run away immediately, but we didn't retreat fast enough and got caught between the two armies..."

"If that's the case," Fu Yao said. "How can you not remember something like that?"

Xie Lian looked at him solemnly. "Do you not know how many hundreds of years old I am? So much can happen in just a decade; there's no way to remember everything in detail. Besides, some things are best forgotten. Rather than remembering how I was butchered and trampled hundreds of years ago, I'd prefer to remember that I ate a delicious meat bun yesterday, no?"

"I'm sorry," Banyue said.

Xie Lian sighed. "My dear Banyue. Saving you was my own choice, you're not at fault. If you're going to apologize, perhaps it should be to others."

Banyue was taken aback, and hung her head in silence.

"But...maybe it's because my impression of you was from two hundred years ago, but I don't think you're the kind of child who sought revenge and betrayed others...will you tell me what exactly happened? Why did you open the fortress gates?"

Banyue contemplated, shook her head, and continued to remain silent.

"Then, why did you let the snakes out to bite people?" Xie Lian asked.

This time, Banyue answered, "I didn't release the snakes."

Xie Lian was taken aback. "What?"

"I didn't release the snakes." Banyue said. "They ran off on their own. I don't know why, but they don't listen to me anymore."

Hearing this, Fu Yao grew impatient.

Banyue pleaded, "General Hua, I'm not lying."

Before Xie Lian responded, Fu Yao cut in rudely. "Anyone would say that after being captured. Even if you say it wasn't intentional, I've heard all that before. All those people crossing the Pass were certainly all injured by your snakes. Show me your hands, you're under arrest."

Banyue shut up and extended both arms. Fu Yao immediately took out a God-Binding rope and apprehended both Banyue and Ke Mo, then said, "Alright. We've accomplished our goal for this trip. It's all over now."

Just then, San Lang spoke up. "She had no reason to lie."

Xie Lian also felt there was a need for further interrogation. He turned to Banyue. "Can you not control any of your snakes?"

Banyue answered, "I can control them, and they'll obey most of the time. But there are times when they won't. I don't know why."

After some thought, Xie Lian said, "Why don't you call them out and show us?"

Banyue had knelt down before him earlier; now, she finally rose to her feet and nodded. Soon, a wine-red scorpion-snake slithered out from underneath a corpse, raised its head, and curled itself above a pile of dead bodies. It soundlessly flicked its tongue to the group.

Xie Lian was about to take a closer look at the snake but saw Banyue widen her eyes, face strange. Xie Lian's heart dropped and he thought, "Oh no."

As he thought, after flicking its tongue the snake opened its mouth and pounced towards him in attack.

It was a sudden lunge, but Xie Lian was ready, and was about to grab for it when boom! Something exploded. When he opened his eyes again to see, the snake was already a splatter of guts on the ground, having been thoroughly blown apart. It was a calculated blast, too; none of the venom spilled. Xie Lian immediately remembered another instance where a snake died like this before they entered the Banyue ruins, but there was no need to say who did it at this point. He hadn't even had the chance to look at San Lang before a red sleeve flashed before him, barring and separating him from Banyue.

On the other side, Fu Yao also said coolly, "I knew she lied. Did you think this snake can manage to bite him under these circumstances? Foolish."

Banyue's face was already pale when she saw that snake, and when she heard him, her head shot up. "I didn't do it. I said there are some snakes that don't obey, and that one was one of them just now."

Fu Yao didn't believe a single word. "Who knows if it was actually disobeying or obeying you?"

"That one wasn't even called forth by me," Banyue said.

Xie Lian was about to speak when another two wine-red scorpion-snakes peeked out from under a different corpse, flicking their tongues and watching them intently. Then a third, a fourth, a fifth...from the mountains of dead bodies, and from all around every corner of the pit, came innumerable scorpion-snakes!

Everyone stared at Banyue who was kneeling on top of a pile of corpses, and Fu Yao started spinning a ball of spiritual energy in his palm, shouting towards her.

"Make them go away! They can't all disobey!"

Banyue scrunched up her brows, looking as if she was trying to drive them out. Yet more and more scorpion-snakes appeared, curling and crawling, slithering ever closer. Bites from one or two snakes might not kill them, but hundreds and thousands was harder to say. Even if they didn't die, it wouldn't be pretty.

Xie Lian raised his wrist, about to call forth Ruoye, but saw that when the snakes slithered to a certain distance, they would stop and hesitate, forming a weird circle around him and San Lang. It dawned on Xie Lian, and he glanced at the boy next to him. He was watching the snakes condescendingly with immense contempt. The scorpion-snakes seemed to be able to read his eyes and didn't dare approach. They backed off bit by bit, lowering their savage heads as they did so, and pressed against the ground submissively like servants.

But there seemed to be another power controlling them, making them unable to abandon attacks and leave completely. Thus, many of the snakes turned around and slithered towards Fu Yao. Fu Yao swung his hand and a blast of flames burst from his sleeve, killing a circle of snakes.

That wouldn't last long, however, and Xie Lian said, "Let's go up and get out of here first!"

Whoosh, Ruoye shot out from Xie Lian's arm and flew upwards. But soon, another whoosh and it was back on Xie Lian's arm. Xie Lian was taken aback and raised his wrist, admonishing the silk band.

"What are you doing back here? The array was released, hurry and go!"

But Ruoye remained wrapped on his arm, trembling, as if he bumped into something terrifying at the top. Xie Lian was still chiding it when suddenly, a long rope of something fell. Plop, it dropped on Fu Yao's shoulder. Fu Yao went to grab for it, and his face changed the moment he brought it before his eyes—it was another scorpion-snake that fell from the sky!

This took Fu Yao off guard, and after getting bitten, he hurled the snake towards Banyue. Even with her hands tied, she still unconsciously tried to catch the snake, and having caught it, the dark red snake curled itself up around her arm and did not attack. Just then, another plop and a second scorpion-snake landed on the ground!

Xie Lian could guess why Ruoye refused to go up now. Borrowing the faint light of the moon, Xie Lian raised his head and only just barely saw this sight: hundreds of little wine-red dots were falling rapidly into the Sinner's Pit.

A snake deluge!

The red dots were coming closer and Xie Lian yelled, "Fu Yao! Fire! Shoot a stream of fire upwards and get rid of them halfway!"

Fu Yao bit his palm to break skin, swung his hand, and a series of blood drops shot out; transforming into a curtain of fire, jetting up the pit. Those sweeping flames rose to over tens of feet and hung midair, disintegrating all scorpion-snakes that'd touch it, burning them to ashes, dissolving the snake deluge.

Temporarily safe, Xie Lian let out a breath of relief. "That was good, Fu Yao! Thank goodness for you."

Yet that spell consumed immense powers, and after one round, Fu Yao's face was pale. He turned around and ignited a ring of fire, dispelling the snakes on the ground, and shouted at Banyue, "And you say those snakes don't obey you? If it weren't you controlling them, why wouldn't they attack you?"

San Lang laughed. "Maybe it's because of your bad luck? They didn't attack us either."

Fu Yao turned to look at him, his eyes sharp and narrowed. Xie Lian could sense trouble. With the ample hints he'd gotten that he hadn't had time to digest in his head, he didn't want to see the two start fighting.

He said, "Let's figure out what's going on with those snakes first. Let's charge out."

Fu Yao sneered. "What's going on? Either the Guoshi of Banyue is lying, or the one next to you is causing trouble."

Xie Lian looked at Banyue, then looked at San Lang, and said, "I don't think it's either of them."

His tone was gentle but firm. It was the conclusion he had come to after much thought. However, Fu Yao must have thought he was shielding them intentionally; the face illuminated by the flames was unkind, Xie Lian couldn't tell if he was angry or laughing.

"Your Royal Highness," Fu Yao said. "Don't play pretend when you know the truth. Do you still know your place? I'm sure you're already very aware of what exactly that thing is next to you. I won't believe you hadn't realized it at all!"

Ch.29: Wind Master in White; Bellowing Sandstorms from Nothing

Xie Lian unconsciously stepped forward to stand in front of San Lang.

"I know better than anyone where my place is," Xie Lian replied.

"Then how dare you still stand next to him?!" Fu Yao shouted.

"Because...if I stand next to him, the snakes won't come," Xie Lian answered earnestly.

"..."

Hearing the response, San Lang "pfft"-ed and laughed out loud.

Fu Yao became grimmer. "YOU—"

Grimmer and grimmer, his face suddenly turned completely black; it wasn't just his face, but Xie Lian's entire line of sight dimmed into darkness.

The curtain of flames and the ring of fire created by Fu Yao were suddenly completely extinguished!

Xie Lian heard San Lang snicker and say "useless trash!" before gripping his shoulders to pull him close. Soon after, Xie Lian heard a sudden downpour of endless battering above them, like a thunderstorm hitting an umbrella.

Needless to say, now that the defense barrier was gone, the snake deluge came pouring down crazedly. The open umbrella was blocking the downpour, and Xie Lian could smell the thick, foul odour of blood. He was about to fight, but San Lang stopped him.

"Don't move. No lowlives will dare approach."

His tone was confident; the first sentence was soft and gentle, the latter had a layer of arrogance. Xie Lian wasn't worried, but hearing Fu Yao's angry roars at the other end, sounding as if he was getting covered in snakes, he called out, "San Lang!"

San Lang instantly replied, "No."

Xie Lian didn't know whether to laugh or cry. "How did you know what I was going to say?"

"Don't worry so much, he can't die," San Lang said.

Just then, another roar came from a different part of the pit.

“BANYUE! If you want me to die, then have them bite and kill me in one go! WHAT THE HELL IS THIS??”

It seemed Ke Mo had woken from being battered, discovered himself covered by countless snakes, and believed it to be Banyue’s doing.

“Fu Yao, can you light another fire? Do it again!” Xie Lian shouted.

Fu Yao gritted his teeth. “That thing next to you is restricting my powers, I can’t light anything!”

Xie Lian felt dread, and San Lang said, “It’s not me.”

“I know it’s not you,” Xie Lian said. “But that’s precisely what’s wrong. Both Banyue and Ke Mo are bound by the God-Binding rope; they can’t use their powers. My powers are depleted, and you’re not restricting anyone; meaning, there’s a sixth person in this pit?!”

“Have you lost your mind?” Fu Yao demanded. “What sixth person? There wasn’t anyone who came down!”

“Who’s there?” Banyue suddenly said.

“Banyue, what’s happening? Is someone over there?” Xie Lian asked.

“Someone—”

Banyue’s voice disappeared halfway; whether her mouth was sealed shut, or she lost consciousness was not known.

Xie Lian called out again, “Banyue?”

Fu Yao was still fighting snakes, and was throwing spiritual energy everywhere; flashing here and there in the dark. “Be careful! She might be tricking you!”

“Not necessarily,” Xie Lian shouted. “I’m going to save her first!”

Xie Lian was about to run into the snake deluge when he heard San Lang’s voice next to his ear. “Alright.”

Xie Lian felt the hand grasping his shoulders tighten, and in a flash they were blitzing forward. Xie Lian realized in awe that the boy was advancing and attacking but with an umbrella in one hand, and him in the other. In the darkness, silver shimmers flashed about once more, clanking and clinking, when suddenly, a sharp sound of two swords clashing rang in everyone’s ears.

“Oh?” San Lang said. “There really is a sixth person. Interesting.”

Xie Lian had no idea how San Lang was controlling the weapon, or what kind of weapon it was, but whatever it was, it most certainly did meet head-to-head with another!

The other party remained silent, and Xie Lian could only hear the sound of metal scraping metal as the fight intensified. From time to time there would be sparks flashing in the dark, but each time it was so short-lived it was hard to see the other’s face. Listening to the fight, Xie Lian could feel Ruoye grip him tighter and tighter, and had to murmur reassurance.

“Don’t be scared, relax. Relax a bit.” Ruoye loosened, and Xie Lian called out again, “Banyue, are you conscious? Can you respond?”

No one responded. Fu Yao exclaimed, “Maybe the one fighting now is her!”

“No. This one is definitely not Banyue!” Xie Lian said.

When San Lang fought Ke Mo in the dark, he was light-footed and messing about, playing with him. This fight was also in the dark, but Xie Lian could tell San Lang was taking it more seriously. The other party was extremely skilled in martial arts and weaponry; Banyue was small and weak, just looking at her limbs, it was obvious power and arms were not her forte, so it was impossible for her to be the one fighting San Lang. But who was this sixth person? When did they appear?!

Fu Yao griped, “Someone who would betray her own country is no different than Xuan Ji; why on earth would you still believe in her?”

“Fu Yao, can you not be so irritated?” Xie Lian said. “You...wait. What did you just say?”

Fu Yao struck out another fist, and blew away a bunch of snakes. “I said, why on earth would you believe in her the same way you believe in that thing next to you!”

“No, not that—you said Xuan Ji. You mentioned Xuan Ji’s name, didn’t you?” Xie Lian said.

“Yeah, so what?! She’s completely irrelevant!”

Xie Lian however, held his breath. A moment later, he called out, “Stop fighting, there’s no more need to hide. I know who you are!”

The sound of blades clashing never halted, the other party unaffected, but Xie Lian wasn’t worried.

“Did you think I was bluffing when I said I already know who you are? General Pei Junior?”

“Who are you talking to?” Fu Yao was dumbstruck. “General Pei Junior? Don’t be crazy. Who do you think he is? If he descended, everyone would know!”

“You’re very right,” Xie Lian said. “But what if it wasn’t his true self that descended?”

In the darkness, the fighting weapons faltered, then continued anew.

Xie Lian spoke, “It took me too long to figure this out. I should’ve known from the beginning.

“I knew that for close to two hundred years there was something causing havoc; but none of the heavenly officials cared, and no one dared to speak of it, so there must be one or a number of officials keeping a wrap on this scandal. But because I wasn’t familiar with many of the officials, I didn’t dare to boldly pin this on anyone, and never tried to boldly deduce just which heavenly official it could be.”

It was Fu Yao’s mention of Xuan Ji that reminded him.

When it came to Xuan Ji, it wasn’t hard to relate her to the two General Peis, and the North was their territory. Fu Yao once said in passing that prior to his ascension, General Pei Junior slaughtered a city.

Which city?

It could very well be the Kingdom of Banyue!

The Upper Court wouldn’t bat an eyelash at something like this; everyone needed to spill some blood if they wanted to do great things. But slaughtering a city wasn’t anything glorious, after all, and if the story spread too far it would affect the numbers of new believers, so of course there would be some cover-ups after ascension. Thus, even if everyone knew something of the sort happened, they probably didn’t know the details, or care to know the details. Besides, if it wasn’t for deep grudges, who would have had the time or motivation to dig up his past, and offend the support behind his back?

Xie Lian spoke slowly, “That mud face said there was someone amongst us who already visited the fortress fifty to sixty years ago. At first, I thought he was lying to deceive us into approaching, but his words may very well contain truth.

“Before, in that group of people, the one I was the most suspicious of was you. The caravan followed you, and you could take them anywhere. I had never seen a single scorpion-snake in the years I lived near Banyue, and now, from just seeking a random shelter from the sandstorm, they happen to show up?

"I asked you to come look for the shanyue fern with us, but just before we left, you gave the directions of the ruins to the others so they could follow in our steps if they could no longer sit still. Earlier on top of the walls, I had already said if anything were to happen, I would go forward first; you, who was always calm, suddenly jumped, dying a meaningless death."

Xie Lian continued after a pause, "Your actions were strange and illogical. That it took me until now to realize who you are really was too late. Isn't that right, General Pei Junior? Or, should I call your current name, A-Zhao!"

The silence that ensued was abrupt.

It was a moment before a cold voice came.

"Did you not suspect that the mud face might have been talking about the red-clothed boy next to you?"

A stream of flames suddenly lit up across the Sinner's Pit.

Under the light, two bloody silhouettes were revealed. One was San Lang, dressed in red, proper and standing with his weapon already tucked away. The other was a plainly-clothed young man with a sword held tightly in hand, still at the ready.

The plain-clothed young man was covered in blood, looking as if he was also dressed in red. His expression was cold and reserved, carrying someone over his shoulders. It was indeed A-Zhao.

To be fair, whether it be General Pei Junior himself or A-Zhao, that composed, calm, and collected aura was a constant; only, Xie Lian had never followed that train of thought, so he hadn't connected the two until now.

The one he was carrying over his shoulders was Banyue. It seemed he had called forth the snakes in order to steal her away during the chaos. Now that his identity was revealed, he had no more need to create havoc, and the snake deluge ceased its bombardment. He sheathed his sword and gently laid Banyue down on the ground.

On the side, Ke Mo was shocked. "Who are you? Didn't you fall to your death???"

A-Zhao didn't spare a look at Ke Mo, staring instead at San Lang intently. "Ke Mo, you really haven't changed in these past hundreds of years," he said in the Banyue language.

Perhaps the tone of this maddening calm was overly familiar. Ke Mo's face immediately scrunched up in rage.

"...IT'S YOU!!! PEI SU!!!"

If not for the God-Binding rope solidly tying him down, Ke Mo would've lunged at him to fight to the death.

"General Pei Junior," Xie Lian said. "Those scorpion-snakes didn't just listen to one command. You controlled all the snakes Banyue said no longer listened to her and went out to harm, correct?"

"En. I did it."

He certainly admitted it easily.

"Did Banyue teach you how to control the scorpion-snakes?" Xie Lian asked.

"She didn't," Pei Su said. "But how she does it, I could very well learn for myself."

"General Pei Junior is exceedingly intelligent after all," Xie Lian commented.

After a pause, he then asked, "When did you two meet? How did you two meet?"

Pei Su, however, gave him a look. "General Hua."

Xie Lian was puzzled. "Why are you calling me by that title too?"

Pei Su asked quietly, "Do you not recognize me, General Hua?"

"..."

Now Xie Lian did.

The beginning of it was kind of blurry. Banyue was bullied and ignored by other Banyue children when she was younger, and only a young boy of Yong'an would sometimes pay attention to her. That boy was like Banyue, and didn't talk very much. Quite a number of children living on the border were from military families, and many also enlisted in the army when they grew older. Could it be...

"It's you?!" Xie Lian was surprised. "I, I can't believe it took me this long to realize it was you."

Pei Su nodded. "It's me. I've only just recognized General, too."

No wonder. So turns out, Banyue and the enemy general had known each other since long ago!

"Did Banyue really heed your order to open the fortress gates?" Xie Lian asked.

On the other side, Ke Mo spat and yelled, "Despicable Pei Su. Untie the ropes, let me fight him to the death!"

Pei Su said coolly, "First of all, we already had a battle to the death two hundred years ago, and you lost; second of all, how am I despicable?"

Ke Mo shouted, "IF YOU TWO DIDN'T COLLUDE, HOW WOULD WE LOSE?!"

"Ke Mo, don't deny it," Pei Su said. "Even though I only had a troop of two thousand with me at the time, breaking through the fortress gates was only a matter of time for me."

Xie Lian couldn't help but interrupt. "Wait a sec, you only had two thousand under you and you were sent to invade a country? What's going on? Isn't that no different than sending you to your death? Were you perhaps even more elbowed out in the army than I was??"

"..."

Pei Su stopped talking. It seemed Xie Lian had hit it on the mark.

Xie Lian then asked, "If you knew it was a sure win, why did you have Banyue open the fortress gates?"

"Because I needed to slaughter the fortress city," Pei Su replied.

"What do you mean?" Xie Lian asked. "Since you were already going to win, why must you slaughter the city?"

It couldn't be that it was a hobby of his!

"It was because victory was at hand that we had to wipe out the city," Pei Su said. "And it had to be as soon as possible. Immediately. Leaving none behind."

That "leaving none behind" was chilling.

Xie Lian pushed, "And the reason is?"

Pei Su answered, "On the night before the invasion, many of the leaders of Banyue's major families gathered for a meeting, and decided on a secret plot."

"What plot?"

"The people of Banyue are violent in nature, and hated Yong'an to the bone," Pei Su said. "Even knowing they were about to be defeated, they wouldn't submit to it. So the entire population of the kingdom, the young, the old, the women and the men, all banded together to assemble this thing.”

“What thing?” Xie Lian could guess but he wasn’t sure, and the word that came out of Pei Su’s mouth confirmed his suspicions.

“Explosives.” Pei Su slowly enunciated each word. “They had decided that if the kingdom was to fall, then the citizens would each carry explosives on their bodies, escape to Yong’an, mix into large crowded areas, and suicide bomb to cause riots. Meaning: if they must die, then they would drag as many Yong’an people down as they can with them. If the kingdom should fall, then they shall terrorize the country that brought their downfall!”

Which was why they had to be annihilated before those civilians had the time to flee.

Xie Lian instantly turned to Ke Mo, roughly summarized for him in the Banyue language, and asked, “Is this true?”

Ke Mo looked dauntless without any intention to conceal the facts. “It’s true!”

San Lang raised his brows and commented, “How vile.”

He said those words in the Banyue language, probably intentionally.

Ke Mo replied angrily, “Vile? What right do you have to call us vile? If it wasn’t for your assaults, we wouldn’t have been forced to make that move. You ruined us, so we sought revenge. How is that wrong?!”

Pei Su responded coolly, “Really now. How about we lay everything out in the open then?”

He tilted his head and said, “How many times had Banyue citizens started riots near the border? How many caravans and travelers going to the West Plains from Yong’an were ambushed by Banyue? You intentionally sheltered the bandits that terrorized Yong’an, and killed our soldiers that went to wipe them out under the pretense of illegal border crossing. How is that not vile?”

Pei Su spoke unhurriedly and his tone was calm, but each word was sharp as knives.

Ke Mo argued, “What about you? Why not say you forcibly occupied our land first?”

“The border had always been ambiguous, so how can you say we forcibly occupied your land?” Pei Su countered.

“The lines were clearly drawn! It was you who didn’t keep to yourselves!”

“The lines were drawn by Banyue, Yong’an had never agreed to it. And your border had the oasis all to yourselves, leaving only desert land to us; what nonsense.”

Ke Mo was red in the face. “The oasis was ours! It had always been ours!”

Both sides had their stories; just listening to them argue made Xie Lian befuddled. This hostility was making him remember how badly he got beaten up stuck in the middle of both sides, and he could feel the pain on his face resurface.

Pei Su seemed to have had enough of quarreling with Ke Mo, and he turned to Xie Lian. “So you see. There are many things in the world that simply can’t be clearly defined or resolved. You can only fight.”

Xie Lian sighed. “I’ll agree to the first part.”

San Lang, on the other hand, said, “Hm. I’ll agree to the last part.”

Ke Mo’s anger was somewhat curbed, and he suddenly said, “The majority of Yong’an people were shameless, but you were the most shameless I’ve ever met. Pei Su, you’re a cold-hearted man. You didn’t kill us for your country, and it wasn’t for saving your people.”

Hearing this, Pei Su fell silent.

Ke Mo continued, “You exiled son of man; looked down by all. You only wanted to secure your footing in the Yong’an army in order to keep climbing up, so you had to win that battle. So sad that Banyue still thought you good and was used by you, and betrayed us for the likes of you.”

“But isn’t General Pei Junior General Pei’s descendant?” Xie Lian wondered. To have such a renown ancestor watch over him, he couldn’t have fallen so astray?

“He’s not the direct descendant of General Pei,” San Lang spoke up. “He’s from however many branches out.”

Pei Su said quietly, “Banyue had always been my subordinate, and only obeyed my command to infiltrate the Kingdom of Banyue. She is from both Banyue and Yong’an; once she chose her side, she had to be loyal to that side, so there was no such thing as betrayal. The Banyue people are evil, I have no regrets in killing them.”

Suddenly, a voice came from above.

“Having no regrets in killing, well said! Will you say the same in regards to all the travelers who were misled by you to this Pass and lost their lives in this pit?”

That voice had come from above everyone’s heads, and Xie Lian instantly looked up.

“Which great lord is here among us?”

There wasn't a response, but a sudden strange noise. WHOOSH WHOOSH, it was like the bellowing of wild winds. When that sound finally came near, Xie Lian could finally say with certainty -- it certainly was the bellowing of wild winds!

This abrupt gale entered the Sinner's Pit from above, swept all the way to the bottom, and rolled everyone into the air!

Xie Lian immediately grabbed for San Lang, who was the closest to him, and cried, “Watch out!”

San Lang caught him too, face unchanging. Xie Lian only felt a whirl of spinning, their bodies swiftly rising, and after a pause, they started plunging down. Xie Lian threw out Ruoye and coaxed in the midst of this chaos.

“Alright, alright, everything's over. Hurry, my good Ruoye, come out and give us a hand!”

After a couple pets, Ruoye finally reacted. However, with nothing in the air to grab onto other than a giant Sinner's Pit below, Ruoye flew about once and shrunk back. Feeling helpless, Xie Lian could only adjust his form for landing in the air. If it was like previous times, he would've cratered headfirst three feet into the ground; but this time, just before they hit the ground, San Lang reached out and gave him a pull, and he actually landed with his feet flat on the ground! When his boots firmly touched ground, he was even a little incredulous. But, that feeling went away very quickly when a black-clad silhouette came stumbling before him.

Xie Lian saw who it was and delightfully called, “Nan Feng!”

It was Nan Feng indeed, but a disheveled Nan Feng. It looked as if he was rolled in grime ten times before getting thrown into a rambunctious den of beasts to spend the night. His clothes were tattered and bedraggled to the max; hearing Xie Lian's call, he only waved his hand and quietly wiped at his face, unable to speak.

Xie Lian lifted him to his feet. “What happened? Did those two ladies beat you up?”

Before his words fully left his lips, two figures appeared behind Nan Feng and strolled over. One of them was the woman cultivator in white with a whisk in her arms, and she greeted Xie Lian cheerfully.

“How do you do, Your Royal Highness.”

Although Xie Lian didn't know who this was, proper etiquette must still be kept; however, he didn't know how to address her, so he could only smile back and wave.

“Greetings, fellow cultivator.”

The lady in black on the side glanced at Xie Lian coldly, but didn't seem to care for him. When her eyes moved onto San Lang, however, she paused, seeming to think he was a dubious figure, and stopped for a moment.

The gusts earlier had blown everyone out of the pit, and the two ladies walked past Xie Lian, heading straight for Pei Su. He saw them approach and didn't appear surprised; after all, he had already seen them in town when he was still playing the part of A-Zhao. He knelt down where he was, bowed his head to the lady cultivator in white, and greeted quietly.

“Lord Wind Master.”

Xie Lian was stunned hearing those words.

And here he thought she was some menacing ghost or monster; who knew it was actually a heavenly official? And it was the Wind Master, the one that was throwing out ten thousand merits in one go in the communication array!

But now that he was thinking about it in detail, there wasn't anything out of place. At the time, she was saying something along the lines of “Where did they all go? Do I have to dig them out and kill them one by one?”, and made him think she was after them. In reality, this “they” might not have meant them; it could mean the Banyue soldiers. Only, Xie Lian thought he was alone in this investigation and naturally thought the lady cultivators were strange and wicked.

To a heavenly official that could easily hand out ten thousand merits, Xie Lian couldn't help but feel a nameless reverence. He elbowed Nan Feng.

“Why didn't you tell me this was the Wind Master sooner? And here I thought she might be some sort of snake spirit or scorpion spirit. What a disgrace!”

Nan Feng's expression darkened. “I didn't know it was the Wind Master. I've never seen the Wind Master like this before. The Wind Master had always been...nevermind.”

Xie Lian understood. This was probably a fake appearance the Lord Wind Master was donning, so he didn't dig into it. He asked, “How did the Wind Master come to the Banyue Pass?”

“To help out,” Nan Feng said. “When we saw them strolling in the streets earlier, they were actually looking for those Banyue soldiers.”

Xie Lian recalled now that the first time he asked about the Banyue Pass in the communication array, in the midst of silent awkwardness, it was the Wind Master's sudden release of ten thousand merits that distracted everyone. The Wind Master probably already took notice of his query then.

As Xie Lian mused, the Wind Master bent down in front of Pei Su.

“Little Pei, I’ve heard everything, you know.”

Pei Su hung his head.

The Wind Master demanded, “Do you admit that in these past two hundred years, you were the one who lured all those travelers into the Ancient Kingdom of Banyue?”

Since he was already caught, Pei Su didn’t argue, and only replied solemnly, “It was me.”

“Why?” the Wind Master demanded.

After a pause, Pei Su asked, “Lord Wind Master has long been suspicious; can you not guess why?”

“Is it only because these souls of the dead are the iron proof of the blood on your hands whilst you were a human, and would become obstacles for your climbing higher in the future?” Wind Master asked.

Pei Su neither agreed nor disagreed.

Xie Lian, who was listening on the side, couldn’t help but ask, “If anything, why didn’t you just kill them directly? Why must you use such a method as feeding them the living in order to appease their resentment? How is that different than using another’s flesh and blood to quench the thirst of one?”

San Lang spoke up, “He couldn’t.”

That was true, too. In the Upper Court, every move by a heavenly official like Pei Su was watched intently by countless eyes. There were many things he couldn’t do directly; he couldn’t use his true form to come down and kill off all those resentful spirits of these soldiers straightforwardly, and he couldn’t send troops to annihilate them either. This was already a concealed affair; if there was too much of a stir, wouldn’t it attract everyone’s gaze? At most, he could only send a clone like A-Zhao down quietly.

Using the scorpion-snakes that Banyue was known to be an expert in manipulating to go out and harm, attracting passersby in to feed the resentful spirits to disperse their resentment, no doubt it was a perfect framing scheme.

“Your General Pei wouldn’t have done something like this at all,” the Wind Master said. “This time, I’m afraid you’ve crossed the line.”

As a heavenly official, that he would release a clone to cause havoc at the Banyue Pass for almost two hundred years, lure innumerable passersby down the wrong path and into the ruins, to die in the mouths of Banyue soldiers, no matter how he could spin it, it wasn't a small deal.

Pei Su only lowered his head and said, "This young one knows."

The Wind Master swept the whisk. "As long as you understand. Reflect on yourself and think on it. We'll talk in the heavens."

"I understand," Pei Su said quietly.

Having finished talking with Pei Su, the Wind Master stuffed the whisk into the back collar of her robe, stood up, and smiled at Xie Lian.

"Your Royal Highness the Crown Prince. I've heard much about you."

To Xie Lian, "Heard much about you" really wasn't a compliment, but nevertheless it was meaningless pleasantries, so he smiled back.

"I'm sure it's nothing. I've heard much about you as well, Lord Wind Master."

"Sorry about before, by the way," the Wind Master said.

Xie Lian paused. "Before? What happened before?"

"Didn't you all run into a windstorm in the desert?"

Xie Lian could remember the mouthfuls of sand and replied, "Yes?"

"I started that," the Wind Master said.

"..."

The Wind Master continued casually, "That windstorm was meant to stop you all from going near the Kingdom of Banyue, but you didn't get blown away, and ended up in Banyue anyway."

The more Xie Lian listened the more he felt something wasn't right. Starting a windstorm to stop them from going to the Banyue Pass, and now this whole thing suddenly came into the open, just what did it mean?

Xie Lian didn't respond, biding to see what the other would say. The Wind Master then continued, "But, in regards to this whole ordeal, I would suggest Your Highness mind your own business and stop putting your hands where they don't belong."

Xie Lian stole a look at Banyue, curled up on the ground, and dreaded.

He was already worried that if this scandal was to reach the Upper Court, the officials could easily muck up the truth, add strokes to where there wasn't, and have Banyue take all the blame while Little Pei ran off scot-free. With Wind Master's sudden appearance, telling him not to mind this business, didn't this cement that they would protect Little Pei?

Without changing his expression, Xie Lian stepped forward to stand in front of Banyue, hiding her behind him, and said warmly, "But I've already put my hands into this business, I can't possibly leave it now."

The Wind Master noticed his gesture and smiled. "Don't be concerned. You can take the Guoshi of Banyue away with you."

That was unexpected. Xie Lian was slightly taken aback, and the Wind Master continued.

"While you were all in the pit, we heard everything from up here. Although the Guoshi has turned into a Savage, when I roamed the city, I saw that she had drawn the array to trap the Banyue soldiers and released all the captured mortals. She didn't hurt anyone, and was even saving people. The only ones I'm taking are General Pei Junior and Ke Mo; you don't have to worry about me placing blame on anyone."

Xie Lian relaxed. "I'm much ashamed! I've been suspicious."

"It's normal to worry," the Wind Master said. "There's an unpleasant culture up in the heavens, after all."

The lady in black looked as if she couldn't stay for another moment, and spoke up. "Are you done? If you're done, then let's go."

The Wind Master rebutted, "Tsk! What's the rush? The more you rush the more I wanna talk!"

Still, she turned her head and smiled, taking out a folding fan from her waist and said, "Your Royal Highness, if there's nothing else, we'll see you in the Upper Court?"

Xie Lian nodded, and the Wind Master opened her fan. On the fan was the word for wind, "Feng", in a slant, and three inclining lines like the wind on the back. This must be the Wind Master's spiritual device. She fanned forward three times, and backwards three times. Suddenly, a gust of wind blew from flat ground.

The wind drew dust and sand, and Xie Lian raised his sleeve to block off the debris. When the wind died down, the two ladies, Pei Su, and Ke Mo had all disappeared, leaving only Xie Lian, San Lang, Nan Feng, and the deeply asleep Banyue behind.

Xie Lian dropped his sleeve, still a little dazed. "What just happened?"

San Lang casually strolled over. "A pretty good thing."

Xie Lian watched him. "Is it?"

"Yeah. The Wind Master was trying to help you by telling you not to get involved."

Nan Feng walked over too. "That's right. You've dug too deep into this business already. The only thing left to do is to file a complaint to the Heavenly Martial Emperor. Don't get yourself involved anymore."

Xie Lian got it. "Is it because of General Pei?"

"Correct," Nan Feng said. "This time you have thoroughly offended him."

Xie Lian laughed. "I knew I was going to offend someone one of these days, I guess it doesn't matter who."

Nan Feng furrowed his brow. "Don't think I'm joking. After the Great Martial Hall, the next most powerful martial palace is Ming Guang. General Pei thinks very highly of Little Pei, and has always tried to boot Quan Yizhen. He's gonna come knocking, looking for trouble."

"Quan Yizhen is the Martial God that rules the West, right?" Xie Lian asked.

"That's the one," Nan Feng replied. "Quan Yizhen is also a new official. He ascended around the same time as Pei Su. He's young, and a little...but, very powerful. General Pei wanted Pei Su to take all the devotees of the West, and he's done well for himself; especially these past few years. Now with you dragging this scandal out into the open, it's not looking good for Pei Su; maybe he'll even be banished. If he gets banished, your luck is gonna turn for the worse too."

Xie Lian rubbed his forehead, mentally taking note that from now on he would have to be more mindful when eating, drinking, and walking. San Lang, however, didn't think it was a big deal.

"Don't worry. Pei Ming is too proud. He won't do anything underhanded."

Nan Feng gave him a look.

"What about the Wind Master?" Xie Lian asked. "She told me not to get involved, so isn't she the one who will file the complaint? Doesn't that mean she'll be the one offending General Pei? I can't have that. Let's call her back. Nan Feng, do you know the password to her personal communication array?"

“You needn’t worry about the Wind Master,” Nan Feng said. “General Pei can hurt you, but he won’t touch her. She may be younger than you, but she’s much more successful in the heavens.”

“...” Xie Lian wasn’t shocked into silence, but was instead thinking. “Who in the heavens is more of a failure than me? I don’t think there’s anyone.”

San Lang laughed. “With that backing, of course she’s successful.”

“Are you talking about the lady in black? She looks to be a strong character too,” Xie Lian remarked.

“No,” San Lang replied. “But she should also be one of the five elemental masters that make up ‘Wind, Water, Rain, Earth, Thunder’. Probably shouldn’t offend her either.”

The Wind Master could start a twister from nothing; obviously powerful. But the lady in black was stronger. Xie Lian recalled the way she watched San Lang as if she’d found out something, and felt rather concerned.

“I agree.”

But still, there were words that Xie Lian thought didn’t need to be said, and he swallowed them.

He thought, “Even with a strong backing, you may not be successful. Back in the day, the Crown Prince of Xianle had the support of the Heavenly Martial Emperor who had ruled all three realms for a thousand years. He was still a failure.”

Xie Lian picked up his fallen bamboo hat, dusted it, seeing that it wasn’t flattened, and sighed in relief. He tied it back around his neck and looked at Nan Feng.

“Were you fighting with the two ladies all this way?”

“Yes. We fought the entire way,” Nan Feng replied, face dark.

Xie Lian patted his shoulders. “Thanks for your hard work.” Suddenly, he remembered there was another one who worked hard, and turned around. “Where’s Fu Yao?”

“Wasn’t he watching the wounded?” Nan Feng responded.

Xie Lian didn’t recall seeing Fu Yao after getting blown out of the Sinner’s Pit. Actually, ever since A-Zhao revealed himself, there had been no more sounds from him. If he didn’t leave back then, he must’ve left when the wind blew.

Xie Lian wasn't actually that worried. He figured Fu Yao didn't want to get mixed up in this mess, so he quickly ran off. But, having heard Nan Feng say "wounded", he came to in shock, and both cried at the same time: "The shanyue fern!"

"The sky only just lightened, no rush," San Lang said.

There was no such thing as "no rush" when it came to saving lives. Even if it was far from being twenty-four hours, who knew if anything might have happened in all that time? Xie Lian had no time to think about Fu Yao. He hurriedly lifted Banyue onto his back, and ran towards the palace grounds.

Once at the palace, Xie Lian laid Banyue down, and immediately picked a few large bushels of the shanyue fern. That mud face was still on the ground; its face a bloody mess amongst its white bones. In the past, Xie Lian would've buried it; but first of all, he was in a hurry to save people, and secondly, that man had been buried in the ground for fifty to sixty years, he must not want to go back. But the corpse of the dead merchant was missing, and Xie Lian stopped, puzzled.

Just then, San Lang emerged from the palace with a small clay pot. When Xie Lian saw, he immediately called out, "Bless you, San Lang."

Banyue was weak and wouldn't wake up, so Xie Lian shrank her and tucked her into the pot. The group of them continued to collect the ferns, and rushed back. It had been about eight hours since they left.

Returning to where Fu Yao had drawn the circle, Xie Lian saw that many were still within it, scared to venture out. The old man who had taken Nan Feng's pill was doing alright, and after applying the herb to his wound, he was able to stand and walk after resting for a while. Only, Xie Lian didn't think there was any need to tell them what the herb used to grow on.

After some time, the merchants were all calmed, and began to worry.

"Where's Tian Sheng? How come they haven't returned yet?"

Xie Lian was too busy picking herbs earlier, and didn't bother with Tian Sheng and the others. He was just thinking about going back to the ruins to search for them when he heard the voice of a boy yelling gege, and uncles coming closer. Xie Lian turned his head, and sure enough, it was Tian Sheng. The boy had a large bushel of the shanyue fern in his arms, and behind him were two other merchants, all huffing and puffing.

Turns out, while on top of the walls of the Sinner's Pit, Banyue swept the soldiers down, and captured Tian Sheng and the merchants. They were terrified, but Banyue only led them down from the pit, and directed them where to go before sending them on their way. They escaped, picked the herbs, buried the dead merchant's body, and ran back, yet still somehow were slower than Xie Lian.

In any case, Xie Lian escorted the caravan out of the Gobi Desert, and ended this journey.

Before they bid farewell, Tian Sheng snuck out to find him and whispered mysteriously, "Gege, I've a question for you."

"Ask away," Xie Lian said.

"You're actually a god, aren't you?"

"..."

Xie Lian was astonished. But also a little touched.

In the past, there was a time when he'd holler and announce to the world, "I'm a god! I am the Crown Prince, His Royal Highness!" and no one would believe him. This time, he hadn't even said anything and the other party asked if he was a god; deeply surprising him, but also moving him.

Tian Sheng added immediately, "I saw you use spells! Don't worry, I won't tell."

"How would you even tell? No one would believe you..." Xie Lian thought.

Tian Sheng continued, "If not for you, I would've gotten thrown into that pit by those ugly ghost soldiers. When I get home, I'll build you a temple and worship you."

Xie Lian watched him pat his chest and make "very big, very big" hand gestures, and couldn't help but let out a laugh. He smiled. "Then, thank you."

San Lang was standing on the side, and he chuckled lightly for some unknown reason. Xie Lian didn't think it was because he thought a child's naive words were ridiculous.

Although children had no idea just how much work went into constructing a temple, receiving such a promise, fulfilled or not, was nevertheless still a happy occasion.

After much hassling, he had to leave behind a random title, "the Scrap Immortal", then he waved and walked off in the opposite direction. Nan Feng drew another Distance Shortening array, and sent them all back to Puqi Shrine.

Opening the door, Xie Lian took the straw mat out, laid it open on the ground, and collapsed on it like a dead body. This was done all in one breath. San Lang sat himself down next to him, hand propping up his chin, and watched him.

Xie Lian sighed. "How long were we gone?"

"Around three, four days," San Lang replied.

Xie Lian sighed again. "Only three, four days; why am I so tired?"

Ever since he'd ascended, he was always worked to the bone like a dog; no lie. After he was done sighing, Xie Lian looked up.

"Eh? Nan Feng? Why haven't you reported back yet?"

"Report back where?" Nan Feng asked.

"Aren't you a junior official of Nan Yang Palace? Won't your general miss you after three, four days?"

"My general isn't in the palace right now, so he won't miss me," Nan Feng replied.

Xie Lian rolled over and got up. "Alright. It'll be good too, if you stay."

"What are you doing?" Nan Feng asked.

Xie Lian looked at him cheerfully. "I'm going to cook you a meal. As a reward for your hard work."

Nan Feng's face dropped drastically. He raised his hand, pressed two fingers together and touched his temple, as if receiving someone's private communication. He got up and turned.

"There's an emergency at the palace, I'll see you later."

Xie Lian waved his hand. "What? Nan Feng, don't go! How can there suddenly be an emergency? I really want to thank you for everything—"

"THERE'S AN EMERGENCY!" Nan Feng roared, and ran out the door.

Xie Lian sat back down on the mat and looked at San Lang. "I guess he's not hungry."

There was a loud bang before San Lang could reply, and it was Nan Feng who came back, having slammed open the door in a rush.

"YOU TWO—!!"

Xie Lian and San Lang were sitting together on the mat and both raised their heads to look at him. "What about us two?"

Nan Feng pointed his finger at San Lang, then at Xie Lian, his words stuck in his throat, unable to speak. Then finally, "I will be back!"

"You're very welcome to," Xie Lian said.

Nan Feng gave San Lang one last stink eye before closing the door and leaving.

Xie Lian crossed his arms and tilted his head like San Lang often did, and said, "Looks like there really is an emergency."

He turned to look at the boy next to him and smiled cheerfully. "He's not hungry, how about you?"

San Lang smiled cheerfully back. "I'm starving."

Xie Lian grinned and stood up again, turned around and casually cleaned the altar table.

"Alright then. What do you want to eat, Hua Cheng?"

Behind him, there was silence. Then chuckling.

"I still prefer the name 'San Lang'."

Ch.30: Poking the Ghost King; Crown Prince Seeks Truth

Back still facing San Lang, Xie Lian said, "Crimson Rain Sought Flower?"

"Your Royal Highness the Crown Prince," San Lang replied.

Xie Lian finally turned around with a grin. "That's the first time I've heard you address me like that."

The red-clad youth sat on the mat, and adjusted his legs, also grinning. "How does it feel?"

Xie Lian gave it a thought, and replied truthfully, "It feels...a little different than when others call me by that title."

"Hm? How so?" Hua Cheng asked.

Xie Lian tilted his head, his eyes squinting a little, "It's hard to say, it's just..."

When others called him "Your Highness", it was sometimes emotionless and all business like Ling Wen. But most of the time, when people called him "Your Highness", it was laced with a sense of disdain; like intentionally addressing an ugly woman as a beauty, somewhat sarcastic.

Yet when Hua Cheng called him "Your Highness", those two words were uttered with grave sincerity. So, while it was hard to describe, Xie Lian felt when Hua Cheng called him "Your Highness", it felt different than when others called him "Your Highness".

He continued, "That night at Mount Yujun, the groom who took me away was you, right?"

Seeing Hua Cheng's meaningful smirk, Xie Lian realized his words may have meant something else, and corrected himself.

"I meant, the groom in disguise who led me away was you, right?"

"I wasn't disguising myself as a groom," Hua Cheng replied.

Technically speaking, Hua Cheng wasn't wrong. The young man at the time never said he was the groom or anything; in fact, he didn't say a thing at all. He only stopped in front of the marriage sedan and extended his hand. It was Xie Lian who went with him willingly!

"Fine. Then, why did you appear at the time?" Xie Lian asked.

"This question only has two answers," Hua Cheng said. "First, I came especially for Your Royal Highness; second, I was passing by and was free. Which do you think is more believable?"

Xie Lian counted the number of days Hua Cheng had spent with him, and replied earnestly. "Which is more believable I can't say, but you really do seem to have a lot of free time."

With his left arm holding his right elbow and his right hand propping his chin, Xie Lian gave Hua Cheng a once over and nodded. "You're quite different than what the rumours say."

Hua Cheng changed his sitting position, but still with a hand propping up his cheek, he watched Xie Lian and said, "Oh? And how did you find out I'm me?"

The images of that umbrella dripping with blood, that gentle clinking silver chain, and that cold silver vambrace filled Xie Lian's mind. He thought, "It's not like you were trying very hard to hide yourself." But when words dropped from his lips, they became something else.

He said in a serious voice, "Even after all the probing you gave nothing away, so you must be a Supreme. You're dressed all in red like the maples, like blood, and seem knowledgeable of everything, capable of everything, and know no fear. Such a disposition, other than that Crimson Rain Sought Flower that even all of heaven fears, there doesn't seem to be any other candidate."

Hua Cheng laughed, "Shall I take those words as a compliment?"

"Can't you tell they're compliments?" Xie Lian thought.

"Sparing so many words, how come Your Royal Highness doesn't question my motives in coming close to you?" Hua Cheng asked, his smile curbed somewhat.

"If you didn't want to say anything, if I asked, would you tell? Or, you might not tell me the truth," Xie Lian said.

"That's not necessarily true. Besides, you can always boot me out."

Xie Lian replied, "You're so powerful; if I booted you out now, if you really wanted to do something bad, wouldn't you just change skin and come back?"

The two were staring at each other, grinning, when just then, a small knocking noise broke the temporary silence in the shrine. They looked to where the sound came from and there wasn't anyone; only that small, black clay pot rolling on the ground.

It was the same pot Banyue was tucked in. Xie Lian had placed it next to the mat, but somehow it had tipped itself over and rolled to the door. Blocked by the wooden door built by Hua Cheng, it started hitting the door by rolling to it repeatedly. Xie Lian was worried it might break itself, so he opened the door, and the little clay pot rolled itself to the grass field outside.

Xie Lian followed behind it, and saw that once the little clay pot made it to the grass field, it stood itself up. Even if it was only a pot, it gave the sense that it was gazing at the night sky. Hua Cheng also emerged from the shrine, and Xie Lian called out to the pot.

“Banyue, are you awake?”

Good thing that when they returned from the Gobi it was already deep into the night, otherwise, if anyone should see Xie Lian ask how a pot was doing, they would probably throw a fit.

A moment later, the sulky voice of a young girl came from the pot, “General Hua.”

Xie Lian sat down next to it and soothed, “Banyue, have you come out to stargaze? Why don’t you come out?”

Hua Cheng was leaning against a tree next to them and said, “She only just left the Banyue ruins. Probably best if she stays in there for a while longer.”

Xie Lian thought that advice was sound. After all, Banyue had been stuck in Banyue for two hundred years; the sudden change of pace might be hard to adjust to.

“Then you best stay in there and heal. This is where I cultivate, you don’t have to worry about anything. Don’t think about those soldiers and that general anymore.”

The pot shook twice as if trying to say something. After chewing on his words, Xie Lian spoke up.

“Banyue, the incident this time actually didn’t concern you. Your scorpion-snakes were…”

“General Hua, I couldn’t move at the time, but I heard everything,” Banyue said gloomily.

Xie Lian stopped. Only then did he learn that Pei Su only sealed Banyue’s movement, but not her senses. “Just as well.”

Since she heard everything, then just as well.

The clay pot asked, “General Hua, what will happen to General Pei Junior?”

Xie Lian crossed his arms in his sleeves. “I don’t know. But, mistakes will always be punished.”

Another moment of silence, and the pot shook twice, and Xie Lian finally understood that it was nodding in agreement.

“General Pei Junior is actually not a bad person,” Banyue said.

“Is that right?”

“En,” Banyue replied. “He’s helped me before.”

Somehow, Xie Lian’s mind was suddenly filled with many more things.

Banyue often received beatings; using the words of other Yong’an children, she had a face that “asked for it”.

It was a long time after Xie Lian had known her before he learned of it too, since no matter how much beating Banyue received, she wouldn’t tell anyone. Until one day, when Xie Lian saw a group of children pressing her face into the mud, he learned where all those bruises on her face came from.

But after a while, when he asked her about it, she only remembered that she had to wash the handkerchief from the boy who pulled her out of the mud pit before returning it, and she recalled nothing else.

She remembered no one who beat her; the ones who had saved her once, she remembered for a lifetime.

Banyue continued, “Although Ke Mo always scorned that he’d confounded my mind, that I had been completely used, whether he used me or not, it was my own will to open the fortress gates.”

Xie Lian didn’t know what to say anymore, but somewhere in his heart, he felt a softness. A moment later, he patted that clay pot. “Alright, it’s all in the past. Oh, by the way. Banyue, the name Hua Xie is fake, and I haven’t been a general for a long time. You don’t have to keep calling me General Hua anymore.”

“Then how should I address you?” Banyue asked.

That was actually a good question. If Banyue also called him “Your Highness” seriously, it’d feel weird. Xie Lian didn’t really care about his address either, he just wanted to change the subject.

“That’s up to you. I suppose it’s okay if you keep calling me General Hua.”

Only, there’s another one here named Hua, so that might cause some confusion. But then he thought, “Hua Xie” was a fake name he took from the first word of the title “Flower-Crowned Martial God”, so “Hua Cheng” may very well be a fake name too? That they both coincidentally picked the same surname was rather amusing.

“I’m sorry, General Hua,” Banyue said again.

Xie Lian turned back to look at her and said woefully, "Banyue, why are you always apologizing to me?"

Did he really look that sorry to people?

From within the pot, Banyue stated, "I want to save the common people."

Xie Lian: "..."

"General Hua, you said that once," Banyue said.

Xie Lian: "???"

He hurriedly pressed down on the clay pot. "Wait, hold on a sec!"

"Wait for what?" Banyue asked.

Xie Lian took a peek at Hua Cheng, who was still leaning against the tree with his arms crossed, and said in a low voice, "Did I really say that?"

Those words were his favourite saying when he was only ten-something years old. In the many hundreds of years thereafter, he shouldn't have uttered them at all; he couldn't believe it.

But Banyue was firm. "General, those were your words."

Xie Lian still wanted to struggle. "I don't think so..."

Banyue told him sternly and coldly, "Oh, no, you did say them. There was once, you asked us all what we wanted to do when we're older. Everyone answered, and after you also said: 'My dream was to save the common people'."

"..."

So that was it. Xie Lian used his hand to cover his entire forehead.

"Um. Banyue. Why would you remember so clearly something so randomly said?"

Banyue was confused. "Random? But General Hua, I had thought those words were said very earnestly."

Xie Lian raised his head to gaze at the night sky, feeling helpless. "Haha...really? Maybe. I don't remember whatever else I might have said."

“You also said, ‘Do what you think is right!’” Banyue told him. “Nothing can block your way! ‘Even if you fall into rotten mud a hundred times you must get up with determination!’ There’s a lot, like this.”

“Pfft.”

He didn’t need to look back to know that it was definitely Hua Cheng under the tree who heard and laughed.

Even smothering the pot now wouldn’t help, and Xie Lian thought inwardly, “...what...nonsense! ...Why did I keep saying those kinds of things...I’m nothing like that at all...am I??”

“But, I don’t know what’s right anymore,” Banyue said.

Xie Lian froze.

“I wanted to do as what General Hua said, and save the people,” Banyue said. “But in the end, I destroyed the Kingdom of Banyue.”

Her voice was lost. “And it seemed that no matter what I’d do...the results were all horrible. General Hua, I know I didn’t do things right, but can you tell me, where did I go wrong? What should I do in order to do as you’ve said and...save the common people?”

“...I’m sorry, Banyue.” Xie Lian replied, “The question of how to save the common people... I didn’t know the answers back then, and even now I still don’t.”

Banyue was silent for a moment, then said dejectedly, “General Hua, to be honest, it feels like the past two hundred years, I’ve no idea what I’ve been doing. What a failure.”

Hearing her, Xie Lian became more depressed, thinking, “Doesn’t that make me more of a failure? That I’ve lived eight hundred years for nothing?”

Xie Lian left Banyue the little ghost in the pot to stargaze alone to calm down, and went back inside Puqi Shrine with Hua Cheng.

After closing the door, Xie Lian suddenly spoke up. “Banyue remained at the Banyue Pass willingly. It wasn’t because she became a Savage that she was trapped there.”

She had always remembered that it was her who opened the fortress gates, and had never used any such excuse like she was doing it for the people. It was to help the Banyue soldiers to vent their resentment, so they could leave this world sooner, that she allowed Ke Mo to lead them to murder her over and over.

Xie Lian shook his head. "If General Pei Junior really didn't want to leave those Banyue soldiers behind, and didn't want the heavens to find out either, he could very well send a clone to secretly descend to take care of them. Why did he have to use that method?"

"Clones don't have the same amount of power," Hua Cheng said. "You saw how Pei Su's clone A-Zhao was? He couldn't take care of so many Banyue soldiers, so feeding them the living was the fastest and easiest way to disperse their resentment."

"Why did it have to be so fast?" Xie Lian wondered.

"Maybe it's so your little friend Banyue wouldn't hang so painfully as many times," Hua Cheng replied.

Xie Lian was silent for a moment. "Then what about those mortals?"

Hua Cheng replied quietly, "They're heavenly officials. Of course a mortal's life is nothing but ants in their eyes. Pei Su is a classic high-ranked god. As long as it wasn't discovered, killing a few hundred people was no different than stomping a few hundred insects to death."

Xie Lian glanced at him, and recalled that when San Lang jumped into the Sinner's Pit, he wiped out all the Banyue soldiers in a flash. He turned to him and said, "Clones don't have the same amount of power? I see your clone is pretty powerful."

Hua Cheng arched his brow. "Of course. But I'm the real thing."

Xie Lian turned to look at him, surprised. "Eh? This is your true form?"

"One hundred percent authentic," Hua Cheng declared.

If anything must be blamed, it would have to have been how Hua Cheng looked as if he was welcoming Xie Lian to test it out himself. Without thinking, Xie Lian raised a finger and poked Hua Cheng's face.

After poking, Xie Lian came to in shock and yelped "oh no!" in his head.

He was only curious to see what a Supreme Ghost King's fake skin would feel like, but apparently, his body moved faster than his mind and poked him! What a disgrace!

To have someone suddenly poke him, Hua Cheng looked somewhat shocked too, but he was always calm and collected, so his expression cleared instantly. He didn't say anything, but his raised brows went even higher, as if waiting for Xie Lian to explain, and the laughter in his eyes remained.

Xie Lian couldn't explain himself; he looked at his own finger, hid it away, and casually said, "...Not bad."

Hua Cheng finally burst out laughing, and crossed his arms with his head tilted, "What's not bad? Do you mean this skin?"

"It's really well made," Xie Lian said sincerely. "But..."

"But what?" Hua Cheng asked.

Xie Lian stared at his face and studied it for a moment. Then finally, "But, can I see your real face?"

This time, Hua Cheng didn't respond immediately and dropped his arms. Maybe it was all in Xie Lian's head, but Hua Cheng's eyes darkened slightly, and Xie Lian's heart tightened in spite of himself.

MXTX Author Notes:

In regard to whether if it's the real person or a flesh clone, you can understand it like this:

- Sun Wukong pulls out a monkey hair and blows out hundreds of monkeys. Those are all clones.
- Sun Wukong knows the seventy-two earthly transformations and turns into a handsome little gege. This one is the real thing; only the skin has changed!

Ch.31: Poking the Ghost King; Crown Prince Seeks Truth 2

When the air froze, Xie Lian knew his question may have crossed the line.

Although in the past few days the two of them had gotten along well, if Hua Cheng never revealed his real face and didn't change back even after his identity was revealed, then he had his reasons, and Xie Lian was in no place to push. Without waiting for his response, Xie Lian widened his smile.

"I was just asking, don't take it to heart."

Hua Cheng closed his eyes, and after a moment, he smiled softly. "I'll let you see it someday, if there's a chance."

If anyone else were to say that, then it'd naturally be perfunctory; "someday" usually meant "please forget it." But it was Hua Cheng who said those words, so Xie Lian felt "someday" meant "someday", and it would for sure happen. This made him even more curious, and he grinned.

"Then I'll wait 'til the day you can show me. Let's rest for now."

After messing around for half the night, Xie Lian had long since given up on cooking anything, and returned to the straw mat. Hua Cheng also laid down next to him. No one bothered questioning why after revealing each other's identities that a god and a ghost could still lay together on a rumpled mat, laughing and chatting, and simply hanging out. The straw mat didn't have pillows, so Hua Cheng used his own arm, and Xie Lian imitated him, using his own arm too.

He chatted casually, "The ghost realm seems so idle. Don't you guys ever need to report back to anyone?"

Hua Cheng not only had his arm as a pillow, he'd crossed his legs too. He replied, "Report to whom? I'm the biggest there is. Besides, we mind our own business; no one bothers anyone."

So, the ghost realm was formed by many disorganized bands of lost souls and feral ghosts.

Xie Lian replied, "Is that so? I thought it'd be like the Heavenly Court, where there's a central government. So if that's the case, have you met any other ghost kings before?"

"I have," Hua Cheng said.

"Even the Green Ghost Qi Rong?"

"You mean that lowly, vulgar trash?"

“Well, what do I say to that?” Xie Lian thought.

Thankfully, he needn't say anything, as Hua Cheng continued, “I greeted him and he ran away.”

Instincts told Xie Lian that this “greeting” couldn't have been your regular kind of greeting. Sure enough, Hua Cheng said casually, “And then I received the title ‘Crimson Rain Sought Flower’.”

“...”

So when he mentioned wiping out the nest of another ghost, he was talking about the Green Ghost Qi Rong, and this “greeting” was annihilation. What an extraordinary greeting, Xie Lian thought.

He rubbed his chin and asked, “Do you have something against the Green Ghost Qi Rong?”

“Yeah,” Hua Cheng replied.

Xie Lian didn't know whether to laugh or cry, thinking: did Hua Cheng challenge those thirty-three heavenly officials also because he didn't like their faces?

“The heavens all call him vulgar, and even the ghost realm rejects him. Is that true?”

“It's true. Even Black Water is disgusted with him,” Hua Cheng replied.

“Who's Black Water?” Xie Lian asked, then recalled, “Oh, is that the one called ‘Ship-Sinking Black Water’?”

“That's right. He's also known as the Black Water Demon Xuan.”

Xie Lian remembered that this Black Water Demon Xuan was also a Supreme, but the Green Ghost Qi Rong was only almost a Supreme.

He asked, interested, “Are you close with this Demon Xuan?”

“No,” Hua Cheng replied lazily. “There aren't many in the ghost realm I'm close with.”

Now Xie Lian was curious. “Is that so? I thought you'd have many subordinates. Maybe our definition of ‘close’ is different?”

Hua Cheng raised his brows. "Yeah. In the ghost realm, those lower than Supreme have no right to speak to me."

It was an exceedingly arrogant statement, but Hua Cheng made it sound so indisputable and self-evident. Xie Lian smiled softly.

"Even though you're not close, you still know about them. You have it pretty good in the ghost realm; there's only so many big names, not like the heavens. There's already so many officials to remember in the upper court, and more waiting to ascend in the middle court; it's like an ocean of names."

"What good is it to remember their names? Don't bother. It's a waste of your brain," Hua Cheng said.

"Haha, it's kind of offensive if you can't remember their names."

The heavenly officials loved their faces. Hua Cheng clicked his tongue.

"If they can be offended by such a small thing, then they're nothing but narrow-minded trash."

After chatting for a while, Xie Lian didn't want to dig too deeply into the subject, lest they touch on something sensitive, so he changed the topic away from the difference between the two realms.

He glanced at the closed wooden door and wondered, "Banyue, that child; I wonder when she'll come back in."

The bold words "I want to save the common people" returned and reverberated in his head, pouring a million chaotic images in his mind, and Xie Lian had to forcibly push them down. Just then, Hua Cheng spoke up.

"Those were good words."

"Which ones?" Xie Lian asked.

"I want to save the common people'," Hua Cheng replied leisurely.

"..."

Xie Lian was thunderstruck.

He flipped around and curled into a shrimp, wishing for another pair of arms so he could cover both his face and his ears. He groaned, "...San Lang..."

Hua Cheng seemed to have nudged closer, and said in a serious tone right behind him, "Hm? What's wrong with those words?"

Hua Cheng wouldn't back down and Xie Lian couldn't win against him, so he flipped back over and said helplessly, "It's silly."

"What's there to be afraid of?" Hua Cheng said. "To dare speak of the world, whether to save or to destroy, is admirable. The former is harder than the latter, so it's even more respectable."

Xie Lian puffed a laugh and shook his head. "To dare speak you have to be able to follow through, and you have to actually achieve it."

He laid an arm over his eyes. "Oh, alright. I suppose that's nothing. What Banyue said was already pretty good. I've said sillier things when I was even younger."

Hua Cheng laughed. "Oh? Like what? Let's hear it."

Xie Lian was pensive for a moment, and smiled softly as he chased his memories. "Many, many years ago, there was someone who told me they couldn't live on anymore. They asked me for what reason they were alive, and what was the meaning of their life."

He glanced at Hua Cheng. "Do you know how I answered?"

It might have just been Xie Lian's imagination, but there seemed to be light in Hua Cheng's eyes. He asked gently, "How did you answer?"

Xie Lian said, "I told them: 'If you don't know how to live on anymore, then live for me!'

"If you don't know the meaning to your life, then make me that meaning, and use me as the reason to live'.

"Ha ha ha...."

As Xie Lian spoke, he couldn't help but let out a small laugh and shook his head. "Even now I don't understand what I was thinking back then. How did I ever have the courage to tell someone to make me the meaning of their life?"

"It really was something that could only have been said back then. Long ago, I really thought I was invincible and fearless. If you asked me to say the same words now, there is no way they would ever leave my lips again."

Xie Lian continued slowly, "I don't know what happened to that person after. But to become someone's reason to live was already a heavy responsibility; how dare I speak of the world?"

Silence blanketed Puqi Shrine.

After a while, San Lang said softly, "Something like saving the world, it really doesn't matter how you do it. But, although brave, it's foolish."

"Yeah," Xie Lian agreed.

Hua Cheng continued, "Although foolish, it's brave."

Xie Lian grinned. "Thanks."

"You're welcome," Hua Cheng said.

The two stared at the holey ceiling of Puqi Shrine in amiable silence, and Hua Cheng spoke up again.

"You know, we've only known each other for so many days. Is it alright for you to say so much to me?"

Xie Lian puffed again and waved his hand. "What's the problem? Whatever. Those who have known each other for decades can become strangers in a day. We met by chance, and we may part by chance. If we like each other then we shall continue to meet; if we don't then we shall part. There's no banquet in the world that doesn't come to an end, so I'll say what I want to say."

Hua Cheng seemed to have chuckled, then suddenly said, "If."

Xie Lian turned his head to face him. "If?"

Hua Cheng didn't turn around, but continued to look at the dilapidated ceiling of the shrine. Xie Lian observed the left side of the handsome young man's face.

Hua Cheng said softly, "If I was ugly."

"Huh?" Xie Lian gaped.

Hua Cheng finally turned his head slightly. "If my real face is ugly, would you still want to see it?"

Xie Lian was taken aback. "Is it? Although there's no real reason, but I think your real face mustn't be that bad."

“Who knows,” Hua Cheng said, half-jokingly. “What if I’m discoloured, disfigured, ugly, monstrous and horrible; what will you do?”

At first, Xie Lian thought this line of inquiry was rather fascinating. So the number one ghost king of the ages, feared by the heavens, would care about his looks? But when he thought about it deeply, he didn’t think it was very funny anymore.

If he remembered correctly, in the many rumored backstories of Hua Cheng, one had said he was a disfigured child from birth, or something along those lines. If that was the case, then he must’ve grown up discriminated against by others. Maybe it was because of this reason that he was particularly sensitive about his looks.

Thus, Xie Lian chewed on his words.

“Well...” He used his warmest, most sincere tone. “To be honest, the reason I want to see your real face is only because, you see, we’re already like this...”

“Hm?” Hua Cheng piped up. “Like what?”

“...Well, now we’re sort of friends, right? So, if we’re friends, then we should be honest with each other. So me wanting to see your real face has nothing to do with how you look. You ask what I will do, of course I won’t do anything. Don’t worry, as long as it’s your real face, I’m sure I’ll...why are you laughing? I’m being serious.”

When Xie Lian reached the last part, he could feel the boy next to him shaking. At first, for a moment, he had thought “are my words so moving that he’s touched like this?”, and was too embarrassed to turn around to see. But after a while, the soft laughter from next to him very obviously leaked out. Xie Lian felt rather bummed, and placed a hand on his shoulder to give it a little push.

“San Lang...why are you laughing so much? Did I say something wrong?”

Hua Cheng immediately stopped shaking and turned around. “No, you’re very right.”

Xie Lian felt even more bummed at those words. “You’re so insincere...”

“I promise, you won’t find another person more sincere than me in this world,” Hua Cheng replied.

Xie Lian didn’t want to talk anymore and flipped over, his back facing Hua Cheng. “Forget it, time to sleep. Don’t talk.”

Hua Cheng laughed softly again, then said, “Next time.”

Even though he was determined to sleep, hearing Hua Cheng speak, Xie Lian couldn't help but reply: "What, next time?"

Hua Cheng whispered, "The next time we meet, I will use my real appearance to greet you."

There was much to ponder about those words, and Xie Lian should've kept questioning him. But after a long night, an unstoppable drowsiness overtook him; he couldn't hang on, and fell deeply asleep.

The next morning, when Xie Lian woke, the spot next to him was already empty.

He stumbled to get up, and dazedly walked around the shrine. When he opened the door, there were no silhouettes to be seen outside. It appeared it was real. The boy had indeed left.

However, the fallen leaves had been swept into a pile, and next to that pile was a small clay pot. Xie Lian took the pot inside and placed it on the altar. Right then, he suddenly discovered there seemed to be something extra on his usually bare chest.

Xie Lian raised his hand to touch it, and found just below the cursed collar, there was an exceedingly thin chain, hanging loose and light.

Xie Lian immediately removed it from his neck. It was a silver chain, and since it was thin and light, he didn't feel there was anything on his body before. Hanging from the chain was a crystal-clear ring.

Ch.32: In the Great Martial Hall; Crown Prince Meets Crown Prince

Xie Lian knew this ring must be something Hua Cheng left behind. He held it in his hand and wondered for a moment:

“What could this be?”

When Xie Lian was still a Crown Prince, he grew up in the Palace of Xianle. The Kingdom of Xianle had always revelled in beautiful, precious objects; collectors were abundant, and the palace itself was therefore of course glorious and bedazzling. Golden columns, jaded steps, innumerable treasures and precious jewels; even the noble children played around with various coloured gems like toys. By the looks of this ring, it did seem like it was made of diamond.

However, its shape was exquisite; perhaps even the most skilled jeweler would not be able to craft the ethereal natural beauty it emanated. Moreover, of all the diamonds he had ever seen, this stone was extraordinarily clear; shimmering like a crystal, fascinating and sublime, making it hard for him to determine exactly what it might be made of.

Still, even if he couldn't tell what the ring was made of, it was for sure an item of extreme significance. Besides, if it was found around his neck, then this was not something that was accidentally dropped; it was more than likely a gift from Hua Cheng, as a keepsake.

Xie Lian was a little surprised; receiving a keepsake like this. He smiled softly, resolved to take good care of it, and to ask the boy what the gift meant the next time they met. The only place he owned was the broken-down shrine; there was nowhere appropriate for him to hide treasure, so after some thought, the best place was on his person after all. Xie Lian put the silver chain around his neck once more.

After returning from running around Mount Yujun and the Banyue Pass back-to-back, Xie Lian laid in Puqi Shrine paralyzed for a few days. If it wasn't for some of the overly-passionate villagers who'd come and offer buns or porridge, he'd probably have stayed incapacitated for many more days. He spent his days thus, until one day, Ling Wen suddenly sent him a notice: return to the heavens at once.

Judging by her tone, something bad was about to go down. Xie Lian could more or less guess what it might be, and was already mentally prepared.

“Is this about the Banyue Pass?”

“That's right,” Ling Wen replied. “When you've returned to the heavens, come directly to the Great Martial Hall.”

Upon hearing “Great Martial Hall”, Xie Lian froze. Jun Wu³⁸ was back.

After his third ascension, he still hadn’t greeted Jun Wu. As the number one Martial God, Jun Wu spent his days deep in cultivation behind closed doors, or was out patrolling the realms, keeping the world secure. Now that Jun Wu was back, Xie Lian couldn’t get out of making this trip to the heavens. And so, he hiked up to the Heavenly Capital once more, after only a few days of rest.

All manner of gods and immortals had their divine palaces built here, each with their own history and style. Banding together, they formed the great city; sculpted pillars and muraled buildings here, little bridges and streams there.

The Heavenly Court had one main road: the Martial Deity Avenue. Although there were many such roads built in remembrance of Jun Wu in the mortal realm, they were only mere shadows and copies of the real one in the heavens. Xie Lian walked on through the expansive road and headed towards the Heavenly Court. En route, there were many heavenly officials in a hurry, and not a single one dared greet him.

Truthfully, there were usually not many who would greet him when he visited the Heavenly Court. However, “not greet” meant no fellow officials would approach him or initiate any conversation, but they would still nod in acknowledgement, as was proper. Right now, everyone was pretending he wasn’t there; as if just glancing at him would get them in trouble. If they were in front of him, they would hurry away; if they were behind him, they would slow their pace, leaving him a wide berth, afraid to approach. Xie Lian was already used to this treatment, and didn’t think anything of it; after all, he did just drag down the popular and newly-ascended General Pei Junior. It’d be more strange if no one stayed away. Yet unexpectedly, as he walked, a voice suddenly called out from behind him.

“Your Royal Highness!”

Hearing the call, Xie Lian was amazed, thinking whoever it was that dared call him truly had commendable courage. But when he turned his head back, the junior official that called for the Royal Highness rushed by him, and ran towards someone who was walking further ahead of him.

He called as he ran, “Jeez, Your Royal Highness! How can you forget your identity pass going to the Great Martial Hall? How would you even get in?”

Only then did Xie Lian get it. No wonder. Of course the address “Your Royal Highness” wasn’t directed at him. There were a number of Crown Princes in the heavens, so some confusion wasn’t anything extraordinary.

³⁸ “Jun Wu” [君吾] translates to “The Lord, I Am”.

Yet when he glanced over and saw the other Crown Prince, he paused.

That young man had thick brows and bright eyes with a wide smile. This smile was vastly different than those of many other heavenly officials; it was one that was pure and genuine without anything behind it, and added an air of youth to his handsome face. However, to have another harsher official, like Mu Qing, provide comment, they would probably call it an air of foolishness. The young man was decked in armour, proud and heroic; but the armour on him didn't give off a sense of blood and battle, rather, it gave him an air of royal nobility, candid and brilliant.

Xie Lian stopped in his step and stared at the young man. The two in front felt his gaze and turned back to face him. When the junior official saw who it was, his face dropped immediately. Xie Lian lightly nodded his head and smiled at him.

“Greetings, Your Royal Highness.”

The other Crown Prince obviously was one who didn't mind the everyday details and didn't recognize his face, so when he saw someone greeting him, he immediately returned it with a bright smile and shouted, “Greetings!”

The junior official beside him gave him a little push, and hurried. “Let's go, Your Highness. We still need to go to the Great Martial Hall.”

The young man, still unaware and inconscient, was weirded out by the sudden push. “Why are you pushing me???”

Xie Lian puffed out a laugh and that junior official looked to be in even more of a hurry. He urged, “The Emperor is probably already waiting for us, please let's go, Your Highness!”

The other Crown Prince could only give Xie Lian a confused look before turning to leave.

Xie Lian stayed where he was as they walked away, and soon, whispers from officials of lower rank floated into his ears from afar.

“...Well, that was awkward. The world is such a small place.”

“But they're both officials in the heavens, it was only a matter of time. If you ask me, General Nan Yang bumping into General Xuan Zhen is more exciting an affair.”

“Hahaha, what's the rush? They'll be bumping into each other real soon! They're all waiting at the Great Martial Hall, aren't they?”

Suddenly, someone commented: “Never mind a small world; really, it's people comparing each other that does it. People really are so different from one another; they're both Crown Princes, but His Highness Tai Hua is truly noble. If it was him, he wouldn't do anything shameful even when fallen from grace."

"The Kingdom of Yong'an was more prosperous than the Kingdom of Xianle after all, so of course the Crown Prince of Yong'an would be stronger than that of Xianle. How the grass grows depends on the land it grew on. Simple logic."

The Northern territory belonged to the Palace of Ming Guang, the Martial God Pei Ming; the Western Palace Qi Ying was Quan Yizheng; the Southeast Palace of Nan Yang was Feng Xin; the Southwest Palace of Xuan Zhen was Mu Qing; and the one the Eastern territory belonged to was the Palace of Tai Hua, the Martial God Lang Qianqiu.

Lang Qianqiu, when he was a mortal, was a crown prince like Xie Lian. However, he was the Crown Prince of Yong'an. The Kingdom of Yong'an was the country that was built after the fall of Xianle, and the founder of Yong'an was the rebel general who successfully overthrew the royal capital of Xianle.

When Xie Lian drifted in the mortal realm, he had also visited the east, and naturally knew that the Crown Prince of Yong'an had ascended. As heavenly officials, it would be inevitable for them to bump into each other, so he didn't think much of it. Maybe to anyone else, the gossiping whispers, albeit not really whispers, would probably never be heard, for fear of retribution. But those words were uttered without fear of Xie Lian hearing; maybe even hoping for something exciting to happen should he overheard. So, Xie Lian pretended to have heard nothing, and casually walked away.

Just then, another voice came from behind called out, "Your Highness!"

"Not again?!" Xie Lian thought, but this time when he turned around, it was someone who was addressing him for real.

Ling Wen, with her dark-circled eyes and arms full of scrolls, approached him. "Everyone has gone to the Great Martial Hall for the meeting. Be more mindful once you've reached the hall."

Xie Lian understood. "What do you think General Pei Junior's sentence will be?"

"Exile, probably," Ling Wen replied.

"That's actually not too bad. Not too severe," Xie Lian thought.

Exile was considered a "Temporary Banishment" for officials who had committed crimes; meaning the term of punishment was negotiable, and there might still be opportunities for resuming duties. If one day they should be found to be on their best behaviour, they might yet get fished back up; maybe in thirty to fifty years, maybe in a hundred or two hundred years. But to Xie Lian, this “not too bad” was of course judging by his standards. To General Pei, it would be a completely different story.

Xie Lian remembered another thing, and said, “Oh yeah. Ling Wen, how goes the search for the boy with the Human Face Disease from Mount Yujun I told you about last time? Do you have any news?”

“I’m really sorry, Your Highness. I don’t have anything at the moment. We’re working on it,” Ling Wen replied.

Even for a heavenly official, to find a person in such a vast world was not an easy task. Although the heavens might be faster, it was still only a difference of ten years in the mortal realm versus one year in the heavens.

Xie Lian could only express gratitude. “Thank you for your hard work.”

Just then, they reached the end of the avenue, and a majestic palace came to view before him.

The palace had stood through the ages, yet it only showed enduring excellence, and none of its antiquity. Layers of glazed golden shingles pyramided, blinding in their scintillation. Xie Lian raised his head and glanced at the “Great Martial Hall” beneath the golden roof; the words, written with power and with vigour, were exactly the same as a few hundred years ago, unchanging. He lowered his head and stepped into the hall. Within, numerous heavenly officials had already gathered, either in their own groups of two or three, or by their own lonesome, standing in silence.

The only ones who may enter the hall were the heavenly officials who had officially ascended; all imperial sons of heavens or indomitable overlords, each bursting with spiritual might. They eyed each other in silent pride and judgment, their splendor overwhelming. At this time and place, everyone held their breaths, not daring to make a sound. On the throne at the very end of the hall sat a martial god decked in a pure white armour.

This martial god was refined and dignified, his eyes closed and his lips unspeaking; poised and solemn. Behind him was the magnificent Great Martial Hall, but beneath his feet was a pure white snowy peak. As if sensing Xie Lian entering the hall, he opened his eyes.

That pair of eyes were obsidian-black, but bright and clear, as if formed by the melted snow of a lake frozen for millions of years. When he blinked open his eyes, that martial god smiled softly.

“Xianle, you’ve come.”

Xie Lian lowered his head in a bow and said nothing.

When Jun Wu spoke, he was not loud, but his deep voice echoed through the entire Great Martial Hall. Then, all the eyes of the officials focused on Xie Lian, and he understood immediately.

It appeared this meeting wasn't for discussing General Pei Junior and the Banyue Pass scandal.

The spotlight, it seemed, was on him.

Ch.33: In the Great Martial Hall; Crown Prince Meets Crown Prince 3

Ling Wen approached the throne, dressed all in black and without a word or smile. She drew a line through an item on her memo.

“My Lord, there are a few heavenly officials still on patrol in the mortal realm, unable to return.”

Jun Wu nodded. “They have already reported in.”

Ling Wen acknowledged the response, and Jun Wu turned to Xie Lian.

“Xianle, I’m sure you are curious as to why you have been summoned here today.”

Xie Lian still had his head bowed. “I can guess. However, I had assumed the matter with General Pei Junior was already settled.”

Just then, a man’s voice rang out: “Whether if it’s been settled is yet hard to say.”

The voice that came from behind was lyrical. When Xie Lian turned his head to look, a martial god stepped into the great hall; his hand resting on the hilt of his sword, he walked towards the front. When he passed by Xie Lian, he stopped in his step, and the corners of his lips lifted.

“Your Royal Highness. I’ve heard much about you.”

This martial god looked to be about twenty-six to twenty-seven years old, graceful and confident in his actions. Looking at his face, Xie Lian thought he looked even more handsome than that statue he saw at Mount Yujun; it was the kind of handsome that could definitely steal hearts. Very much the charming type. Xie Lian didn’t respond.

He continued, “Our Little Pei has been in your care.”

“I’ve definitely offended him,” Xie Lian thought. He returned the greeting: “Please don’t trouble yourself over it. I’ve heard much about you, as well.”

The words “I’ve heard much about you” were certainly not a lie. In the past few days, Xie Lian had skimmed through his scroll, and briefly read through the legends of some of the more famous heavenly officials. One of them was General Ming Guang, Pei Ming.

This Martial God of the North was skilled in battle, but the most talked-about thing amongst the mortals were stories of his many affairs; good and bad, within wanton alleys. The good stories had Pei Ming using copious amounts of gold to help save a pitiful prostitute from the brothels; she fell in love with him and forever remained pure and true to await his return. The bad stories had Pei Ming travelling thousands of miles to spend a one-night-stand with a married woman, etcetera, and so on. On some level, Pei Ming was an awe-inspiring man. After reading through his stories, Xie Lian thought it was quite unbelievable that after so many years, only one Xuan Ji that came out of that way of life.

Because Pei Ming was skilled in both battle and in love, many of his rivals and fellows loved cursing him to go die, and even better if he'd die from syphilis. But, his life force was tough, and he never got infected with anything even after the many flowers he'd picked; he wouldn't die, and he'd even live longer than most of his fellows! Until, finally, one day he lost a battle. Everyone laughed, thinking: at last, it's his end! But then lightning crashed and thunder roared—in that moment of danger, he ascended to the heavens.

Those who didn't die by his hand probably all died from outrage.

After ascension, Pei Ming didn't change his way of life, and the scale of his tales of promiscuity greatly expanded. From fairies and lady officials, to female ghosts and demons, as long as they were beautiful, he would pluck them. Nonetheless, his favourite type was still the charming ladies of the mortal realm. Many indecent love stories had him starring as the main male lead, and if it wasn't for Xie Lian's method of cultivation that demanded purity of body and of mind, he probably would have read a couple of those books just out of curiosity.

Thus, in addition to his role as the Martial God that ruled the North, the mortal realm also worshipped him as the God of Love. Even some officials would turn around and secretly pray to him should they bump into him in the heavens; hoping for some fortune in love. It had to be said that, although similar, that title was definitely better than Feng Xin's unwarranted title "Ju Yang".

All the heavenly officials present in the hall knew in their hearts what "I've heard much about you" meant, and many roared with laughter in their minds.

After the pleasantries, Xie Lian said, "What does General Pei mean by 'not necessarily settled'?"

Pei Ming snapped his fingers, and a corpse floating in mid-air suddenly appeared in the middle of the great hall.

Strictly speaking, this floating body was an empty shell. It had no soul, completely empty on the inside; but it was covered in blood from head to toe, so it was no different than a corpse. To have something like this appear before an elegant crowd like the heavenly officials was a shock. A moment later, Pei Su was also brought in, but he still looked indifferent and apathetic even with shackles binding his person; his head bowed low, unspeaking.

"General Pei, what's the meaning of this?" Xie Lian asked.

Pei Su knelt down within the Great Martial Hall, and Pei Ming replied, "A few days ago I went to visit Little Pei, and he mentioned something interesting."

Pei Ming paced half a circle around Xie Lian and smiled. "I'm quite familiar with Little Pei's ability. Even if his clone's powers are reduced and nowhere near the same as his true self, it's still quite competent. It's still capable of fighting evenly with a Savage ghost. However, he told me there was a mortal that was able to beat him to the point where he had to relent. Now, isn't that interesting?"

Pei Ming continued, "And so I questioned him; apparently, at the time, there was a red-clothed young man next to Your Royal Highness while you were at the Banyue Pass."

Hearing the words "red-clothed" made all the officials present shift expressions. Then, Pei Ming's following words made them all agitated. He said, "And this young man, in the dark, was able to eradicate all the menacing Banyue soldiers in a flash."

"—Now, Your Royal Highness. Might you enlighten us who this red-clothed young man might be?"

If it wasn't a Savage, then it must be a Supreme. And one that could kill hundreds of Savages in a flash, dressed all in red.

Anyone could guess who that young man could possibly be, yet no one wanted to be the first to say the name. Xie Lian stole a glimpse at the mute Pei Su, and replied a little unnaturally:

"Ahem, really? About that. I really don't remember it well. There was also a caravan that was trapped in the Banyue Pass at the time, and we spent a few days together, so maybe it was someone from the caravan."

Pei Ming smiled. "That can't be right, Your Royal Highness. According to Little Pei, you and that young man were abnormally close, not like someone you've just met for only a few days. How can you not remember?"

"No, you're wrong. That was the truth. It really was only just a few days," Xie Lian thought. Nevertheless, his expression gave nothing away.

Just then, from the sidelines, a white-clad cultivator casually waved his whisk and spoke up.

"General Pei, you've only heard Little Pei's side of the story. Little Pei has committed a crime; he's currently in detention, soon to be exiled. Whether his words are believable needs to be discerned, no?"

"Then we shall see if General Nan Yang and General Xuan Zhen can give us a hand," Pei Ming replied.

Following his line of sight, Xie Lian found Feng Xin and Mu Qing, standing separately on the southwest and southeast corners of the hall.

Feng Xin still looked the same as in his memories: standing tall and straight, his eyes determined, and brows always slightly furrowed; as if there was always something annoying him, but really he wasn't annoyed at all. Mu Qing, on the other hand, was somewhat different than what he remembered. Although his face was still pale as chalk without much blood, his thin lips pursed, his eyes half-lidded, there was a cool air of "don't talk to me" surrounding him. He stood with his arms crossed, a finger on his right hand tapping his left elbow softly; looking like he was either at ease, or more like he was scheming something.

The two were definitely good-looking men, but each had their own flaws. Hearing Pei Ming calling them out, they both looked towards Jun Wu at the same time. It was only when Jun Wu gave a slight nod that they stepped forward reluctantly.

This was the first time since Xie Lian's third ascension that he'd come face to face with the two of them. He could sense all the eyes on them going wilder.

Wild was inevitable. The Great Martial Hall was the number one martial palace of heaven; those without the title of heavenly official had no entry rights to discuss matters. The first time the Crown Prince of Xianle ascended, Feng Xin and Mu Qing were his deputy generals. At the time, they were only low-ranking officials from the middle court, without even the right to run errands within the Great Martial Hall. And now, not only could the junior officials of back then now stand in the hall, their rankings were even higher than that of their old master; truly a turn of fate!

The three of them looked at each other, eyes flitting all over, stealing glimpses at each other but pretending not to care. Who knew what the other two were thinking? However, Xie Lian could roughly guess why Pei Ming had called them out to help.

As suspected, Pei Ming said, "General Nan Yang and General Xuan Zhen have both fought with Hua Cheng before. I'm sure they have the authority to speak regarding the weapon of that person."

So, the point of bringing forth the empty shell A-Zhao was for all to inspect its wounds. Feng Xin and Mu Qing slowly approached the floating body. Xie Lian himself took a few steps forward to take a look, but there was so much blood darkened into black spots, it was hard to tell anything. The other two, faces austere, took their time in their inspection. Finally, they raised their heads and swept a look at each other, neither of them wanting to speak first.

Ling Wen spoke up from next to the throne: "Generals. Conclusion?"

It was Feng Xin who spoke first, his voice dark: "It's him."

"The scimitar E'ming," Mu Qing added.

Among all the heavenly officials present in the Great Martial Hall, it was probably only Xie Lian who didn't know the significance of those words.

The scimitar E'ming was the very same freakish weapon Hua Cheng had used when he singularly challenged the thirty-three officials and beat them to a pulp, decimating their souls and dignity!

Within the Great Martial Hall, the heavenly officials started whispering to each other; the eyes watching Xie Lian unreadable. Pei Ming had attained his objective.

"Many thanks to the two generals for confirming this fact. If the red-clothed young man who traveled next to Your Royal Highness really was that person, then this whole matter is going to be more complicated."

The white-clad cultivator from before spoke up again: "General Pei, are you saying His Royal Highness the Crown Prince of Xianle colluded with a Supreme Ghost King specifically to frame General Pei Junior?"

Both times when that cultivator spoke, he was on Xie Lian's side, so he had to take a look at who exactly this curious fellow cultivator was. What he saw was a cultivator with clear, bright eyes; he had a whisk between his arms, a long sword carried on his back, and a folding fan tucked in his white jaded belt. His form was graceful and elegant, his expression spirited. He looked familiar, but Xie Lian couldn't recall when he had met anyone like this.

Pei Ming also glanced at him, but it was the look of an irritated elder who didn't want to deal with children. He shook his head and waved dismissively, withdrawing the floating empty shell that was A-Zhao, then turned around and continued his argument.

"It may not be collusion. Except that person is powerful and wicked; who knows if he might've used deceptive tricks to blind His Royal Highness.."

His intention was to make Hua Cheng out to be the real perpetrator behind the chaos of Banyue Pass!

Xie Lian rebuked, "General Pei, even if you don't believe me, you should still believe in the Wind Master. Back in the Sinner's Pit, General Pei Junior admitted to the crime of luring passersby to the Banyue Pass with his clone, and the Wind Master heard everything."

Pei Ming glanced at the white-clad cultivator again.

Xie Lian continued, "Besides, since we're both here at the Great Martial Hall, you can very well ask our lord whether I have traces of any spells of deception on my person."

Jun Wu, who sat high above, remained calm and unchanging, meaning Xie Lian was cleared.

Xie Lian then continued, "General Pei, let's keep things clear and separate. Let's not talk about whether the young man I traveled with was Hua Cheng or not. Even if he was confirmed to be Hua Cheng, it has nothing to do with what General Pei Junior has done. A Supreme Ghost King might have the worst of names on people's lips, but not everything can be blamed on him either."

His expression was composed and neutral when the name was uttered, but many in the hall had cold shivers run down their backs.

Pei Ming replied, "No matter what, I believe this affair needs to be re-examined. It'd be best if the Guoshi that Your Royal Highness has taken away, Banyue, could be brought in for interrogation, too."

To interrogate her for what? Force her to lie? Xie Lian hadn't yet responded when someone else spoke up first.

Pei Su looked as if he didn't want to remain in the Great Martial Hall anymore. He said in a low voice, "General. Let it go."

"What?" Pei Ming was irritated.

"There isn't any spell of deception. It's all my doing. I've disappointed you," Pei Su confessed.

Pei Ming was in the middle of clearing his name, but then he went and said this. Pei Ming turned cold, and said darkly, "What enchantment concoction did that Banyue Guoshi feed you? Shut your mouth."

However, Pei Su raised his head. "Let it go, general! Little Pei isn't afraid to admit to things he's done. Since I've been caught red-handed, I'm not afraid to receive whatever punishment."

Pei Ming's face was written full of the shock of: you've always been so mature and competent, why did you suddenly go nuts today? He was just about to kick Pei Su over the head to wake him up, when Jun Wu spoke up:

"Enough."

The moment he spoke, Pei Ming withdrew his leg and bowed.

Jun Wu spoke languidly: "The matter of the Banyue Pass is settled. Take Little Pei down and exile him in the next few days."

After some silence, Pei Ming acknowledged, "Yes, my lord."

Xie Lian only just breathed in relief when Pei Ming continued, "But, Nan Yang and Xuan Zhen have proven that the wounds on that empty shell were indeed inflicted by the scimitar E'ming."

"I understand," Jun Wu replied. "That is a whole other matter."

"Pray my lord will look into this matter," Pei Ming said.

"I will naturally investigate. Ming Guang and his fellow deities have no need for concern." After a pause, Jun Wu continued. "You are all dismissed for today. Xianle, you stay."

It looked like Xie Lian would be personally interrogated. The heavenly officials had nothing left to say and bowed their heads.

"Yes, my lord."

Dismissed, the other heavenly officials exited in their groups of twos or threes. When Feng Xin passed by, he glanced at Xie Lian, looking as if he had something to say, but stopped himself. Xie Lian smiled at him, and he was startled before hurrying away. Mu Qing, however, walked past without sparing a look, as if Xie Lian never existed. That white-clad cultivator walked over with his whisk in hand and a huge smile, ready to speak. But Pei Ming, who had just lost favour, walked over too, with one hand resting on his hilt and the other rubbing his nose.

He said helplessly, "Qingxuan, for your brother's sake, can you not stir up trouble?"

The smile disappeared from the face of that white-clad cultivator. "General Pei, there's no need to use my brother against me; I'm not afraid of him."

"You—" Pei Ming was enraged but couldn't do anything. Finally, he pointed at him.

"You...you've really done Little Pei in now. Two hundred years of exile."

The white-clad cultivator swung his whisk wildly. "That's Little Pei's own doing, this has nothing to do with me!"

Looking like he didn't want to continue to quarrel with Pei Ming, the white-clad cultivator stormed off. Xie Lian thought Pei Ming might stick around to taunt him further, but he didn't, and exited the hall willfully. In the large and spacious Great Martial Hall, the only one who remained besides Jun Wu and Xie Lian, who was below the throne, was actually the Crown Prince of Yong'an, Lang Qianqiu. Xie Lian was curious, why did he stay? When Xie Lian approached, he had his eyes closed; fast asleep while standing.

Xie Lian didn't know whether to laugh or cry, and feeling quite awed, he gently tapped the young man's shoulder. "Your Highness. Your Highness?"

Lang Qianqiu woke with a jerk. "What's happened?!"

“Nothing’s happened. The meeting is over,” Xie Lian explained.

Having just woken up, Lang Qianqiu was still a little dazed, and asked in confusion, “Over? Just like that? What did we all discuss? I didn’t hear anything?”

“If you didn’t hear anything, then nevermind,” Xie Lian said. “It wasn’t anything important anyway. Come now, time to go back.”

“Oh!” Lang Qianqiu went to leave, but when he reached the doors, he looked back. Still confused, he regardless gave Xie Lian a big smile. “Thanks for waking me!”

Xie Lian waved at him with a smile. When everyone had finally cleared out, Xie Lian slowly turned around. Jun Wu descended from the throne. Hands behind his back, he came before Xie Lian.

“Crimson Rain Sought Flower. The scimitar E’ming.”

Xie Lian was like a cat picked up by the scruff of his neck, and he involuntarily straightened up.

“So. What is going on?” Jun Wu questioned.

Xie Lian looked at him, then suddenly kneeled.

Before Xie Lian’s knees touched the floor, Jun Wu reached out and held his elbow; preventing him from kneeling. He sighed.

“Xianle.”

Xie Lian straightened once more, his head bowed. “I’m sorry.”

Jun Wu watched him. “Then do you admit to your wrongs?”

“I do,” Xie Lian replied.

“Then, why don’t you tell me what that wrong is?” Jun Wu said.

MXTX Author Notes:

In this text, to become a god, one must first become a hero; which is one who is special amongst mortals. Only a properly-ascended mortal can become a heavenly official. How do their servants become proper officials? They have two options: first, they have to be adept at a particular skill, and enter either the Martial or the Civil rank. Second, they have to have the luck. If they have good luck, then there’s a good chance. If they randomly find some spiritual potion on the side of the road, that works too.

The officials in the Middle Court are those brought in by the Upper Court as deputy generals or servants. Basically, if you're on good terms with the big guns, they can pull you up. Although not a full-fledged official, you're still part of the heavens, so there's all sorts of people. So say a heavenly official had a close relationship with you or if they thought you have a bright future, they'll promote you first. As long as you have the skill and chance, you can become a big gun yourself too!

Xie Lian was silent and Jun Wu shook his head.

“I didn’t think you would know.”

The Martial Heavenly Emperor inclined his head, gesturing for Xie Lian to follow, and the two walked slowly towards the chambers behind the hall. As they walked, Jun Wu, with his hands cradled in front, commented, “Xianle is all grown up now.”

Naturally, Xie Lian didn’t dare answer that comment. Jun Wu continued:

“Eight hundred years ago, when I sent you down, I told you to keep periodic communication with me so you wouldn’t be rolling in the mud all by yourself. But the moment you went down, all communication was cut, and you had to go torment yourself. You’ve been ascended for some time now, but not once have you reported to the Great Martial Hall. If anyone else was this impertinent, the Palace of Ling Wen would have reproached them directly.”

Of course, Xie Lian’s “I’m sorry” earlier wasn’t directed to this matter, and Jun Wu knew this too.

“If your apology was for those few sword stabbings, then let it go. You said so yourself; everything can be forgotten after stabbing.”

Xie Lian grimaced. “...How could I forget?”

“Then look to the future. There is still much we need you for.”

Xie Lian rubbed his forehead. “Xianle is but a lowly rubbish god without power. There is no need for me; I only ask not to be burdensome.”

“Why depreciate yourself? Didn’t you perform splendidly in the last two cases?” Jun Wu said.

“Except I may have offended General Pei.”

“Ming Guang is fine, I’ll watch over him, you don’t need to worry. However,” Jun Wu turned around. “Tell me, what kind of extraordinary character did you engage with when you descended this time?”

Xie Lian raised his hand. “My Lord, I swear I did nothing. Just, one day by chance I encountered an interesting child on the road, and we spent some time together. I didn’t think much of it.”

Jun Wu nodded. “Chance encounter, child, Supreme Ghost King. Xianle, you do know that, if Ming Guang was to question you further and you had confessed this in front of the other officials, what the consequences would be? No one would believe you.”

“Xianle knows,” Xie Lian replied woefully. “So I am grateful for My Lord’s timely intervention. My Lord, you’re not actually going to interrogate me, are you? I wouldn’t collude with the Ghost Realm. These are all absurd concerns.”

“Naturally, I know you would not intentionally collude with the Ghost Realm,” Jun Wu said.

“I am grateful for My Lord’s trust,” Xie Lian replied.

“However, with things thus, it may no longer be appropriate to send you to investigate an important matter that has surfaced.”

“What is it?” Xie Lian inquired.

At this time, the two of them had reached the chamber behind the great hall. The great hall and the inner chamber were separated by a large mural, the front depicting the golden palace towering through a sea of clouds, radiant and brilliant. The back side of the mural was another, depicting mountains and valleys of over ten thousand miles. On the map, there were many tiny pearls, like stars.

Each of these stars marked a Great Martial Temple in the mortal realm. A pearl embedded on the map meant there was a Great Martial Temple built there. Eight hundred years ago, when Jun Wu brought the Xie Lian who had ascended for the first time to the inner chamber, the pearl stars on the mural weren’t as dense. But now, the shimmering jewels seemed to be plentifully bestrewn; overwhelming in their radiance.

Jun Wu stood before the mural and spoke: “Seven days ago, many saw with their own eyes a dragon of fire abruptly soaring to the sky from a forest in the east.”

Xie Lian’s face grew serious hearing those words.

Jun Wu, with one hand behind his back, used the other and softly knocked on the mural once. “That dragon of fire lasted for two incense time before burning out. In that time, many witnessed the sight, but not a single person was injured. Do you know what that means?”

“The spell for the Ascending Fire Dragon emits intense flames that do not harm. It’s a call for help,” Xie Lian replied.

“That is correct. It was a distress signal, and it came from a heavenly official,” Jun Wu said.

This Ascending Fire Dragon spell, with its intense flames that would not harm, took an immense amount of power; if the casting official was not careful, they could very well implode and destroy their spiritual core. Therefore, unless they were at the end of their rope, very few would go this route. Now that it had appeared, it meant a heavenly official had fallen into grave danger.

“Are there any officials whose whereabouts are unknown recently?” Xie Lian asked.

“The matter with the Banyue Pass was not the only reason all the officials were summoned back to court this time. The main purpose was to use this chance to investigate everyone’s whereabouts. Other than those who usually do not show, like the Rain Master and the Earth Master, even those who couldn’t make it back reported in.”

Xie Lian hummed for a moment, then speculated: “Maybe it wasn’t any of the officials from this term? Maybe it’s one of the retired officials?”

“If that’s the case, then I’m afraid our perimeters will largely expand. Many of the retired officials have long lost contact with the heavens. It would be difficult to determine who is the one in peril,” Jun Wu said.

So, this was probably why Ling Wen and many of the civil officials had dark circles under their eyes, their feet weak; they were busy working on this case, and certainly wouldn’t have the time to investigate that boy with the Human Face Disease from Mount Yujun.

“To corner a heavenly official to the point of using such a self-destructive spell, it must be the doing of great evil. Are there any demonic gatherings or lairs in that area?”

“There are,” Jun Wu replied. “And it’s very closeby. Do you know of Ghost City?”

Xie Lian thought about it and replied, “I’ve heard of it.”

Ghost City was the most prosperous place within the ghost realm, situated right at the crossroads of the mortal and the ghost realms.

This was where all manner of spirits, ghosts, demons and monsters gathered in swarms to conduct trade and exchanges. Cultivators of certain levels would also go to do business or seek information. Sometimes, there would also be heavenly officials in disguise, mixing in for curiosity’s sake or other unknown reasons. Of course, there were also those who’d enter by mistake, and would either be eaten alive, or scared to death.

Ever since ancient times—although not as ancient as Xie Lian—there had always been many tales of the Ghost City in the mortal realm. Xie Lian remembered one of the stories had a man traveling at night, who saw a bustling market before him with large red lanterns and colourful signs. He entered the market in high spirits, but found that everyone around him had a mask, and if they were not hooded, then they were extremely ugly; very curious! He didn’t think deeply about it, and bought a bowl of noodles and sat down to eat. But as he ate, the food didn’t feel right; when he looked closely, the noodles were actually squirming strands of hair!

“After seeing that pillar of fire, I immediately sent officials to go investigate the area; but, there was no evidence of anything, so it’s very possible that they’ve moved to the Ghost City. However, the Heavenly Realm and the Ghost Realm have always drawn very clear borders; without enough proof, we cannot intrude on Ghost City. Which is why, this time, I need someone to descend in secret and probe Ghost City.”

“We can’t alert the enemy and have them move again. Is that why this couldn’t be discussed openly at the great hall with everyone, and let too many know?” Xie Lian said.

“That is correct,” Jun Wu replied.

“Then My Lord, pray give Xianle the command.”

“The first candidate I had in mind was originally you,” Jun Wu said. “But for this, it may be inconvenient for you to go.”

“How would it be inconvenient?” Xie Lian asked.

“First, the east is ruled by Lang Qianqiu. If you should go, you must cooperate with him,” Jun Wu said.

Xie Lian responded, “That would not be a problem, please do not worry.”

“Second,” Jun Wu continued. “Do you know whose territory the Ghost City sits in?”

Taken aback, Xie Lian said, unsure, “Is it Hua Cheng?”

Jun Wu nodded slowly, and Xie Lian’s guess was confirmed. But then, something else came to mind.

That pillar of fire in the eastern forest blazed up seven days ago. Coincidentally, it was seven days ago when Hua Cheng left Puqi Shrine. The timing was impeccable. Was there a connection between the two events?

“Looks like your relationship with him is not bad, which isn’t a problem,” Jun Wu said. “The only problem is whether he’s involved. If you feel awkward, then do not force yourself. If you have any other suggestions or anyone you’d nominate, do let me know.”

However, Xie Lian still said, “Let me go. I don’t think that Crimson Rain Sought Flower is a disingenuous individual.”

Jun Wu looked at him. "Xianle, I know you're very capable and know what you're doing. However, I also know you always think the best of everyone."

Hearing his words, Xie Lian gave a small smile. "Please don't say it like I'm a princess who has never left home. Those words really don't suit me anymore."

Jun Wu still shook his head. "I shouldn't comment on the friends you make, but I will still say this: be careful of Hua Cheng."

Hearing this, Xie Lian lowered his head in a bow, and said nothing. He should've responded with "yes, My Lord"; after all, it was a habit by now. Yet, for some reason, he really didn't want to say this "yes".

"Be especially careful of that wicked blade of his," Jun Wu continued.

"What do you mean?" Xie Lian asked, curious.

"The Scimitar E'ming. It is a cursed blade, a blade of misfortune. An evil weapon such as that would need a terrifyingly cruel sacrifice and a bloody determination before it could be forged. Do not touch it, and do not let it injure you, either; otherwise, the consequences would be unimaginable," Jun Wu replied.

Xie Lian couldn't tell where his sudden surge of confidence came from, but inwardly, he thought: San Lang probably wouldn't strike him with a blade.

Still, he responded, "Xianle understands."

Jun Wu nodded again. "I will naturally be at ease with you taking this case. If you don't feel any awkwardness, then even better. But still, going on this mission by yourself may be too much. Are there any other officials you'd like me to appoint to this case?"

"It really doesn't matter," Xie Lian said, after some thought. "But preferably someone easy to get along with. It'd be good if they're powerful, so they can lend me some spiritual power from time to time."

Jun Wu smiled. "You struck out both Nan Yang and Xuan Zhen with the first condition."

Truly, no one could say that the Feng Xin and Mu Qing of today were personalities that were easy to get along with, and Xie Lian started chuckling too.

"How goes between the three of you? Have you spoken with them yet?" Jun Wu asked.

The Heavenly Emperor himself never entered the communication array, and thus was naturally unaware of the buzzing chit-chat that went on among the officials.

“We spoke a few words,” Xie Lian replied.

“It’s been so many years, and yet you have only spoken a few words?” Jun Wu inquired. “Oh, that’s right. I heard when you ascended this time, you destroyed many of your fellow officials’ palaces and properties, and one of them was Nan Yang.”

Xie Lian argued back, “I paid back that debt! All eight million, eight hundred and eighty thousand merits! And for this, I need to thank My Lord for giving me the opportunity to go to Mount Yujun.”

“Thank Nan Yang,” Jun Wu replied. “I heard Ling Wen say it was he who privately approached her and said there wasn’t any need for you to pay back the reconstruction cost.”

Xie Lian was stunned. “I...didn’t know about this at all.”

No wonder those eight million, eight hundred and eighty thousand merits were so easily repaid; so much of it was already forgiven. Yet, at the time, it was the Palace of Nan Yang that was the most damaged; they say half of the golden roof had collapsed.

“Nan Yang made sure Ling Wen would not tell you, so naturally you were unaware. Since he did not want you to know, then it would be best to keep pretending to be ignorant,” Jun Wu said.

Xie Lian didn’t know how to feel about this. Complicated and bittersweet, his mind was clouded and all over the place. At last, he sighed soundlessly and thought, “Truly, in this world, the words ‘don’t tell anyone’ are empty.”

Jun Wu contemplated for a moment, then said, “If Nan Yang and Xuan Zhen will not do, how about the Wind Master?”

Xie Lian pondered the option. “Lord Wind Master is very good, but I don’t know if she would want to go on this mission with me?”

“The Wind Master is powerful,” Jun Wu said. “A lively person who enjoys making friends, and thus matches your first condition of easy to get along with. After the business with Banyue, the Wind Master has a good impression of you, as well. I think you two will be alright. If you do not have any other questions, then descend with the Wind Master and investigate the Ghost City. Also...”

“Yes?”

Jun Wu said languidly, “Work hard, but do not force yourself.”

Xie Lian was startled by those words, and smiled. “What is My Lord saying? I’m not forcing myself.”

Jun Wu patted Xie Lian's shoulders. "Return to the Palace of Xianle to rest for now. I'll send word to summon the Wind Master."

Xie Lian blinked. "I don't have enough merits, so no palace has been erected. The Palace of Xianle from the past has long since been torn down, so what Palace of Xianle?"

"I've granted you a new one," Jun Wu said. "You cannot possibly always squeeze into that broken-down little shrine?"

Xie Lian left the Great Martial Hall, and was led to the Palace of Xianle by a junior official from Jun Wu's palace.

This Palace of Xianle was practically exactly the same as the one he had in the past; red glass walls, sumptuous and elegant. He stood outside the palace gates for a long time, but not a shred of desire to enter came to him. The Scrap Immortal was still best suited for a scrapped shrine, after all. A proud and glamorous heavenly palace like this wasn't a place he could stay.

He loitered outside the entrance and waited for that Lord Wind Master to come find him, but after a while, the one who appeared wasn't the lady cultivator in white, but another white-clad cultivator.

The cultivator had a glowing, spiritual aura in abundance surrounding him—it was the one from the meeting at the Great Martial Hall who was randomly fighting Pei Ming; "Qingxuan".

He waved his whisk, a smile hanging off his lips. "Greetings, Your Highness!"

Xie Lian smiled back. "Greetings, fellow cultivator."

Truthfully, he really wanted to ask who he was, but thought it'd be rude to do so. He was about to sneak a peek at his scroll to see just which heavenly official was named Qingxuan, when the person in question walked up to him and exclaimed, "Let's go! Let's go check out down below."

Xie Lian was taken aback. "My friend, I'm waiting for someone."

Hearing this, the cultivator placed his whisk into the back collar of his outer robe and turned around in wonder. "Who are you waiting for?"

"I'm waiting for the Wind Master," Xie Lian replied.

The white-clad cultivator looked even more confused. "I'm right here?"

"..." Xie Lian's brows jumped. "You're the Wind Master?"

The other flashed open his fan, and started fanning. “I am the Wind Master, was there ever any doubt? Did you not know who I was?? Have you never heard of my name: the Wind Master Qingxuan???”

His tone was irrefutable and absolute, strong and confident, as if Xie Lian not knowing his name was an impossible thing to happen. The folding fan had the word for wind, “feng”, written slantedly on the front, the backside had three inclining lines drawn—the exact same fan the lady cultivator in white had in her hand!

Xie Lian suddenly recalled Fu Yao had mentioned that some upper court heavenly officials, under special circumstances, had the ability to transform their appearance. While at Banyue, Nan Feng had also uttered an incomplete sentence:

“The Wind Master had always been...”

Had always been? Been what?

A man?!

After getting dragged for a few steps, Xie Lian still couldn’t fully process this information.

“Um...Lord Wind Master, you, you, you, why did you disguise yourself as a woman last time???”

“What? Was I not beautiful?” the Wind Master asked.

“Yes? But...” Xie Lian was still confused.

“If I was beautiful, then there’s no but? As long as I looked good!” The Wind Master smiled brightly. “Of course it’s because I’d look good that I was in disguise!”

Having said that, he looked to have suddenly come to an idea, and closed his fan. He gave Xie Lian a once-over with a calculated look, then spoke after a moment:

“Speaking of which, don’t we need to be undercover for this mission to the Ghost City?”

“...”

Xie Lian: “???”

Ch.35: Enter the Ghost City! Rendezvous with the Ghost King

Much ashamed, it wasn't until four hours later that Xie Lian had the time to sneak a peek at his scroll, and finally learn the backstory of this Wind Master.

The Five Elemental Masters of the heavens used their titles to replace their surnames. For example, before the Earth Master ascended, his mortal name was called Ming Yi. After ascension, he was to be addressed as "Earth Master Yi". As for the Wind Master, his old name was Shi Qingxuan, and after ascension he was called "Wind Master Qingxuan". Much fitting his title, his personality was like a breeze; he was sociable and generous, mindless of petty details, and very popular in the heavens, as apparent from him easily handing out ten thousand merits in the communication array. But at the end of the day, as his older brother was the god who controlled mortal wealth, of course the Wind Master was generous and mindless of petty details.

Indeed, the older brother of Wind Master Qingxuan was the one called "Water Tyrant", the Water Master Wudu.

Descending to the underworld together, the two gods walked side-by-side, chatting as they traveled. Xie Lian had his arms crossed, and commented in amazement, "The Pei family producing two ascended generals under one name was already a legend, but you and your brother, one wind one water, ascending at the same time, is truly a tale of wonder."

It must be known that, even in a million, there may not be that one who had the ability to ascend. Pei Ming and Pei Su were separated by a few hundred years, and Pei Su wasn't even a direct descendant; he was from Pei Ming's brother's branch of the family, that was who-knows-how-many-times removed through the generations. The Water Master Wudu and the Wind Master Qingxuan were real blood-related brothers, a real pair of ascended officials from the same house, thus truly incredible.

Shi Qingxuan laughed it off. "It's nothing. My brother and I were born from the same mother, grew up together, went to school together, cultivated together, so naturally we'd ascend together in the same lifetime."

Xie Lian also learned about this when he was cramming from the scroll earlier. Shi Wudu ascended first, but after only a few years, his brother Shi Qingxuan also successfully passed a heavenly calamity. Mortals often worshipped the two heavenly officials together in the same temple, and praised them as equals. It was obvious the two brothers enjoyed a good relationship. As San Lang and Nan Feng had mentioned, the Water Master must be the reason Pei Ming wouldn't touch the Wind Master. After all, the brother of the Water Tyrant was not one to be picked on easily.

Coming to this point, Xie Lian thought of another detail, and considered it before asking: "Lord Wind Master, at the Great Martial Hall earlier, the way General Pei spoke, it sounded as if he shared a friendship with your brother. Wouldn't your filing the complaint against General Pei Junior affect..."

"Nah," Shi Qingxuan replied. "My brother already knows I can't stand Pei Ming."

"Knowing is one thing, action is another," Xie Lian said. "Wouldn't all of this cause a rift between the Water Master and General Pei?"

"If that caused a rift, even better! I wish my brother would stop hanging out with him, and leave the 'Three Tumors' moniker behind one day," Shi Qingxuan said.

Xie Lian stopped. "What 'Three Tumors'?"

Shi Qingxuan exclaimed, astonished, "What! You don't know about this either? Fine, whatever. I now know you're not up to date with anything. You can just listen for giggles. The 'Three Tumors' is the nickname given to the three heavenly officials who don't have a good rep, but have a good relationship with each other; they're Ming Guang, Ling Wen, and my brother."

"I can't believe it's not Xie Lian, Xie Lian, and Xie Lian," Xie Lian thought.

Shi Qingxuan fanned his Wind Master fan and continued, "Even if I can't stand him, the whole business this time around was started by Little Pei himself. There's no way I'd let Pei Ming pin this on the Guoshi of Banyue and protect Little Pei. It doesn't matter if you're a mortal, or a god, or a ghost; you have to be responsible for your own actions. Bullying a little girl is low."

The last line was uttered in contempt, and Xie Lian smiled. "The Wind Master is a defender of justice."

Shi Qingxuan laughed. "You're not bad yourself! I've heard rumours about the Banyue Pass here and there, but never had the time to investigate; plus, my brother would yell at me about it. With so much on my plate, I'd forgotten. When I heard you inquire about it in the communication array the other day, it reminded me there was such a case, and so I went to check it out. Turns out not only did you ask, you'd even gone yourself! So I thought, dang, what a guy!"

This Wind Master certainly had an extremely straightforward and interesting personality, and Xie Lian could understand now why he was so popular in the heavens. He hadn't thought that, after ascension, he'd be able to form a friendship with a heavenly official like this, and couldn't help but smile happily. But just as he turned his head to face him, the white-clad cultivator beside him was transformed to a lady in white. It was so sudden, Xie Lian almost tripped in his step.

"Lord Wind Master, why the sudden transformation?"

"Oh. Truth be told, I'm actually more powerful in this form," Shi Qingxuan replied.

As aforementioned, the Wind Master and the Water Master were often worshipped together. However, this also produced a bizarre accident. Perhaps people thought that worshipping two male gods together in one temple was weird. Lords and Ladies go hand in hand, handsome and beautiful make a pair; that should be the way. Thus, after a while, someone somewhere sculpted the Wind Master as a goddess.

Nevermind the goddess statue, they had to make up stories to go with it too; something along the lines of the Wind and Water gods used to be brother and sister, there was even a version where they were husband and wife. After a few hundred years, the stories spread, and from them came even more outlandish legends. Once in a while, the two officials would read through the tales out of curiosity, but each time they would cringe and fill an entire coop with goosebumps. Nonetheless, there were more than a few who believed in those outrageous stories, and the Wind Master's gender started getting mixed up; "My Lady, prithee watch over me" could be heard all over the place. Thus, Shi Qingxuan gained the name "Lady Wind Master".

Although silly, it was actually not that rare of an occurrence. Ling Wen, for example, also had a similar experience. Ling Wen was a lady official, but she didn't dress colourfully and fashionably like the other lady deities. She was often in black, serious and competent, and spent her days madly working through stacks and stacks of administrative scrolls in her palace. Although her personality was partly to blame, much of it was due to another reason. If one should ask any mortal, "is Ling Wen a man or a woman?", anyone would respond with confidence: a man.

A civil god was of course a male. For this alone, when Ling Wen ascended she suffered disadvantages. She was a civil goddess, but many in the mortal realm thought: how could women be in that position? How could ladies possibly ensure good fortune in literary competence? It must not be effective! Thus, although she worked hard, she still had very few devotees. Later, some of the devotees couldn't get over it, and rebuilt her statues into male gods; transforming her from the Goddess Ling Wen to the God Ling Wen, and even made up an entire extravagant backstory. After this change, her temples became prosperous, and everyone praised how effective the God Ling Wen was. But the truth was, an official was an official, spiritual powers were all the same, and the legends were all fake. Still, the people ate them up. Since then, when Ling Wen needed to appear in dreams, she could only do so in a male form.

By the same logic, people believed that it was more appropriate to worship a man and a woman as a pair in the Wind and Water temples. Who cared if you were a god or a ghost? You must appear as people believed. Appearances could be different by a million miles, and people would still see what they wanted to see. The Upper Court heavenly officials no longer cared for this kind of thing.

As for Shi Qingxuan himself, by Xie Lian's own observations, he didn't appear to mind at all. In fact, he was completely immersed and enjoying himself, and was even passionately dragging others into it, making Xie Lian wonder about the real identity of the lady in black that was with the Wind Master the last time. In the four hours that they had spent traveling to the underworld together, Shi Qingxuan had been tirelessly trying to persuade Xie Lian into disguising himself as a woman, with very convincing reasons like,

“Women have stronger auras of yin³⁹, therefore it’s much easier to hide in the Ghost City crowds.”

Xie Lian thought about it, and courteously rejected the idea. “I don’t have enough power to transform.”

“I’ll lend you my powers!” Shi Qingxuan replied excitedly. “That’s the whole reason why the Heavenly Emperor appointed me to this mission, no?”

“My lord, please save your powers for when we’re actually fighting the enemy...”

Shi Qingxuan couldn’t persuade Xie Lian, so she stopped pushing. At this time, the two had reached a wild field in the middle of nowhere. The night had deepened, and crows cawed crazedly in the darkness, creating an eerie atmosphere.

Xie Lian scanned around and said, “Let’s wait here. An evil aura fills the air here and there’s a large graveyard nearby, so there’s definitely going to be one or two going to the market. We’ll follow them when the time comes.”

Thus, the two crouched on top of a burial mound and waited.

A moment later, Shi Qingxuan put one hand into a sleeve, rummaged around, and dug out a small jug of booze. “You want some?”

Xie Lian reached for the jug and took a small sip, feeling his throat burn, and gave the jug back. “Thanks.”

Shi Qingxuan took the jug and gulped a couple swallows. “You can’t drink?”

“I can,” Xie Lian replied. “But drinking causes insanity, so just a taste is enough. What time is it?”

Shi Qingxuan hummed, and replied, “It’s midnight.”

“Must be soon then,” Xie Lian said.

Just as he finished his sentence, the two saw a faint row of lights appear deep in the woods.

³⁹ “Yin” from yin yang; yin represents the moon, the shadows, and femininity.

That faint row of lights slowly came closer and closer, until finally, the two could see it was a group of expressionless women dressed in white, walking in a line. Some were old, some were young, some beautiful, some ugly; each wearing funeral garb with a white lantern in hand, walking at an easy pace.

They must be female ghosts heading to the Ghost City markets in the deep night.

“Let’s follow them,” Xie Lian said under his breath.

Shi Qingxuan nodded, took a last swig from the jug and threw it aside. The two stood up and casually trailed behind the group of ghosts.

The two had already prepared beforehand and erased all their spiritual aura; when they walked, they were like people-shaped logs without a scent of life. The band of female ghosts before them held their white lanterns and followed an unknown path in the darkened woods, strolled while chatting in high-pitched, delicate voices.

“I’m so glad the Ghost City’s opened again! I need a facial!” one said.

“What happened to your face? Didn’t you just recently get a facial?” another replied.

The first one responded, “It rotted again! Sigh, the one who serviced me last time said it was guaranteed fresh for a year! It hasn’t even been half a year.”

Xie Lian and Shi Qingxuan trailed behind them, listening to their chatter, and didn’t speak a word. When they heard something funny, they’d only lift their lips and eye each other. After about an hour, the group came to a valley.

Red light emitted from deep within the valley, and there seemed to be music wafting in the ethereal night. Xie Lian grew more and more curious to finally see for himself what the Ghost City looked like. As they were entering the valley, however, the last one in the line of ghosts suddenly turned her head and discovered them.

Confused, she asked, “Who are you two?”

The question made all the pale-faced heads turn, and the women surrounded them, curious.

“When did they start following us? Those two weren’t part of the group when we left the burial grounds?”

“Which burial ground did you come from? How come we’ve never seen your faces before?”

Xie Lian cleared his throat. “We...came from a burial ground much further away, so of course you’ve never seen us.”

Shi Qingxuan smiled too. "That's right! We've traveled thousands of miles just for the Ghost City."

The group of white-clad female ghosts were silent, and expressionlessly stared at them. If it was anyone else, they'd probably fall to the ground shivering in fright. Xie Lian wasn't afraid of having their identities exposed; these weak feral ghosts had no power over them. However, since the Ghost City was right before their eyes, it wouldn't be wise to start anything in such close distance to the target, lest they alert their enemy.

Just then, one of the women staring at Shi Qingxuan spoke up languidly.

"Meimei⁴⁰, your face is very nicely maintained," she said.

Xie Lian and Shi Qingxuan stopped. Immediately, the two of them nodded uniformly.

Xie Lian replied, "It's alright, not bad."

Shi Qingxuan copied his tone and said, "Pretty good, right?"

All the female ghosts then approached and started a discussion.

"Yeah, not rotten at all."

"Meimei, where did you get your facials done?"

"What's your secret?"

"Can you recommend a place?"

Shi Qingxuan didn't know how to respond, so she only laughed awkwardly to delay answering. Just then, the group turned around, and a sudden crimson brightness flashed into their eyes.

A mysterious and haunted world opened before them.

A long street appeared.

It was so long there was no end in sight. Along the street were all manners of bustling stores and stalls; colourful signs were flown high above and giant red lanterns were hung low. Pedestrians filled the street, many wearing masks of faces crying, laughing, angry; some human, some not human. Those without masks could only be described as "bizarre". Some had large heads and small bodies, some skinny as a bamboo stick, some flat like a pancake; pressing on the ground, letting pedestrians walk all over them while complaining.

Xie Lian was careful not to step on anything weird. When he passed by a food stall, he saw the stall owner use a giant bone to stir a giant pot of soup; while it stirred, spit would spill from between its teeth, dripping into the soup, and in that soup filled with weird colours floated many an eyeball. Xie Lian watched and suddenly gained confidence.

On the other side, there were strange buskers performing: a buff, burly man had a small ghost, weak as a chick, in his hold, and the man opened his mouth to blow massive flames to barbecue the small ghost while it squealed like a dying pig, writhing. The crowd cheered and shrieked, shouting “encore”. There were even insane individuals randomly throwing money into the air, and when one slip of it flew before Xie Lian, he grabbed one and flipped it over; it was money of the dead, as he thought.

As he walked, there was a butcher stall with a row of crestfallen human heads, hung in order of age, as indicated on their price tags; a child’s head was this much, a youth’s meat was that much, a grown man’s flesh costed this amount, a mature woman’s sinews was charged that much, and so on. The one dressed in an apron with a butcher knife in hand was a boar with black, thick hair; and under its knife getting butchered was a muscular human leg, still twitching.

This was truly a swarm of evil, the chaos of hell.

Humans butchering pigs was a common sight, but pigs butchering humans wasn’t, so Xie Lian couldn’t help but steal a few extra peeks. The boar noticed him watching and immediately reacted.

“What are ya lookin’ at? You buyin’?”

Xie Lian shook his head. “No.”

The boar butcher continued to chop onto the cutting board violently, blood spraying all over. He yelled, voice rough, “If you ain’t buyin’ then don’t watch! Fuckin’ tryin’a start somethin’? Get outta here!”

Xie Lian got outta there. But just as his steps quickened, he suddenly realized something very bad.

That group of female ghosts and Shi Qingxuan had disappeared without a trace.

In shock, Xie Lian wanted to connect with the Wind Master at once within the communication array; afraid that she really got dragged away by those ghosts to do facials. However, this was Ghost City, and the spells used by heaven were heavily restricted. The connection to the array didn't work, so he had to wander the streets to search for the missing Wind Master. As he walked, someone suddenly grabbed him. Already alert and tense, Xie Lian instantly reacted.

"Who?!"

The one who stopped him was a woman, and was surprised by Xie Lian's reaction. But after seeing his face clearly, she started giggling, playing coy.

"Hey there, little gege. Yer lookin' mighty fine."

This woman was in an exceedingly revealing dress, her make-up terrifyingly heavy; the white foundation uneven, when she opened her mouth, clumps of it would fall off her face. Her bosom was stuffed full, as if something was filled in her flesh. Truly, a shocking sight.

Xie Lian gently pushed away her thin, claw-like fingers, and said, "My lady, there's no need to speak like this."

The woman was taken aback, then burst out laughing. "Dear lord! 'My lady'?? Who the hell still calls me a lady in this day and age? Hahahahahahaha!"

All the passersby seemed to think it was funny too, and started laughing along. Xie Lian shook his head, but before he could speak, the woman pounced on him.

"Don't go! Little gege, I like you. Come and have fun with me all night, I won't ask for payment!" She pouted and winked. "But I will charge. Hehehehehe..."

Xie Lian sighed and prayed inwardly, then unobtrusively but firmly pushed her away. He chided gently, "My lady, please."

The woman seemed annoyed now, and screeched, "Stop calling me 'lady', no one cares for it! Quit wastin' my time, ya comin' or not?"

To tempt Xie Lian further, the woman suddenly unlaced her already-revealing shirt. Xie Lian wasn't prepared to face such a bold move, and sighed again before turning away and continuing on his way. The female ghost chased after him and continued her seduction.

"D'ya like what you see?"

Little did she realize, Xie Lian had grown up in the Royal Holy Pavillion, practicing abstinence for most of his mortal life; his body and mind had always been as steady as the mountains. It didn't matter what he saw, his heart was still like water; anything unseemly would have him automatically chant sutras in his mind, calming his spirit.

Unsuccessful in her temptation, the female ghost's expression changed, and she started yelling, "You don't want any o' this? Are ya even a man??"

Xie Lian dropped his eyes. "I am."

"Then prove it!" the female ghost yelled.

From the sidelines, a passerby laughed mockingly. "You slut! He thinks yer old an' ugly, an' want none o' you. What are ya doin' so clingy?"

Hearing those words, Xie Lian deadpanned with a straight face: "It's not that. It's because I have an unspeakable affliction. I can't get erect."

Everyone fell silent.

Then within an instant they all roared and hollered with laughter.

"HAHAHAHAHAHAHA..."

The victim of ridicule was now Xie Lian. No one had ever met a man who was brave enough to announce to the world that they had such a problem. However, to someone like Xie Lian, it didn't matter whether his private member was functional or not, so he already developed the habit of using that as an excuse to get out of these kinds of situations. And it was a method that worked every single time. Sure enough, the female ghost redid her shirt and stopped clinging onto him.

"No wonder yer like this. What a pig. If ya have a problem why didn't you say so sooner? Pfft!"

Not far behind them, the boar butcher threw down his knife again and yelled, "Fuckin' slut! What's that you say? What's wrong with pigs???"

The female ghost wasn't scared, and yelled right back, "Ya, what's wrong with pigs?? Fuckin' animals!"

Soon, the long street was filled with shouting and squawking, people hollering.

"That female ghost Lan Chang is startin' shit again!"

"Butcher Zhu is choppin' ghosts!"

The two sides buzzed back and forth, rowdy and chaotic, and in the midst of that pandemonium, Xie Lian was finally able to slip away. After walking for a bit, he looked back over to where the crowd was and heaved a sigh.

Xie Lian continued walking and soon came upon another rowdy crowd ahead, and he stopped in front of a gigantic red building.

This building was extraordinarily grandiose and imposing; its columns, roofs, walls, everything was painted in a magnificent bright red, and the floors were covered in thick, exquisite carpet. If it must be compared, this building was on par with the heavenly palaces. The only difference was that it was more bedazzling than dignified. Large crowds went in and out of the doors, and the inside was filled with loud excited voices, very lively. Upon a closer look, Xie Lian found that this place was a gambler's den.

Xie Lian walked up to the doors, and on the two pillars at the entrance, there was a set of verses⁴¹. The left said "Money Over Life", the right said "Gains Over Shame". On the top horizontal beam it said "HAHAHAHA".

"..."

It was vulgar and crass, not worthy of being entrance verses. The calligraphy was also wild, clumsy, and frenzied; a disgrace to call it calligraphy at all! It was as if someone took a brush whilst drunk, and scribbled with malintent, and the words got blown by a blast of evil aura before they were formed thus. Xie Lian was once heir to the throne, and his calligraphy was taught by the best teachers in the land. The characters he saw before him now were a real tragedy. In fact, the characters were so hellish that Xie Lian was starting to think they were kind of funny, and shook his head. The Wind Master wouldn't be hanging around here; he'd have a better chance searching in beauty parlors for female ghosts.

He certainly should've just moved on, yet inexplicably, after only a few steps, he turned around and went inside.

In the main hall of the Gambler's Den, crowds were packed to the brim; innumerable heads moving, laughter and desperate cries crammed the air. Xie Lian had only descended a few steps when he suddenly heard screaming, and when he looked to where it had come from, four masked bouncers were walking over carrying another.

That man was in pain, writhing and howling whilst being carried, and a trail of blood followed. Turns out, both of his legs were cleanly cut off from the knees, and blood was pouring from the stumps. A small ghost followed closely, and greedily licked up all the blood on the floor as they went.

It was a terrifying sight, yet no one in the Gambler's Den spared it any looks, and continued to shout and cheer, rolling about. Though, of course, many who gambled here weren't people, and if they were, then they were no ordinary humans.

⁴¹ Entrance Verses are three lines of poetry that express the meaning/theme of the establishment, or are just for good luck. One line on each side of the door, and one over the top.

Xie Lian slighted his body to let pass the four bouncers carrying the man, and then continued going deeper into the den. A petite attendant in a laughing mask approached him and welcomed him.

“Sir, are you here to play?”

Xie Lian gave a small smile. “I don’t have money on me. Mind if I just look?”

In his experience, usually if you said those words in any establishment, you’d get booted. Why would you enter without money? Yet the petite attendant still giggled.

“No money is not a problem. Those who play here don’t really use money to gamble.”

“Really?” Xie Lian asked.

The petite attendant covered her mouth. “Really. Sir, why don’t you come with me?”

She waved at Xie Lian, and sashayed away. Xie Lian followed behind her without a word, but carefully observed all around.

This Gambler’s Den from the inside out was exceedingly extravagant and stylish, but not tacky; it was a building rich with taste. The petite attendant brought Xie Lian to the very back of the main hall; there was a long table that was packed like sardines.

Xie Lian had only just approached, and he heard a man cry, “I bet my arm!”

There were too many onlookers. Xie Lian couldn’t get through, and could only listen from outside the crowd. Suddenly, he heard another voice lazily responding.

“No need. Nevermind your arm. Even your shit life is worthless here.”

Hearing the voice, Xie Lian’s heart jumped.

He silently mouthed the name, “San Lang.”

What he heard was indeed the voice of that young man. Yet, it was slightly deeper than he remembered.

However, it was because of this that it sounded even more pleasing to the ears. Although he was surrounded by boisterous brouhahas, the voice still rang loud and clear, and cut through the noise of the Gambler’s Den and into his ears.

Xie Lian looked up and found that behind the long table there was a screen curtain. And behind the curtain, he could see a faint red figure laid back leisurely on a long chair.

Ch.36: Admiring the Flower through Red Clouds; A Heart full of Sympathy

The words that came out of Hua Cheng's mouth were exceedingly condescending and rude, but the moment he spoke, the man in question allowed taunting from all around and dared not fight back. The attendant who had led Xie Lian to the long table smiled.

"Young master, you're very lucky today."

Xie Lian never moved his gaze from the long table. "How so?"

"Our lord is here to play," the attendant replied. "It's only these past couple of days that he was in the mood to pass by, so isn't this good luck?"

By her tone, Xie Lian could tell that the attendant had great respect for the "lord" and very much idolized him, as if just seeing him was the greatest of honours. Xie Lian couldn't help but smile.

The screen curtain was soft and silky, the red silhouette captivating; such a sight was truly enchanting. In front of the red curtain were a couple of charming women overlooking the gambling table. At first, Xie Lian was content to just watch from the background, but the moment he heard Hua Cheng's voice, he started trying to push himself through the crowd without drawing any attention to the fact that he was there. Finally, he made it through to the table and saw the man who was in the middle of putting down his bets.

It was a human. Xie Lian wasn't surprised, since it was already known that within Ghost City, there weren't just ghosts; there were also many cultivators with considerable skill, and sometimes, mere mortals who were looking for their own death. The gambling man had a mask on, but both his eyes were visible, bulging and laced with red as if bleeding; his lips were pale as if he hadn't seen the sun in days. He was a picture of a ghost more so than any ghosts present.

Both of his hands were pressed tightly on a black wooden dice cup on the table, and after holding back for a moment, he shouted, seeming to have given up on everything. "But...how come the other guy was able to bet both his legs??"

One of the croupiers before the red curtain smiled. "The one before used to be an acclaimed bandit, who was known for his light footwork and ability to take flight wherever he went. It was the crux of his life, so his legs were worthy as a bet. You're neither an artisan nor a medic; what worth does your arm possess?"

The man gritted his teeth. "Then...I bet ten years' worth of my only daughter's life!"

Xie Lian was stunned to hear those words, and thought, "Where on earth is there a father who is willing to bet on the life of his children? Is that even possible?"

Behind the curtain, Hua Cheng only snorted. "Very well."

Xie Lian couldn't tell if it was his imagination, but he could sense coldness from those words. But then he added mentally, "San Lang had always said he has good luck, and all of his fortune sticks came up the best of luck. If he bets against this man, wouldn't he for sure win, and take away ten years of life from that man's daughter?"

He was just thinking this when the croupier announced sweetly: "Even will be a loss; odds will be a win. Once the cup is open, there will be no turning back. Now please."

Turns out, Hua Cheng wouldn't be betting in the pool in the first place. That man shook the gambling cup haphazardly, both hands grasping onto it hard, and the hall quieted down. The sounds of the dice rattling could be heard loud and crisply. Then, his movement slowed to a stop. Silence reigned.

It was after a long moment before the man slowly—very slowly—lifted a corner of the gambling cup and peeked through the gap. His red eyes suddenly widened.

He flipped open the cup and shouted with mad joy. "ODD! ODD! ODD!! I WIN! I'VE WON! HAHAHAHHAHAHAHAH I'VE WON!!! I'VE WON!!!!!"

This was not the outcome the crowd of humans and ghosts surrounding the long table wanted to see, and they started booing down the man, slapping the table and shouting their discontent.

One of the croupiers smiled and said, "Congratulations. The fate of your business will soon see a turnaround."

The man laughed uproariously and cried, "Wait! I want to bet again!"

The croupier smiled. "You're welcome to. What do you want this time?"

The man's face dropped, and said, "I want, I want everyone competing with me in my business to drop dead!"

Hearing this, the crowd started muttering and clicking their tongues. The croupier raised a hand to cover her smile.

"If that is your wish, then it's much more difficult to fulfill than your previous wish. Won't you consider a different wish, like asking for your business to flourish?"

Yet the man replied, with his eyes red, "No! That's the only thing I want to bet on! That's what I'm betting for!"

“Then, if that is your wish, ten years of your daughter’s life may not be enough,” the croupier said.

“If that’s not enough, I’ll bet twenty years of her life! And...and the fate of her marriage on top of that!”

The crowd was stunned, and burst out laughing.

“The dad’s lost his mind! He’s selling his daughter!!”

“Amazing, too amazing!!”

The croupier announced once again, “Even will be a loss, odd will be a win. Once the cup is open, there will be no going back. Now please.”

That man took up the gambling cup once more, his hands shaking. If he lost, then his daughter would lose twenty years of her life and a good marriage, obviously not ideal; but if he won, then all of his competitors would drop dead? Although Xie Lian thought Hua Cheng would never let such a thing happen, after much hesitation, he still stepped forward. He was just thinking on whether he should join in using some small trick when suddenly, someone grabbed hold of him. He turned his head to see, and it was Shi Qingxuan.

Shi Qingxuan had returned to his male form, and whispered, “Don’t be rash.”

Xie Lian whispered back, “Lord Wind Master, why did you transform back?”

“It’s a long story,” Shi Qingxuan sighed. “That group of women dragged me around saying they were going to introduce me to good beauty parlours. I finally escaped, but they caught me again, so I had to change back. They dragged me to a place that smeared so much stuff on my face; pulling, stretching, slapping, smacking—quick, check my face! How is it? Anything wrong? Do you see anything off with my face?”

He pushed his face right up to Xie Lian to be inspected, and Xie Lian dutifully gave it a detailed look before replying truthfully: “I think it looks even smoother and whiter than before.”

Shi Qingxuan brightened immediately. “Really? Oh good! That’s wonderful! Hahahaha! Is there a mirror? Where’s a mirror? I want to see!”

“Look later,” Xie Lian said. “The Ghost City is blocking our spiritual communication, so let’s not lose each other again. By the way, how did you know I was here, Lord Wind Master?”

“I didn’t!” Shi Qingxuan replied. “I came because Qianqiu and I had already agreed to meet here. When we lost each other earlier, I just came here instead, but when I walked in, turns out you were here too!”

“You called Qianqiu out?” Xie Lian asked. “To meet here?”

“Yeah,” Shi Qingxuan replied. “Qianqiu is that Lang Qianqiu, His Highness Tai Hua. You know that much at least, right? He’s the Martial God of the East. Since we’re here, it’s best if he came too. The Gambler’s Den is one of the most bustling and the most chaotic places in Ghost City. It’s a landmark. Many people and ghosts alike go in and out, it’s much less conspicuous for us to be about, so I told him to meet us here.”

Xie Lian nodded. When he turned back to the long table, that man still hadn’t opened the cup; his eyes were rolled back and he was muttering, not unlike many of the ghosts there. Xie Lian sighed.

Shi Qingxuan said as he felt his face, “I know what you want to say, and I agree. But, the Ghost City is Hua Cheng’s territory, and the rules here were all adhered to willingly. If you dare gamble, then you can play. The heavens can do nothing. Let’s just observe, and we can come up with something if anything gets out of hand.”

Xie Lian hummed, thinking there was no way San Lang would allow anything to get out of hand, so it would indeed be best to just observe. The gambling man finally seemed to gather enough courage and opened just a slither of the gambling cup to reveal the outcome. Just then, another person busted in, shut down the gambling cup with a strike, and crushed it to pieces!

This strike not only crushed the gambling cup, but also the hand that was on top of it, and the entire table splintered with a deep crack.

The masked man cradled his crushed hand, and rolled all over the floor screaming. The crowd of ghosts also started shouting, some cheering, and some crying in shock.

The person who struck out yelled, “You! What a villainous heart! If you wished for wealth and fortune, then no matter, but you wished for others to drop dead? If you wanted to bet, then have the guts to bet your own life, and not the life and marriage of your daughter! You’re not fit to be a man! Not fit to be a father!”

The young man had sword-like brows and stars for eyes, bursting with heroic aura. Although his clothes were simple and not a bit glamorous, his air of nobility couldn’t be concealed. It was none other than the Crown Prince of Yong’an—Lang Qianqiu.

Seeing him, Xie Lian and Shi Qingxuan both covered their faces at the same time in the crowd.

Xie Lian groaned. “....Lord Wind Master, did you...not tell him...to be a little more careful when coming here, and keep it low-key....”

Shi Qingxuan whined back, "...I...I told him, but...he's always like that...what can I do...had I known earlier...I would've planned for us to come down together...."

Xie Lian sympathized. "I get it...I understand..."

Just then, Hua Cheng chuckled lightly from behind the curtains.

Xie Lian's heart skipped a beat.

The boy had often laughed when he was with Xie Lian, so now Xie Lian was able to tell somewhat whether the laughter was genuine happiness, mockery, or laced with killing intent.

A voice said lazily, "You must have guts of steel to start trouble here in my territory."

Lang Qianqiu turned to face the direction of the voice, with fire in his eyes. "Are you the owner of this Gambler's Den?"

The crowd jeered. "Foolish bastard, do you even know who you're talking to? This is our lord."

Some sneered coldly. "Not only does he own this Gambler's Den, this entire Ghost City is his!"

Lang Qianqiu barely showed any reaction when hearing this, but Shi Qingxuan, on the other hand, was completely taken aback.

"My dear god, is that who I think it is behind the curtain?"

Xie Lian answered, "Yes...it's him."

Shi Qingxuan asked again, "Are you sure?!"

Xie Lian replied, "I'm certain."

Shi Qingxuan panicked. "We're dead, we're dead. What do we do about Qianqiu now?!"

Xie Lian said after a while, "...Let's hope he doesn't expose himself..."

Yet the more Lang Qianqiu looked around, the angrier he became, and he demanded, "This hellish place reeks of smoke and corruption, and is filled to the brim with demonic chaos. What kind of scum are you? Just what do you think you're doing here? Running a place like this, you guys really don't have a single trace of humanity in you."

The crowd booed in unison.

“We ain’t humans anyway, what do we need humanity for? That sort of useless notion, whoever wants it can take it!”

“Who do you think you are, coming all the way here to point fingers at us?!”

Hua Cheng said, amused, “This den of mine has been a mad hellish place to begin with. There’s a path for you in Heaven, but you refuse to take it, and instead choose to barge into Hell. What shall we do with you?”

After hearing the word “heaven”, Xie Lian and Shi Qingxuan instantly knew.

Hua Cheng had already seen through Lang Qianqiu and knew exactly where he had come from.

Yet, Lang Qianqiu completely missed the meaning behind his words and slammed his hand down on the table once more. He was standing at the end of the table, and with this one strike, he sent the entire table flying towards the red shadow behind the curtains. Those who had originally gathered around the table dodged to the sides. However, the sitting silhouette behind the curtain didn’t move. With a wave of his hand, the long table was flung back in the opposite direction, towards Lang Qianqiu.

Seeing the incoming flying object, Lang Qianqiu used one hand to push it back, but then realized that it wasn’t enough and switched to both hands. Seconds ticked by and blue veins gradually surfaced on his forehead. The once-bustling hall now had people and ghosts fleeing and hiding. Xie Lian and Shi Qingxuan debated whether they should step in to help. Since they hadn’t been exposed yet, they could continue to help out in the dark, but if they were to walk in openly, then they’d risk getting caught altogether.

On the other side, Lang Qianqiu exhaled loudly and finally pushed back the heavy, long table again. Behind the red curtains, Hua Cheng’s figure was still leaning against the chair. He curled his five fingers into a fist, and then released them lightly. Instantly, the table exploded into sawdust and flew towards Lang Qianqiu.

The force of this gust full of splinters was as sharp as knives, more fearful than any kind of weapon. If Lang Qianqiu was to keep his powers hidden and remain in his mortal form, he wouldn’t be able to evade the attack no matter what. Thus, moments after, when his body started emitting a faint light, Xie Lian and Shi Qingxuan understood right away and panicked.

“Oh no, he’s going to reveal his true form!”

But this faint sheen of spiritual light suddenly vanished as soon as it appeared. Lang Qianqiu had probably remembered that he wasn’t supposed to reveal his identity on this trip and caught himself at the last second before quickly withdrawing his power. Although Lang Qianqiu had taken a step back, Hua Cheng, on the other hand, hadn’t. The crimson figure sitting leisurely behind the red curtain made another hand gesture. This time, he pressed his fingers together and lightly flicked up.

With this one motion, Lang Qianqiu's body lifted off the ground. Like a starfish, his body was suspended on the ceiling of the gambling hall.

Not realizing what had just happened, Lang Qianqiu was still incredibly confused as to how he suddenly started floating and struggled to break free. Xie Lian sighed in defeat.

"Now that his power's been sealed, even if he wanted to use it, it'd be impossible."

Shi Qingxuan agreed. "Since the Ghost City is Hua Cheng's territory, if he wanted to seal it, then he could. "

Even though Lang Qianqiu had been apprehended before the crowd, at least there was a merit that could be gained from it, which was the fact that his identity would be protected. If he had continued the brawl back then and released his powers, it would be hard to explain as to why Tai Hua Zhen Jun, the Eastern Martial God, would come to the Ghost City to wreak havoc. After all, over the course of the years, unless it was something extraordinary, Heaven and Hell all minded their own businesses.

Seeing that the boisterous guest that had barged into the Gambler's Den had been detained, the crowd that fled returned and gathered in the hall once more. They pointed at the suspended Lang Qianqiu and laughed. Lang Qianqiu had never experienced this kind of humiliation before, and his face flushed red as he wordlessly struggled against the invisible binds. From time to time, a ghost from below would jump up in an attempt to pat his head. Fortunately, Hua Cheng had hung him fairly high up, far from reach, or else he would end up being the embarrassment of the century.

Hua Cheng chuckled from behind the curtains. "What an interesting catch today, I'll let you guys play with it. Whoever's lucky and wins big can take it home to roast."

The cheers that erupted within the hall were endless.

"Bet on the roll! Let's bet on the roll! The highest roll can take him home to roast!"

"Aiyaya, this little gege looks pretty delicious, hehehehe...."

"Hahahahahaha, who's the fool now! That'll teach you to cause trouble around here!"

The four masked bouncers carried in a new long table and the crowd flocked to the area once again to start the next round of bets. The masked man who was clutching his hand and howling on the ground was long forgotten. The bet this time around was no other than Lang Qianqiu, who was suspended in mid-air. Seeing that people on the other end were riled up, Shi Qingxuan anxiously paced back and forth, waving his hands around aimlessly.

“What do we do? Should we go up and win him back? Or is it better to just fight?”

Xie Lian asked, “Lord Wind Master, how’s your luck?”

Shi Qingxuan replied, “It’s sometimes good, sometimes bad. There’s no certainty in something like ‘luck’.”

Xie Lian said, “There can be. For example, look at me; I’ve never had any good luck.”

Shi Qingxuan gaped. “Is it that bad?”

Xie Lian nodded gloomily. “Whenever I roll, the most I’d get is snake eyes.”

Shi Qingxuan knitted his brows, but an idea came to him in an instant and he slapped his thigh. “How about this: since the most you can get is snake eyes, then you should bet on the lowest number. There can’t be anyone who’d roll lower than you.”

After a moment of consideration, Xie Lian agreed. “You have a good point. Let me try.”

So, he found a place near the table and threw out a suggestion: “Why not switch the rules up a bit and see who can roll the smallest? The lowest roll wins, how about that?”

The crowd around the table was chaotic, some agreed, some disagreed. Xie Lian decided to take two dice and give it a try first.

Before he rolled, he chanted mentally, “small, small, small.” The dice were tossed, and the two leaned in to take a look.

Two sixes!

Xie Lian: “....”

Shi Qingxuan: “....”

Xie Lian rubbed his forehead in defeat. “It seems that not even a change of rules could change my luck.”

Shi Qingxuan mirrored him in rubbing his forehead. “Maybe it’s better if we just fight outright.”

Just then, a croupier walked towards the red curtains and leaned in, as if trying to hear what the figure behind was saying. She nodded, raised her head and announced: "Everyone, can I have your attention, please. The lord has an announcement to make."

Hearing that the lord had something to say, the crowd immediately dropped everything and fell silent.

The croupier continued, "The lord said to change up the rules."

Chatter broke out in the crowds.

"The lord is the rule!"

"The rule is whatever the lord dictates!"

"What are we changing it to?"

The croupier responded, "The lord said that he's in a good mood today, and wanted to play a couple rounds with everyone. Anyone is free to bet against him. Whoever wins gets to take home the thing above. Whether you want to steam it, boil it, fry it or pickle it, it's all up to you."

Hearing that they'd be betting against the lord, all the ghosts and demons started to have second thoughts. It seemed that Hua Cheng never really stepped in to gamble himself. Out of all the courageous ones, not one would dare to come up first. Above them, Lang Qianqiu struggled with endless determination.

He barked, "What do you mean 'thing'? I'm not a thing! You dare to use me as a bet?"

His proclamation of not being a "thing" was heard by the many female ghosts in the crowd. Giggling, they sent him lecherous looks while running their bloody, sharp tongues across their lips, as if they wanted to swallow him whole.

Xie Lian thought, "Sigh...this child. It's better if you speak less."

After a soundless sigh, Xie Lian stepped forward and said softly, "If that's the case, then, please let me have a try."

Upon hearing his voice, the shadow behind the red curtains paused, before slowly standing up.

The croupier in front of the curtains smiled. "Then, please come forth, young master."

Within the hall, demons and ghosts automatically parted for this brave warrior. When Xie Lian reached the end of the path, the croupier presented to him the polished black gambling cup in her hands.

“Please go ahead, sir.”

To all the previous gamblers, she had always used a casual way of speaking. Despite the ordinary words that were uttered, her tone wasn't polite in the slightest. However, now, to Xie Lian, not only had she switched to using honorifics, the tone she used was also exceedingly polite and respectful. Xie Lian received the black gambling cup from her with a word of thanks, and lightly cleared his throat.

Since he never had any experience with something like gambling, he shook the cup randomly for a good while and pretended that he knew a thing or two. As he moved his hands, he raised his head and glanced at Lang Qianqiu who was hanging above. Lang Qianqiu's eyes were wide open, staring at him; thankfully, he didn't make a sound. His expression somehow made Xie Lian want to laugh, but he held it back. After a long shake, he finally stopped.

Countless pairs of eyes zoomed in on the cup in his hands, and Xie Lian felt that somehow, this tiny little gambling cup had grown heavier. He didn't know if there was a right way to flip it. However, just as he was about to reveal the outcome, the croupier stopped him.

“Wait.”

“Is something the matter?” Xie Lian asked.

That croupier replied, “The lord said your cup shaking posture isn't quite right.”

Xie Lian thought to himself, “Is there really a correct way of doing this? Was all my bad luck before due to my bad posture?”

He asked modestly, “May I ask what the correct posture is?”

The croupier responded, “The lord has invited you to go up, as he's willing to teach you.”

Upon hearing this, the crowd of ghosts within the den voiced their discontent.

Xie Lian heard a ghost mutter, “To think the lord would teach him, does that mean he's gonna die?”

“The lord wants to do what??? Just who is this??? Why teach him???”

“Isn't that how we all shake cups? How is there even a right way of doing this?”

Xie Lian also wanted to ask the same question, but the croupier already motioned him towards the red curtains.

“Please go ahead.”

Thus, Xie Lian arrived in front of the red curtains with the black wooden gambling cup clutched in his hands.

The silk curtain swayed gently, almost giving life to the red silhouette. The person behind the curtains was standing directly in front of him, with only half an arm’s distance between the two. Xie Lian held his breath as a hand parted the heavy red curtains and landed perfectly under his, supporting the gambling cup.

This was a right hand, white and elegant; the slender fingers had a red thread tied around the third.

Against the pitch-black wooden cup, the white looked even paler, and the red even more vivid.

Slowly, Xie Lian lifted his eyes. A youth, roughly around the age of eighteen or nineteen, silently stood behind the red cloud-like silk curtains.

It was San Lang.

His robes were still the same maple red, and his skin white as snow. That same uniquely handsome face, with incomparable youthful expression, was now slightly more defined. That shyness of boyhood had morphed into one of calmness, and he carried an air of wild playfulness that couldn’t be tamed. The same eye that twinkled like stars never moved away from Xie Lian.

Although as bright a star, there was only one left eye.

The other was hidden behind a black eyepatch.

Ch.37: Admiring the Flower through Red Clouds; A Heart Full of Sympathy 2

The red silk curtains were only opened a small slit, but in his position, Xie Lian was the only one who could make out the person behind the curtains, since he had blocked everyone else's vision in the hall. Not that they would dare to sneak a peek, anyway. That left eye watched Xie Lian, and Xie Lian returned the gaze, subconsciously drawn to it.

Hua Cheng's appearance this time around didn't only seem to look a couple years older, but he'd also grown taller. Before, when Xie Lian looked at him, he could still manage to maintain the same level of eye contact, but now, he had to strain his neck to look up.

After staring at each other for a good while, Hua Cheng finally broke the silence.

He said in a deep voice, "Would you like to bet on the highest or the lowest?"

It was this deep voice, one that was pleasant to the ear, that pulled Xie Lian back to reality. Whether it was betting on the highest number or the lowest, there was no difference, so he answered right away.

"Highest."

Hua Cheng replied, "Fine. Then I'll go first."

Xie Lian's left hand supported the base of the black gambling cup. His right hand covered the circular lid. Hua Cheng stood in front of him, with his right hand covering Xie Lian's left, he guided him to shake lightly before lifting the lid. There were two dice at the bottom of the cup, a six and a five.

From all the way above, Lang Qianqiu, with his vision like a hawk's, saw how easily the high roll took place and his eyes widened.

"How did that happen??"

Hua Cheng gently shifted his hand, and beckoned Xie Lian to give it another go. "Shake it like this. Now you try it."

Xie Lian mirrored his actions and shook the cup twice, but Hua Cheng said, "Not like that."

Even though he was reprimanding Xie Lian, his tone was exceptionally gentle and patient. As he explained, Hua Cheng supported Xie Lian's hand with his own again, but this time, his left hand found its way to Xie Lian's right hand, the one that was covering the lid.

He instructed softly, "Like this."

And just like that, the back of Xie Lian's hands were enveloped within Hua Cheng's palms.

When skin touched skin, Hua Cheng's hands felt temperate like jade. The exquisite silver vambraces that Hua Cheng wore were cold as ice, and yet, Hua Cheng's movements were careful, and he never allowed them to come into contact with Xie Lian's skin. His hands guided Xie Lian's and shook the black wooden gambling cup in a rhythm that was neither hurried nor slow.

Once. Twice. Thrice.

Clack, clack, clack.

The sound of the two dice colliding with each other as they bounced inside the cup was crisp. Even though the shakes were gentle, Xie Lian could feel waves of numbness from the back of his hands, traveling along his arm, spreading to the rest of his body.

As he was shaking, Xie Lian lifted his eyes to sneak a peek at the other person, and realized that Hua Cheng wasn't looking at the gambling cup at all. Instead, he was watching him intently, with the corners of his mouth curved up. Xie Lian couldn't help but return the fond smile, but immediately controlled himself when he remembered the crowd of ghosts that were watching him from above and below. He lowered his head and diligently studied the gesture that Hua Cheng showed him.

"Like this?" he asked.

Hua Cheng widened his smile. "Hm. That's right, just like that."

Seeing how Xie Lian shook the cup a few more times, full of hope, he suggested, "Why don't you take a look?"

Xie Lian lifted the lid and saw two white dice at the base. It was two threes.

Rolling two threes was already considered an impossible feat. It was as if a gentle spring wind had blown past Xie Lian's heart, and he thought, "Could it be that I've finally learned the trick?"

However, even though it was shocking, six points was still slightly less than eleven points. He cleared his throat and admitted, "I'm sorry, I've lost."

But Hua Cheng replied, "Don't worry, this round doesn't count. I'm teaching you right now, try again."

Hearing him say this, even Lang Qianqiu and Shi Qingxuan were tongue-tied. The crowd of ghosts in the hall stared with their mouths gaping open, then came the complaints.

“What happened to the lord? I thought he was gonna show him who’s boss, but he actually ended up teaching him for real??”

“How can you not count this round?? You still call this gambling?”

“If this doesn’t count, then when will it count?”

“Looks like the lord is really in a good mood today...”

Hua Cheng raised his left brow and immediately, the croupier standing by the side shushed the crowd.

“Everyone, please quiet down.”

In the blink of an eye, the hall had quieted down again. Although no one dared to speak, their stares intensified. Hua Cheng chuckled and softly whispered words of encouragement into Xie Lian’s ear, “Why don’t you try again?”

It might be because there were too many ghosts, demons, humans alike packed into this Gambling Den, that somehow Xie Lian felt his face starting to heat up.

“Okay.”

Rattle, rattle, he shook twice more. This time, when he revealed the cup, it was two fours.

Hua Cheng mused, “See, isn’t it a little higher this time?”

Although he felt that something was off, Xie Lian still nodded his head. “Yes...it’s a little higher.”

Hua Cheng encouraged, “You did well. Keep going.”

With one compliment after another, there were giggles heard in all directions of the hall. Judging by the sound, it seemed as if they all came from female ghosts. Xie Lian couldn’t figure it out himself just what posture was the correct one. In the beginning, he paid close attention in studying how Hua Cheng positioned his hands, how he managed the pace, and how he grasped the cup, but now, he was letting Hua Cheng’s hand lead him and shook blindly.

While shaking, a thought came to him: “What if San Lang is just playing around with me...”

Lang Qianqiu, who had been watching from above, probably felt the same and couldn’t hold it in anymore. “You! Stop shaking the cup. He’s obviously playing you. There’s no such thing as a correct posture. He must’ve cheated!”

Hearing that loud boisterous voice, Shi Qingxuan covered his face in second-hand embarrassment again.

Mumbles and muttering grew louder amongst the crowd, and a rain of dice was thrown at Lang Qianqiu.

“Stupid bastard, shut up!”

“So noisy, we’re just getting to the exciting part!”

“Through our lord’s teaching, that cultivator has gotten outcomes higher and higher one after another. That’s the undeniable truth!”

“That’s right! What do you know?!”

Lang Qianqiu fumed, “You, you’re practically lying through your teeth...ahhh!!”

He suddenly stopped in mid-speech, and his face turned bright red. It turned out, a couple of female ghosts below him had roughly yanked on his dangling waistband and scolded,

“If you keep on causing a ruckus and spouting nonsense, jiejie⁴² will pull off your pants!”

Lang Qianqiu had never been threatened like this before, and his anger had made him speechless. “You.. you!!”

He could take being beaten by a band of ghosts, but if they were to pull off his pants, then with his martial god status, that would be exceedingly embarrassing. Thus, Lang Qianqiu didn’t dare to say much more. Xie Lian looked up and saw the other god sending him eye signals. It was funny and pitiful at the same time.

He could only lower his head; he looked at Hua Cheng, and said in a small voice, “...San Lang.”

Hearing his tone of voice, Hua Cheng chuckled. “Leave him be. Let us continue.”

“...”

Xie Lian gave up and, once again, held the cup and shook twice. As expected, this time, he got two fives.

Seeing the result, the crowd became even livelier and continued to tease Lang Qianqiu.

“Do you see that? Higher than the last!”

⁴² “Jiejie” is a familiar address for “older sister”.

But Xie Lian had already realized that Hua Cheng was just fooling around with him, and didn't know whether to laugh or cry. There was no such thing as a correct posture. When it came to him, any posture was wrong. From here on, he might as well give up on any hope of changing his luck, but just as he was about to expose himself on the last shake, Hua Cheng stopped him.

"Wait."

Xie Lian could feel the hands covering his pressing down harder, and stopped his movement altogether. "What's wrong?"

With an unreadable expression, Hua Cheng asked, "This gege, you didn't say what would happen if you were to lose?"

Hearing him call Xie Lian "gege", Shi Qingxuan and Lang Qianqiu both wore a complicated expression on their faces. The crowd of ghosts also felt massive shivers run down their spines, and there were even a few that fainted on the spot.

It was a little embarrassing to say, but because he was in a hurry before, Xie Lian hadn't thought about what to bet on.

"Um..."

He had thought of also betting ten years of his life, but a heavenly official's lifespan was quite long, so ten years wasn't really worth much. Money and treasure? He didn't have any. Spiritual power? He didn't have much of that either. A good amount of time had passed, but Xie Lian still couldn't think of anything to bet on, so he could only turn and ask the owner of the Gambling Den.

"Do you think there's anything on me that's worth betting on?"

Hua Cheng chuckled at his question. "Anything's fine. What have you got on you?"

Xie Lian pondered for a little while and lightly coughed; he might as well be honest about it. "I...only have a half-eaten bun with me."

Hua Cheng burst out laughing. Even though he laughed, no one else dared to do the same even if they wanted to.

When he finally settled down, Hua Cheng nodded. "That's fine. A bun will do."

Hearing the agreement, not only were the crowd of ghosts shocked, but the croupiers at the gambling table, too.

Ever since the opening of this Gambling Den, there had been innumerable absurd bets made: organs, life, emotions, spiritual powers...but none were a match to the one today—a half-eaten bun.

Even Lang Qianqiu couldn't contain his surprise. "What...what's the meaning of this? Are you saying that I'm only worth a half-eaten bun???"

The crowd snickered. Someone called out, "What's wrong with a bun? You already have it easy, so hurry up and shut your mouth!"

Xie Lian could tell that this defeated voice belonged to Shi Qingxuan, who was hiding among the crowd of ghosts and demons. With a face full of smiles, Hua Cheng beamed.

"Come. It's the last round. Don't be nervous."

Xie Lian argued, "I'm not nervous."

The two maintained that hand-to-hand posture and shook a few times. Even though Xie Lian really wasn't nervous, there was a light sheen of sweat on the hand that was sandwiched between the cup and Hua Cheng's hands. Finally, the movement came to a stop. He held his breath for the final reveal—

The two dice were two sixes!

Xie Lian let out a sigh of relief and looked up at Hua Cheng. Hua Cheng quirked his brows.

"Oh, I lost."

Even though he admitted his loss in a serious manner, he didn't sound the least bit sincere. The crowd below was engulfed in silence.

Before there were still people complaining, "if this round doesn't count, then when will it count", but now, the answer was clear—it counts when that person wins.

This much generosity was almost insane!

Even so, no one would dare to comment. The croupier from before raised up the black wooden gambling cup.

"Congratulations to this young master. You've won this round."

Everyone all politely praised:

"The lord showed us a perfect loss! Beautiful!"

“Isn’t the winner taught by the lord? He won because the lord taught him well!”

“That’s right! Learning the correct dice rolling posture today really broadened my horizons! With such an immense amount of knowledge, even ten years won’t be enough to master it!”

Hua Cheng was still watching Xie Lian with a grin on his face. Not shifting his gaze, he raised his arm and with a flick of hand, Lang Qianqiu dropped like a rock. Xie Lian winced at the loud crash. Shi Qingxuan couldn’t risk exposing himself by rushing forward, so instead Xie Lian went to check up on the prince.

“Are you okay?”

Lang Qianqiu got up on his feet and dusted himself off. “I’m good, thank you. He probably wanted you to go up so that he could cheat and make you lose, but thank goodness you won!”

Xie Lian thought, “You’re completely mistaken. If he didn’t go easy on me, even if the world had turned to ashes, I would still not be able to win you back...”

As he was thinking those thoughts, the tinkling of bells was heard, and the sound was followed by gasps of shock that came from all directions. Xie Lian turned around and saw that Hua Cheng had finally stepped out from behind the red silk screen curtains.

In his previous form, Hua Cheng always sported a slightly crooked ponytail. But now, loose raven locks covered vibrant red clothing, and an aura of demonic energy radiated from the handsome figure. Only the thin braid tied with a red coral bead brought a hint of mischief to the mix. The vambraces were silver, the straps on his boots were silver, the waistband was also silver, even the long, smoothly curved scimitar that hung at his waist was silver. Just like how the blade was slender and long, the person himself was also slender and tall. He was leaning against the curtains that had been parted, with crossed arms and an unreadable expression.

“Gege, you’ve won against me.”

Xie Lian obviously knew what had taken place, and said woefully, “Please stop teasing me.”

Hua Cheng raised his brow. “I’m not. Why would I?”

Down below, the crowd of ghosts were bustling with excitement, as wild as the waves rolling in the sea, they whispered among themselves.

“The lord changed his skin again today?”

“I’m dying, his new skin is killing me! It’s so tender and firm!”

“Dying? You old hag, aren’t you already dead?!”

It seemed that, because Hua Cheng never showed his true form in front of anyone and switched skins fairly frequently, even the band of ghosts in the Ghost City didn’t know what he looked like, and assumed that this must be another one of his fake skins. Only Xie Lian knew that the one standing in front of him was the real Crimson Rain Sought Flower of the legends.

Ch.38: Admiring the Flower through Red Clouds; A Heart Full of Sympathy 3

Xie Lian was still staring at the young man in red.

“ You...”

He wanted to say something, but under the gaze of numerous pairs of eyes, and the unreadable expression on Hua Cheng’s face that didn’t seem to show signs of recognizing him, Xie Lian debated whether he should act so familiar with him. If it was intentional then it wasn’t his place to say too much, either.

So he simply said, “Thank you.”

“Why thank him?” Lang Qianqiu demanded. “This place is owned by him, he probably had malintentions since the beginning.”

“...” Xie Lian replied under his breath, “Your Highness, let’s stop talking and call it a day.”

If they were to continue, he really didn’t know what would come out of Lang Qianqiu’s mouth. Especially with the mission at hand, Xie Lian couldn’t afford to stay long. He looked at Hua Cheng a couple more times and pushed Lang Qianqiu towards the exit. Just as he did so, Hua Cheng’s voice called from behind him.

“Hold it.”

Xie Lian halted his step and turned around. The chatter among the crowd started again.

“That’s right, my lord, we can’t just let them leave like this!”

“That guy’s suspicious. He looks to be quite powerful, and is probably hiding something. If you ask me, we should keep him here and interrogate him.”

“Exactly, who knows if he’s a spy sent from whichever organization to cause trouble in our world!”

That last sentence almost stopped his heart. They really did come from the heavens, but the intent wasn’t to cause trouble, only quiet probing. Xie Lian wasn’t sure if Hua Cheng had seen the spiritual light that Lang Qianqiu had released before, and he wasn’t a hundred percent certain Hua Cheng would let them go if he did see. Xie Lian was growing increasingly anxious, but the tone Hua Cheng spoke in was laid-back.

“Shouldn’t you leave the prize?”

Xie Lian was lost. “Prize?”

Lang Qianqiu put himself in front of Xie Lian, and said cautiously, "Are you going back on your words now?"

But Xie Lian thought, "If San Lang would never go back on his promises. Could he have meant something else?"

With that, he stepped out from behind Lang Qianqiu and asked, "But didn't I already win the bet?"

Hua Cheng said, "It's true that Gege had won against me just now, but don't forget, you'd lost a round before."

Xie Lian was surprised. "But you said not to worry because it didn't count?"

Even though it took some really thick skin to say something as embarrassing as "it doesn't count when I lose, and it only counts when I win", Xie Lian still said it.

Hua Cheng replied, "Of course, the ones that were bet against me didn't count. What I'm referring to is the first round that you gambled at the long table."

It was then that Xie Lian finally remembered. Hua Cheng was talking about that time when he wanted to test out the lowest he could roll, and had ended up throwing out a double six instead.

Lang Qianqiu whispered, "I told you he didn't have good intentions and wouldn't let us leave here that easily. I won't get sealed again this time."

Seeing that he was readying himself for another fight and was eager to jump up at the chance, Xie Lian quickly pulled him back.

"Don't worry, we don't need to use our fists."

On the other end, Hua Cheng tilted his head. "How about it? Gege, do you admit your loss?"

If one was willing to gamble, then one should also admit to their loss honestly. There were no other options, so Xie Lian nodded. "I admit."

Hua Cheng extended his left hand with an open palm. "Then, give me the prize like you promised."

...The prize that he promised?

After some hesitation, Xie Lian reached into his left sleeve with his right hand, felt around, and fished out a half-eaten bun. Unable to look Hua Cheng in the eye, he toughened up his skin and presented it.

“You mean...this...right?”

Truth be told, when he took out this bun, Xie Lian felt the thick skin he'd grown through his eight hundred years crumble a little; unable to hold up.

The ghosts in the hall had been already speechless long before, and only watched in silence. Nevermind that it was the lord's first time betting against someone, when the bet came to be a half-eaten bun, they thought it was a joke. But to think, in all seriousness, the lord had actually pursued the person to ask for this bun. Speechless. There was really nothing to say. There were some ghosts who even had a more absurd thought—either there was some sort of enormous secret hidden within this bun, or this person was actually the lord's older brother!

Yet Hua Cheng grinned as he received the bun, gave it a look and waved it around in his hand. “I've claimed this prize.”

To see that he actually took it, Xie Lian didn't know what to say. It was only after a good minute that he responded.

“It's...cold. And, maybe, a little hard.”

Hua Cheng replied, “That's okay. I don't mind.”

Since he answered like this, Xie Lian had nothing more to say to continue the conversation. He already said all he could, so he turned around and headed towards the exit. The nether crowd of the Gambler's Den all parted for him as he departed. When he first went forward, they parted for him thinking he was a brave warrior. Now, they parted for him with fear and suspicion.

After walking for a few steps, he could hear the ghosts behind him ask, “My Lord! My Lord, where are you going now?”

Hua Cheng lazily replied, “I'm feeling good today. I'm heading to the Paradise Manor.”

Hearing his response, the hall erupted in cheers as if it was New Year's. Xie Lian couldn't help but take another glance back, and saw that Hua Cheng had also turned around. With that half-eaten bun still in his hand, he gave it a light toss and casually took a bite out of it, looking in Xie Lian's direction.

Xie Lian paused in his tracks when he saw that scene play out. Suddenly, for some reason, he felt that he shouldn't stay there any longer. He picked up his pace, grabbed Lang Qianqiu, and ran out.

The two left the Gambler's Den and ran like madmen for a long time, almost knocking over various food stalls along the way. Just when they had finally arrived at a small quiet alley, Shi Qingxuan also popped up and reunited with them. Shi Qingxuan fanned himself with such vigour that his hair flew wildly in the wind.

"That was so close, so close. My god, that scared me to the point that my face was almost as white as a ghost's."

Perhaps it was because they ran too hard that Xie Lian's heart was also beating madly.

Lang Qianqiu spoke up, "Yeah, Lord Wind Master, I think your face is still very pale right now."

Shi Qingxuan felt his face and smiled. "Is that so? Hahahaha, this is not because of fright; this is what I'm born with—Ahem. Ahem. Qianqiu, you're also a martial god, how could you be so rash? We're in the middle of the ghost realm territory here! If you were to be caught and exposed, and news of undercover heavenly officials in the Ghost City had gotten out, how would we explain this to the Heavenly Emperor? It would destroy peace in the three realms."

Lang Qianqiu bowed his head and admitted his mistake. "I'm sorry, I rushed in too carelessly." Then he raised his head. "But those gamblers were crazy. If that man had flipped open the cup, whether he had lost or won, the outcome would still have been bad. Either his daughter would suffer or he would suffer the consequences. It was in my moment of anger that I crushed the cup."

Shi Qingxuan replied, "Even so, you shouldn't have jumped in by yourself."

Lang Qianqiu was taken aback. "Then Lord Wind Master, what should I have done? If I didn't go in, there wouldn't be anyone who would have."

His plea was so genuine that Shi Qingxuan didn't know how to respond, and tapped his fan lightly against his temple. "Well..."

Xie Lian smiled softly. "Let's leave it."

Lang Qianqiu looked at him. Xie Lian continued, "I think even if His Highness Tai Hua was to get caught and interrogated, he still wouldn't reveal his identity. But, to prevent others from picking up any clues from your words, it'd be best for Your Highness to stay cautious and avoid capture going forward."

Lang Qianqiu nodded. "Okay, I understand."

Shi Qingxuan said, "Alright, let's not talk about this anymore. Oh right, Your Highness..."

Hearing “Your Highness”, both Xie Lian and Lang Qianqiu turned around at the same time, and Shi Qingxuan clarified, “Oh, I meant the elder.”

“...” Xie Lian thought woefully, “Elder...it’s true that I’m a little older, but not by that much. Why is it that when it comes to me, it always sounds like they’re referring to a grandpa?”

Shi Qingxuan continued, “Your Royal Highnesses, have you two met each other at the Great Martial Hall? If not, let me introduce you. This is the Crown Prince of Yong’an, Lang Qianqiu, Martial God of the East. This is the Crown Prince of Xianle, Xie Lian, a heavenly official that pi—that’s highly regarded by the Heavenly Emperor. “

Even though Shi Qingxuan stopped himself and didn’t say the words, Xie Lian knew exactly what came after; what else could it be other than “picks up scraps”! Since the words were abruptly swapped in mid-sentence, there was no time to adjust the grammar nor the pronunciation.

Lang Qianqiu looked at Xie Lian, and asked in astonishment, “So you’re the prince that ascended thrice?”

It seemed that Lang Qianqiu had really slept through the entire meeting at the Great Martial Hall the last time, and didn’t even remember who he was. If he was anyone else and said the same thing to Xie Lian, then it would, no doubt, be sarcastic. But, because the question came from Lang Qianqiu, Xie Lian wholeheartedly believed that this child truly thought ascending thrice was a rare occurrence.

His eyes twinkled. “Yes, that would be me.”

Lang Qianqiu responded, “That incident just now, thank you for helping me! Or else...”

He suddenly remembered something and hurriedly tightened up his waistband, fear still lingering on his expression. He clearly didn’t think too much about the past history between the Kingdom of Xianle and the Kingdom of Yong’an, and turned to Xie Lian.

“Your Highness, I thought that Crimson Rain Sought Flower knows you? How come he acted as if he didn’t, back there?” Lang Qianqiu finished tying up his waistband. “That was the real Crimson Rain Sought Flower, right? Was that his true form?”

Xie Lian didn’t even have the time to open his mouth and Shi Qingxuan already piped up.

“How can it be the true form? Hua Cheng has thousands of disguises, who knows what his true form looks like? Last time when I went to the Banyue Pass, he looked similar to the appearance today, but it’s probably a disguise too. It’s fake, all fake.”

Yet Xie Lian clearly recalled that Hua Cheng had told him, “the next time we meet, I’ll greet you in my true form”, that night at Puqi Shrine.

He thought to himself, “It’s real.”

But of course, he didn’t say it out loud. Everyone was so sure that Hua Cheng must be wearing a fake skin, and him being the only one who knew it was Crimson Rain Sought Flower’s true form was like learning of an extraordinary little secret.

He then continued that train of thought: “Seeing San Lang’s appearance, he really doesn’t look that much different from before, only slightly older and taller. That means technically, he was pretty much in his true form the first time I met him.”

Strangely, Xie Lian felt a little happy.

Shi Qingxuan added from the side, “People say that Hua Cheng is a strange character, and that really seems to be the case. It’s obvious that he was going easy on you, and yet he pretended not to know you. Who knows what he’s up to. Could it be that he wanted to catch us off-guard?”

Xie Lian choked. It seemed that anyone could tell Hua Cheng had gone easy on him back at the Gambler’s Den. “He went easy on him” was what people were saying, but truthfully, Hua Cheng literally just let him win one-sidedly. Lang Qianqiu was the only one who couldn’t tell, and frowned.

“Went easy on him? Why?”

The other two patted him on the shoulder and decided it was best not to explain it to him. They left Lang Qianqiu standing by himself, wondering why Hua Cheng would go easy on Xie Lian, and whether or not the two knew each other. Xie Lian and Shi Qingxuan turned and started walking.

“It seems that we have been exposed, what should we do now?” Xie Lian said. “Change our disguises and try again? Personally, I don’t think doing that will change anything. With His Highness Tai Hua’s fight back there, Ghost City will probably strengthen their security.”

Shi Qingxuan replied, “To be honest, I had considered the possibility of us getting exposed, but I never thought it would happen this soon.”

Xie Lian sighed. “I know, I know.”

“What’s done is done,” Shi Qingxuan said. “Since our covers are blown, you might as well just walk in confidently and do this openly.”

Xie Lian could vaguely guess what he had meant by “openly”.

As expected, Shi Qingxuan explained, "If we want to smooth out the lie, then the only way is to have you go find Hua Cheng openly, and tell him that you came here especially to see him. He knows that you're a heavenly official, right? If so, then it's pretty believable to say that you've brought a couple of little friends from heaven with you."

Before Xie Lian could answer, Lang Qianqiu who had heard the suggestion immediately cried out, "No!"

Shi Qingxuan looked at him. "Why not?"

Lang Qianqiu replied in a serious tone, "Prince Xianle, do you really know Crimson Rain Sought Flower? I heard your conversation earlier, it seems you two are friends."

Xie Lian nodded.

"Then of course that plan is not feasible!" Lang Qianqiu said. "Even though a ghost king is no saint, the fact that he went easy on you must mean that he sees you as a friend. If it's so, then one must not lie to a friend."

Shi Qingxuan could feel an oncoming headache. "My god, Qianqiu, you dimwit!"

Yet Xie Lian laughed and nodded. "What His Highness Tai Hua said is right."

Lang Qianqiu beamed. "You agree with me too, right?"

"How is that right?" Shi Qingxuan complained. "We are three heavenly officials. If we were to report back empty-handed, people would say that our success rate is even lower than Ling Wen Palace's, and that would be an utter embarrassment."

Xie Lian grinned, and just when he was about to speak, the sound of cries and howls that came from behind made them turn around. Just outside of the alley, a group of demons and ghosts ran past, shouting.

"Where's that brat with the bandaged face? Where the hell is he?"

Seeing the other two gods' alarm, Xie Lian reassured, "Don't worry, they're not after us."

Just as the words left his lips, their ears were pierced by a shrill, deafening cry.

Ch.39: At the Paradise Manor; Questions of Xianle

The cry of desperation made Xie Lian's heart drop. Without a second thought, he ran off in that direction, and there, a bunch of oddly-shaped silhouettes gathered in a circle outside the alley, yelling one after another.

"He's caught!"

"Beat him again!"

"Fuck! However much this little scumbag stole from me, I'm going to slice it off of him bit by bit!"

Shi Qingxuan caught up to him. "Your Highness, what's going on?"

Xie Lian didn't respond, but walked towards the group step by step. His pace grew in speed, and soon he broke into a run. He forcefully pushed past a couple ghosts on the outside, and saw that the person who was getting beaten was a ragged boy. He looked about fifteen or sixteen of age; curled up on the ground, trembling uncontrollably. Even though he tightly clung onto his head, one could still see the layers of bandages that were messily wrapped around his head. The bandages were the same as his hair, stained with dirt.

Wasn't this the same bandaged boy that Xie Lian had met at Mount Yujun, and that had gone missing and couldn't be found?

No wonder the Palace of Ling Wen said they couldn't find any traces of him a couple days ago. How could Heaven's Palace of Ling Wen find him in the mortal realm if the boy had escaped to the ghost's territory?

In a moment of fury, the couple of ghosts that had gotten pushed aside by Xie Lian pulled him out once more. One ghost yanked on the bandages.

"Look at how desperately he wants to keep his bandages on, I bet you this little beggar might even be uglier than me..."

Lang Qianqiu was furious and shouted, "What are you doing!", as he threw a few ghosts off to the side.

Shi Qingxuan didn't have the time to stop him, and could only wave around with his fan. "Qianqiu, I thought we agreed not to do things on impulse!"

This time around, Qianqiu had riled up more ghosts. They roared, "And who do you think you are!!", and lunged at him.

"I'm sorry, Lord Wind Master," Lang Qianqiu called. "This will be the last time!"

He jumped into the fight, whacking the ghosts about.

Shi Qingxuan let out an exasperated sigh. "Ugh, I'm never going out with you again!" he said, before also joining the brawl.

Because they couldn't expose their spiritual energy, they could only resort to fighting with their fists and feet. The other, smaller group that was beating up the boy was forcibly broken up by Xie Lian. He kneeled down, wanting to help the boy get up.

"Are you alright?"

Upon hearing that voice, the boy shuddered and took a peek at him from his fetal position. Now that he had gotten a better look, Xie Lian discovered that the bandages that were wrapped around the boy's face were soaked with blood. With patches of black and red, it was a frightening sight; the appearance even scarier than when they had last parted. The two big eyes that emerged from the gap between the bandages were clear as day, black iris against the white, yet those dark eyes that reflected Xie Lian's silhouette were filled with terror and fear.

Xie Lian took the boy by the arm. "Come, stand up. It's going to be okay."

To his surprise, the boy screamed, pushed Xie Lian away, and bolted.

Since this boy had once been infected with the Human Face Disease, he must be connected to the Kingdom of Xianle. The moment Xie Lian saw him, he could feel a tug in his heart and his mind became scattered. Caught off-guard by the force of the push, even his straw hat had fallen off.

After the initial shock, he called out, "Wait!"

Just when Xie Lian was about to give chase, the few ghosts that he had pulled away earlier grabbed onto him. The boy headed down the street that was livelier than ever. At the rate that he was effortlessly weaving through the groups of ghouls and ghosts with his small frame, the boy would disappear soon. It would be difficult for Ruoye to track down a person in this kind of setting, so in that split-second of urgency, Xie Lian called out behind him.

"My Lords, I'll leave this matter with you. Let's separate for now. Go hide and we'll meet here again in three days at the latest!"

Ruoye slid out and sent those ghosts flying in the direction of the other two officials. He bent over slightly, picked up his straw hat, and set off running in the direction of the boy.

He squeezed through the crowd with immense difficulty, while shouting, "excuse me! excuse me!". Because the boy had spent most of his life hiding in the mortal realm, escaping was practically second nature to him. First there was a head, then there was a shadow, after that, there was nothing; he was getting farther and farther away. Xie Lian didn't know if it was his imagination, but he felt that the crowds on the street were getting thicker by the minute. With humans and ghosts alike pressed against each other, it really made it difficult for him to pass through. In the midst of all that chaos, Xie Lian's mind was tumultuous; he knocked over a number of stalls, and he cried, "I'm sorry! I'm sorry!", as he continued to run.

Ghosts weren't ones to be crossed easily, however, and they yelled after him, "Sorry does shit! Catch him!"

Xie Lian felt a coldness on his back all of a sudden, as if a hand had grabbed him, and he immediately knocked it back. "Who is it?!"

It was hard to tell where the hand came from, but all the ghosts surrounded him, their voices screeching and terrible.

"Oi! Let's teach this little pale-face a thing or two! How dare he start shit in our Ghost City!"

A large crowd of monsters and spirits poured out into the street, and seeing that he was about to lose that boy in the crowd, Xie Lian did his best to throw off the hand that caught him.

"Everyone! I'm really sorry, I don't mean any harm. Let me go to find someone and I'll be back to pay you all back!"

The horde of ghosts were relentless. "As if!"

In the midst of all the pushing and pulling, that boy had disappeared completely. Xie Lian slowed to a stop and stood where he was, dazed. Truthfully, he really couldn't be sure what he was feeling. Was it disappointment in not being able to catch the other, or was it relief that a nightmare had passed?

Suddenly, there was a commotion amongst the ghost crowd, and they immediately parted to the sides, forming a path, as if someone of importance was about to arrive. Xie Lian came to, and saw the tall form of a black-clad figure walking straight towards him through the path created by the mob.

He yelled, "Settle down. Let him go!"

The black-clad figure, like most of the ghosts, wore a mask. It was a funny mask with a face, contorted as if it was smiling woefully. The mob muttered under their breath, "it's the Waning Moon Officer!" and they released their hold on Xie Lian. It seemed this black-clad figure was someone significant in the Ghost City.

The moment he approached Xie Lian, he bowed. "Greetings, cultivator. The lord wishes to see you."

"Huh? Me?" Xie Lian pointed at himself.

The Waning Moon Officer replied, "That's correct. The lord has been waiting for you at Paradise Manor."

All around them, the mob sucked in their breath.

"The lord wants to see him? Did I hear this right?"

"Paradise Manor? That's the lord's sanctuary, it's never seen guests!"

Some pointed out, "Wait a sec, wasn't he the one who won against the lord today at the Gambler's Den? No, the one the lord educated?!"

All eyes were now focused on Xie Lian, each pair bigger than the next. Xie Lian couldn't help but raise his straw hat to hide his face.

The Waning Moon Officer made a gesture. "This way please."

Xie Lian nodded and followed behind him.

The crowd parted once more, and the ghost officer led Xie Lian through the path. No one dared to follow, and after an incense time, the two left the bustling street behind, going further and further into the backwoods.

During their walk, the two didn't converse. Xie Lian felt that Waning Moon Officer walked like he was going to disappear into the shadows, and followed closely. Subconsciously, his eyes swept past the officer's wrist and noticed that upon it was a black cursed circle.

It was something he was more than familiar with.

A cursed shackle?!

His eyes widened, but he was silent in his shock. Just then, the ghost officer spoke up.

"We're here."

Xie Lian looked up, and realized he had been led to a lake. There were a number of will-o-the-wisps floating above the waters, playing around and chasing each other. Next to the lake stood a splendid, golden pavilion.

Both the heavens and the ghost realm had glamorous architecture. However, the distinguished buildings of the heavens put emphasis on prominence and prestige, whereas the buildings in the Ghost City were glamorous in their bewitchment and frivolity. Even the large letters of this pavilion, "Paradise Manor", emitted an evil aura.

Strange music came from the inside, light and soft, incredibly enchanting; as if there were many women giggling and teasing, playing as they sang and danced languidly.

Following the music, Xie Lian entered the pavilion slowly, and after raising a beaded curtain, warm perfumed air came rushing to his face. Xie Lian moved his head slightly to avoid getting engulfed in that scent.

A thick, snow-white rug made from the fur of some unknown beast covered the floors of the great hall of Paradise Manor, and surprisingly, it was a full pelt. Many beautiful and captivating women, barefooted and clad in light silk, were dancing and playing, sensual and beguiling. The music he heard came from them.

The ladies were spinning seductively like bouquets of roses covered in thorns, blossoming in the midst of night. When they spun to Xie Lian they playfully teased him with their eyes. If any passerby of the night were to accidentally intrude upon this scene, surely they would be even more frightened or enchanted. However, when Xie Lian was observing the main hall, his eyes went straight through those women. The first thing he saw was Hua Cheng, who was seated in the very back of the main hall.

At the end of the hall there was a large divan made of black jade, expansive in size; upon it could lounge probably over a dozen people. But there was only one man sitting upon it, and it was Hua Cheng. There were a number of gorgeous ghost women dancing before him, but he didn't spare them any looks, only lazily keeping an eye on what was before him.

In front of Hua Cheng was a small, golden palace. From afar, it looked like a heavenly palace, but on closer inspection, that little palace was built from thin sheets of gold foil stacked upon one another.

Gold Foil Palace. Xie Lian had played this game often when he was a child; it was a game that was no different than village kids stacking rocks to build houses. Yet because he disliked separation by nature when he was younger, it didn't matter what it was; as long as the objects were placed together, Xie Lian would refuse to separate them. After making a palace, he'd forbid anyone to touch it, wishing if only he could glue the fragile sheets together so that it'd never collapse. When he was even younger, if he saw his golden palace fall apart, he'd be depressed to the point of refusing food and sleep, until the king and queen coaxed him from his shell. The golden palace before him now was grand, layered in hundreds of foil sheets, fragile like an egg, as if a gentle breeze could blow it down.

Xie Lian prayed mentally: "Don't collapse, don't collapse."

After a moment, however, Hua Cheng gazed at his work and flashed a smile. He raised a finger and flicked the top of the golden palace.

The foils fluttered and collapsed into a heap.

Gold foils were strewn across the ground, the golden palace was destroyed. Having knocked it down, Hua Cheng appeared amused by his handiwork, like a child who'd pushed over a tower of building blocks.

He mindlessly threw away a gold foil sheet that was still in his hand and jumped off the divan. The dancing women immediately stopped in their steps and backed down to the sides, silencing their songs. Stepping on the gold foil sheets, Hua Cheng walked towards the entrance.

"Since gege is here, why not come in? Don't be a stranger after only parting for so many days."

Hearing his words, Xie Lian let down the beaded curtain. "Earlier in the Gambler's Den, it was San Lang who pretended not to recognize me."

Hua Cheng approached and stopped at Xie Lian's side. "Lang Qianqiu was there, so if I didn't put on an act, I'd be giving gege trouble."

"That was some really sloppy act..." Xie Lian thought.

Hua Cheng probably knew that Shi Qingxuan was mixed in the crowd, too, so Xie Lian spoke without hiding anything.

"San Lang is knowledgeable as always."

Hua Cheng laughed. "Of course. So, is gege here especially to visit me this time?"

"..."

If Xie Lian had to be honest with himself, had he known Hua Cheng was here, he would've asked for leave so he could pay a visit. Alas, that wasn't the case. Hua Cheng, however, wasn't waiting for Xie Lian's response, and smiled.

"Whether you're here to see me or not, I'm happy either way."

Xie Lian was startled by those words. He hadn't had a chance to respond before the women standing on the sides started giggling. Hua Cheng inclined his head and they all stopped at once, their heads bowed low, and soon filed out of the hall, leaving only the two of them in this expansive chamber.

“Come have a seat here, gege,” Hua Cheng said.

Xie Lian examined him as he followed, smiling. “So, this is your real appearance.”

Hua Cheng paused in his step.

Ch.40: At the Paradise Manor; Questions of Xianle 2

Maybe it was a figment of his imagination, but Hua Cheng's shoulders seemed to have stiffened for a flash of a second. The moment didn't last, and Hua Cheng casually responded, "I did say that the next time we met, I would greet you with my real appearance."

Xie Lian grinned. He patted his shoulder and said earnestly, "Not bad."

Xie Lian's tone wasn't teasing, not consoling, and very simply said. Hua Cheng smiled back, and this time, it was genuinely relaxed. They took a few more steps when Xie Lian suddenly remembered something important to confirm with Hua Cheng. He removed the silver chain from around his neck.

"By the way," Xie Lian said. "Did you leave this?"

Hua Cheng glanced at the ring and smiled. "It's for you."

"What is it?" Xie Lian asked.

"It's nothing important," Hua Cheng replied. "Just keep it for fun."

Although that's what he said, Xie Lian knew that this object wasn't something so insignificant.

"Then, thank you, San Lang."

Seeing that Xie Lian put the ringed necklace back around his neck, Hua Cheng's eyes shimmered brightly. Xie Lian looked around him.

"Back at the Gambler's Den, you said you were coming here to Paradise Manor. I had thought it was something like a brothel or the red light district, but this looks more like an entertainment hall?"

Hua Cheng raised his brows. "Gege, what are you saying? I never go to the red light district."

Xie Lian was amazed. "Really?"

"Of course," Hua Cheng replied. The two approached the black jaded divan and sat down next to each other. Hua Cheng continued, "This is nothing but a place I renovate here and there, a residence of sorts. I come and chill here when I'm free. If I'm busy, then I leave it be."

"So it's your home," Xie Lian commented.

"Residence," Hua Cheng corrected. "Not a home."

“Is there a difference?” Xie Lian asked.

“Of course,” Hua Cheng replied. “A home has family. A place where someone lives alone is not a home.”

Hearing this, Xie Lian’s heart tightened. By that definition, it had been over eight hundred years since he had a “home”. Although Hua Cheng had no trace of loneliness on his face, Xie Lian thought they were perhaps alike.

Hua Cheng continued, “If it’s home, then even a small place like Puqi Shrine would be better than my Paradise Manor by a million-fold.”

Xie Lian agreed and smiled. “I didn’t realize San Lang is this sentimental. But to make comparisons using my Puqi Shrine, you’re really pulling my leg here.”

Hua Cheng laughed. “What’s there to be embarrassed about? Truth be told, gege’s Puqi Shrine is small, but it’s so much more comfortable than my Paradise Manor. It’s more like a home.”

“Is that so?” Xie Lian said warmly. “Then if you like it, in the future, come over whenever you want. The doors of Puqi Shrine will always open for you.”

Hua Cheng’s face lit up. “Since gege says so, then I’ll gladly take up your offer. Don’t think me annoying in the future.”

“There’s no way,” Xie Lian said. “By the way, San Lang, I want to ask you for a favour, but don’t know if you’d have the time?”

“What is it?” Hua Cheng asked. “This is my territory. You just ask, and I’ll deliver.”

After some thought, Xie Lian said, “Before, when I was dealing with the case at Mount Yujun, I ran into this boy who might have originated from my kingdom.”

Hua Cheng narrowed his eyes, but didn’t say a word. Xie Lian continued,

“I didn’t handle the matter very well, and scared him off. After that, I requested a search without any success. Earlier, when I was running around the back alleys of the Ghost City, I thought I had bumped into him. San Lang, you are the lord of this land. Is there any way you can help me find him? His face is wrapped in bandages, and he only just ran away from the front steps of Paradise Manor.”

Hua Cheng smiled. “Alright, I got it. There’s no need to worry, gege. Just wait.”

Xie Lian sighed a breath of relief. “Truly, thank you again.”

“This is nothing,” Hua Cheng said. “But you left Lang Qianqiu just like that?”

Xie Lian thought to himself, if Lang Qianqiu was here, straightforward and obtuse, it'd be hard to predict what other nonsense would come out of his mouth, and he'd start who knows what kind of trouble, so it's probably best to meet up later.

Xie Lian replied casually, “His Highness Tai Hua caused you trouble earlier at the Gambler's Den. Sorry about that.”

That slightly condescending smirk appeared on Hua Cheng's face again. “What are you saying? That didn't count as trouble in the slightest bit.”

“The things he broke...” Xie Lian started, and Hua Cheng laughed.

“For gege's sake, I'll clear his account. He can do as he will, so long as he doesn't show his face in front of me.”

Xie Lian was now curious, and asked, “You don't care if there are heavenly officials frolicking about your territory?”

Could Hua Cheng really be that fearless? Hua Cheng smiled.

“Of course you wouldn't know about this, but gege, all three realms proclaim the Ghost City a hell of corruption, a demonic chaos; but in reality, everyone wants to come to carouse. So many of the heavenly officials pretend not to care and speak ill of this place, but behind everyone's back, they often come in disguise and conduct unspeakable business. I've seen too much. If they don't stir up trouble, then I don't care, and if they do, then even better, because then I can wipe them out.”

“His Highness Tai Hua isn't trying to cause havoc on purpose, it's just seeing a round of bets of that sort go down, he felt he had to stop it and couldn't hold back,” Xie Lian explained.

“That's his lack of experience,” Hua Cheng said impassively. “To choose between letting yourself live longer for ten years, and cutting your enemy's life short by ten years; to pick the latter, that's the basis of human hatred.” He snorted and crossed his arms. “That an idiot like Lang Qianqiu can ascend, the heavens are truly blind.”

Xie Lian rubbed his forehead, feeling a little guilty, thinking, “You can't say it like that, after all, someone like me...also ascended thrice...”

After some hesitation, Xie Lian spoke up again. “San Lang, it may be out of line for me to say this, but I still have to say it. That Gambler's Den is dangerous, won't it blow up in your face one day?”

A place that allowed the betting of sons and daughters and people's lives, granting wishes for others to drop dead, was dreadfully sinful. Nevermind a little brawl; if one day the bets got out of hand, the heavens wouldn't be able to sit back and keep their eyes shut. Hua Cheng gave him a look.

"Your Highness. Did you ever ask Lang Qianqiu why he had to rush into the mess?"

Xie Lian was slightly taken aback, not quite understanding the intent of the question.

Hua Cheng continued, "I bet he must've told you that if he didn't do it, no one else would."

He was amazingly on the mark, obviously having seen through Lang Qianqiu.

"You're right," Xie Lian said. "That's exactly what he said."

"Then I'm the complete opposite," Hua Cheng said. "If I don't control a place like this, then someone else would take control of it. I'd rather that person be me."

Xie Lian knew when to step down, and nodded. "I understand."

It seemed, although Hua Cheng was someone sentimental, he also cared for control and power more than Xie Lian realized.

Hua Cheng continued, "Nonetheless, thank you, gege, for your concern."

Just then, Xie Lian heard a voice that came from the door.

A young man said, "My lord, I've brought him."

Xie Lian looked to the front entrance and saw the Waning Moon Officer from before, bowing just beyond the beaded curtain. The one in his arms was none other than the ragged boy in bandages.

Hua Cheng never turned his head. "Bring him in."

Thus, the Waning Moon Officer brought the boy inside and gently put him on the ground. Xie Lian couldn't help but peek at his wrist again to see whether there really was a cursed shackle, but the other curtsied and stood down swiftly after delivering the boy. Since there were more important matters at hand, Xie Lian bent down near the bandaged boy and instantly soothed him.

"Don't be scared. It was my fault last time, I won't do it again."

The boy's eyes were widened in fear and confusion, but after running away so many times, he no longer had the energy to escape again. He peeked at Xie Lian, then peeked at the lap table on the black jade divan. Xie Lian followed his line of sight, and saw he was eyeing a plate of luscious fruits on top of the lap table.

The boy must've been hiding for too long, and had not eaten. Xie Lian turned to Hua Cheng, and before he said anything, Hua Cheng motioned.

"Do what you want, no need to ask me."

It wasn't time to be polite, so Xie Lian uttered a thanks and reached for the plate of fruit before giving it to the boy. That boy grabbed the plate from Xie Lian and started stuffing the fruit into his mouth.

It looked like he'd been starved for too many days, and was desperately hungry. Even when Xie Lian was at his worst, starved like a wild dog, he'd never shoved food into himself like this. He didn't know what to say, and only chided gently.

"Slow down." After a pause, he attempted, "What's your name?"

The boy mumbled as he ate, looking as if he was trying to say something, but couldn't do so clearly.

"He might not have spoken in many years, and has forgotten how," Hua Cheng suggested.

Indeed, it did look like this boy didn't speak much, not even to Xiao Ying, and had been like this for a long time. Xie Lian sighed.

"We can do this slowly."

By then, all the fruit on the plate had been devoured. Seeing that his bandages were soaked with dried blood, covered in black and red spots alike, Xie Lian said gently, "Your face is wounded, it looks serious. Let me take a look."

Hearing those words, fear immediately engulfed the boy's eyes. However, after Xie Lian's tireless soothing and encouragement, he sat down once more obediently.

Xie Lian came next to him and took out a bottle of medicinal powder from his sleeve, ready to remove the sullied bandages, when Hua Cheng intercepted.

"Let me do it."

Xie Lian shook his head and moved his hands slowly, unraveling the haphazardly-wrapped bandages.

As he had suspected, although the face of the boy was a bloody mess, all the terrifying little human faces were gone; only large blotches of bright red scars.

The last time they met at Mount Yujun, there were burns covering his face, but not as much blood. This boy must've used a knife to cut away those human faces from his own face, and left all those scars.

Xie Lian's hands trembled softly as he rubbed the medicine in. Hua Cheng caught his wrist and said again, "Let me."

Xie Lian shook his head again and gently pulled his hand free, then said in a low voice, "No. Let me do this myself."

Eight hundred years ago, in the Kingdom of Xianle, many who contracted this disease, without any other way, chose this route of self-mutilation. It was hell on earth. Some would miss their target and cut where they shouldn't, and die from blood loss. Some, although successful in removing the small human faces, never healed from those wounds.

As Xie Lian wrapped new bandages around the boy's head, he realized that his features were actually quite proper, his nose straight and refined, his eyes black and clear; he should've been a handsome young man, but now he bore such a terrifying appearance. He was like many others before him; even if he cut away the distorted human faces, his face would still forever be nightmarish, unable to recover.

Xie Lian finally finished wrapping the new bandages, and asked with a shaky voice, "Are you...from Xianle?"

The boy turned to look at him with his big eyes. Xie Lian repeated his question several times, but he only shook his head.

Xie Lian then asked, "Then where are you from, exactly?"

The boy answered with difficulty: "...Yong'an!"

The Human Face Disease had only ever erupted within the Kingdom of Xianle, yet this boy was from the Kingdom of Yong'an!

Xie Lian felt his sight go dark, and he blurted out, "Have you ever met...White-Clothed Calamity?"

White-Clothed Calamity. The origin of plagues. The symbol of misfortune.

He was the nightmare of the previous generation of gods, before Crimson Rain Sought Flower was born. If it wasn't for Jun Wu, who personally exterminated him, this nightmare would've probably continued even today.

This Supreme always wore snow-white funeral garb, his expansive sleeves fluttering, and a cry-smiling mask on his face. This mask was called this because half of it was smiling, and the other half was crying; half-joyous half-sad. If he should be seen anywhere, it would mean that place would soon be doomed to ruin, and the world would fall into chaos.

In the last battle, Xie Lian was standing on the top of the highest tower of the Palace of Xianle, his face covered in grime and tears, lost and bemused as he gazed below to his kingdom. Within his blurry vision, there stood a white silhouette among the fields of corpses just outside the fortress walls; his giant white sleeves fluttering, obvious and distinct. Xie Lian dropped his head to look down at him, and that white apparition also raised his head to look at Xie Lian, and waved at him directly.

That cry-smiling mask was the nightmare Xie Lian couldn't chase away even after hundreds of years.

Ch.41: At the Paradise Manor; Questions of Xianle 3

That boy didn't seem to know who the "White No-Face" was, and only watched Xie Lian with a blank expression. Then, the boy suddenly shouted.

"AH!"

Turns out Xie Lian had grabbed onto his shoulders and unconsciously gripped them too tight. It wasn't until he shouted that Xie Lian came to, and hurriedly released his hands.

"I'm sorry."

Hua Cheng spoke up in a low voice, "You're tired. Go rest."

As soon as he said those words, a small door on the side walls of the hall opened, and two dainty girls entered to take away the boy. He looked back at Xie Lian as he was led away.

Xie Lian told him, "Don't worry. I'll go find you again in a bit."

After the boy was taken away, Hua Cheng turned to Xie Lian. "Sit down and relax, and don't see him for now. If you have any questions for him, I have my ways of prying open his lips."

"Prying open his lips" sounded rather horrifying, and Xie Lian hurriedly replied, "No, that's alright. If he couldn't say anything, then let it go. We'll take this slow."

Hua Cheng sat down next to Xie Lian. "What are your plans for the boy?"

Xie Lian, looking exhausted, gave the question some thought. "I think I'll keep him by my side, and bring him along with me first."

"He's a ghost, not a human," Hua Cheng said. "Why don't you leave him here in the Ghost City? I've no trouble feeding another mouth."

Xie Lian watched him, and said earnestly, "San Lang, truly, thank you. But..." He sighed. "I want to bring him along, not just for the purpose of raising him."

The Ghost City certainly belonged to Hua Cheng; if he was willing to protect the boy, then no one could harm him and he wouldn't go hungry. But other than that, the most important thing for the boy was moreso guidance; to help him organize his mind and speech so that he could look and behave normally. The Ghost City was a bustling place; chaotic and wild, not ideal for counseling. Other than himself, Xie Lian couldn't think of anyone else who would have the patience to undertake this task.

Xie Lian replied slowly, "I'm already immensely grateful that you found him for me. I can't trouble you further with the aftermath."

Hua Cheng appeared to disagree, but didn't push any more. He said plainly, "It's really no trouble. When you're here, if you need anything, just let me know; and you're free to go wherever you want."

Suddenly, Xie Lian noticed the scimitar on Hua Cheng's waist had changed.

Xie Lian looked down and his curiosity was instantly piqued. Turns out, on the hilt of that scimitar, there was a silver eye crafted upon it. The pattern of the eye was formed by a few rough silver strokes; although simple, it looked mythical, as if alive. He didn't see it at first because the eye was closed into a thin line, but just then, the eye fluttered open and revealed a crimson, gem-like eyeball. Within the socket, it twirled once.

Hua Cheng noticed it too, and spoke up solemnly, "Gege, I need to leave for a bit. I'll be right back."

"An alarm?" Xie Lian asked. Could it be that Lord Wind Master and Qianqiu showed their true selves here in the Ghost City? Xie Lian rose too. "I'll come with you."

Hua Cheng gently pushed him back down. "Don't worry, it's not His Highness Tai Hua. Gege, just sit here. There's no need for you to go."

Since Hua Cheng made it this clear, Xie Lian couldn't keep insisting on going along. Hua Cheng turned and left the main hall, waving as he walked away. The beaded curtain parted automatically as he approached, and after he exited, the beaded curtain let itself down, clacking, its sound crisp and clear.

Xie Lian relaxed a bit on the black jaded divan and thought about the bandaged boy. Recalling that he was scared of strangers and emotionally unstable, Xie Lian couldn't sit still and rose again, determined to go and see the boy. He passed through the small door the girls had left from, and came to a small garden. The vermilion corridor cutting across the garden was empty of life. Xie Lian was still wondering which way he should go when suddenly a black shadow flashed by.

It was the silhouette of that Waning Moon Officer.

Xie Lian recalled the cursed shackle on the Officer's wrist; it had been on his mind. He was about to call out to him when that silhouette disappeared. The way he behaved was like he was afraid to be discovered, so Xie Lian closed his mouth, and soundlessly followed him.

Turning to the corner of a building where the officer disappeared, Xie Lian clung to the wall and stealthily looked around. That youth moved swiftly and was constantly on the lookout around him, extremely cautious and indeed afraid to be found. That Waning Moon Officer was one of San Lang's subordinates, and working under him in his territory, so why all the sneaking around?

The more Xie Lian thought, the more he was suspicious that the officer possessed malintent, so he hid himself and followed. The masked officer made a number of turns through the hallways; Xie Lian followed closely within fifty steps behind, holding his breath and watching closely. Finally, they rounded a corner and came to a long hallway, and at the end of the hallway was a set of large, beautifully-decorated doors.

Still following behind, Xie Lian thought, "If he turns around now, there won't be anywhere to hide."

But, just as the thought crossed his mind, the Waning Moon Officer stopped and turned his head.

The moment he stopped, Xie Lian was alert and extended his arm in a hurry. Ruoye flew out and wrapped itself around the wooden beam overhead, pulling Xie Lian up to the ceiling, where he clung onto the beam.

The officer didn't see anyone behind him and didn't think to look up, so he turned around again and continued on his path. Xie Lian, on the other hand, didn't dare to let himself down so soon; he stayed put on the ceiling, silently inching forward. He thought he rather resembled a gecko. Good thing the other party didn't go far, and stopped before that set of doors. Xie Lian stopped too, to observe.

In front of this door, there was a statue of a woman, wily and beautiful; but of course from Xie Lian's angle, he only saw a circular head and a shallow, round jaded plate in her hands. The masked youth didn't move from where he stood, and didn't move to open the door. Instead, he turned to the woman statue and raised a hand, tossing something into the jaded plate. The clacking sound was crisp.

"Dice?" Xie Lian thought to himself.

It was a sound that he'd heard too many times earlier, and not one he'd forget for a long time. It was the sound of dice hitting the bottom of a gambling cup. Just as he suspected, when the masked youth removed his hand and Xie Lian looked, it was indeed two dice in the jaded plate, both revealing six red dots.

After tossing dice, the masked youth removed them from the plate and put them away before opening the door. The door wasn't even locked. When he entered through the doors and closed them behind him, Xie Lian didn't hear any sounds of locks activating either. After waiting a moment, Xie Lian gently lowered himself to the ground quietly as a piece of paper, and crossed his arms to examine the set of doors.

Technically, this building didn't seem that big, and whatever that Waning Moon Officer was doing inside should make noise. Yet, after he closed the doors behind him, there were no more sounds coming from within. Xie Lian contemplated and raised a hand to push.

As he suspected, after pushing open the door, there was nothing and no one inside; only a small table and two chairs. It appeared to be only a normal and luxurious bedchamber. By the looks of this setup, there was no possibility of there being a hidden path.

Xie Lian closed the door and looked to the woman statue, and moved his gaze to the jaded plate in her hands. No doubt the mechanism lay in that jaded plate and the dice.

"So the building is still locked," Xie Lian thought. "Not with physical locks, but with magical locks. To open this lock, there needs to be a key or a password. The dice must roll two sixes in order to see the real destination behind the doors."

But, for Xie Lian to throw out two sixes right then and there, that was something that would never happen in this world. He could only watch the door and sigh. He paced in front of the doors, his eyes glued on them, but still turned around to leave in the end. After walking for a bit, he stopped abruptly. From the other end of the path came a tall, red-clad figure, with a slender and long silver scimitar hung from the waist. It was Hua Cheng.

He walked over with his arms crossed. "Gege, I've been looking for you."

He looked exactly as he did when he left, only the scimitar on his waist was out of its scabbard. It, along with the scabbard, clattered against him, clanking as he walked, painting a picture of arrogance. That silver eye on the hilt of E'ming was closed.

Xie Lian composed himself and said, "I was going to go see that child, but your house is too big and I got lost."

Xie Lian was originally going to tell Hua Cheng about what had just happened, but when the words came to his lips, they turned around and he swallowed them.

Xie Lian hadn't forgotten the goal of this visit to the Ghost City was to investigate the missing heavenly official. Any signs of fishiness couldn't be ignored. Who knows, perhaps that missing official was imprisoned in this room. Thus, he decided not to ring the alarm and see if he could go through those doors first. If Hua Cheng had nothing to do with it, then Xie Lian would report his suspicious subordinate at once, but if Hua Cheng was involved...

Xie Lian was deep in thought but Hua Cheng took no notice and spoke as he led Xie Lian back to the main hall.

“If you wanted to see that boy, I can send someone to bring him to you, and you’d only need to wait at the Paradise Hall.”

It was probably because he was hiding something, but when Xie Lian heard Hua Cheng’s tone of voice, he couldn’t help but become more docile.

“You finished your business that fast?”

Hua Cheng snorted, his lips curling in disdain. “It’s finished. It was just another band of useless trash embarrassing themselves, that’s all.”

Hearing him say “useless trash”, tone familiar, Xie Lian guessed, “Was it the Green Ghost Qi Rong?”

Hua Cheng smiled. “That’s right. Didn’t I tell you, many have their eyes on this place of mine? Qi Rong has wanted the Ghost City for himself for years now, but the most he could do was want and burn with envy. So, every so often he’ll send some equally useless underlings to stir up trouble. Nothing worth mentioning. Don’t mind it. Actually, I have a place I want to show gege, but I don’t know if gege would grant me the pleasure?”

“Of course,” Xie Lian replied happily.

Traversing through the long hallways, Hua Cheng led Xie Lian to another large hall.

The doors of the hall seemed to be made of steel with violent beasts carved upon them; horrible and terrifying. The moment Hua Cheng approached, the beasts parted ways and opened the doors. A blast of killing intent blew at Xie Lian before he even stepped foot into the hall, and he tensed, veins popping on his hands, prepared to face anything.

However, after seeing clearly what was inside the hall, he blinked. His defenses melted away in an instant, and his legs moved on their own, bringing him into the hall.

Within the hall, all manner of weapons were hung on all four walls. There were scimitars, swords, spears, shields, whips, axes...it was an armoury!

Anyone, as long as they were a man, when situated in an armoury such as this, surrounded by all kinds of weaponry, would feel as if they were in heaven, and their blood would boil with excitement. Xie Lian was no exception; his eyes were wide and his face lit. The last time he had shown such excitement was in Jun Wu’s armoury.

Although his face remained schooled, his heart was already battering in his chest, and his speech stammered, “May...may I touch?”

Hua Cheng smiled. “As you like.”

Xie Lian's hands instantly flew out to feel the many treasures hung on the walls, caressing them as if drunken. "These...all of these are masterpieces! This sword is splendid, it must be a sight to behold on the battlefield! This one too! Wait, and that sabre..."

Hua Cheng was leaning on the wall near the door, watching Xie Lian's face go red with thrill and obsession. "Gege, what do you think?"

Xie Lian was examining each piece so intently he was reluctant to turn his head around. "What do I think, what?"

"Do you like it?" Hua Cheng asked.

"I do!" Xie Lian replied.

"Do you really like it?" Hua Cheng asked again.

"I really do!" Xie Lian exclaimed.

Hua Cheng seemed to have snickered, but Xie Lian didn't notice. His heart was busy racing as he unsheathed a shimmering, verdant blade of at least four feet, marveling as he did so.

"Are any of them good enough for you?" Hua Cheng spoke up again.

Xie Lian's entire face was bright and glowing, unable to stop his marveling. "Good! Good! They're all good!"

"Originally, I was thinking gege didn't have any useful weapons on hand, so if there was anything here good enough, you can just pick something for yourself," Hua Cheng said. "But since gege likes them all, I'll give them all to you."

"No, no, no, there's no need," Xie Lian said hurriedly. "I have no use for weapons anyway."

"Really?" Hua Cheng said. "But it's obvious gege really likes swords?"

"Liking doesn't mean I have to own it," Xie Lian said. "I haven't used one in years. Just looking makes me happy. Besides, I'd have nowhere to put them if you give them all to me."

"That's easy to solve," Hua Cheng replied. "I'll give this entire armoury to you."

Xie Lian took that as a joke and grinned. "There's no way I can take away a room this big."

"No need to take it away," Hua Cheng said. "I'll give you the property, too. Just come visit when you're free."

“No, it’s okay,” Xie Lian said. “An armoury requires constant maintenance. I’d hate to see the weapons suffer.”

Xie Lian placed the sword carefully back onto its holder, and said nostalgically, “Once upon a time, I owned an armoury like this too, but it was burnt down. All of these weapons are precious devices to be desired; you have to cherish them, San Lang.”

“That’s easy too,” Hua Cheng said. “If I’m free, I can help gege maintain the armoury.”

Xie Lian laughed. “Well, I certainly don’t have the guts to ask My Lord the Ghost King to do chores for me.”

Suddenly, Xie Lian remembered Jun Wu’s warning right before he left for the mission: “The wicked scimitar E’ming is a cursed blade of misfortune. A weapon of such evil can only be forged by an exceedingly cruel sacrifice and a bloody will. Do not touch it, and do not let it touch you, lest the consequences be unimaginable.”

Xie Lian contemplated, but still decided to ask in the end. “But San Lang, all of these weapons don’t even come close to your scimitar E’ming, right?”

Hua Cheng cocked his left brow. “Oh? Has gege heard of my scimitar too?”

“Only some hearsay,” Xie Lian replied.

Hua Cheng snickered. “I bet it’s not nice hearsay. Did someone tell you that my scimitar was forged by an evil, bloody ritual? That I sacrificed live humans?”

Sharp as always. Xie Lian responded, “Not too horrible. Everyone has their own bad rumours, but not everyone would believe them. I don’t know if I might have the honour of seeing the legendary scimitar E’ming?”

“You’ve actually already seen it, gege,” Hua Cheng said.

He took a few steps closer to Xie Lian, and said in a low voice, “Look, gege, this is E’ming.”

The eye upon the scimitar which hung at his waist twirled in Xie Lian’s direction. It might be Xie Lian’s imagination, but he thought that carved silver eyelid started squinting into a crescent shape.

Ch.42: Borrowing the Underpath; Night Crawl in Paradise Manor

Xie Lian bent down slightly and greeted, "Hello there."

Hearing the greeting, that eye squinted harder, turning itself into a full crescent shape, as if smiling. The large eye spun left and right, extremely lively, as if it wasn't just a pattern carved onto a scimitar hilt, but a real live eye, born of a human.

Hua Cheng's lips lifted upwards. "Gege, it likes you."

Xie Lian raised his head. "Really?"

Hua Cheng raised his brow. "Really. If it didn't, it'd be too lazy to even blink open. In fact, there are very few that E'ming actually likes."

Hearing this, Xie Lian felt at peace, and said warmly to E'ming, "Well, thank you." He then turned to Hua Cheng. "I rather like it too."

At his words, that eye blinked madly, and the scimitar started shaking while still hung around Hua Cheng's waist. He reprimanded it, "No."

"What, 'no'?" Xie Lian asked.

"No," Hua Cheng reiterated.

E'ming shook harder, looking desperate to be freed from the scabbard.

Xie Lian asked curiously, "Are you telling it 'no'?"

"Yeah," Hua Cheng explained in a serious tone. "It wants you to pet it, but I'm telling it no."

Xie Lian grinned. "Well, what's wrong with that?"

He stretched out a hand. E'ming widened its eye, looking at him expectantly. Xie Lian was going to pet the eyeball, but thought that would be poking the eye and hurting it, so he lowered his hand and stroked lightly along the curve of the hilt. The eye had squinted itself into a full crescent line, and quivered even harder as though as it was pleased and enjoying the touch.

Xie Lian thought it incredibly intriguing, the more he stroked the scimitar. Xie Lian himself was the type animals liked; when he'd pet those furry dogs and cats, they'd get comfortable and often throw themselves into his embrace. Who knew that he'd be petting a cold, silver scimitar—that legendary scimitar, no less!—like he would a puppy! How was it a "bloody cursed blade of misfortune"?

Xie Lian didn't believe it before, but after seeing with his own eyes, he threw away the awful hearsay; into the "not believable" pile of trash. An evil, bloody ritual would not forge a spirit this clever and cute.

The two spent a copious amount of time discussing and critiquing various swords and blades in detail, and Xie Lian exited the armoury in high spirits after; grabbing hold of Hua Cheng's hands to return to Paradise Hall.

That boy had also been brought in after being washed up and dressed in clean bandages. Although his face was still wholly covered, he looked new and refreshed. Looking at him anew, the boy was slender and delicate, and should have been a seedling with infinite possibilities; but alas, the him now was one with his shoulders slumped and waist bent, a shrivelled form who couldn't meet anyone's eyes. Xie Lian couldn't help but feel heartbroken for him.

He pulled the boy to sit. "The last few words Xiao Ying said had the intent of asking me to take care of you, and I technically agreed to it. But nevertheless, I still have to ask for your opinion on it. Would you be interested in following me in cultivation from now on?"

The boy watched him blankly, as if afraid to believe the words he was hearing; that someone was actually willing to take him in and cultivate. He looked hesitant and hopeful.

Xie Lian continued, "I can't say the conditions at my place are good, but I can still promise you won't need to hide any longer, and won't need to steal food or get beaten."

When he spoke, Xie Lian didn't notice that next to him, Hua Cheng's eyes were narrowed, watching the boy with a cold, judging look.

Xie Lian continued warmly, "If you can't remember your own name, then why don't we come up with a new one?"

The boy thought about it and said, "Ying."

Xie Lian supposed that the name was to commemorate Xiao Ying, and nodded. "Good. That's a good name. You're of the kingdom of Yong'an, and Yong'an's national surname is Lang, so why don't you use that as your new name and call yourself Lang Ying?"

The boy finally nodded. Xie Lian took that as the boy's acceptance in following after him.

The banquet began. It was a small feast Hua Cheng had prepared for Xie Lian, but by its setup, it was of a size that could very well host over ten people. Innumerable women had in their hands a jade plate, and upon the plates were various kinds of delightful refreshments, delicate dishes, fresh fruits, and goodies. Their offerings were endless, and their steps were dainty and light as they walked along the sides of the main hall in a line, each presenting their jade plate as they approached the black jade divan. Lang Ying watched but didn't dare to reach out, and it wasn't until Xie Lian pushed a few of the plates toward him before he slowly grabbed a few items to eat.

Watching him, another scene flashed in Xie Lian's mind. It was of another boy whose face was wrapped in bandages, dirty and unkempt; kneeling on the floor with a plate of offerings, his head bowed low as he stuffed his face in secret.

Just then, a sashaying lady in purple silk approached, offering a carafe of wine. Hua Cheng reached out and poured Xie Lian a glass.

"Won't you have one?"

Xie Lian had a bunch of things on mind, and wasn't paying attention, so he carelessly accepted the glass and drank. It wasn't until the liquid entered his mouth that he realized it was wine, and moved his gaze back. But this turn made him see what was behind Hua Cheng's back. The lady who offered the wine winked at him.

Xie Lian spat on the spot: "PFFFFfttt!"

Good thing he already swallowed that sip of wine, and nothing came splattering out of his mouth. He only choked, coughing nonstop. Lang Ying took fright and almost dropped the cake in his hand.

Xie Lian soothed as he coughed, "It's nothing. It's nothing."

Hua Cheng gently patted his back. "What's wrong? Is the wine not to your liking?"

Xie Lian hurriedly explained himself, "Oh no! It's very good. I just suddenly remembered that my cultivation method forbids alcohol."

"Oh?" Hua Cheng said. "Then this is my fault for not being considerate, and making gege break his vow."

"It's not your fault," Xie Lian said. "I'd just forgotten."

Xie Lian rubbed his forehead, turned around and stealthily glimpsed towards the centre of the main hall.

That lady who offered wine had her back to him as she sashayed away to the doors, her figure sensual and seductive. Hua Cheng was only minding his own business or was focused on Xie

Lian completely, and had no eye for those beautiful women, and therefore naturally did not care to see their faces. But the face Xie Lian saw was clear and recognizable.

That lady who offered wine was none other than the Wind Master Qingxuan!!!

The Lord Wind Master had snuck into Paradise Manor disguised as a woman...that wink gave Xie Lian quite the shock, and he thought “you best give me more booze to swallow this down.”

Unaware, Hua Cheng said conversationally, “I had always thought cultivation was simply for living a carefree, hedonistic life. If you must forbid this and that, then what’s the point? What do you think?”

Xie Lian steadied himself swiftly, and casually conversed back, “That depends on the path you choose. Some sects don’t mind earthly pleasures, but my chosen path of cultivation has always forbidden drinking and promiscuity. Alcohol can be overlooked once in a while, but abstinence from the latter is absolute.”

When he said the word “abstinence”, Hua Cheng cocked his right brow, and displayed an unreadable expression of either displeasure or annoyance.

Xie Lian continued, “Actually, it also forbids hatred. A gambling hall involves extreme joy and anguish, and can easily produce hatred, so it should be a place to be avoided. But if one is sure to maintain peace at heart, unmoved by wins and losses, then avoidance isn’t technically necessary.”

Hearing this, Hua Cheng laughed out loud. “So gege was able to have the pleasure of entering the Gambler’s Den.”

Going around in circles, Xie Lian finally brought the subject of the conversation naturally to “gambling”, and said, “Speaking of which, San Lang, your gambling techniques are amazing to behold.”

Hua Cheng chuckled. “It’s just good luck, nothing else.”

“...”

Hearing this, Xie Lian compared himself, and felt rather woeful. He cleared his throat softly. “Well, look at me...” He waved his hand and didn’t finish. “I’m really curious; is there really a technique to rolling dice?”

If there wasn’t, then Hua Cheng couldn’t just call the numbers as he wanted back at the Gambler’s Den, and that Waning Moon Officer couldn’t have so easily tossed out two sixes.

Hua Cheng smiled. "Naturally, there is a secret technique, but it's not something that's learned in a day."

Xie Lian had expected that answer. He wasn't hopeful with that question, anyway, and was trying to come up with other ideas when Hua Cheng continued.

"However, I can tell you of a faster way. I promise gege would be able to succeed as he wills, and win every round."

"What way?" Xie Lian asked.

Hua Cheng raised his right hand. It was the very same right hand with a red string tied on the third finger. The red string was tied into a small bow on the back of the hand, bright and vivid. He extended the hand and beckoned Xie Lian.

"Give me your hand."

Xie Lian didn't know what it was for, but since Hua Cheng asked for his hand, he gave it to him. Hua Cheng squeezed his hand and held it for a bit, smiling before he turned his hand over and tossed two dice in his palm.

"Try it now."

He chanted mentally for sixes, and rolled the dice. Rattling to a stop, the dice indeed revealed two red sixes.

"What trick is this?" Xie Lian asked curiously.

"No trick," Hua Cheng replied. "I've only just lent you some luck."

"So luck is like spiritual power, and can be borrowed," Xie Lian said in wonder.

Hua Cheng laughed. "Of course. Next time, if gege is going to make bets with anyone, come see me. I'll lend you as much luck as you want. I promise your opponent will suffer a loss so great he won't be able to return in a hundred years."

The two played around for many rounds and Xie Lian confirmed for himself that it was indeed so, before he stopped to say he was tired. Hua Cheng got up immediately, had someone take Lang Ying to settle, before personally escorting Xie Lian to the guest chamber.

Watching as his silhouette disappeared down the hall, Xie Lian closed the door, sat by the table and used a hand to cover his forehead, supporting his lowered head. The more thoughtful Hua Cheng was, the more guilty Xie Lian felt.

“There is really nothing to criticize about the way San Lang treats me. Hopefully this business has nothing to do with him, and once the truth comes out I’ll explain everything and apologize,” Xie Lian thought.

He had only sat for a moment when he heard someone calling him from outside the door with a small voice.

“Your Highness...Your Highness...”

Recognizing the voice, Xie Lian immediately rose to open the door, and the person just outside leapt in. It was indeed Shi Qingxuan in her female form.

She was still in the ghost lady getup; a light silk dress, her waist wrapped tight and dainty. The moment she leapt in, she rolled onto the ground in a heap and transformed back to a man, hand on his chest.

“I can’t breathe! I CAN’T BREATHE! My god, I’m going to be choked to death by this thing!”

Xie Lian closed the door behind him, and when he turned around, what he saw was a full-grown man in a wicked purple silk dress, lying on the ground madly ripping at his chest and waist bindings. Xie Lian couldn’t look and covered his eyes.

“Lord Wind Master...Lord Wind Master! Can you not just change back to your cultivation robes?”

“Am I dumb?” Shi Qingxuan replied. “Walking around in the dark in a conspicuous white robe, I’d be a target!”

“But...in your current getup, on some level, you’re more of a target...” Xie Lian thought.

Xie Lian crouched down next to him. “Lord Wind Master, how did you sneak in? Didn’t we agree to meet three days hence?”

“Well, what was I to do?” Shi Qingxuan replied. “I asked around on the streets and they all said, Your Highness was sent to the Paradise Manor, and isn’t Paradise Manor the Ghost King’s lair? Even the name of the place sounded bad. I watched from afar and decided it was definitely an obscene and wanton place, so I was worried about you and snuck in using all of my power. What an unlucky journey this has been! Either I get dragged to facials by women and girls, or I had to swallow my honour to dress like this. I have never, ever, made sacrifices this huge.”

“Aren’t you rather enjoying yourself....?” Xie Lian thought. “Where’s His Highness Tai Hua? If you left him waiting outside, what if he starts something?”

Shi Qingxuan finally ripped out all the bindings, took a deep breath, and sprawled to the ground like a puddle. “Don’t worry. I pulled rank and commanded him to not move a muscle, so there shouldn’t be any issues. But seriously, Your Highness, you’re so lucky!”

“Huh?” Xie Lian gaped. “Me? Lucky?”

“Yeah!” Shi Qingxuan exclaimed. “Look how miserable Lang Qianqiu and I are. We either get hung with the threat of having our pants pulled, or we wander the streets like stray dogs without a place to take us in. And here you are, eating well, sleeping well, and there’s even a Ghost King keeping you company!”

...By that comparison, they were indeed rather miserable. Shi Qingxuan finally pulled himself up from the floor.

“So, Your Highness, do you still remember our objective for coming to the Ghost City?”

Xie Lian returned to being serious and replied, “Of course I remember. Back at the Paradise Hall, I was preparing for our mission.”

Shi Qingxuan looked at him in confusion. “Really? What exactly did you prepare at the Paradise Hall? I only remember you playing around with Crimson Rain Sought Flower rolling dice. You guys weren’t even playing properly; you feeling up his hands and he was feeling up yours. What kind of new play was that?”

“...” Xie Lian explained himself, “Lord Wind Master, please don’t make it sound so questionable. We were only trying something out. I’ve found some clues here in the Paradise Manor and was investigating. To keep going, I needed a little luck.”

Xie Lian raised his right hand, fingers closed tight as if having grabbed hold of something, and knitted his brows. “I’ve gotten it.”

The two silently snuck out the door, and after two incense time, they successfully found that small building once more.

Xie Lian approached the woman statue and took out the two dice given to him from before. He paused and took a deep breath before tossing the dice. The two little objects rattled before settling, and sure enough, there were two red sixes.

Xie Lian let out a breath of relief, but felt worse remembering that this luck was lent to him earlier at the Paradise Hall by Hua Cheng. Seeing his remorseful expression, Shi Qingxuan patted his shoulders.

“Since we’ve come this far, just let it go. If I were you, I would’ve declined this mission from Jun Wu no matter how he begs, lest I be a poor friend.”

Xie Lian shook his head. In the end, Shi Qingxuan could only say such words because he didn't know Jun Wu very well. This whole business was certainly awkward for Xie Lian, and Jun Wu had known it. From his understanding of Jun Wu's character, under the circumstances he would never have mentioned this, and would've appointed another heavenly official to the mission. But even knowing this would be awkward for Xie Lian, Jun Wu still requested for his assistance, which could only mean one thing: Jun Wu had no one else who was better suited to take on this mission, and only asked him out of necessity. If that was the case, Xie Lian had no choice.

Besides, the missing heavenly official set off the distress signal seven days ago, and Hua Cheng also left seven days ago. This was a coincidence he couldn't ignore.

Xie Lian sighed before taking back the dice and pushed the door. Behind the glamorous gates was no longer the small simple chamber he'd seen before, but a dark tunnel with a long stairway stretching into the abyss below, and a cold breeze blowing at them from the blackness.

Xie Lian traded looks with Shi Qingxuan and nodded. One behind the other, the two entered the tunnel, and entered the darkness. Shi Qingxuan took the lead; he snapped his fingers and ignited a palm torch, and lit up the steps under their feet. Xie Lian closed the door gently and followed behind.

As they descended, Xie Lian inquired with Shi Qingxuan, "Lord Wind Master, were there any heavenly officials banished from the heavenly court in recent years? I mean besides me."

"There were," Shi Qingxuan replied. "Why do you ask?"

"Because I saw on the wrist of that Waning Moon Officer from the Ghost City a cursed shackle. It could only come from the heavens, no?"

Shi Qingxuan was surprised. "What? Cursed shackle? That Crimson Rain Sought Flower is using a former heavenly official as his subordinate??? What arrogance???"

"It can't be arrogance?" Xie Lian responded. "If one no longer belongs to the heavens, then wherever one goes would be their choice. Originally there really was no need to question his motives, but that officer's been acting suspiciously. It's worrisome, so I wanted to see what Lord Wind Master's thoughts are on his identity."

Shi Qingxuan gave it some thought and said, "There was indeed a Martial God of the West who was banished a few years back, and it caused quite the stir at the time."

Martial God of the West? Wasn't that Quan Yizhen?

Shi Qingxuan continued, "But, I don't think that Highness would descend to the ghost realm to be a ghost officer! He came from an established, traditional background and his character wasn't frivolous."

If that was the case, then why was he banished? Xie Lian was about to continue his inquiry when the two came to flat ground after sixty or so stone steps.

Before them was a road about five to six people wide, going in only one direction that was shrouded in darkness; the staircase right behind. On either side were thick, solid walls, so there wasn't any need to debate where to go: just go forward.

Only, after walking along the path for over two hundred steps, a cold stone wall appeared before the two, blocking their path.

Ch.43: Borrowing the Underpath; Night Crawl in Paradise Manor 2

Shi Qingxuan frowned. "The road's cut off? No way."

He held the palm torch in one hand, and used the other to feel around the stone wall, looking for any signs of mechanics. He then cast a few spells for clearing illusions to no avail; the wall remained immovable. There wasn't more he could do.

"Maybe I'll just punch a hole through it?"

"That would cause way too much commotion," Xie Lian said. "The entire Paradise Manor would be alerted."

Shi Qingxuan placed his hand flat on the stone wall and blasted a short burst of spiritual energy, but dropped his hand after a moment. "Even if I punch it'd be useless. This wall is probably over ten feet thick."

Xie Lian saw with his own eyes that the masked youth had entered here, it'd be silly to think he'd sneak around just to meditate and reflect in a dead-end tunnel? There must be some sort of mechanism involved, so the two continued to examine their surroundings in greater detail.

Soon, Xie Lian pointed. "Lord Wind Master, take a look at the ground; there seems to be something."

Shi Qingxuan dropped his palm immediately, and the two squatted around where Xie Lian had pointed.

The ground of this tunnel was paved with innumerable square bricks, and each brick was about the size of a small door. The brick that they were standing on, right in front of the stone wall, had a drawing upon it. It wasn't a large picture, but it was of a little person throwing dice.

Shi Qingxuan raised his head. "So does this mean it's the same method as before, that we'd have to toss the right number to open this stone wall?"

Xie Lian nodded slightly. "That looks to be the case, but I didn't come in here with that masked youth, so I don't know what the right number is."

"We've come this far," Shi Qingxuan said. "It's not realistic to turn back just to find that out. Let's just throw a random number and see."

Xie Lian agreed. "Lord Wind Master, why don't you give it a go? I don't know how long my borrowed luck would last."

Shi Qingxuan didn't decline. He picked up the dice and tossed them to the floor.

“How about that?”

He rolled a “two” and a “five”. The two waited in silence but the stone wall didn’t move. Xie Lian picked up the dice.

“I guess that didn’t work.”

Shi Qingxuan suddenly cried, “Your Highness, look under our feet! The picture’s changed!”

Hearing this, Xie Lian immediately looked down. Sure enough, the image on the square brick beneath their feet had been a little person throwing dice, but as they watched, the colours slowly faded and filled in once more, transforming into a different scene; looking like a long, fat, and thick black creepy crawler.

“What in the world is this?” Shi Qingxuan wondered.

“An earthworm? A leech?” Xie Lian guessed. “That’s what it looks like. There’s plenty in the paddy fields, so I’ve seen a lot.”

Shi Qingxuan wondered some more. “What kind of life did you lead to see a lot of this stuff...”

Before his words were finished, his entire person disappeared.

It wasn’t just him, Xie Lian himself disappeared too. Turns out, just as the words “what in the world” were uttered, they both felt hollow beneath their feet at the same time, and the next moment they started free-falling into another tunnel.

Turns out, that stone wall wasn’t a door after all, and was in all seriousness, a wall. The square brick beneath their feet was the real door. After tossing the dice, the doors opened suddenly and closed instantly. Xie Lian and Shi Qingxuan free-fell for only a moment before landing heavily onto the ground.

It was a good thing that the ground was soft, otherwise the two would’ve cratered in deep. They didn’t think the fall was painful and were just pulling themselves up when their heads knocked into each other. They “ah”-ed and fell back to the ground. Xie Lian, with one hand covering his forehead, was feeling about his surroundings with his other hand but only made contact with the soft, wet, muddy ground.

There were no stone tiles. That stone wall was long gone.

When they fell earlier, the palm torch Shi Qingxuan ignited had been extinguished. Now that he had lit it up once more and brightened their surroundings, the two discovered that they were in a mud tunnel.

The tunnel was round in shape with muddy walls, and didn't appear to be man-made. Shi Qingxuan rubbed his forehead.

"What is this place? Did we get thrown here because we tossed the wrong number?"

Xie Lian hummed and said, "It's very possible. That stone door is gone, meaning we have no chance of turning back. Let's think of a way to escape first."

The two talked it over and decided to keep following the tunnel path. The tunnel had innumerable twists and turns, and if a full-grown adult wanted to stand up straight in it they'd have a hard time. They could only bend at the waist to walk, or crawl, moving both slowly and tiresomely. The air in this tunnel was also warm and moist, the mud clingy and annoying; each of their steps sinking and dragging, watery and gross. Sometimes, they would even step into the rotten remains of plants or animals. Xie Lian's face never changed, but Shi Qingxuan had goosebumps pop up all over. But the more they traversed, the more Xie Lian felt something was off.

"Lord Wind Master, we better move faster, otherwise..."

Just then, a loud, bizarre roaring sound came echoing.

The noise crashed in, the entire tunnel shook, and small blots of mud pitter-pattered down from the quaking. The two looked at each other, and without a word, they sped off in the opposite direction of the noise.

Yet, that loud sound and the huge quaking shook the tunnel violently, and its speed was much faster than theirs, cutting in closer by the second. The two of them moved with much difficulty, one step shallow and one step deep, crawling through the twisting tunnel without end in sight, not even a ray of light. And not just that, but the direction they were running towards also reverberated the same huge noise and quaking!

Both front and back were blocked, the two had to stop. Along with the crashing noises, the sound of a heavy and gigantic body pushing through the mud whammed past, and two humongous earthworms wiggled in, appearing before Xie Lian and Shi Qingxuan.

The two worms were swollen and large, their bodies a bruising purple, their skin lightly translucent. The body of the insects were segmented, no head, no tail; the fronts were only a meat stump. If those weren't worms, then what were they?

The stone door opened and threw them into such a monster's nest!

Xie Lian raised an arm to guard before himself; Ruoye at the ready. Shi Qingxuan untucked his Wind Master fan from who knows where. Unfortunately, in this narrow tunnel it was impossible to start any gusts, and any blows would only recoil, making it hard to make use of that spiritual device. Just then, Xie Lian recalled that worms were afraid of light and heat, and he shouted,

“Lord Wind Master, please let me have some power, and intensify the palm torch!”

Shi Qingxuan followed his direction, and tapped Xie Lian with his left hand while the flames in his right palm burst a few feet higher. Sure enough, the two giant worms felt the heat and shrunk back, pulling away a few feet in distance. The two, using the flames, continued on their path slowly, forcing the giant earthworms to keep a distance, and prayed for an exit.

However, the tunnel was narrow, and soon enough, it wasn't only the worms feeling the heat from the flames; Xie Lian and Shi Qingxuan themselves were sweating profusely, as if they were baking in an oven, miserable and wretched. And the more horrifying thing was, Shi Qingxuan couldn't keep up burning his powers to keep the flames alive, and the fire grew smaller and smaller. They also noticed that although the giant earthworms were evading them, they weren't as jittery.

After a few more steps, Xie Lian felt his breathing grow difficult and said, “Lord Wind Master, the palm torch won't last. The mud here may be moist and loose, but we're still deep underground. Soon the air will no longer pass, the fire will die, and we're going to faint.”

Shi Qingxuan gritted his teeth. “Then we can only use the Distance-Shortening Array.”

Although neither of the two had a free hand to draw an array and the current environment wasn't exactly ideal, there was no other way.

“Let me find somewhere flat,” Xie Lian said.

Just then, he felt beneath his step a small plate that didn't seem to be moist and spongy, but more so like a stone tile. Xie Lian's mind moved and he immediately crouched down to check. Just as he suspected—it was another stone door!

There was also another drawing of a little person tossing dice on this door. Shi Qingxuan also stepped onto the tile and was overjoyed.

“Quick, quick, quick! Throw the dice and open it!”

Xie Lian was just about to toss out the dice but suddenly thought, “But what if I roll out worse outcomes and open a more horrifying place?”

Xie Lian passed the dice to Shi Qingxuan. “Here, you do it!”

Without a word, Shi Qingxuan grabbed the dice and tossed. Rattle, rattle. This time it was a “three” and a “four”. Xie Lian picked up the dice readily, and the two stood together over the tile.

The palm torch on Shi Qingxuan's hand became smaller by another inch; the two giant worms were squirming and twisting, struggling to approach. Xie Lian watched the drawing on the tile closely as it slowly dissolved into another picture. It was of a forest, and a number of weirdly-dressed little people were dancing in circles around another.

Just then, one of the worms wouldn't hold back anymore, and rushed towards them with a small mouth on the head opening, dragging its heavy body.

Thankfully, just as the worms were only mere feet away from them, the stone door opened!

This time, the two fell into another narrow hole, but the ground was hard, cramped, and dry. The fall was painful and the two tumbled and knocked into each other. Xie Lian was used to pain so he didn't make a sound, but Shi Qingxuan yelled in pain.

Xie Lian's ears were hurt by the loud screaming. Worried something might have happened, he called out, "Lord Wind Master, are you ok?"

Shi Qingxuan's head was at the bottom and his legs up. "I don't know if I'm ok. I've never fallen like this before. Your Highness, there's way too much thrill working with you."

Hearing this Xie Lian couldn't help but let out a small laugh, and realized the two of them fell into a hole in a tree.

He crawled out of the hole with great difficulty and extended a helping hand to Shi Qingxuan. "Thanks for all your hard work."

"You're welcome," Shi Qingxuan replied.

He pulled on Xie Lian's hand and climbed out of the hole, muddy and disheveled; his silk dress robe ripped and rumpled. When he got out, he put a hand over his brows to block out the sharp brightness of the sun.

"Where's this?"

"As you see, a forest in the deep mountains," Xie Lian replied. He looked around him and said, "I think these stone doors are a spiritual device that have the same function as the Distance-Shortening Array. Different numbers tossed will take us to different places. I wonder if we tossed any right numbers."

Shi Qingxuan crossed his two now-bare arms and pondered seriously. "Using the Distance-Shortening Array just once requires an immense amount of spiritual power. To create these stone doors to prevent others from snooping around; that Crimson Rain Sought Flower is indeed powerful and no stranger to mind games."

Although his expression was solemn, with bare arms and such an unkempt disposition, he didn't look serious at all; rather hilarious. Xie Lian held back his laugh with great difficulty; he thought about the way Hua Cheng would lift his lips and shook his head.

"Rather than mind games, it's more...that he's mischievous," Xie Lian thought.

The two only just gotten out of the hole in the tree, and not even a few steps after a number of red-skinned naked people suddenly poured out from the nearby bushes and surrounded them. They started jumping, howling as they did so.

"OOOooooHHHOooHHooohhhh!!"

"..."

The two were shocked, and Shi Qingxuan cried, "What is this now?!"

Xie Lian raised his hand. "Don't panic, don't panic! Let's take a look first."

He steadied himself to look at those savages; they weren't truly naked, but were wearing animal skins and leaves, looking like they were ready to drink blood. They had long branch spears and sharp stoned axes in hand, and when they smiled at the two, their teeth were jaggedly sharp like saws.

The two ran without saying a word.

Shi Qingxuan shouted as he ran, "My brother used to always tell me! That deep in the southern mountains are many savage cannibals that live off of human flesh! He told me not to ever come to such a place on my own! Is that what those are?!"

Xie Lian was practiced in the art of escape so his entire demeanour and manner were much more serene than Shi Qingxuan. He replied calmly, "Hm. That's very possible! Either way, let's find the door first! Let's see if there are any more stone doors nearby!"

Those savages ran after them, screaming and howling tirelessly. Originally, Xie Lian and Shi Qingxuan could only escape and not fight back because there were heavenly laws that dictated that, should gods ever descend to the mortal realm, they shalt not use their powers to oppress. This law was to prevent heavenly officials from bullying mortals and creating disasters borne of power abuse. But the cannibals unceasingly threw sharp rocks and branches at them, and one such branch scraped Shi Qingxuan's cheek.

This was absolutely unacceptable. Shi Qingxuan felt his face and there was the lightest of a bloody scratch, and saw red.

He roared and came to a sudden stop. Turning around, he shouted, "YOU IGNORANT HILLBILLY SAVAGES! NOT ONLY DID YOU NOT COWER IN FEAR BEFORE ME, THE LORD WIND MASTER, YOU DARE RUIN MY FACE!! UNBELIEVABLE!!!"

After his cries, he pulled out his Wind Master fan, flashing it open with a powerful whoosh, and swung with force. The savages were blown off the ground and smashed into nearby trees; howling as they hung off the branches. The two could finally stop running, and took in deep breaths trying to calm their heartbeat. That thought came to Xie Lian again, it's hard being a god...in the three realms, no one had it easier...

Shi Qingxuan huffed and turned to Xie Lian. "Your Highness, you saw it, right? They were asking for it! I wasn't using my powers to oppress."

"I saw, yes," Xie Lian said.

Shi Qingxuan felt his face again and mumbled under his breath, "Even my brother wouldn't dare..." He turned around again. "Let's go find that stone door."

Xie Lian nodded silently and watched Shi Qingxuan fix his clothes and hair, looking carefree once more. Unfortunately, he was dressed in a bedraggled purple silk dress, so his carefree air had a queer, peculiar flavour; it was an unforgettable sight. Xie Lian couldn't help but lament. Thinking back on when they first met at the Banyue Pass, the Lord Wind Master was such a scintillating figure, so much so that Xie Lian had thought him a powerful being with immeasurable depth; if not of a supreme demonic cultivator, then a supreme saint. Now that they were close, he understood everything was but an illusion...

The two walked around in circles in the forest and finally found a set of stone doors next to a different tree hole. This time, Shi Qingxuan refused to toss the dice and shook his head.

"I don't know what's going on, but even though my luck isn't the best every time, it's also not the worst every time. Lady Fortune doesn't seem to be with me today; twice I tossed and the first time was that earthworm tunnel, the second time a cannibal playground. Who knows what's next."

Xie Lian cleared his throat softly and guiltily replied, "Maybe it's because I'm with you so I brought your luck down with me."

"What are you saying!" Shi Qingxuan exclaimed. "It's impossible for anyone to bring down my luck; I, the Lord Wind Master! But why don't you give it a go? Maybe there's still some of the luck you borrowed from your San Lang left."

Xie Lian didn't know why, but he felt a little embarrassed when he heard "your San Lang". He wanted to explain, but at the same time, what's there to explain? If he must explain, then it'd be a little weird, so in the end, he didn't say anything. He felt the dice in his hands and tossed them out lightly.

Two "sixes".

Xie Lian held his breath as he watched the drawings on the stone door transform, and mentally prepared himself to face whatever came next. But this time, the picture didn't change, and the stone door creaked open.

Behind the door was another long stairway that descended into darkness, blowing cold air.

The two looked at each other, both thinking, "Did we circle back to the beginning after going through all that?"

Even if it was back at the beginning, it was still better than bizarre dangers; they'd had enough. Thus, the two decided to descend. The moment they entered through, the door closed behind them, and when they reached out to push, the door had become a stone wall.

"Looks like our only way is down," Xie Lian said.

"Ugh, alright," Shi Qingxuan sighed. "Let me take a breather and we'll continue to play that hateful Crimson Rain Sought Flower's game!"

The two once again descended down the long and rectangular stony path. After two hundred steps or so, Xie Lian realized something.

"Good news, Lord Wind Master. This isn't the same path we took the first time, even though they're similar."

Shi Qingxuan noticed it too. "You're right. The first time we reached the stone wall after two hundred-some steps, but not this time."

Xie Lian said softly, "Looks like this time we're on the right path."

Just as he finished his words, the two came to a stop.

Not far before them in the darkness wafted the stench of blood. Accompanying the smell was the heavy breathing of a man.

The two didn't move a muscle, and said no words. No light, no flames; yet the other party had already sensed their presence, because right after they stopped, a cold voice rang out.

"I have nothing to say," the deep voice of a man said.

Hearing that voice, Shi Qingxuan immediately ignited a palm torch.

Ch.44: Paradise to Ashes; The Second Coming of Fangxin

Xie Lian didn't think Shi Qingxuan would suddenly light a fire, and didn't even have the time to stop him before it was too late. The flames were exceedingly bright and revealed the silhouette of a black-clad man.

The man in black had his head hung low against the stone wall at the end of the path, his face as white as a sheet, his hair a mess; but underneath that unkemptness was a pair of eyes that shone with determination, like burning ice. Although he sat cross-legged without a trace of discomfort, the stench of thick blood in the air indicated he was gravely wounded, and was obviously imprisoned here. His "I have nothing to say" was probably him mistaking them for interrogators.

Shi Qingxuan saw his face and cried, "It's you!"

That man didn't seem to expect other people, either, and was taken aback; looking like he wanted to say "it's you!" too, but alas, held back. Xie Lian calmed his Ruoye that was ready to attack.

"So, you two know each other?"

After crossing so many hurdles and finding someone, Shi Qingxuan looked relieved and was about to respond when that man cut in.

He said in an indisputable tone, "I don't know him."

Shi Qingxuan raged at those words and pointed at him with his fan. "Is it so shameful to know me? What hurtful words, Ming-xiong⁴³! I'm your best friend!"

The man denied it resolutely. "I have no friends that would run around in that sort of attire."

"..."

Shi Qingxuan was still in his ragged purple silk dress, truly...a shameful sight. Xie Lian wanted to laugh at the thought that there were really people in this world who would use "someone's best friend" to validate themselves; it was definitely Shi Qingxuan's style. But "Ming-xiong"? If he remembered correctly, of the five elemental masters, the Earth Master's name was Ming Yi.

Xie Lian spoke up, "Are you perhaps the Lord Earth Master?"

"It's him. You've met before," Shi Qingxuan replied.

⁴³ "Xiong" is a more formal way to say "older brother" than "gege", but is also used informally between male friends; meaning "bro".

Xie Lian looked Ming Yi over and said, "Have we?" He didn't recall ever meeting such a character.

"You have," Shi Qingxuan said.

"We haven't," Ming Yi stated.

"Yea, you have!" Shi Qingxuan said exasperatedly. "Last time at the Banyue Pass! You guys didn't forget that fast, did you?"

"..."

Seeing Ming Yi's face go from pale white to grim, Xie Lian finally remembered! Last time when they met at the Banyue Pass, wasn't there a black-clad lady next to Shi Qingxuan?!

Hua Cheng already told him at the time that that wasn't the Water Master, but must also be one of the five elemental masters. As expected, Shi Qingxuan was not only passionate about transforming into his female form, he was also passionate about dragging others into doing the same. No wonder the black-clad lady at the time looked extremely pissed off and disgusted. Thinking back on how Shi Qingxuan begged him to "join in the fun", Xie Lian sighed, thinking that was a close call, and was glad he didn't relent.

"Lord Earth Master, was the Ascending Fire Dragon set forth by you?" Xie Lian asked.

"It was," Ming Yi answered.

They had found the right person. Xie Lian nodded and said, "The Lord Earth Master is probably heavily wounded. We best make our escape now and talk later."

Without any prompt, Shi Qingxuan knelt down and carried Ming Yi on his back. "Then let's get out of here."

The three retraced their steps and Shi Qingxuan talked as he walked.

"I say, Ming-xiong, aren't you good at fighting? You were perfectly fine back at the Banyue Pass, so how did you get beaten up this bad in just several days? How did you piss off that Crimson Rain Sought Flower?"

His tone was a teasing taunt. Xie Lian mentally noted, "Speaking as though he isn't afraid of getting punched. They are indeed good friends."

Ming Yi looked like he'd had enough of listening to Shi Qingxuan talk, and only said, "Shut up!"

Xie Lian also wanted to know the answer to the same question, but changed his wording: "Lord Earth Master, why would Hua Cheng want to make things difficult for you?"

Ming Yi didn't tell him to shut up, but didn't answer, either. Xie Lian turned his head slightly to look at him and saw he had his eyes closed. After having been imprisoned and interrogated for days and heavily wounded, Ming Yi must've finally let down his guard after being rescued and could relax at last. It wasn't anything urgent, anyway, so Xie Lian didn't try to wake him. The three ran up the stairs and Xie Lian threw out his dice at the top. He didn't know what number he tossed out in the dark, only that before them came a soft creaking sound, and a crack of light appeared. Xie Lian pushed at the door, and was just thinking about whether he'd have the chance to take Lang Ying away too, when he realized the first step he took was hollow.

The moment he felt himself fall forward he cried, "Don't come out!"

Xie Lian somersaulted in the air and fell on something hard. He was just feeling relieved that it wasn't some bladed mountain or a sea of fire he fell into when he raised his head and realized a bladed mountain or a sea of fire might've been a better alternative. Hua Cheng's exceptionally handsome face was inches away from his, his brows raised, looking at him.

This time when the stone door opened, his hollow step made him fall on top of Hua Cheng!

The place of his fall was the armoury! Hua Cheng was seated on the throne of the armoury, composedly wiping the scimitar E'ming. Even when someone suddenly fell onto his lap from above, he'd only moved his hands away and stopped the cleaning without any air of surprise. He calmly looked at Xie Lian, as if waiting for an explanation. Of course Xie Lian had none, and could only lay in his lap and stare back boldly. Suddenly, he saw another person at the peripheral of his vision, and when he turned around, he saw it was Lang Ying.

That bandaged boy was sitting on the floor looking frightened, his hands grabbing his head, staring at the two of them. Why was Lang Ying here too? It looked as if Hua Cheng was interrogating him? And when Xie Lian's eyes moved upwards, he saw half of Shi Qingxuan's white boot stepping out. There wasn't time to think, and in a hurry, Xie Lian gripped Hua Cheng's shoulders.

"I'm sorry!" Xie Lian cried, then pushed Hua Cheng aside.

This push threw Hua Cheng over a meter away, and he even tumbled a couple times. After tumbling, Hua Cheng immediately stood and steadied himself, and by then Shi Qingxuan, carrying Ming Yi, already jumped and landed with ease the same spot Hua Cheng was just sitting. Xie Lian forced himself to look back, and Hua Cheng was still looking at him without a word, but one side of his brows was raised even higher.

Xie Lian leapt to his feet and backed off a few feet, apologizing as he did so. "I'm sorry! I'm sorry!"

Lang Ying ran towards Xie Lian while watching Hua Cheng, still appearing quite afraid, and hid behind him.

Xie Lian shielded him and said, "San Lang, allow me to explain."

"I'm waiting," Hua Cheng responded.

"Wait, isn't it the opposite?" Shi Qingxuan spoke up. "He should be the one who owes you an explanation! He's the one responsible for the missing heavenly official; be wary, Your Highness!"

This was exactly the situation Xie Lian didn't want to face. He looked at Hua Cheng intently.

"San Lang, I don't know what the misunderstanding was between you and the Lord Earth Master, but let's all calm down and talk this out."

The best-case scenario would be Hua Cheng letting them go without harm. Although the Earth Master was wounded, his life was not at stake and he wasn't missing any limbs. If he could drop it, then this wouldn't have to devolve into the worst-case scenario. If Hua Cheng let them leave and they reported back to the heavens, then they'd be in his debt and Xie Lian could use it as a chance to ask Jun Wu to dismiss the whole thing.

However, Hua Cheng said instead, "Earth Master? What Earth Master?" After a pause, he continued, "Oh, did you mean the one the Wind Master is carrying? He's nothing more than an inept subordinate of mine."

Hearing this, both Xie Lian and Shi Qingxuan were taken aback.

"He's obviously one of the heavenly officials, how dare you say otherwise!" Shi Qingxuan said.

Hua Cheng laughed. "Then, I wonder why your honourable heavenly official would hide his identity, drop his respectable title, and come work as an officer under me?"

Hua Cheng drew out E'ming in a crescent moon flash. "If that is truly the Earth Master, then what patience to put on an act for ten years. In the past ten years I had thought him suspicious from time to time, but there was no proof. If it wasn't for bumping into him and the Wind Master at Banyue, I'd still be in the clouds."

In that moment, Xie Lian understood everything.

So, that's what happened!

The Earth Master went missing, and was imprisoned, ultimately because he had hidden his true identity ten years ago to go undercover as a ghost officer under Hua Cheng. In other words, he was a spy. Hua Cheng had thought his actions suspicious, but without concrete evidence, he'd only kept him under his watch. And it was only recently that Hua Cheng finally uncovered his identity as the Earth Master.

During that journey to the Banyue Pass, Hua Cheng had seen the Earth Master next to the Wind Master.

Even under the disguise of a woman (thanks to the Wind Master), Hua Cheng still saw beneath that fake skin, and discovered that black-clad lady was the ghost officer he suspected, and locked on to his identity as one of the five elemental masters.

After the whole ordeal at Banyue had concluded, Hua Cheng probably left Puqi Shrine to go conclude things with the Earth Master. It may have been during Hua Cheng's pursuit to kill, whilst under dire circumstances, that Ming Yi set off the distress signal. Then, Jun Wu summoned Xie Lian and gave him the mission to run this rescue.

That a heavenly official did not mind his duties, but instead went undercover in the ghost realm for over a decade, was quite the scandal. Nevermind the politics behind it; if Ming Yi was to remain imprisoned and tortured, then all heaven would break loose if he was to actually die at Hua Cheng's hands; it would be absolute chaos in the world. If that day were to come, no one would be spared.

After thinking all this through, Xie Lian could only say, "I understand that the fault is ours. But, San Lang, I hope you will let us go this time around."

Hua Cheng watched him intently, and after a moment, said in a calm tone, "Your Highness, some things are best not to get involved in overmuch."

Suddenly, Shi Qingxuan cried from the side, "Wind: come to me!"

The moment the fan came out, wild gusts started blowing through the armoury. The many weapons hung on the walls and on the shelves started rattling.

"Lord Wind Master! We haven't done anything yet??" Xie Lian said, alarmed.

"I don't think either of you are going to make a move first," Shi Qingxuan said. "So I'll be the bad guy this time. WIND! WIIINNNNNDDDD COME TO ME!!!"

There was a huge cracking sound, and Xie Lian could feel layers of dust falling on his head from above. He raised his head and saw that it was the roof that was being raised by the gusts, breaking at the seams into a large crack.

The armoury had no windows or other visible exits, and Shi Qingxuan had no intention to fight; but rather, to escape through the crack of the roof!

Within the mad gales, Hua Cheng's raven-black hair and maple-red clothes flew wildly with the winds, but his person never moved. He smirked.

"You have a fan, and coincidentally, so do I."

From one of the many shelves, Hua Cheng retrieved a fan. It was small and intricate, its spine and leaf made of pure gold; serene and beautiful. Hua Cheng twirled it in his hand, snapping it open. He grinned wordlessly, elegant amidst his murderous aura. He flipped his hand and fanned, and a strong gust shot towards them with a blinding silver flash. The three dodged and heard behind them the sound of hail-like darts smashing against the walls and ground. When they turned their heads to see, it was long rows upon rows of golden foils nailed to the ground. Each foil thin but deeply embedded; its sharpness apparent and vicious.

Each weapon within this armoury was a treasure to behold; even a weapon he grabbed at random could have such a murderous effect!

Hua Cheng flipped his hand again and another golden gust blew. The winds called forth by Shi Qingxuan were strong, but the stronger they were, the more dangerous the situation became. The armoury was a mere chamber, its space limited. A portion of the winds raised by the Wind Master fan would rebound around the interior, hauling the golden foils along; dancing in this madness.

Xie Lian was afraid the golden foils would harm people, so he shielded Lang Ying and cried, "Lord Wind Master, please stop for now!"

The golden foils had continuously brushed closely against Shi Qingxuan and Ming Yi. Shi Qingxuan wanted to stop too, however, the roof had been raised by his winds, revealing a crack, and if he should stop now all of his efforts would go to waste. Just then the golden foils encircling them suddenly flew upwards uniformly. There was a cacophony of crackling before a person broke through the roof and jumped through the crack, debris and dust coming down with him.

The moment he landed, that person shouted, "Lord Wind Master, I apologize, but I just couldn't sit still anymore!"

Shi Qingxuan was overjoyed. "Qianqiu, you've come in the nick of time!"

That young man carried a longsword, its blade the size of a grown man's palm—it was indeed Lang Qianqiu. His longsword was a shimmering gold, but looking at it closely, it wasn't because his sword was golden, but because it sucked up all the golden foils; covering the blade completely, making it look as if it was a golden sword.

Lang Qianqiu's longsword was forged by a curious metal borne of a lodestone mountain, and had the ability to magnetize metals. As long as the object of suction did not exceed a certain level of spiritual power, once he had the sword in hand, he could mentally release its ability and magnetize all surrounding metals, melting it into his blade. Sure enough, soon the innumerable golden foils were all sucked into the sword and dissolved into the blade. Seeing this, Hua Cheng laughed out loud, closed his fan and threw it away behind him.

"Are the heavenly officials so pathetically poor that they couldn't let a teeny bit of gold go?"

If those words were directed at Xie Lian he would only pretend not to have heard them. But they were directed at Lang Qianqiu, a noble born of royalty. He hadn't cared for riches his entire life, and although he knew the enemy was intentionally taunting him, he was still boiling with rage. He raised his sword with both his hands and struck towards Hua Cheng. Hua Cheng drew out his scimitar with one hand, generating silver shimmers in the air, calmly ready to welcome the attack.

Lang Qianqiu's strike used all of his power. He was like a newborn bull fearless of tigers, but Xie Lian had clearly seen the difference between their strengths, and if this strike was to land, he would die for sure!

On the sidelines, even Shi Qingxuan, who was no swordsman, watched with alarm and yelled, "Qianqiu! Don't!!!"

But in that split second, how could a shout stop the arrow that's left the bow?

Just as the blades of a sword and a scimitar were about to make contact, a blinding white light blew up within the armoury.

It was a light so immense it covered every inch of the armoury, and everyone lost their sight temporarily. All they could see was white. Xie Lian, however, was prepared, and could see with some difficulty. His right hand gathered all of the powers he borrowed from Shi Qingxuan and created a giant flame and blazed it towards a random direction.

A corner of the armoury immediately caught on fire. Soon after, Xie Lian released Ruoye, and wrapped himself, Shi Qingxuan, Ming Yi, Lang Qianqiu, and Lang Ying.

He shouted, "Lord Wind Master, blow us upwards!"

Even though Shi Qingxuan couldn't open his eyes, he still followed Xie Lian's direction. He raised his fan and snapped downwards, and a violent twister formed from flat ground, blowing towards the ceiling and, at last, breaking through the shaky roof!

Ruoye had the five of them in a bundle and flew towards the sky. In midair, sight finally returned to many of them, and Shi Qingxuan could see down below them giant flames ablaze, black smoke heavy in the air; the armoury was burning. He was afraid Hua Cheng would give chase and flapped his fan. Now it really became “fanning the flame”; the blaze instantly erupted in size, and kindles landed on all the nearby buildings. Now over half of Paradise Manor was ablaze!

With great difficulty, Xie Lian finally grabbed hold of the Shi Qingxuan who was fanning with all his might.

“Lord Wind Master, please stop fanning! The whole place is going to burn down!”

Startled, Shi Qingxuan cried, “Alright, alright I’m stopping! Let me go, Your Highness, your grip is too strong!”

It wasn’t until the Wind Master stopped his winds that Xie Lian let go. He looked down and amidst the red flames, Xie Lian was still able to spot a crimson silhouette. They were too high in the sky and he couldn’t see clearly, but his gut instinct told him that in that moment in time, Hua Cheng was standing there watching him.

He didn’t give chase and didn’t put out the flames. He only stood there, letting the wildfires devour capriciously.

Outside the Paradise Manor, screams and howling roared from all over the Ghost City streets, and crowds of ghosts ran amok.

Xie Lian couldn’t breathe, and his voice cracked, mumbling to himself, “I...only wanted to start a small fire to create a distraction, how did it turn out like this...”

It was only earlier that Hua Cheng had leaned against the doors of that armoury, half-jokingly telling him he wanted to gift him the entire armoury with every weapon inside, but now everything was engulfed in a sea of fire. Although there may be many golden devices that were unafraid of intense heat, there were surely also many that could not touch flames. After all this burning, many treasures would become ashes. Xie Lian had not expected the flames to grow so violently, devouring the entire Paradise Manor.

Even if Hua Cheng didn’t consider it a “home”, it was still his residence!

Seeing how crushed Xie Lian was, Shi Qingxuan also felt bad. “Um...I’m really sorry, Your Highness! I didn’t think things through and only wanted to escape faster. This is all my fault! It was most definitely only a small flame at first...if the Crimson Rain Sought Flower comes knocking for paybacks, you just tell him to come to me! Don’t worry, I can pay whatever amount! Money is never an issue!”

But money was definitely not the issue. Xie Lian closed his eyes and couldn't speak. Shi Qingxuan patted his shoulder in consolation but suddenly felt wetness in his palm and a strange, stark smell of blood. He turned his head to see and his face lost colour.

"Your Highness, what happened to your hand?!"

Xie Lian's right hand was covered in blood. His entire right arm was thoroughly dyed with blood, and the trembling was not slight. Yet both his hands still sternly held onto that white silk band to keep everyone from getting blown apart by the wild winds.

"What's going on with you?!" Shi Qingxuan cried.

Xie Lian blinked back and strained to steady himself before shaking his head. "It's nothing...just a small injury. It'll get better once we get back."

"That white light was you?" Shi Qingxuan remembered. "Your Highness, you broke those two off?"

"I'm a swordsman, after all," Xie Lian replied.

Shi Qingxuan had guessed right. Right then, when the blades of Hua Cheng and Lang Qianqiu were about to make contact, Xie Lian flashed in.

He picked up a sword from the pile of weapons on the shelves, and made two moves between the sword and the scimitar.

The first move, he knocked back Lang Qianqiu's longsword. The second move, he blocked the scimitar E'ming.

The strength of those two moves was not only powerful, but extremely well-controlled. Even when Xie Lian blocked both blades, the force of the strikes were not rebounded onto the attackers.

Because, with Xie Lian sandwiched in the middle, he used his sword and his own arm to absorb both attacks completely.

Lang Qianqiu's longsword was manageable, but Hua Cheng's scimitar was a force to be reckoned with. The sword Xie Lian used was one from Hua Cheng's collection, so naturally it was also a formidable blade. When the two blades met, it blasted that blinding white light. With the two moves, the first strike against Lang Qianqiu's longsword created a crack, and the second strike against the scimitar E'ming shattered the sword to pieces.

All of this was done within a fraction of a second, faster than the eye could see. Shi Qingxuan looked at the miserable state of Xie Lian's right hand, the whole right arm a bloody mess.

He commented, "Your Highness...you're way too intense. I can't believe you blocked them single-handedly!"

The Flower-Crowned Martial God; Sword in One Hand, Flower in the Other. Shi Qingxuan only remembered the flower, but had forgotten: Xie Lian ascended because of his sword.

Thinking back on how close of a call it was, Shi Qingxuan's heart was still racing. "Thank goodness Your Highness had the moves, otherwise who knows into how many pieces Lang Qianqiu would be cut by Hua Cheng."

The strange thing was, next to them, Lang Qianqiu appeared to be unharmed, but his expression was frozen, like his soul had left his body.

"Qianqiu?" Shi Qingxuan called. "Qianqiu, are you alright? Wake up! What's with you? Has your sight not returned yet???"

Riding on tailwind, the group of them finally reached the heavenly capital. Dragging and carrying, they rushed past the Ascension Gates and ran straight for the Great Martial Hall. Lang Ying couldn't enter the hall, so Xie Lian settled him in a small side chamber. No one seemed to be on duty, so he called within the communication array:

"Is there any honourable official here? Please everyone, come quickly to the Great Martial Hall! It's an emergency, we have a wounded official!"

As he shouted, next to him, Shi Qingxuan snapped his fingers and switched back to his white cultivator robe, and released a hundred thousand merits. "It's two wounded officials!"

Xie Lian said hurriedly, "Lord Wind Master, don't be so excited. We can just talk, there's no need to release any merits. Everyone will naturally come."

"No, Your Highness," Shi Qingxuan said. "You have to know, spreading merits works faster than talking by a hundred times!"

Soon enough, a voice came from afar, "Who's wounded?"

When the word "who" was uttered, the voice was still far away, but by the last word the person had appeared, and it was Feng Xin. He entered the hall and looked at Xie Lian, then at Lang Qianqiu, his face faltering.

"I'm fine, but the Lord Earth Master seemed to be heavily wounded," Xie Lian said.

After a moment of silence, Feng Xin said, "What happened to your right hand?"

“So what?” another voice came. “There’s so many heavenly officials. Who ever returned unscathed after a round of patrol?”

The voice was decorous and mellow, but the words sharp. It was Mu Qing. He crossed into the Great Hall and also took a look at Xie Lian then at Lang Qianqiu. Yet his expression was the opposite of Feng Xin; having only raised a brow, as if ready to spectate a good show. He saw that Feng Xing moved to check on Xie Lian’s arm so he bent to check on Ming Yi.

He said, “So this is the Lord Earth Master?”

During that exchange, a number of heavenly officials poured into the hall. The Earth Master Yi had always been inconspicuous and out of sight, so for many, it was the first time they had ever seen his person, and they cluttered around staring at him curiously. The masses were mostly confused, not knowing the reason they were called to the Great Martial Hall, but having collected the Wind Master’s merits, they had to come and check things out.

“Thanks, but I’m alright. It’ll get better by itself after a while,” Xie Lian said to Feng Xin.

Feng Xin didn’t mince words. “Watch yourself.”

Xie Lian uttered another thanks softly, but when he turned around, Lang Qianqiu was watching him with a frozen expression.

“Your Highness Tai Hua, what’s wrong?” he asked.

Feng Xin also noticed something off about Lang Qianqiu and questioned, “Was His Highness Tai Hua also injured somewhere?”

“I don’t think so. Let me see,” Xie Lian said, and extended his hand, reaching for Lang Qianqiu’s brow. Yet, in a flash, Lang Qianqiu seized Xie Lian’s wrist.

There was hesitation on Lang Qianqiu’s face, as if he discovered something, but wasn’t sure; a fire had started burning within his eyes. Xie Lian felt a wave of rage trembling from Lang Qianqiu’s arm to his.

Now all the spectating officials had noticed this strange situation and started whispering amongst themselves. Shi Qingxuan and Mu Qing both started to rise and Feng Xin spoke.

“Your Highness Tai Hua, what are you doing?”

Lang Qianqiu finally moved his lips. He only said two syllables, but Xie Lian’s heart sank to the very bottom.

“...Guoshi?” Lang Qianqiu gritted his teeth.

Xie Lian's pupils shrank slightly.

The onlooking officials, half guessing, half confused, muttered, "What Guoshi? Who's the Guoshi?" Some were more astute, and figured it out.

Lang Qianqiu was the Crown Prince of Yong'an, and the Guoshi of Yong'an during his time was the second of the Two Wicked Masters: the Guoshi Fangxin. No one knew of his origin or his real identity. Yet here, Lang Qianqiu had Xie Lian in his grip and called him "Guoshi", meaning...Xie Lian was the evil that brought ruin to Yong'an—the Guoshi Fangxin?!

However, Xie Lian was the Crown Prince of Xianle. The kingdom of Xianle had fallen in the hands of the kingdom of Yong'an, so why would he go and become the Guoshi of Yong'an?

The Prince Tai Hua was renowned for his optimism and cheerfulness, never having played mind games, nor made things difficult for anyone, and he had never exhibited such an expression; half-despair half-rage, half enmity, half hatred.

Lang Qianqiu had Xie Lian in a deadly grip, his breathing becoming harsher, and finally said in a strained voice, "You...I clearly killed you with my own two hands. Sealed you in that coffin. You...Guoshi, you certainly are a crafty one!"

Heavens. It looked like something big was about to go down today.

Ch.45: The Black-Hearted Guoshi; Gilded Banquet Awash in Blood

Feng Xin was the closest to the two, and he looked at Xie Lian with an unconcealed shock. Mu Qing, on the other hand, had glowing eyes; the schooled shock had a hidden layer of excitement.

Shi Qingxuan let go of Ming Yi and said, "Qianqiu, did you misunderstand something? If His Highness was that Guoshi Fangxin, how would you not recognize him until now?"

Another voice rang out the sidelines, "Qingxuan, you don't know? Legends say the Guoshi Fangxin was proud, mysterious, and cold. He'd always worn a white-gold mask, having never shown his real face to anyone. His Highness Tai Hua must've never seen his real looks."

The one who spoke had his arms crossed and stood far on the sidelines. It was Pei Ming. Just seeing his face made Shi Qingxuan annoyed, and he swung his whisk.

"If that's the case, then no one had seen what the Guoshi Fangxin looked like. Why must General Pei make it sound like it's a sure thing that His Highness Xianle is the Guoshi Fangxin?"

When in action, Shi Qingxuan and Xie Lian were ridiculous and hilarious, but once in the heavenly court, they changed their composure, calm and poised, mindful of their behaviour. Just then, a snow-white silhouette appeared from the back chambers.

The moment he arrived, everyone calmed down. The chattering officials all stood in their place, silencing their gossip, and bowed.

"Your Majesty."

Jun Wu raised his hand slightly and everyone straightened once more. He walked willfully, and as he passed by Xie Lian, he tapped on his right shoulder. The sleeve that was still dripping with fresh blood ceased immediately after the tap.

After taking a moment to look over Ming Yi, Jun Wu stated, "It's nothing serious. Settle the Earth Master in."

Thus, four famous medicinal heavenly officials came over to lift Ming Yi up and took him away. Shi Qingxuan looked as if he wanted to follow, but seeing the current tension in the Great Martial Hall, he couldn't not worry and decided not to go after all.

With his hands behind his back, Jun Wu returned to the throne before speaking again. "So tell me. What's happened now? Why won't Tai Hua let Xianle go, and why is Xianle bowing his head?"

Lang Qianqiu glanced at Xie Lian; seeing that he was still silent, as they were surrounded by heavenly officials, there was no need to fear his escape, so Lang Qianqiu released his hand and turned to Jun Wu in a bow.

“My Lord, many hundreds of years ago, this man altered his name to Fangxin, slaughtered my clan, and brought ruin to my kingdom. I request a duel, and pray the lord will be our judge!”

Within the Great Martial Hall, even ones who had never heard of the name Fangxin ran to research the name within the communication array. What was uncovered was an astonishing tale. Good thing Ling Wen was present to answer everyone’s query.

“The Guoshi Fangxin was the saviour and teacher to the Crown Prince of Yong’an, Lang Qianqiu. He was named one of the Two Wicked Masters because of the infamous bloodbath that washed the Gilded Banquet of the Yong’an monarchy.”

“What was the Gilded Banquet?” Shi Qingxuan asked.

“Lord Wind Master,” Ling Wen replied. “This Gilded Banquet was a tradition passed down from the nobility of Xianle, and called thus because all cutlery, utensils, cups, and instruments were of the highest grade of gold; exquisite and luxurious.

“After the kingdom of Yong’an was established, at the beginning, they announced to the world that they would not follow the culture of excess from the old kingdom, and put all their focus on their people. Yet, after a few decades, the old ways were re-learnt, including that culture of excess.”

Ling Wen continued: “On the night of the seventeenth birthday of the Crown Prince of Yong’an, the palace threw a Gilded Banquet in celebration. That Guoshi Fangxin ...in that feast, with one sword in hand, slaughtered every member of the royal family in attendance.”

The golden goblets toppled and blood spilt like wine.

“Only the Crown Prince of Yong’an escaped because of his late arrival to the feast. Otherwise, he too would have been annihilated.”

This coup d’etat was a huge blow to the foundation of Yong’an, and if it wasn’t for Lang Qianqiu, who had the people’s heart and his hard work, there would no doubt be a riot. It was with great difficulty that the chaos was settled, and soon after, the Yong’an monarchy released a bounty to pursue the fugitive murderer. At last, when he was captured, Lang Qianqiu killed the evil Guoshi Fangxin with his own two hands, sealed the corpse within a triple-layered coffin, before sealing it again underground.

However, the roots of the monarchy had been gravely damaged. Since then, it inevitably declined, before it was overtaken by another clan in the end.

Lang Qianqiu glared at Xie Lian. "I never understood why you did what you did. You said you couldn't stand seeing us on the throne, but I didn't believe it, and I never thought you wanted to overthrow the monarchy to take our place. But now I finally know why."

The heavenly officials had their eyes wide with shock, muttering to each other.

"This is revenge!"

"It couldn't have been anything else! The kingdom of Xianle had fallen, so he had to ruin Yong'an too. Yong'an killed his royal parents, so he had to murder the royal parents of the Crown Prince of Yong'an. An eye for an eye. It's pure vengeance!"

"But the ones who wiped out Xianle weren't of Lang Qianqiu's generation, this rage was unreasonable..."

"And here I thought the Laughingstock of the Three Realms was a fool, but he's actually quite the aggressive character. Going undercover as a Guoshi in an enemy state, slaughtering the entire monarchy in one go. Incredible..."

Xie Lian could feel Jun Wu's eyes on him, and closed his own.

He heard Jun Wu say, "Tai Hua, you firmly believe Xianle to be Fangxin, but do you have proof?"

"The Guoshi Fangxin was the one who taught me swordsmanship; how can I not recognize him the moment he strikes?" Lang Qianqiu replied.

The gossiping poured in like tides.

"Never mind making a mess of things, but isn't teaching the Crown Prince swordsmanship a little too extra?"

"No wonder after the third ascension we haven't seen him touch a single sword. He's afraid to show his tail."

Lang Qianqiu stated: "This time I went to the Ghost City and fought with Crimson Rain Sought Flower..."

The moment he mentioned the Ghost City and Hua Cheng, many of the officials shivered again in fright, but Lang Qianqiu continued.

"When I was twelve, there was once when I was kidnapped during an outing. The kidnapers dragged me onto the streets, and when the guards caught up, they started brawling. A street performer was dragged in, and bruised as he was, he intercepted the fight with but a tree branch, and easily rescued me with but a few swings.

“The kidnapers and the guards both suffered grave damages, and it was this street performer who escorted me all the way back to the palace. Out of immense gratitude, his majesty my father and the queen my mother fervently tried to retain him, and discovered his skills in swordsmanship; and so he was ultimately invited to become the Guoshi. He taught me the way of the blade for five years. I’m more than familiar with his style, how can I be wrong?”

“Your Highness Tai Hua,” Mu Qing said faintly. “You’re saying that what you saw was but a shadow, and other than you, no one else has seen it. So all of this is only by your word.”

Mu Qing’s argument sounded like it was in Xie Lian’s favour, but it was actually more complex. He had already seen that Lang Qianqiu wouldn’t let this go, and the more he was questioned, the more he would prove himself; not the least bit helpful to Xie Lian’s situation.

Sure enough, Lang Qianqiu demanded, “Fine. Please bring me a sword!”

There were many martial gods within the hall that carried a sword, and hearing his call, there was immediately a sword thrown towards him. Lang Qianqiu caught it and forced it in front of Xie Lian.

“Take it. We’ll duel now without holding back, using everything we’ve got, and see whether we have the same style, and whether I was taught by you!”

Everyone thought to duel in the Great Martial Hall was a reckless act, but with the Gilded Banquet, that a Crown Prince’s entire family was slaughtered in cold blood, they could understand why he was this agitated.

Xie Lian’s injury was still on Shi Qingxuan’s mind, and he said, “Qianqiu, His Highness blocked that attack from Hua Cheng for you, and injured his right arm like this, so how can he duel with you?”

Hearing this, Lang Qianqiu suddenly extended his left palm, and smacked heavily upon his own right arm. There was a loud crack, and a mist of blood spurted out from his entire right arm from the shoulder, bleeding profusely; the limb fell limply. There wasn’t any need to check to understand that it was a heavy injury, and everyone was shocked.

Xie Lian was also taken aback and raised his eyes. “What are you doing?”

“The Lord Wind Master was right,” Lang Qianqiu said. “You did injure your arm saving me, and so I return an arm to you. But saving me is one thing, killing my clan is the undeniable truth. I know you’re dextrous and can use a sword with either arm without lessening your skills. We’ll duel with our left. Pick up the sword if you’re a man!”

Xie Lian looked at the sword, then looked at him, and finally, shook his head slowly. "I've sworn many years ago to never kill with the sword again."

With those words, Lang Qianqiu recalled that night when he finally arrived at the feast: the scene of that black-robed man pulling out a longsword from the dead bodies of his parents, his eyes reddened with madness, the sword in his left hand emitting a shaking, crackling sound from his left grip.

Shi Qingxuan swung out his whisk again and it wrapped around the sword to hold it down. "I think there might be some sort of misunderstanding here. If that Guoshi Fangxin had always worn a mask, then anyone could've pretended to be him to commit murder. What does my Lord think?"

Everyone turned their gaze to the jaded throne.

"Xianle," Jun Wu spoke.

"Yes, my lord." Xie Lian bowed.

"Do you concede to Tai Hua's accusations?" Jun Wu asked.

"I concede," Xie Lian replied.

The "I concede" was uttered in a frosty tone, very unlike Xie Lian's usual manner of speaking, and the faces of Feng Xin, Mu Qing, and Shi Qingxuan all dropped.

Jun Wu nodded, and asked, "The Guoshi Fangxin who spilt blood upon the Gilded Banquet—was it you?"

After a moment of silence, Xie Lian raised his head, determined. "That's right. It was me!"

Words of steel with no turning back.

"So you admit. Very good," Lang Qianqiu said.

As mentioned previously, there were innumerable heavenly officials with mortal blood on their hands in the upper court. But truthfully, there hadn't been that many who had their blood debt escalate to this point. It might be because those mortals didn't have someone like Lang Qianqiu in the family who could ascend and demand justice from the heavens.

Before, Pei Su had General Pei as a shield, but in the end, he couldn't escape exile. Xie Lian had no one behind him, so now it would all depend on whether Jun Wu still valued past affections, and held the heart to protect him.

Yet, many still couldn't fathom what attitude Jun Wu held towards Xie Lian. The first ascension, the Crown Prince of Xianle was of course treated with the utmost favour; the second ascension, the two had a huge fight, and Xie Lian even stabbed Jun Wu a few times before he was defeated; and this third ascension, the two had been at peace with each other, as if the past conflicts had been forgotten, and Jun Wu even built a palace for Xie Lian in the nicest area of the heavenly capital. It was truly difficult to understand. Now, everyone had their ears attentive, waiting eagerly to hear how the Lord would sentence Xie Lian.

However, before Jun Wu had the chance to pass a verdict, Xie Lian spoke up first. "Xianle has a presumptuous request."

"What is it?" Jun Wu responded.

"I humbly ask the Lord to remove my godhood, and banish me to the mortal realm," Xie Lian said.

Some of the heavenly officials were astonished, and at the same time amazed. Of course no one wanted to be banished; it's not easy to ascend. To work so hard to climb so high, only to fall; just thinking about it felt rueful. To dare ask for banishment from Jun Wu so straightforwardly, a lot of them couldn't do it. Some of the other heavenly officials didn't think much of it. After all, at this point, it might be better to back off than to fight to the death. Xie Lian had been banished twice already; a third time probably meant nothing to him, and maybe he was even used to it.

Lang Qianqiu on the other hand, objected. "I don't need you to banish yourself. Ascension happens because you have the skills. I only want a duel."

"I don't want to fight you," Xie Lian said.

"Why?" Lang Qianqiu shouted. "It's not like we've never fought before. Life or death, the outcome doesn't matter, let's just put an end to this!"

Xie Lian said plainly, "No reason. Fight me, and you will for sure die."

Ch.46: Enraged Nan Yang; Fist Fight with Xuan Zheng

Although the words were an understatement, lightly said, it caused all those around to take in a harsh breath. Many had in their minds: you're nothing more than a powerless rubbish god, how could you be so shameless to say to the one Lang Qianqiu, Martial God of the East, that if you fight, he'll die for sure? What arrogance! It was like the request for banishment was because fighting Lang Qianqiu was beneath him. Pure bullshit.

Yet Lang Qianqiu didn't think his words were exaggerated at all. "I said, life and death don't matter! I don't need you to let me off easy either!"

Xie Lian ignored him and reiterated his request to Jun Wu, "Pray my lord banish me to the lesser realm."

Shi Qingxuan suddenly raised his arm. "Wait! I have more to say!"

"Speak, Wind Master," Jun Wu said.

"Everyone here seemed to think His Highness Xianle spilt the blood of Yong'an royalty for revenge. Yet, if it was revenge, then why did he let the Crown Prince of Yong'an, His Highness Tai Hua go? Logically, the one an avenger would want to cut down the most should be the Crown Prince himself, am I wrong?"

It wasn't that no one had thought of this detail, but no one had thought it necessary to voice it either. Now that the Wind Master took the lead, some nodded their heads in agreement.

Shi Qingxuan continued, "His Highness and I haven't known each other for long, but I did see with my own eyes him fighting head-on against the scimitar E'ming in order to protect His Highness Tai Hua. Qianqiu, if he regarded the Yong'an monarchy with hatred, why would he unnecessarily defend you against the blade?"

Hearing that Xie Lian faced E'ming head on, both Feng Xin and Mu Qin stared at Xie Lian. Around, there were whispers saying, "Maybe he was just feeling guilty", but Shi Qingxuan immediately raised his voice.

"That was the weapon of misfortune; the cursed blade! SO! I think this whole business is highly suspect!"

"I'm envious that His Royal Highness has gained the Lord Wind Master's friendship to defend him so," Pei Ming said. "Too bad our Little Pei isn't as fortunate."

"General Pei, don't muddy the waters," Shi Qingxuan said. "Can Little Pei's case be compared? I saw him commit crimes with my own eyes, too, and heard with my own ears his admission of said crimes."

“Then isn’t that exactly the same as today?” Pei Ming argued. “His Highness Tai Hua saw him commit crimes, and heard him admit to said crimes with his own ears. How is that any different?”

Shi Qingxuan grew furious and was about to argue back when Xie Lian held him back.

“Lord Wind Master, thank you, I am in your debt. But please let this go.”

Shi Qingxuan himself hadn’t thought of a good comeback against Pei Ming yet, so he only pointed at him but no more words came out.

Finally, Jun Wu spoke, his tone tranquil: “Everyone, please calm down.”

His voice wasn’t particularly loud, very serene; yet everyone within the Great Martial Hall heard his words clearly, and they all stood back in position. Once the hall quieted down, Jun Wu spoke again.

“Tai Hua, your actions have always been impulsive. When situations arise, one mustn’t be rash; listen calmly, assess, and then evaluate once you know the whole story.”

Lang Qianqiu lowered his head to heed the lesson.

Jun Wu continued, “Xianle refuses to give us that full story, so his request for banishment is denied. He will be detained in the Palace of Xianle, and I will personally interrogate him afterwards. Before then, the two of you shan’t meet.”

It was a conclusion no one had expected.

Jun Wu actually shielded Xie Lian, the laughingstock of the three realms, who had no temples, no devotees, and no merits!

Lang Qianqiu was the martial god who ruled the east; if he was unhappy with the verdict, then what a losing business! Even then, Jun Wu chose to shield Xie Lian...didn’t that mean he was still very much in favour?!

Many of the officials now saw where the wind was blowing, and decided mentally that from now on, they wouldn’t publicly mention the words “laughingstock of the three realms”. Shi Qingxuan let out a sigh of relief and loudly praised Jun Wu for his wisdom. Lang Qianqiu, on the other hand, only stared at Xie Lian intently.

“Whatever the lord wishes to question, go ahead and question, but whatever the conclusion, I will still duel him!”

With that, Lang Qianqiu bowed to Jun Wu before he turned and left the hall. Jun Wu waved his hand and a couple martial officials came forward to take Xie Lian away.

As they passed by Shi Qingxuan, Xie Lian spoke in a soft voice, “Lord Wind Master, thanks for everything. But if you must help me, don’t say any more on my behalf—but can I ask you to do two things for me?”

Shi Qingxuan was still feeling bad about fanning the fire that burnt down Paradise Manor, and wished dearly that Xie Lian would ask him for anything. “Whatever you need.”

“The boy I settled in the side chambers, please take care of him,” Xie Lian said.

“Nothing I can’t do! What’s the second thing?” Shi Qingxuan said.

“If General Pei still wants to make things difficult for Banyue in the future, please help her out.”

“Of course,” Shi Qingxuan replied. “I won’t let Pei Ming get his way. Where is she?”

“I’ve hidden her in a small pickle jar in my Puqi Shrine. If you have the time, please air her out sometimes,” Xie Lian said.

“...”

After thanking the Wind Master, two heavenly officials brought Xie Lian to the Palace of Xianle before courteously excusing themselves.

“Thanks for your hard work.” Xie Lian bowed his head slightly.

Stepping through the front gates, Xie Lian closed the doors behind him. Looking around, as he expected, not just appearance-wise, even all the facilities were exactly the same as his previous palace. Last time he passed by, he didn’t enter; never having guessed that the first time he was to step foot in here would be due to detention. Not the best sign.

But after so much excitement in the past few days, his heart was tired, and Xie Lian passed out immediately on the ground.

He dreamt of many things.

He seemed to be meditating with his eyes closed, when when he blinked his eyes open, he found himself sitting in the lotus position before a desk; his black robes flowing on the floor in layers around him, and on his face there seemed to be a cold, heavy mask.

When he lowered his head, the sight before him was of a young boy sprawled over the desk. The boy appeared to be fourteen or fifteen years of age; his attire distinguished, his form strumming with life, but fast asleep.

He shook his head and walked over. Bending slightly, he knocked on the desk, "Your Royal Highness."

Maybe it was because of the cold mask, even his voice was cool. The boy finally woke with a start. When he raised his eyes and saw him, he sat upright immediately in horror.

"G-G-G-Guoshi!!!!"

He said: "You fell asleep again. Copy the Ethics Scripture ten times as punishment."

The Crown Prince cried in dismay: "Master, please no! Why don't you have me run ten laps around the palace as punishment?"

"Copy twenty times. Do it now, and write nicely."

The Crown Prince seemed to fear him, and sat up properly to start writing. He then sat back at his original position and continued to meditate. Truthfully, everyone in the palace was a little scared of him. But this sense of distance and oppressive power was created intentionally by him.

However, this Crown Prince may be too young, so he could never hold that sense of fear for long. Not long after he started copying the scripture, he called out: "Master!"

He put down the book in hand. "What is it?"

"I've become skilled in all the sword techniques you taught me last time. Isn't it time for a new technique?" the Crown Prince said.

"Alright. What do you want to learn?" he said.

"I want to learn the technique you used to save me!" the Crown Prince exclaimed.

He contemplated for a bit and said, "That one? No."

"Why?" the Crown Prince asked.

"That technique is impractical. At least, it's unsuitable for one in your position," he explained.

The Crown Prince didn't understand. "But isn't it convenient? Using one sword to dissolve the power of two! You saved me with that technique!"

It was normal for the Crown Prince not to understand. He said, "Your royal highness, let me ask you a question."

"Ask!"

He said, "Once, there were two people, eyes sunken red with hunger. They started fighting in order to rob each other of food. In came a third person, and he wanted to stop the fight. Do you think words would be effective in this situation?"

"...No, it'd be useless. They only want food, right?"

"That's right. Because the root of the problem wasn't solved, no one would listen to your reason. Thus, the only way this third person can stop the fight would be to provide what they wanted. To give food from his own purse."

The Crown Prince seemed to understand, but also seemed to not.

He continued, "The reasoning is the same. You must understand that the moment a sword is unsheathed, someone will be hurt. When power is released, something must receive it.

"Thus, it was wrong for you to say I dissolved the force of two swords. Nothing was dissolved; I absorbed their attacks. To stop an attack by hurting oneself is a foolish technique, and only used when there are no other alternatives.

"You're an esteemed Crown Prince. You've no use for something of the sort."

The Crown Prince continued to copy his scripture, but even after a while, he still looked complentative.

He asked, "Did you have any other questions?"

After a moment of hesitation, the Crown Prince said, "One thing. Master, if the third person didn't have enough food, then what should be done?"

"..."

The Crown Prince continued, "If both of the hungry had gotten food, but wanted more, and fought harder because of greed, and sought more food from the third person, what should be done?"

"What do you think?" he asked.

The Crown Prince pondered and said, "I don't know...Maybe, he shouldn't have intercepted from the start."

The Great Hall was gold. Everything was golden. However, at present, it had all become crimson.

At every golden banquet table there was sprawled a person. Their throats were pierced, their deaths tragic.

His hand that held the sword wouldn't stop shaking. The stately king was covered in blood, his eyes red, filled with pain and hatred. Next to his feet was the dead body of the queen. His sword in hand, he took one step after another and walked over. When the king raised his head and saw him, he was dumbfounded.

"Guoshi? You...?!"

A severely cold and cruel sword struck.

Right at the same time, he sensed something, and turned his head immediately. The young Crown Prince was just outside the door, standing amidst the corpses of guards.

The boy's eyes were blank, as if wondering what he saw was reality or a dream. He took a step and almost tripped on the threshold, his mind lost.

He pulled out his sword; blood splattered onto his black robes.

The Crown Prince didn't trip on the threshold but tripped on the dead bodies on the ground. He rushed to the king's body, his voice finally returning.

"Father!? Mother?!"

Yet the king would never speak again. The Crown Prince couldn't shake him awake and whipped his head madly towards him, his eyes wide.

"Master! What are you doing? WHAT DID YOU DO?! Guoshi!!!"

It was a long while after before he heard his own voice, devoid of emotion—

"You all deserved it."

Xie Lian didn't sleep well, and rolled awake with a start.

He sleepily rubbed his eyes and realized he didn't actually sleep that long, and didn't dream anything nice either. Good thing there was something on his chest that poked him awake. He sat for a while, then found something in his clothes after feeling around for it. He opened his palm and revealed two dice, the same ones from the Paradise Manor.

A sea of red floated in his mind. The scene was blurry, but that crimson silhouette was clear as day, watching him unmoving within that sea of red. Xie Lian sighed.

"I wonder how much is left of San Lang's Paradise Manor. If I get banished again this time, who knows how much junk I'll have to sell or how long it'd take to pay him back...decades, centuries; if anything, I'll pay him for the rest of my life."

Xie Lian looked at the dice for a bit before clapping his hands closed; shaking them in his palms and tossing them to the ground. The dice rattled and rolled around the ground before coming to a stop.

As expected, all the luck he borrowed from Hua Cheng was used up. He was hoping for another roll of two sixes, but it was only snake eyes.

Xie Lian couldn't help but laugh. He shook his head, and suddenly heard footsteps coming from behind. He steadied himself immediately and packed away both the dice and his smile.

The footsteps didn't sound like Jun Wu. Jun Wu walked with deep certainty; unhurried. Although Hua Cheng walked with nonchalance, often lazy, the aura of confidence and surety were exactly the same. This set of footsteps however, were a little floaty.

Xie Lian turned his head around and was taken aback. "It's you."

The person before him was clad in black, his face fair and his lips thin. His expression was indifferent, maybe even cool. As a martial god, he looked more like a civil god. Who else could it be but Mu Qing?

He saw Xie Lian's startled expression and raised his brows. "Who did you think? Feng Xin?"

Without waiting for a response, he lifted his black robes and crossed the threshold of the door. "Feng Xin probably won't come after all."

"What are you doing here?" Xie Lian asked.

“The emperor detained you, and won’t let His Highness Tai Hua come. But he didn’t say I couldn’t come,” Mu Qing said.

He didn’t bother answering Xie Lian’s question. Whatever. Xie Lian wasn’t actually curious anyway, and didn’t question him further. Mu Qing looked around the newly-built palace of Xianle, his eyes ending up on Xie Lian. After some thought, he suddenly threw something at him. A blue shadow flashed in the air; Xie Lian caught it with his left hand, and when he opened his palm it was a small blue porcelain bottle.

It was a bottle of medicine. Mu Qing said apathetically, “Dragging around a bloody right arm doesn’t look good.”

Xie Lian held the bottle but didn’t move, and watched him instead, discerningly.

After his third ascension, there could only be one word to describe the way Mu Qing treated him: weird. It always felt like he was waiting for Xie Lian to get booted for the third time so he could make sneering remarks. Yet now that Xie Lian might actually get booted for the third time, he suddenly became friendly and even came to gift him medication. This one-eighty-degree change in attitude actually made Xie Lian feel a little weird.

Seeing that Xie Lian wasn’t moving, Mu Qing smirked faintly. “Use it if you want. Either way, no one else is gonna come.”

It wasn’t a smile without mirth; it was obvious that he was actually feeling pretty good. Although Xie Lian didn’t feel his right arm was in pain, there was no reason to just leave the injuries be either. That pat from Jun Wu was a quick fix, but it was better to have medication. Thus, he opened the small blue bottle and carelessly started pouring the contents onto his arm. What came out of the bottle wasn’t powder or pill, but a light blue smoke. The smoke floated wildly, wrapping around his arm, its scent cool and refreshing. It was certainly a high-grade item.

Mu Qing suddenly asked, “Was everything Lang Qianqiu said true? Did you really kill all those Yong’an royals?”

Xie Lian raised his eyes to look at him. Even if Mu Qing had been forcibly hiding it, Xie Lian could still see a thread of uncontrollable excitement in his eyes. He seemed to be highly interested in the details of Xie Lian spilling blood at the Gilded Banquet and continued his questions.

“How did you kill them?”

Just then, another set of footfalls came from behind them. The two turned their heads at the same time, and the one visiting this time was Feng Xin! The moment he entered, he saw Mu

Qing in the main hall, even smiling next to a crouching Xie Lian, he immediately frowned with alarm.

“What are you doing here?”

Xie Lian waved the little bottle in his hand. Mu Qing schooled his expression. He was just saying that Feng Xin wouldn't be coming, and Feng Xin arrived the next second; not funny at all.

“This isn't your palace. What? You can come but I can't?” Mu Qing rebutted.

Feng Xin ignored him and turned to Xie Lian. He hadn't even opened his mouth and Xie Lian spoke up.

“If the two of you came to ask the same question, then I will give you one answer. There's no need to not believe; every word I said at the Great Martial Hall today was true.”

Feng Xin paled. Mu Qing hated that expression, and said in annoyance, “Alright, put that face away. After everything, who are you looking pained for?”

Feng Xin glared at him. “Not for you! Get out!”

“And who are you to tell me to get out?” Mu Qing said. “Speaking as if you're so loyal. How many years did you last again? Didn't you run away too?”

Veins popped all over Feng Xin's face. Xie Lian could sense this exchange was going in the wrong direction and raised his hand.

“Hold it. Hold it.”

As if Mu Qing was the type to hold it back. He sneered. “Everyone says it was because you couldn't stand seeing your old master fall from grace. What a pretty excuse. At the end of the day, you just didn't want to waste the rest of your days following a broken man.”

Feng Xin swung out his fist. “WHAT THE FUCK DO YOU KNOW?!”

Bam! Feng Xin's fist landed squarely on Mu Qing's face. Mu Qing was a standard pretty boy; a bashing punch from Feng Xin was like a persimmon smashed on his face, bloody and miserable. Yet he stood his ground, and without even a whine, he punched right back. When the two ascended they both obtained their own spiritual devices; yet at the height of anger, the best tool to release their rage was their fists. When Feng Xin and Mu Qing fought eight hundred years ago, their martial arts were at the same level. After eight hundred years there was still no difference. Each punch landed; the brawl was messy and mad, each holding their own.

Feng Xin cried angrily, "Don't think I don't know your nasty thoughts! The more crimes he commits the happier you become!!"

Mu Qing spat, "I knew you always looked down on me, what a joke! Look at yourself! What right do you have to look down on me? The pot calling the kettle black!"

Lang Qianqiu and Xie Lian hadn't even started dueling, and Feng Xin and Mu Qing already started brawling. Their grudges had been building for a long time; the fight was uncontrolled and riotous, each cussing at the other without hearing what was cussed back, and they certainly had no mind to hear anything Xie Lian had to say. Xie Lian recalled back when the three of them were younger, Mu Qing had been soft-spoken and well-mannered, and if Feng Xin had hit anyone it was all under Xie Lian's command, and he'd stop when Xie Lian said stop. Now neither was the case.

Dragging his arm, Xie Lian ran towards the door, hoping to call for help from any nearby officials, but, before he even stepped foot out of the main hall, there was a huge loud BANG that exploded from the front. Feng Xin and Mu Qing were also shocked by the large noise and stopped, their eyes alert, looking to where the sound came from.

The front doors to the Palace of Xianle had been kicked open by someone. Beyond the door wasn't the expansive Great Martial Avenue of the Heavenly Court, but a dead, deep blackness.

And from within the darkness, innumerable chilling silver butterflies rushed out towards them.

Ch.47: Raiding a Heavenly Palace; Three Lines to Scare All Gods

Silver shimmered turbulently, and without thinking, Xie Lian's first reaction was to block with his hand; the Ruoye on his arm, if the situation called for it, would attack automatically. Yet, those silver butterflies never charged towards him, and instead, flew around him to attack the two behind who were fist-fighting just moments ago.

Feng Xin and Mu Qing suffered before at the hands of those wraith butterflies, knew how powerful they were, and didn't dare to be careless. They both raised their hands at the same time and cried, "SHIELD!"

Millions of silver butterflies jettied towards them, flapping their wings like blasting winds, but there was an invisible wall blocking them, and the butterflies smashed against it like a thunderstorm, hailing and battering. White lights flared from the friction like sparks. It appeared that the two had cast a spell to shield, but even against a magical shield, the wraith butterflies were forceful and endless, crazy like moths to flames. Even with a spiritual defense the two seemed to be pushed back by the relentless deluge of butterflies.

A moment of carelessness and the enemy took the upper hand. If they didn't release the shield the butterflies would push closer; if they did, there'd still be no chance for them to grab for their weapons. Both Feng Xin and Mu Qing mentally swore, gritting their teeth to hang on. Feng Xin took a glance and saw Xie Lian was still standing where he was, his head lowered, and shouted to him.

"Your Highness, don't stand there, come behind the shield!"

Yet, when Xie Lian turned his head, not a single hair was harmed. He frowned, "Huh?"

The two looked closely and almost spat blood from angry shock on the spot. Xie Lian had in his hand a wraith butterfly, looking rather confused. Earlier when the butterflies were gusting through like wild winds, there was one that was a little slow and couldn't follow. It'd flapped with difficulty in front of Xie Lian; he thought it worked really hard, but the poor little silver butterfly couldn't fly anymore, so he extended his palm just beneath it. That silver butterfly landed on his palm, wings still flapping, but refusing to leave.

Both Feng Xin and Mu Qing popped veins. "DON'T TOUCH THAT THING WITH YOUR HAND!!!"

Just then, Xie Lian felt a tightening on his wrist—someone had gotten a hold of him, and pulled hard. His entire person was pulled into the darkness beyond the door.

Yet, although he was shrouded in the dark, he didn't feel any alarm or insecurity. This darkness was like a layer of gentle armour; not only did he not sense danger, it actually somehow calmed him down.

Even if the person behind the darkness hadn't shown himself, with the silver butterflies, would it be hard to guess who it was?

Mu Qing cried in disbelief, "What impudence to come all the way to the heavenly court! What arrogance!"

A voice laughed. "We're all the same. Wasn't the Upper Court impudent in my territory?"

Even if Xie Lian already knew who it was that grabbed him, hearing the familiar voice from so close, he was still a little startled.

Feng Xin shouted, "Hua Cheng, the Heavenly Martial Emperor is here in the Heavenly Court. You let him go!"

Hua Cheng clicked his tongue. "Then let's see if you have the skill."

As he finished his words, the giant doors closed heavily with a bang.

Xie Lian could feel Hua Cheng holding him tightly with one hand, taking him to an unknown destination. It was black all around them, and the silver bells on the black boots clinged and clanged in his ears. The ground beneath their feet was uneven; it really wasn't the bright, glorious roads of heaven, but moreso a wild valley.

Hua Cheng must've used the Distance-Shortening array to connect the front gates of the Palace of Xianle to some valley. But to connect the Heavenly Court to somewhere else using the Distance-Shortening Array was no easy feat; at least, only a handful of heavenly officials could do it, so how had he done it? Xie Lian was about to speak when a voice exploded in his ear.

"YOUR HIGHNESS! WHERE ARE YOU?!"

The angry roar came from Feng Xin. His voice was in his ear, but his person was not. It was all shouted within the communication array. Xie Lian's eardrums hurt from the noise, and many of the heavenly officials were also blasted out, asking questions in fright.

"What's going on, General Nan Yang? Did something happen?"

Mu Qing entered the communication array too. "Bad news! Where's Ling Wen? Report to the Emperor, Xie Lian's escaped!"

He usually spoke gently and courteously, but now his voice was laced with worry and anxiety.

Ling Wen reacted immediately. "What? I'll go to the Palace of Xianle to take a look!"

An official cried in shock, "The laug...His Royal Highness ran away? Wasn't he detained in the Palace of Xianle?!"

Shi Qingxuan entered the communication array too. "I just saw a bunch of Middle Court martial officials guarding the palace; you can only enter, but not leave, so how could he escape?"

Feng Xin shouted, "HE DIDN'T RUN AWAY, HE WAS KIDNAPPED! Your Highness can you still hear us speak? Where are you right now??"

In that moment, everyone spoke, and they all talked loudly, each asking for answers. The mess of the Guoshi Fangxin and Lang Qianqiu hadn't even cleared yet. Jun Wu detained Xie Lian, but the person in question was gone! Wasn't this starting more problems and gossip? Either way, they must find the person first, so Ling Wen rushed to check on the situation, to see if she could locate Xie Lian. Feng Xin and Mu Qing were yelling within the communication array, looking for skilled martial gods to give chase, and Shi Qingxuan released many more waves of merits. The communication array was in complete chaos, loud and tumultuous, to the point where Xie Lian couldn't even get a word in. He took a deep breath and was about to tell everyone to calm down when Hua Cheng suddenly turned around, and two fingers came forward.

Those cold digits gently touched his temple, and Hua Cheng laughed.

"Haha. Long time no see. How's everyone doing?"

With the soft touch of his two fingers, Hua Cheng entered the heavenly communication array through Xie Lian. His casual greeting was heard not just by Xie Lian, but all the heavenly officials hustling within the communication array, and they all fell into a dead silence.

"..."

"..."

"..."

There was a silent uproar in everyone's minds.

No wonder!! Such arrogance could only come from That Person!

Hua Cheng continued, "I don't know if you all missed me, but I haven't thought about any of you at all."

"..."

There were indeed many heavenly officials in the heavens who secretly thought about him everyday, but hearing that Hua Cheng didn't think about them at all, they all chanted heavenly blessings: thank you thank you thank you please continue to never think of us.

Then, Hua Cheng snickered. "However, I've been fairly free recently. If anyone is feeling bored and wants to tussle with me, by all means, they're welcome to."

"..."

Under the circumstances, his intent was more than obvious: "If anyone is brave enough to give chase, I'll challenge them."

It'd be a challenge they were sure to lose and have their faces sweep the floor. Wasn't this a blatant threat??

Earlier when they heard Xie Lian ran away or was kidnapped, the communication array roared to life. It was after all a rare riot, and all cared deeply; some martial gods were even ready to heed the call, prepared to give chase. However, with only three lines from Hua Cheng, all such passion disappeared. If Jun Wu gave command to send whoever to pursue, then it couldn't be helped; it'd be official business. But this was something that just happened, everything was still a mess, so naturally no one wanted to bring trouble to themselves. No one wanted Hua Cheng to remember them. Thus, they all pretended they weren't present, but their ears were attentive to the development of this situation; their hearts anxious and shaking. This Crimson Rain Sought Flower was overly fearless! To come all the way to the heavens just to kidnap, and the kidnapped was that laughingstock of the three realms—was there some deeply-rooted grudge or what???

Silence befell the communication array; only Feng Xin continued to swear, and Hua Cheng removed his fingers after making his speech.

"Don't mind them," he said to Xie Lian.

"San Lang..." Xie Lian blurted, but Hua Cheng let go of his hand.

"We're too close to the Heavenly Court. Let's hurry." Hua Cheng said.

His voice was low, and his tone was hard to discern. Yet his letting go of Xie Lian's wrist was swift, almost as if shaken off. Xie Lian was immediately reminded of the first time they met and how he evaded his touch. Xie Lian froze on the spot.

He originally wanted to ask Hua Cheng why he'd appear so suddenly. Although he didn't think deeply about it, he sort of felt maybe he came to rescue him, so when he called out "San Lang" just now, he was a little happy. But with how Hua Cheng shook off his hand, Xie Lian suddenly realized: why did he think Hua Cheng would come to rescue him? Nevermind thinking whether Hua Cheng cared to follow his actions that closely, he'd only just escaped the Ghost City after setting Paradise Manor on fire. It was more likely that Hua Cheng came knocking for paybacks, for revenge?

Hua Cheng caught, imprisoned, and interrogated the Lord Earth Master who went undercover as a spy; that was the undeniable truth, but the fault naturally laid with the one who went undercover. Yet, he snuck into the Ghost City, burrowed all over Paradise Manor to find said person, and set a fire. Even if, in the end, the reason Paradise Manor burnt the way it did was because Shi Qingxuan fanned the flames, the first kindle in the armoury was started by him. Others might not even have thought of setting anything on fire, so no matter what, Xie Lian needed to take responsibility.

The two walked, one behind the other. The more Xie Lian thought, the worse he felt, and the guiltier he became.

"...San Lang, I'm sorry," he apologized.

Hua Cheng suddenly paused in his step. "Why are you apologizing?"

Xie Lian stopped too. "I went to the Ghost City to investigate the missing Earth Master. I didn't tell you the truth, yet you treated me with utmost hospitality. But then I burnt down your Paradise Manor. I feel really bad."

Hua Cheng didn't say anything. Xie Lian also knew that "I feel really bad" really didn't amount to much, and felt even more ashamed. He lightly cleared his throat.

"But, I reckon I'll be banished soon. After I descend, I'll for sure think of a way to repay you, see if I could..."

"Why do you have to repay me?" Hua Cheng interrupted. His tone was a little hard, as if he couldn't listen any more, and he turned around in a fit. "Did you forget that my blade wounded your arm? I hurt you, not the other way around. Why do you have to repay me?"

Xie Lian never thought his right arm was in pain, and even now he completely forgot his right hand was injured. He paused, then said, "My right arm? My right arm's fine. It'll be better soon. Besides, it only became like this because I rushed forward to strike, so you're not to blame?"

Hua Cheng watched him intently, his left eye unusually bright. Xie Lian suddenly noticed that he appeared to be shaking.

After a moment, Xie Lian realized it wasn't Hua Cheng who was shaking, but the scimitar E'ming on his waist.

That silver scimitar, hung upon the red robes, was shaking nonstop. The eye contoured by a silver line was also trembling. If it was the eye of a child, then this child, at that moment in time, must be bawling with tears.

Ch.48: Adroit Dice for the Safety of Only One

Seeing its state, Xie Lian unconsciously reached out, wanting to pet it.

“What’s wrong...”

But Hua Cheng side-stepped and turned his body slightly, avoiding Xie Lian’s touch, and smacked hard on the hilt. “Nothing’s wrong. Don’t mind it.”

After getting smacked soundly, the cursed scimitar E’ming, feared by all in the heavens, shook even harder.

Just then, Xie Lian heard Feng Xin again in the communication array. “How did Hua Cheng connect the Distance-Shortening array to the heavenly court?! How do we open this door?!”

Shi Qingxuan cried, “General Nan Yang! Me, me, me! I think I know how! His Highness and I suffered this trick of Hua Cheng’s when we were on our mission. Take two dice and toss them before the door, then push to see if it’ll open.”

Xie Lian remembered. Wasn’t he casually tossing dice for fun earlier in the main hall? He could still recall clearly having run pathetically for their lives in that earthworm cave and from those cannibal savages; if they really did open the doors, who knows what other calamities await them?

He cried hurriedly, “Stop! Don’t! Be careful!”

However, his voice never made it to the communication array. It seemed he didn’t have the time to refill his spiritual power; it had all but depleted, and could only listen without speaking. Even if he could speak, it might’ve been too late. Feng Xin seemed to do exactly what Shi Qingxuan said without a second thought. How did he know? Because the next second, Feng Xin suddenly screamed curses in the communication array. He cursed whenever he was agitated, and when he cursed the words were often too vulgar for the ear; for censorship reasons the words shall not be repeated.

Most of the officials were carefully following the situation, and asked immediately, “General, what’s happened?!”

Mu Qing’s voice came and it also sounded quite dismayed, “What is this place???” It appeared that he entered through the doors with Feng Xin.

“Be careful, guys!” Shi Qingxuan called out. “Different-numbered rolls will bring you to different places. What number did you guys roll?”

“He rolled a four!” Mu Qing said.

Xie Lian could hear Feng Xin's voice also carried a trace of panic and terror, and was worried they might have run into an extremely dangerous place. His voice couldn't be heard in the communication array, but he remembered that the one who cast the spell in the first place was right next to him.

So without thinking too much, he hurriedly asked, "San Lang, what does a roll of four open to?"

"Depends," Hua Cheng replied. "The door will open to whatever the roller fears the most."

Just as Hua Cheng answered, Mu Qing coolly said, "You fought to roll first and rolled out a women's bath! Give me the dice, I'll roll!"

Hearing "women's bath", Xie Lian covered his face with his hands.

Feng Xin had always kept his distance from women, and always stayed away from even speaking of them; as if the female sex were savage wild beasts. To him, a women's bath really was the scariest place on earth; worse than the immeasurable depths of tiger caves or dragon lakes. It seemed Mu Qing had successfully taken the dice, and Xie Lian sighed a breath of relief. However, not a moment later, the two roared again.

Shi Qingxuan woefully called: "Generals, what did you run into this time?"

There was no response, only odd burbling sounds, as if the two of them had sunken into water. Everyone held their breath, and after a moment, Feng Xin emerged, taking large breaths of air, sounding as if he broke through the water surface, and spitting out something.

He yelled, "Black Marsh Crocodiles!"

Turns out, the two of them were barely two steps out of the women's bath in a frenzy, when Mu Qing took the dice by force and rolled, and their next step led them to fall into a muddling marsh. They were immediately submerged past their waists in the muddy marsh, over their mouths; after fighting to get out, over a dozen curiously long crocodile monsters swam over to surround them. Each of those monsters was over four meters in length, and fed on human flesh; they grew human arms and legs from such evil practices. When they moved, the sight was terrifying and gross, making the two disgusted beyond belief. Half-sunken in the black marsh, the two fought the crocs in fervour and madness, until Feng Xin finally had had enough.

"Give me the dice, let me throw! You didn't roll anything good either!"

Mu Qing was one to never admit defeat, and shot a white spiritual blast. "Croc Monsters are still more decent than a women's bath! Who knows what you'll roll next. Give it to me!"

"Fuckin—" Feng Xin yelled angrily. "Didn't you already take the dice? Where are they?!"

The two had completely forgotten they were still connected to the communication array, and continued to fight each other, denouncing each other's luck in dice rolling; the whereabouts of the dice long lost and forgotten. The heavenly officials listened to their curses and shouts; a riot was the bigger the better—exciting! So exciting!! The two generals finally ripped through their masks and stopped caring about their faces! The officials held back their laughter, some even slamming their fists in their own seats, wishing desperately they could be watching this live to cheer the fight on.

Although Feng Xin and Mu Qing's luck didn't seem to be the best, they were still martial gods, after all, and a few monsters here and there were at most a nuisance, so they were not in any true danger. Xie Lian prayed they would give up sooner rather than later, and be released from their predicament. At the same time, he was thankful that he himself didn't roll out a number that called forth any horrors, and rolled out a Hua Cheng instead.

He spoke as he walked, "I rolled snake eyes earlier. Does that mean every time snake eyes are rolled, I'll be able to see you?"

The moment he ended his sentence he realized his words sounded a little weird, as if he really wanted to meet Hua Cheng, and thought it inappropriate.

But Hua Cheng replied, "No."

Xie Lian felt a little awkward and scratched his cheek. "Oh. So that's not the case. I got it wrong."

Hua Cheng, walking in front of him, said, "If you wanted to see me, it won't matter what you roll. I will appear."

Hearing this, Xie Lian swallowed hard, and forgot everything else he wanted to say.

He hadn't had the chance to dissect the meaning of those words before the voice of another said in a sunken tone within the communication array:

"Let me!"

It wasn't long after that person had spoken that there was a flash of white light drawn across the sky, and a crashing sound. Suddenly, Hua Cheng and Xie Lian's path was blocked.

When the white light cooled and slowly cleared away, Xie Lian saw that the thing that flew from the sky and that was blocking them now was a sword.

The sword was long and slender, half-entombed into the ground on a slant, the body of the sword itself still quivering. The sword was dark like black jade, deep and foreboding, smoother than a mirror, and if anyone were to go near, they could see their own reflection on the blade. Only the thin, silver-white line of the heart of the sword cut across the blade in half.

The name of this sword was Fangxin⁴⁴.

A shadow landed in front of the sword and said, "This is your sword."

After the death of the Guoshi Fangxin, the sword he carried was kept by the Crown Prince of Yong'an. The one who had thrown the sword Fangxin and blocked their path was none other than Lang Qianqiu.

It looked like Feng Xin and Mu Qing failed, but Lang Qianqiu was able to roll the right numbers. It really couldn't be said whether it was because of his luck, or if it was Xie Lian's misfortune. The only thing that could be said with certainty was, of the two Crown Princes, Lang Qianqiu had always been more fortunate than Xie Lian.

Hua Cheng stood with his hands behind his back, his expression unchanged; only, his body made a small movement. The moment he moved, Xie Lian immediately stretched out a hand to stop him.

He said in a small voice, "Let me."

Right in the middle of the valley, Lang Qianqiu blocked the only road, his hand holding that oversized longsword, and said, "I only want to duel with you with all my might. It doesn't matter how this ends. Even if I die in your hands, I won't ask for any compensation. I don't need you to ask the Great Lord for banishment. You taught me the art of swordsmanship; it's not like you can't win, so why won't you fight me?"

Xie Lian knew even without Lang Qianqiu saying it that he would fight with everything he had. But, if he didn't hold back, then Xie Lian must also fight seriously. If that was the case, none of the scenarios would be what Xie Lian would want to see. But if he didn't fight him, he wouldn't relent.

After a long while, Xie Lian finally nodded his head slowly. "Fine."

He took a few steps forward and approached that sword, pulled it from the ground, and said softly, "You asked for this."

After hundreds of years, Fangxin finally returned to the hands of its master.

It moaned softly in Xie Lian's hands. Closeby, Hua Cheng's eyes also shone from hearing the euphoric cries of that sword.

⁴⁴ Fangxin means "Affection of a young woman."

With the sword in hand, Xie Lian swung and pointed it to the ground before saying coolly, "However this duel ends, do not regret it."

"I WILL NEVER!" Lang Qianqiu shouted.

Lang Qianqiu felt like his head was going to split; both his hands held the longsword tightly, his eyes focused, his breath held; his sight locked onto Fangxin, the sword that was black as jade, not daring to be careless for even a moment.

Xie Lian jolted the sword, and suddenly dashed like an arrow. Lang Qianqiu's eyes cemented, ready to strike, when suddenly his body froze, as if something had him wrapped tightly, and he fell heavily to the ground.

He lowered his head to see and found he really was bound! A snow-white silk band was wrapped multiple times around his body like a poisonous snake!

Lang Qianqiu had been taught swordsmanship by the Guoshi Fangxin ever since he was young, and held fear and reverence for the Guoshi; even after blood spilt like rivers at the Gilded Banquet, that awe had never ceased. The moment Xie Lian touched the sword, he spent his entire focus on the other's movement, and never noticed that there was a white silk band that snuck behind to ambush him the moment he was ready to attack. How could there be such a shameless thing???

Seeing that Ruoye succeeded, Xie Lian instantly relaxed his tense expression and heart.

He threw Fangxin aside and took in a long breath, thinking, "Whew, that was close."

Lang Qianqiu laid on the ground struggling to break free. He didn't know how vicious the white silk band could be, and the more he struggled the tighter it bound. He cried angrily, "Guoshi, what is this?! Let me go and let's fight to the death!"

Xie Lian wiped sweat from his forehead and replied, "We already fought to the death. The thing that's binding you is one of my spiritual devices. You already lost."

"..."

"How can this count?" Lang Qianqiu shouted. "When I said fight to death, obviously I meant using a sword to fight! Use a sword if you're a man! Ambushing with a white ribbon? How cunning!"

He really thought the sword was the best of all weapons and didn't think much of his words, but it totally sounded like he was a male official who was prejudiced against using white silk bands.

But Xie Lian didn't care whether he acted like a man or not. He'd crossdressed before, and hung the words "I can't get erect" on his lips. Nothing could get to him.

Xie Lian knelt down next to Lang Qianqiu. "You didn't think things through, and you never said I had to use a sword. I used your loophole, so who're you gonna tell?"

After a pause, he continued in a serious tone, "That's right, I ambushed you. So what? I succeeded. Yes, I was cunning, but so what? I won. If your opponent was anyone other than me, you would already be dead."

Hua Cheng stood not far from the two, and laughed soundlessly. He crossed his arms and looked away. Lang Qianqiu was shocked to the core.

When that person was still the Guoshi of Yong'an, all of his teachings were honourable and conscientious, straightforward and genuine. He'd never thought there'd be a day when he'd hear from the lips of his once teacher something like "Yes, I ambushed, but so what? I succeeded; yes I was cunning, but so what? I won". He was stunned.

After saying his fill, Xie Lian stood up. "Think about it on your own. Next time, don't get in others' way."

Ch.49: Adroit Dice for the Safety of Only One 2

Seeing that he was about to walk away, Lang Qianqiu immediately called out, "Stop!"

Xie Lian stopped.

Lang Qianqiu gritted his teeth and finally ground out, "You...owe me an explanation."

"What kind of explanation do you want?" Xie Lian asked.

"Of past grudges, for our kingdom and family. It's not that I can't understand your hatred for Yong'an, but..."

He choked up. It wasn't for another moment before he continued in a strained, quivering voice.

"But Guoshi...did my parents and I not treat the remaining citizens of Xianle well? I was friends with many of them, and I...I did my best to protect them."

Every word he said was the truth.

After the Kingdom of Xianle had fallen, many remaining citizens never forgot their roots, and even after the Kingdom of Yong'an was built and started its rule, those people and their descendants continued to live on as the people of Xianle, often clashing with people of the new kingdom.

The first few generations of the Yong'an monarchy ruled with force, and cruelly massacred many of the rioting Xianle people. Inversely, there were also underground alliances formed by the Xianle people to plot the assassination of many of the Yong'an nobility; they even succeeded a few times. This continued on, and the end result was a deeply-seeded hatred for each other on both sides.

However, with the rule of Lang Qianqiu's parents, the king took on a different attitude; he treated the Xianle people with kindness and compassion. He wanted to unite the country of the old and the new against all voices of dissent. Even if the idea of granting princely titles to past Xianle royals was absurd, he used it as a way to show his sincerity, and regarded them with respect. Lang Qianqiu himself had never been prejudiced because of past hatred; everything was but history.

The Guoshi Fangxin was a mysterious figure, having never revealed his true identity, so no one knew on which side stood the mastermind behind the Gilded Banquet bloodbath. However, the hatred between Yong'an and Xianle ran too deep; both sides would accuse each other whenever anything should happen, and so many of the surviving nobles all pointed their fingers at Xianle, and used the chance to request for the complete annihilation of the remaining people of Xianle. Yet, Lang Qianqiu had rejected all their efforts.

His determination protected the lives of many, and prevented them from suffering a nameless genocide. However, now that he was reminiscing, the more good he did then, the more wronged he felt now.

Not that he felt what he had done was worthless, but he felt deeply aggrieved. It's never worthless to do what you think is right, but to have shown so much benevolence without reciprocation, he couldn't help but feel wronged.

Lang Qianqiu's eyes reddened, and he continued to question. "Guoshi, did I not do enough? Did my parents do something wrong? Why must you treat me like this?" The more he thought, the more vexed he became, and struggled against Ruoye's bind once more, straining to lift his upper body. "Do you not think you owe us an explanation??"

"I can't give you one," Xie Lian said.

The response was so direct, Lang Qianqiu choked back his anger. "Guoshi, you've changed so much. You were never like this before."

"..." Xie Lian rubbed his forehead and said, "I remember I had already told you long ago, not to venerate me as an incorruptible saintly figure; I'm nothing like the person in your mind. In the end you'll only disappoint yourself."

Lang Qianqiu laid on the ground and mumbled, "...The past you or the present you, I don't know which one is the real you anymore."

"They're all me. But you were only seventeen back then. Now that you're older, of course I'd be teaching you a different lesson," Xie Lian said.

Lang Qianqiu closed his mouth for a moment but then blurted, "Was it because your seventeenth was a trial, that you had to turn my seventeenth into a trial too?"

Xie Lian didn't respond.

Seeing that he wouldn't speak, Lang Qianqiu's anger flared and took in a huge breath. He yelled, "IF THAT WAS YOUR INTENTION THEN I WON'T LET YOU HAVE YOUR WAY!!"

Xie Lian's eyes widened at those words.

Lang Qianqiu couldn't stand, but his eyes were bright and his tone tenacious, as if a roaring flame was blazing within his eyes. He continued, his tone harsh, like he was peeved but also like he was declaring war.

“If you want me to fill my heart with hatred like you, I surely won’t! If you’re going to force me to abandon myself, I refuse! I will never!—NO MATTER WHAT YOU DO TO ME, I WILL NEVER BECOME LIKE YOU!!!”

It was a declaration so heroic Xie Lian was becoming dazed just listening to it. It took a moment before he came to, and “pfft”-ed, bursting into laughter.

Lang Qianqiu’s face was covered with fiery tears, his blood boiling with passion; he was at the height of his zealous cries, but all that was deflated by Xie Lian’s laugh, and he became angrily bewildered.

Xie Lian on the other hand was clapping as he laughed, his laughter growing by the minute, and he cried, “GOOD!”

Xie Lian couldn’t remember the last time he’d laughed this heartily or for what, and it took him some time before ceasing. He rubbed his eyes and nodded, “Good. Remember what you said today. That you will never become like me.”

Hua Cheng still had his arms crossed and watched coldly. Just as Xie Lian finished speaking, there was suddenly a blast of red smoke before him!

The explosion came too suddenly and Xie Lian jolted, thinking Lang Qianqiu might’ve used some strange trick, and immediately evaded, his gaze watchful. However, the blast was loud in sound only, and didn’t pose any harm. When the smoke had cleared, Lang Qianqiu had disappeared from where he laid. What was left was a daruma doll, swaying left and right.

The daruma doll had a very round face and body, like a giant squash. Its brows were black and its expression like a tiger, cute and juvenile. At that moment it was glaring, plump with anger, and it carried a fat sword on its back, gallant in its form—exactly like Lang Qianqiu, except as a lovable big toy.

Xie Lian stopped smiling and called, “Qianqiu?!”

Ruoye let go and returned to wrap itself around Xie Lian’s wrist. Hua Cheng walked over leisurely and flicked his finger on the body of that daruma doll, laughing.

“Why does he look so foolish no matter what form he takes?”

Xie Lian picked up the daruma doll and didn’t know whether to laugh or cry. “This...this...San Lang, is this Qianqiu? Why did he turn into this form? Stop playing around with him and change him back.”

“No. Take him along and let’s go,” Hua Cheng replied.

“Go where?” Xie Lian asked.

Just then, the two had come to a cramped little cave. Hua Cheng didn’t answer him. He tossed up a dice and it landed in his palm. He lowered his eyes to glance at it before entering the cave.

To turn someone into a daruma doll was such a mischievous spell, and was very much Hua Cheng’s style; but, it was also hard to undo. Either way, Xie Lian couldn’t unravel it, and he couldn’t guarantee any other heavenly officials could do it either, so he held the doll in his hands and was just about to follow Hua Cheng when he abruptly remembered the tossed Fangxin, and doubled back to pick up the sword. He strapped it onto his back, and chased after Hua Cheng.

Xie Lian wanted Hua Cheng to undo the spell but the man was noncommittal. The two walked around in the cave for a bit, and soon after it became wider and more spacious than the entrance. Footfalls echoed in the cave, and some distance in front of them came a faint light and sounds of singing.

When Xie Lian was led to Paradise Manor in the Ghost City, he had also heard singing, but the graceful songs of charming female ghosts were enticing and beautiful like aphrodisiac, intoxicating. This singing was like the chaotic dance of demons, appalling and hideous. The two were nothing alike.

Xie Lian couldn’t help but ask, “San Lang, what is this place?”

“Shh,” Hua Cheng lightly silenced him.

Xie Lian’s question was already voiced in a near whisper; hearing the shush, he held his breath. Soon he discovered why the need to be silent. Right in front of them came bunches of floating green ghost fires. And when the little bunches of flames approached, he saw they were little ghosts dressed in green.

On the heads of each little ghost was a small flaming light, as if they themselves were a green candle. There was nowhere to hide in this cave and the path was narrow. Xie Lian was about to reach for Fangxin, but thought Ruoye would be better suited in this situation, and dropped his hand again.

But then, just as the little ghosts passed by them, they didn’t bat an eyelash before moving on, continuing to whisper amongst themselves. It wasn’t like they didn’t see them, but more so that they didn’t think it strange to see them. Xie Lian looked at Hua Cheng, and the one standing next to him wasn’t the exceptionally handsome red-clad ghost king he knew, but another little pale ghost with a green flame on his head.

So, it seemed that Hua Cheng had changed them into fake skins without him knowing when it happened. Thinking that he himself must be upholding a green flame above his head, Xie Lian couldn’t help but raise a hand to feel.

“Why must we...”

Why must they transform into such a bizarre appearance?

Although he trailed off, Hua Cheng obviously knew what he wanted to say. “I already mentioned that the Green Ghost Qi Rong is vulgar and crass. All of his lackeys have to look like this.”

Xie Lian didn’t realize that Hua Cheng had brought him to the Green Ghost Qi Rong’s territory!

Before, when the heavens and the ghost realm mentioned the Green Ghost Qi Rong, they all had to comment on just how uncouth he was, and Xie Lian couldn’t fathom why. Now that he’d learned that all of his little ghost subordinates had to dress like this, he could somewhat understand. Going only by the title “The Night-Touring Green Lantern”, there was at least still a trace of sarcastic elegance, but if it was literally “green light” walking around at night, then there’s definitely a gap between that and what he had in mind.

“Didn’t you already destroy his lair?” Xie Lian asked.

“I did, but he escaped,” Hua Cheng replied. “Escaped for fifty years, then built a new lair.”

Xie Lian held the Lang Qianqiu daruma doll close to his chest, and whispered after making sure there was no one around, “San Lang, are you here to find the Green Ghost? Why don’t you undo Qianqiu’s spell and let him go first, and then I’ll accompany you?”

Hua Cheng obstinately refused. “No, take him with you. I need him to meet someone.”

Xie Lian was curious. Hua Cheng didn’t act like he cared much for Lang Qianqiu, so why would he take him to meet anyone especially? But all of his options were rather awkward, so he didn’t speak anymore on the subject. When the two finally emerged from the cave and the tunnel opened to a wider space, more caves appeared before them.

There seemed to be caves and tunnels dug all over this mountain; caves connecting caves, tunnels leading to more tunnels. Each entrance had a number of ghosts with a green lantern on their heads going in and out, like a giant beehive or an anthill. If Xie Lian had come in by himself, there’d be no way he’d remember the way. Yet, Hua Cheng acted like he was at home, and traversed through various tunnels and caves without hesitation, exceedingly at ease, like he knew the paths by heart.

The two of them had on their green-flamed little ghost skin, and no one stopped them in their paths. Xie Lian breathed in relief, but Hua Cheng thought he was sighing and asked, “What’s wrong?”

“Nothing,” Xie Lian said. “I thought you would attack the lair head-on instead of sneaking in. I’m not too good with fighting, so I’m relieved.”

He meant it when he said he wasn’t “good at fighting”. He may be skilled, but he wasn’t good at dealing with the aftermath. Hua Cheng seemed to have puffed a laugh.

“I did attack head-on the first time, but the moment he found out, he ran away,” Hua Cheng said. “This time I’m here for his person, so of course I can’t have him notice I’m here.”

Was the person Hua Cheng wanted Qianqiu to meet the Green Ghost? Xie Lian wondered, “Was there a relationship between the two of them? Well, whatever he wants to do I’ll still accompany him, then ask him to undo the spell later.”

Xie Lian still had the burning of Paradise Manor on his mind, and still felt guilty. As he was thinking, Hua Cheng spoke.

“That useless trash can’t do anything, but he’s very vigilant. Those little ghosts can’t approach his person, and it’s not easy disguising as his closest henchmen. To get close, there’s only one way.”

Just then, four little ghosts came by, laughing and chatting. Hua Cheng slowed his steps, and Xie Lian followed his lead. Turns out, the little ghosts had behind them, a train of bound humans, dragged by a long rope.

Among the humans, some were ragged and unkempt, some in extravagant clothes, but they all seemed to be young men and women under the age of thirty. There was even a child who was grabbing onto the corner of a sleeve of one of the young men; they were probably father and son. Their hands were bound, and looking terrified, some ready to faint, while trudging through the demonic lair. They brushed past Hua Cheng, and without missing a beat, he turned around and seamlessly joined the end of the march. He gently elbowed Xie Lian, and he repeated Hua Cheng’s actions. When he looked over, Hua Cheng had already changed skin again, and this time, it was a clean-cut young man. He himself probably looked similar.

The little band made twists and turns through the tunnels and caves. The little ghosts leading the group seemed to be quite content in their duties, and from time to time showed off a little authority, yelling and snarling at the prisoners behind them.

“No funny business!—No crying! With your faces all covered in tears and snot, if you ruin our great one’s appetite, we’ll teach you what it’s like to want to die!”

Of the Four Great Calamities, there had never been word that the other three Supremes devoured human flesh. Only the Green Ghost Qi Rong was gluttonous in this manner; no wonder his equals and enemies scoffed at any mention of him, dismissing him as unsightly and ignorant. Earlier, Hua Cheng said there was only one way to get close to the Green Ghost Qi

Rong, and it appeared that mixing in with the “food” was the way. As he walked, Xie Lian reached for Hua Cheng’s hand. Once he succeeded in grabbing hold of it, he felt Hua Cheng freeze, like he wanted to pull away. It wasn’t that Xie Lian didn’t notice, but under the circumstances there wasn’t much room for thought. He held Hua Cheng’s hand tight, and lightly drew a word in his palm: “Save”.

Since Xie Lian saw this, then he must save these people. This gesture was him informing Hua Cheng of his intentions.

After the word was written, Hua Cheng gently folded his fingers and closed his palm. A moment later, the band exited a tunnel and proceeded to enter an exceedingly large cave.

The moment they entered the cave, a field of shadowed objects entered their vision. Xie Lian squinted and hadn’t quite made out what those objects were, but instead he felt Hua Cheng grip his wrist, and drew a few words on the back of his palm: “Watch your head. Don’t touch.”

At first Xie Lian thought there hung many rags from above, but when he looked closer, his pupils shrank—what rags? It was a field of blackened, tightly-packed people, feet above, heads hung low, suspended in mid-air.

The forest of upside-down corpses!

However, although there hung those flipped dead bodies, there was no bloody rain because those corpses were all dried without a drop of fresh blood left in their veins. The expressions on those dried corpses all looked to be in pain, their mouths open wide, and there was a thin layer of snow-like crystals on their bodies and faces. It was salt.

In the deepest recesses of the cave, the lights shone bright; there was a giant chair, a long table, golden goblets and jaded utensils. Such extravagance made it look more like a royal banquet hall rather than a deep mountain cave. A bit further away from the long table was an enormous steel cauldron, big enough to allow over ten people to swim within. Red, boiling water bubbled in rage in the cauldron; if anyone should accidentally fall in, it would only be seconds before they were cooked through!

The four little ghosts ushered the group of prisoners towards the cauldron, but some fell to the ground shivering in fear when they saw what was waiting for them, and in the midst of yelling, hitting, and pulling, Xie Lian suddenly felt next to him, Hua Cheng’s arm went stiff and stopped in his step.

He turned his head to see, and saw that although Hua Cheng still had on the appearance of a clean cut young man, his eyes were blazing with rage.

Even though Hua Cheng was always smiling, Xie Lian knew his true emotions were always hidden deep within. Xie Lian had never seen in his eyes a violent fury this blatant. He followed

Hua Cheng's sight and the next moment, felt his own breathing stop. Before the extravagant giant chair, there knelt a person.

On the first glance it was a person, but upon a closer look, it was actually a stone statue the size of a real person. It was a rather interesting statue sculpted in a kneeling position, its back facing him, its head downcast. It was the very form that could be described as a dog with its tail between its legs. It was easy to presume that the only purpose of making such a statue was for humiliating this person.

Xie Lian didn't need to turn the statue around to know that its face must be exactly the same as his own.

Ch.50: Adroit Dice for the Safety of Only One 3

Generally, people would not know what their own backs looked like, but Xie Lian was different. He was more than familiar with how his own back looked.

When the kingdom of Xianle first fell, to relieve themselves of anger, the people burnt down his Baqian Taizi Temple⁴⁵, desecrated all of his statues, robbed the gems on his sword and cleaned his attire of gold. Yet after all that, the rage continued to burn, and so they came up with a new idea: it was to build such kneeling statues.

The Crown Prince that was highly venerated and worshipped was sculpted into the form of one who knelt and begged for forgiveness, and placed in crowded areas of town so everyone was free to spit at or kick it when they passed by, and rid themselves of misfortune. Or worse, some even had him sculpted to be prostrating, and used the statue directly as a threshold, allowing tens of thousands to walk all over it. In the first ten, twenty years after the kingdom of Xianle fell, those statues were a common sight in many of the cities and towns, so how could Xie Lian himself not recognize his own back?

Just then, the voice of a young man said, “That little hyena Pei Su had to hug the bitch legs of that manwhore Pei before he could ascend, so who does he think he is? He’s nothing more than an exiled wild dog. To ruin my plans...once I’m through with him, even after the winds dry up his corpse no one would dare go to collect it!”

Before the person himself had appeared, cussing was already heard. Xie Lian gazed over, and saw a figure clad in green float into the cave. Due to a reason somehow not worth mentioning, Xie Lian couldn’t help but look to the top of his head first, and was actually kind of disappointed to see that person had only a mask on, and no light above his head. A bunch of little ghosts dressed in green surrounded this green-clad man, and he stood as if he was surrounded by a circle of green light. This must be one of the Four Calamities in the ghost realm; the Green Ghost Qi Rong.

Ever since Nan Feng had first mentioned the name Qi Rong, Xie Lian had kept it in the back of his mind, and wondered if this “Qi Rong” was the same “Qi Rong” he knew. However, there was an unwritten rule that—no matter if one was a demon or ghost—they would all hide their real names, and bury their past lives. Because of this, he didn’t think they were the same person, only that the fake name had coincided with the real one. Yet from the looks of things, he was more than certain. If it wasn’t that Qi Rong he knew, how could there be another “Qi Rong” who was obsessed with the statue of the kneeling Crown Prince? And why would the sound of his voice be so familiar?

The little green ghosts that surrounded Qi Rong were loudly acclaiming him king and wildly chattered, so Xie Lian somewhat figured out what had transpired. Turns out when Qi Rong sent a few of his henchmen to the Ghost City, they failed in causing havoc, and was decimated by Hua Cheng. He then regrouped and was ready to fight again. But before the second round had even started, the henchmen bumped into the exiled Pei Su on the road. Although exiled in the mortal realm, Pei Su nevertheless was once a heavenly official, and had nothing better to do, so when the henchmen bumped into him, he thought he might as well clean them up, and so they were once again decimated.

To lose so many henchmen in a short period of time, the moment Qi Rong received the news he was furious, and cursed nonstop.

“Like ancestors like descendants, that fucking manwhore Pei Ming probably has sores all over his crotch. I should chop off both his and Pei Su’s fucking dicks and hang them at their temples, and whoever worships them will bleed pus with every step!”

Xie Lian had to really suppress the urge to cover his ears. The profanities were the same; when Feng Xin got upset his curses were also too vulgar for ears, but as much as he swore, it was obvious that they were only words of temporary anger, and there was no real malintent. Qi Rong’s curses were different. The recipients had no doubt that he truly wanted to curse them to die as crudely as the way he condemned, and he was wholly unafraid to take cheap shots, thoroughly crass and obscene.

That group of little green ghosts agreed with Qi Rong loudly. He probably remembered the able subordinates he worked so hard to raise, and continued.

“Too bad that strong-spirited woman Xuan Ji was captured by those two shameless Pei dogs and was wronged so miserably. She couldn’t be saved even now.”

Xie Lian couldn’t agree with those words. Indeed Xuan Ji had a tragic story, but not everything was General’s Pei’s fault like Qi Rong had described. After all, those ten brides were kidnapped by her very person, and she was the one who killed them in cold blood. Strong-spirited for sure, but whether or not she was a good woman was debatable. But to say Little Pei only ascended because he begged General Pei was something Xie Lian couldn’t agree with. After seeing so many ascend and descend, there was one thing Xie Lian could say with absolute certainty: the skilled may not always ascend; but the ascended are always skilled. If one is powerless, no matter who promoted them, they would not be able to overcome heavenly calamities, and could only at most be an official in the Middle Court. Xie Lian hadn’t interacted much with Pei Su, but even he could see that Little Pei’s martial power was above that of Lang Qianqiu. Only, power didn’t equal rank; there were politics at play too, otherwise, Pei Su would’ve long since have gotten his own palace.

Obviously, those things weren’t of consideration to Qi Rong. He swore like there wasn’t a single one in all of the realms he didn’t want cursed to death. He called Pei Ming a manwhore, Little Pei a leg-hugging dog, Jun Wu a faker, Ling Wen a bitch, Lang Qianqiu a moron, Quan Yizhen shit, the Water Master black-hearted, the Wind Master a slutty woman—he probably didn’t know

Shi Qingxuan was actually a man. If Xie Lian hadn't seen it for himself, he wouldn't be able to believe anyone could be so resentful. Finally, Qi Rong made it to the main point, which was how Hua Cheng and that low-key Ship-Sinking Black Water looked down on him. They were mere Supremes, one day for sure he'd have them kneel before him. Xie Lian should be angry hearing this, but because he couldn't even imagine how that would ever play out, he couldn't help but find it hilarious instead, and stole a glimpse at Hua Cheng. Hua Cheng himself didn't have any reaction, but instead was still closely staring at that kneeling stone statue.

Finally, thankfully, Qi Rong seemed to be assuaged by all the cursing, and changed the subject. "How was the thing I sent you guys to do? Have Quan Yizhen and that manwhore Pei started fighting yet?"

He sat down as he spoke, lounging on his luxurious throne. He raised his legs and rested his boots on the shoulders of that statue, using it as a footstool.

Xie Lian had been holding on to Hua Cheng's arm, and stopped him immediately when he felt him shuffle a step forward. He felt the pull back may not be enough, so he drew another word in Hua Cheng's palm: "Thanks".

Hua Cheng recognized the word. He lowered his head, then glanced at Xie Lian who was watching him with gratefulness in his eyes, thanking him for his good intentions. Then, Xie Lian shook his head lightly, and drew the words "Listen" and "Heaven".

Qi Rong was talking as if he sent henchmen to do something, and it had something to do with those two heavenly officials. It couldn't be anything good, so Xie Lian wanted to keep listening. As for the statue getting used as a footstool, thinking back, it had even been used as a threshold before, so really it meant nothing to Xie Lian. It was only a piece of rock, not his person. Although he had only written those three simple words, when their eyes met, Xie Lian knew Hua Cheng had understood what he had meant. Hua Cheng slowly held his hand tight and turned his head away, so Xie Lian could no longer see his expression.

A little green ghost spoke up. "We followed our king's instructions, and have long since spread the rumours that Pei Ming wants to make Pei Su the Martial God of the West. Now it's becoming more and more of a riot, so we used that as an excuse and desecrated hundreds of Ming Guang temples disguised as Qi Ying Palace's devotees, and no one was the wiser! Hahaha, my lord may not know, but those devotees are really stupid! They saw us smashing temples, and smashed along with us with even more enthusiasm!"

Qi Rong was pleased. "Keep fueling them! Quan Yizhen can endure it, but I won't believe that manwhore Pei Ming can put up with it!"

Even if what they were spreading wasn't exactly a rumour, this kind of fabrication was still full of malintent, especially something as unscrupulous as disguising themselves as mortals to sabotage temples; absolutely heinous, depraved, and perverse. No wonder that, whenever Qi

Rong was mentioned, everyone in the heavens would say he wasn't skilled, but was extremely troublesome.

Xie Lian mentally noted, "If there's a chance, do tell Jun Wu to watch for any disputes between two heavenly officials caused by others."

When Qi Rong finished with business, he laid back, his pair of long legs resting on the statue changed position. The little ghosts immediately knew what to do, and went to the small crowd of people to pick out the best cut. The one child in the group was probably not even ten years of age, and wasn't very cognizant of the situation. He blinked his large eyes and held on tight to his father's shirt corner, yanking at it the more scared he became. His young father's face was ashen pale, trying to comfort him with a trembling voice, "Don't be scared, don't be scared." Yet it was obvious he himself was terrified to the bone.

One of the little green ghosts saw there was a child and was delighted, extending its arm to grab at him. The young father screamed and jolted. Xie Lian moved before he knew what he was going to do, but then he felt movement from the figure next to him. Xie Lian turned his head to see, and Hua Cheng had stepped out from within the crowd.

Since Hua Cheng came especially to seek out the Green Ghost, now that he'd seen Qi Rong he should've removed the disguise. Xie Lian had no doubt that Hua Cheng was powerful enough to destroy everything within sight and no one would be able to stop him. Yet, Hua Cheng did not reveal his true form, and maintained the skin of that normal looking young man, and walked forward lazily.

A number of little green ghosts raised their weapons and shouted in alarm, "Stop! What are you doing?!"

Qi Rong asked curiously, with his feet still up, "What's with that little guy? Take him down."

Hua Cheng laughed. "Won't you all show a little respect in the presence of Xianle royalty?"

Hearing his words, not only Qi Rong, but even Xie Lian was taken aback.

After a frozen moment, Qi Rong stood up in a fit, snorted beneath the mask, as if his fury was changed to a mad laugh. "What fucking bravery! To make such a joke before me?! Tell me, and what branch of the Xianle royal blood are you from? Which one??"

Hua Cheng replied leisurely, "The Prince An Le."

Xie Lian could feel the Lang Qianqiu daruma doll in his arms jerk once.

Prince An Le was a descendant of Xianle royalty from the same generation as Lang Qianqiu, and could be said to be friends with Lang Qianqiu.

Qi Rong's mocking laugh could be heard from under the mask. "Prince An Le? I think you're seeking your own death! Who told you to start shit in front of me? The person who appointed you didn't teach you a little history? Prince An Le was the last remaining royal blood of Xianle, and he's already dead! Who the fuck are you to pretend to be Xianle royalty before me?"

Hua Cheng raised his brow. "Oh? Dead? How did he die?"

Qi Rong shouted, "TAKE HIM DOWN! TAKE DOWN THAT ODD PIECE OF SHIT!"

Under his command, a large number of little green ghosts poured in from all around the cave, yelling. In the midst of that chaos, Hua Cheng only smirked faintly.

His expression was nonchalant before, but the next moment it was as if a layer of frost had been laid upon his face. His form suddenly flickered and disappeared, appearing the next blink behind Qi Rong.

He single-handedly grabbed the back of Qi Rong's head, and smashed it down hard like a child playing with a ball.

"And who the fuck are you, to be so insolent before me!"

A loud BANG and that luxurious throne suddenly had debris flying; dust filled the air. Xie Lian pulled the child behind himself to shield him, and blocked a few small pebbles. When the dust settled, Qi Rong had disappeared. At a closer look, he hadn't disappeared; rather, his entire head was deeply embedded into the ground after Hua Cheng's blow.

Humans and ghosts alike screamed and ran away.

"Don't run away!" Xie Lian shouted.

If the people alerted all the ghosts within the cave, they'd be killed for sure! But of course, as always, no one listened to him. Xie Lian dropped his hands helplessly.

Under the circumstances, he had no time to worry about others, either. Across the room, Hua Cheng slowly knelt down; he used one hand to grab a fistful of Qi Rong's hair, and pulled out a bloodied head from the hole in the ground, the body was pulled out along with the head. After a brief moment of observation, Hua Cheng seemed to be extremely amused, and burst out laughing.

Although he was laughing, his eyes were off by a million watts, eerie and terrifying. Ruoye flew out and struck away a few of the little green ghosts who were trying to cut down the escaping people. Xie Lian then turned around in a rush, his instincts telling him something was very wrong.

“San Lang? San Lang!”

Qi Rong’s mask cracked, some pieces falling. He threw up a mouthful of blood and yelled, “SOMEBODY STOP HIM! Y’ALL COME AND STOP HIM!!”

Hua Cheng was just violently bashing him, but now he seemed to be at ease, as if they were best buddies and chatting.

He chuckled. “Oh, didn’t you know? There are some things in this world that are unstoppable. Like, the sun setting in the west. Also, an elephant squashing an ant. Or, for example——ME TAKING YOUR LOWLY LIFE!”

By his last line, his face was savage and ferocious. He had in his hold Qi Rong’s whole body, and he bashed it down into the ground again!

Another loud BANG. Qi Rong’s body laid embedded in the ground and was smushed into a pool worse than mush. The mask on his face cracked, breaking into small pieces revealing half a face.

If anyone were to see that half a face, they’d discover a shocking fact:

The Green Ghost Qi Rong and the Crown Prince of Xianle, one ghost, one god, a difference of hell and heaven, looked very much alike!

Ch.51: Truth or Deception; Difficult to Discern

Yet, when the other half of the mask fell and Qi Rong's entire face was revealed, it became obvious that he didn't look that much like Xie Lian after all. Their noses, lips, and the contours of their lower jaws were similar in shape, but their brows and eyes were quite different. Xie Lian's eyes were calm and peaceful. Qi Rong's brows were high and sharp; his eyes were also much more thin and slanted. He was certainly still a good-looking young man, but anyone could see just from his face that he wasn't one to be messed with. After having been beaten to a bloody pulp, he could finally squint open his eyes, and blearily noticed the one grabbing him had changed form into a youth dressed in red. Qi Rong had never seen Hua Cheng's real face, but the moment he saw the red robes he was shocked and furious.

"It's you. IT'S YOU!"

Hua Cheng had changed back to this true form. "You haven't answered my question. How did Prince An Le die?"

Because of how frightening his eyes looked, Xie Lian rushed forward and cried, "San Lang!"

Humans and ghosts alike had all already cleared the cave, and Xie Lian ran to his side.

"Are you alright? Don't be angry, please don't be angry, everything's fine. Just calm down, everything's fine..."

He gently rubbed Hua Cheng's shoulders a few times, and his voice became soothingly soft. When Xie Lian was younger, whenever he got angry or upset, his parents would always stroke his back like this, and comfort him with their gentle voices; thus, he used the same method on Hua Cheng. Turns out, it was quite effective; Hua Cheng's eyes were turbulent before, but after being soothed, his lips quivered for a second, and he slowly but finally calmed; his eyes cleared once more.

Seeing this, Xie Lian let out a breath of relief. But suddenly, even before he finished exhaling, Hua Cheng swiftly reached out a hand and gently patted his shoulder once.

This pat instantly froze Xie Lian's body and rooted him to where he stood.

He hadn't prepared for Hua Cheng to do anything to him, which was why this was done so easily. He didn't know what Hua Cheng was up to, but he wasn't worried about himself; rather, he was worried for Hua Cheng, afraid that he might lose control again like earlier. He was about to open his mouth to ask, when he realized not only could he not move, he couldn't speak either, and felt he may have gotten into a rather difficult situation.

That Qi Rong might have been weak in fist-fights, but his mouth was certainly tough, and he started cursing while still covered in blood. “You fucking crazy one-eyed snake! Did I fucking piss you off while eating in my own fucking house?!”

Hua Cheng smiled, then smacked his head down onto the ground again before picking it up. “How did Prince An Le die?”

“What the fuck does that have to do with you...” Qi Rong cried, and Hua Cheng bashed him down again.

“How did Prince An Le die?”

This went on repeat for a while, and Hua Cheng kept his cool smile, dribbling Qi Rong’s head like a ball; violently bashing it over ten times. Although it was violent, Qi Rong couldn’t die, and because he couldn’t die, it was insufferable. Even a skull made of steel couldn’t stand this kind of torture, and Qi Rong finally changed his tune.

“If you’re so free, why don’t you go read a fucking history book?”

Hua Cheng laughed coldly. “If history books recorded the truth, why would I come and ask useless trash like you?”

He lifted his hand again, and Qi Rong yelled, “IT’S LANG QIANQIU! HE WAS KILLED BY LANG QIANQIU!!!”

The daruma doll in Xie Lian’s arms jerked, and started shaking vigorously.

It was shaking too hard and Xie Lian couldn’t move to hold it down, so alas, he watched as the Lang Qianqiu daruma doll fell out and onto the ground, madly spinning back and forth. Hua Cheng didn’t turn his head, but he undid the spell. A blast of red smoke and Lang Qianqiu’s form leapt from within.

He was royalty, high and mighty, and had never been wronged like this his entire life. He pointed at Qi Rong in rage.

“How could you insult me like this and smear my name! An Le and I were friends! Who did you say killed him?!”

Qi Rong was also shocked to see him jump out. “You’re Lang Qianqiu? Why the fuck are you here too?!”

Lang Qianqiu himself didn’t understand why he was brought to this lair either, but was simply enraged by Qi Rong’s accusations earlier, and felt compelled to clear things up.

“Prince An Le died of illness, so why would you accuse me of killing him out of the blue?!”

Hua Cheng looked on coldly, but stopped dribbling Qi Rong’s head, so Qi Rong got pulled into the fight.

“Died of a fucking illness, only you would believe it. He died soon after the Gilded Banquet, so he must’ve been assassinated by you lot! If not you, then those old withering fucks in court.”

He was muddying the waters and spewing garbage; Lang Qianqiu’s face was growing grimmer.

“No wonder everyone says the Green Ghost Qi Rong is vulgar and crass. Now that I’ve met you, you are indeed disgusting.”

His offhand comment stabbed Qi Rong exactly where it hurt. After becoming famous, for so many centuries, all of heaven and hell taunted him for being boorish and crude, and he hated it. His face dropped immediately.

“I may be vulgar, but it’s still much better than your ignorance. Friends this, friends that; what peaceful relationship? Xianle and Yong’an can be friends? Coexist in peace? You’re as fake as your shitty parents; disgusting!”

Hearing him insult his parents, Lang Qianqiu was furious. “Shut up! My esteemed parents were sincere and genuine, not fake! I won’t allow you to spit on their names!”

Qi Rong spat, “You’re all nothing more than the descendants of some rebels, who gave you the fucking right?! What sincerity? To donate titles and land to us, the people of Xianle? Shameless! You robbed what was ours, then handed it back out like it’s some sort of a gift? Everything you owned had belonged to Xianle!”

Lang Qianqiu was not skilled in arguing, and actually froze and stuttered. “You! You—”

Qi Rong saw how he stammered and felt a rush of satisfaction, and resolved to aggravate him even more. He laughed. “Even if you guys killed An Le, it was a profitable death. Xianle lost but one man, but Yong’an paid an entire Gilded Banquet. Too bad we couldn’t kill you, too, and have you all taste what it’s like to end an entire bloodline!”

Hearing this, Lang Qianqiu was bewildered. “...What did you say?”

Xie Lian mentally cursed.

He so desperately wanted to bash Qi Rong back into the ground the same way Hua Cheng did, and shut him up. But with this petrification spell, he couldn’t move a single muscle.

“What do you mean you couldn’t kill me too?”

Qi Rong only wanted to avenge himself on the “vulgar” comment, and boasted. “Truly the fruit doesn’t fall far from the tree; my lord’s stupidity spans hundreds of years, my eyes are opened! Think, us Xianle are thoroughly disgusted with you Yong’an; whoever doesn’t hate you is unfit to be called a citizen of Xianle! Did you honestly think the royal descendants of Xianle would be friendly with the royalty of Yong’an? It was all to infiltrate your guard, to make it easy to plot, and to wash your gilded birthday banquet with blood!”

Xie Lian was struggling to break free, and Lang Qianqiu was frozen to his spot. After a moment, he stammered, “...The Prince An Le, and the Guoshi, were, were on the same side?”

Lang Qianqiu was filled with anguish, thinking that his beloved teacher and friend had conspired against him together.

However, contrarily, Qi Rong said, “Guoshi? That wicked Guoshi Fangxin? Who the hell is on the same side as him?”

Lang Qianqiu heard his question and was baffled.

“You...you washed the Gilded Banquet with blood, but the one to do so, was it not the Guoshi? Were you both not on the same side? I...” He was thoroughly confused.

“Who the fuck knows where that evil cultivator came from,” Qi Rong replied. “It had nothing to do with him! Listen up, Lang Qianqiu: the blood spilt at your Yong’an Gilded Banquet was all done by the people of Xianle! An Le had already planned to kill off every single fucking rebel at the banquet, but that fucking weirdo Guoshi of yours suddenly busted in. An Le had thought the plans failed and ran to me for help, asking me what to do if he was discovered, but who knew that very night it would be announced the one who fucked everything was that Guoshi, and he became a wanted man across the entire kingdom.”

It took Lang Qianqiu a while to process that information. “If that was the case, then why didn’t you speak up??”

Qi Rong clicked his tongue. “Are you fucking dumb?? Why would I say anything? Was it a bad thing to have someone take the blame? Can you level me up to a ‘Supreme’ with this lie?” He was relishing this more and more the more he spoke. “Yooooo, I get it. You couldn’t believe it, right? I heard you nailed your own teacher into a coffin, HAHAAHahahahah, what a fucking idiot! You killed the wrong person!”

Hearing that vile, hearty laughter, Xie Lian closed his eyes, and cursed again.

Lang Qianqiu was trembling with rage. “...YOU’RE WRONG!” He then whipped around and shouted towards Xie Lian. “If that was true, even if he didn’t say anything, why didn’t you?!”

Qi Rong spat out a broken tooth. "And who the fuck is that? What, are you all here to have a fucking party in my cave???"

Everyone ignored him. Lang Qianqiu demanded, "If you didn't do it, if you didn't kill, then why did you admit to guilt???"

Just then, Xie Lian's body became loose.

Hua Cheng had undone the petrification spell. However, it might have been too late. Lang Qianqiu was waiting for his response, and Xie Lian stood up slowly, working out the kinks in his wrists and joints.

After a pause, Xie Lian blurted the words, "Complete nonsense."

Lang Qianqiu had fully expected him to say "It's true, just as he said". Yet, the words Xie Lian uttered completely revoked his own relief of guilt from Qi Rong's recount.

Qi Rong was pissed. "Complete nonsense?! Says who?"

"Says I," Xie Lian said.

He looked down on Qi Rong and said, "All this fibbing and these empty words, what proof do you have that the ones who spilt blood at the Gilded Banquet were the descendants of Xianle?"

Qi Rong was amused. "All the killed are dead, so what proof? Besides, it's been hundreds of years. What proof is left?"

"Which is why I say this is all complete nonsense," Xie Lian replied. "Xianle and Yong'an are dynasties of the past; long lost to time. Is there any point in you stirring up trouble with nothing more than bits of history?"

The tone of his voice startled Qi Rong, and he looked as if he was remembering something, narrowing his eyes.

Xie Lian turned to Lang Qianqiu and said in a calming manner, "I killed your father; you saw with your own eyes. This was during a time soon after my second banishment. I was filled with frustration and caused a great wrong. This is all my fault. There's no need to drag anyone else down with me. This man is full of deception; dragging the Prince An Le's name through mud was only to avenge himself of your comment on his vulgarity."

If any bystander was to listen in on this conversation, they would find it hilarious. A fight for the title to the true culprit of a murder case; one would think blood-spilling at the Gilded Banquet was some sort of glorious deed.

Lang Qianqiu was in turmoil and profoundly confused. He held his head and thought for a long while before speaking, "That's right...it was you, and no one else."

He had seen with his own eyes. That night, he ran to the Gilded Palace excitedly, only to see the black-clad Guoshi pull out a thin, long sword from the chest of his father, splattering blood everywhere. And at that moment, his father, the king of Yong'an, had stretched out his hand towards him, still breathing. It was after he had rushed over that that hand was dropped limply.

Just then, Qi Rong who was lying on the ground suddenly spoke up, "Cousin Crown Prince, is that you?"

Ch.52: Truth or Deception; Difficult to Discern 2

Xie Lian's gaze moved back to Qi Rong. After staring at him for a moment, Xie Lian said, "Qi Rong, it looks like you've been living colourfully these past few years."

Right after he finished his words Hua Cheng removed his fake skin. Qi Rong's eyes widened as each three of the intruders revealed themselves.

Lang Qianqiu was bewildered. "Cousin?"

Even if earlier, when he heard Qi Rong say "Us Xianle" and guessed the identity of the Green Ghost's past life was a citizen of the kingdom of Xianle, he hadn't imagined that he and Xie Lian were actually related on a personal level. Qi Rong stared at Xie Lian's face, and looked him up and down; it was a gaze hungry with curiosity and fascination. When his eyes stopped at the sword Fangxin on Xie Lian's back, he suddenly burst out laughing.

"SO THAT'S IT! THAT'S IT! FANGXIN WAS YOU! YOU WERE FANGXIN!
HAHAHAHAHAHHAHA!!!"

Although he couldn't understand why he was laughing, Lang Qianqiu's guts told him it wasn't anything appropriate, and demanded angrily, "What's so funny?"

"I'm laughing at my good ol' cousin, what's it to you?!" Qi Rong bit back in a fit. "Just now I said my lord's stupidity spanned hundreds of years. I'm sorry. I apologize. The best way to learn is to learn from the best; look at your master, no wonder you're so fucking stupid!" He turned to Xie Lian. "You went to Yong'an and became their Guoshi, and ended up stabbed to death by your own disciple, is that not exciting? Is it not hilarious? You deserved it; making a fool of yourself!"

The moment he uttered the word "fool" Hua Cheng smashed his head down again violently. Qi Rong had always been tough-skinned, and for some reason, seeing Xie Lian made him ten times more excited than usual. Even with his face bashed into the ground he yelled unceasingly,

"A FOOL! A FOOL! A FOOL!"

Each time he said it, Hua Cheng would smash his head down again. It was a bloody scene, and Xie Lian stopped the hand that was about to strike again.

"San Lang, let it go!"

"Why should I?!" Hua Cheng said sharply.

"It's nothing, don't let any of it get to you," Xie Lian said. "He is mental, and extremely troublesome. I can take care of him. You just sit back and ignore him."

He gently rubbed Hua Cheng's shoulder, and it was a long time before Hua Cheng finally replied in a low voice, "Fine."

Qi Rong plucked his own head from the ground and rolled to the side with difficulty. He spat, "Why play pretend with your false kindness? If you really didn't want him to hit me, then you should've stopped him from the beginning! Faking indifference and only telling him to let it go now, no one's gonna praise you for your generosity!"

"I stopped him because I don't want him to dirty his hands, did you misunderstand something?" Xie Lian said.

A trace of anger flashed through Qi Rong's bloodied face, but then he started giggling.

"Yooo, cousin Crown Prince, you're getting along pretty well with Hua Cheng. And here I was just wondering why none of the underlings this little brother of yours sent to greet you on Zhongyuan ever returned; so it was because they ran into Hua Cheng!"

Xie Lian had no idea that Qi Rong had actually sent any underlings to go find him. That night of the Zhongyuan festival, it was a coincidence to have bumped into Hua Cheng, and taking him back to Puqi Shrine wasn't in the plans. It seemed that all of Qi Rong's underlings had been taken care of by Hua Cheng. Xie Lian couldn't help but steal a glance at the person next to him.

Qi Rong continued, "Calling him 'San Lang', tsk tsk tsk, so familiar! Cousin, you're a big-shot heavenly official, how can you hang out with ghosts and demons? Aren't you worried about your reputation? You're so perfect after all, so pure and flawless, your halo shines upon all on this earth, hahahahahaha..."

Many in the Heavenly Court had more or less thought the way Mu Qing spoke was sarcastic, but if they were to listen and compare, they would learn what sarcasm truly is. Truly, they had wronged Mu Qing.

Qi Rong didn't just speak, he'd act too. He folded his hands over his heart and exclaimed, "Cousin Crown Prince, this little brother had constantly thought of you over the years. Look, I even meticulously carved this statue to keep you by my side, so I can gaze upon your heroic form every waking moment of every day. What do you think? It's pretty well done, right? Do you like it? Don't worry, if you don't like it then even better, I'll carve more, hahahahaha..."

The moment he mentioned the statue, Hua Cheng's face immediately darkened; if it wasn't for Xie Lian holding him back, he would've stepped on Qi Rong's face. However, Xie Lian knew perfectly well the kind of person Qi Rong was; he was a little mad in the head, and the more extreme the reaction, the more excited he'd get, and the more outrageous he'd become. Reverse psychology was the most effective, so Xie Lian only smiled faintly.

"It's only alright. Sorry, but the craftsmanship is kind of low-class."

As expected, Qi Rong's face immediately fell. He said coldly, "Enough. If it wasn't for my past affections and me carving you a couple statues, who would even worship you? You probably sniveled and whined at Jun Wu's feet and hugged 'til your knees busted in order to ascend this time. Go around the heavens and see for yourself; which official isn't more dignified than you? Even a two hundred year old ascendeer can walk all over you. You're pretty much eight hundred years old but only got so far. What a failure."

Xie Lian smiled. "I am quite the failure, not like cousin, already a Savage after eight hundred years."

Xie Lian knew way too well how to put Qi Rong down. Next to him, Hua Cheng snorted, and Qi Rong's face darkened. He looked between all those present, and suddenly said,

"This stance...did you beg Hua Cheng to fuck with me today to settle our differences?"

Xie Lian was taken aback, and thought about the current picture they painted, and actually couldn't argue back.

Qi Rong continued, "Look at you all. The moment I say anything bad about you, wow! Look how mad he gets. Was he blinded by that holy light from your halo? My fucking god, I forgot! Wasn't he already blind in one eye? HAHAhahaha..."

Before he could finish, his eyes went dark again, and his cheek exploded in agony, spewing blood from his mouth—he got punched again! However, this punch wasn't from Hua Cheng but from Xie Lian.

Xie Lian's fist was faster than the eye could see, and he said coldly, "Just because I've never hit you before in the past, doesn't mean I would never hit you."

That punch was a solid one, and it was a long while before Qi Rong could make any sounds. He laid on the ground like a mangy dog, clubbing the ground with his fists as he cackled.

"Cousin Crown Prince, you hit me! You actually hit me! Heavens, our noble, kind, compassionate, charitable Crown Prince, who's scared of stepping on even a small ant, actually got pissed and swung a fist! HE'S HITTING PEOPLE! INCREDIBLE! AMAZING!!!"

He was unbelievably excited, going insane with elation. Lang Qianqiu had never seen anyone whose words and actions were so mad, and was shocked into stupefaction after witnessing this singular act.

He mumbled, "Is...is he crazy?"

Xie Lian was used to seeing Qi Rong's madness, and didn't think much of it. "You've heard it. He's insane. His heart and mind are unbalanced, so nothing he said is believable."

Qi Rong's laughter came to a sudden stop. He schooled his face and sneered. "Don't be so quick to tell people I'm psycho. Let me ask you, how did Prince An Le die!?"

This was the question Hua Cheng had posed to him, and now he asked it to Xie Lian instead. Lang Qianqiu's attention was suddenly focused on it again.

Xie Lian's heart culled, and couldn't immediately respond. Qi Rong, on the other hand, slowly pulled himself up, and sat while leaning on the kneeling statue.

"After An Le died, I cut open his corpse to inspect it, and all of his organs were pulverized by the vibrations of an exceedingly powerful sword; which was why he didn't have any external injuries, but couldn't stop hacking up blood. This was something no regular swordsman could do. At first I thought Yong'an thugs had brought in some strange hitman so as to frame An Le's death as illness. But now that I think about it, there's another person who can do this, and it's none other than my good ol' cousin, defender of justice. After all, our Flower-Crowned Martial God, His Royal Highness the Crown Prince, is a holy, pure, one and only, snow-white lotus of the heavenly mountains..."

Hua Cheng stomped on him, and Qi Rong yelped miserably. Lang Qianqiu felt like his head was going to explode; he held his head, his eyes laced with red.

"Shut up! Just tell me what you know! Who's the real murderer? What happened at the Gilded Banquet? And what happened to Prince An Le? WHAT THE HELL HAPPENED???"

"Lang Qianqiu, why are you still confused?" Qi Rong said. "Even I pretty much figured out what happened. Looks like you really don't understand the kind of person your master is! Come, come, come, let me dissect my good ol' cousin for you: this former Crown Prince of Xianle went and became Yong'an's Guoshi, and taught you swordsmanship for five years..."

He'd only spoken a few words, and Xie Lian reached for his sword. Before he could charge forward, Lang Qianqiu's longsword blocked him.

"Let him finish!"

"You know he's insane, and yet you still listen to his mad conjecture!"

Fangxin was swung, and even though it was a slender blade, its shockwave almost made Lang Qianqiu loosen his grip on his longsword. But just then, a silver, curved blade knocked Fangxin, hooked it up and pulled it aside.

Xie Lian was startled and cried, "San Lang!"

Qi Rong saw how much Xie Lian didn't want him to speak and how desperately he didn't want Lang Qianqiu to hear the story, so Qi Rong had to do the opposite, and grabbed this chance.

"Prince An Le was our good Xianle boy, very obedient! He heeded my instructions to be false friends with you, but your master bumped into us cleaning out the Yong'an rat nest at the Gilded Banquet, so An Le escaped. You got to the Gilded Banquet, saw what happened, and the Guoshi Fangxin became the most wanted man in the kingdom. This was the previous story, not a word a lie..."

Xie Lian tried to charge forward to shut his mouth a few times, but each time Hua Cheng stopped him. Xie Lian cried again, "San Lang!"; however, Hua Cheng didn't say a single word and only continued to block Xie Lian.

The more Xie Lian wanted to charge over, the faster Qi Rong's lips moved.

"This saintly cousin of mine, when he saw with his own eyes the people of Xianle committing murder, he must've thought: 'How can this be? That's not right!' So, he went to find Prince An Le to educate him a little, but when he sought him out—my GOD, what did he discover? An Le's major plot! It wasn't only just assassinating some thugs! There's no way cousin could educate him, so he hardened his heart and killed the last blood of our royal house with his own hands! Afterwards, you caught your master, and nailed him dead in that coffin, and so ends my cousin's magnificent life as Guoshi. Cousin, am I wrong?"

He spat a mouthful of blood next to the feet of the statue. "I know you too well. You love doing shit like this. Ancestors above, look at what a good descendant you gave birth to! Not only has the Xianle Xie clan lost everything, even the bloodline is cut! XIE LIAN! YOU OMINOUS STAR, YOU GOD OF MISFORTUNE! YOUR EXISTENCE IS XIANLE'S GREATEST TRAGEDY! WHY WON'T YOU DIE? HOW DO YOU EVEN HAVE THE FACE TO KEEP LIVING???"

"But I saw with my own eyes he killed my father with his sword!" Lang Qianqiu said. "How do you explain that?"

"If it's not water getting into your fucking senior eyes and ruining your sight, then I can only think of one reason," Qi Rong replied. "Which is that An Le for sure stabbed your old man, but he didn't die."

"Did...did he drive the blow home?"

Qi Rong howled, "What are you saying?! My good cousin is such a kind soul, how could he drive any attacks home? When he arrived, he wouldn't have attacked right away, he'd have to do a little show of trying to save the poor guy first. But, heh, your old man probably killed himself."

“What do you mean he killed himself?” Lang Qianqiu demanded.

“What’s the first thing someone saved from the brink of murder will do?” Qi Rong asked. “After seeing so many massacred at the Gilded Banquet, what’s your first reaction?”

Lang Qianqiu still hadn’t completely deduced it. “...Find the murderer.”

“WRONG!” Qi Rong cried. “After my good cousin saved your old man and he revived his breath, he would’ve certainly said: ‘Quick! Guoshi! It was Prince An Le who’d done it! Go and kill Prince An Le!’ No, no, no, not just that, he must’ve said something worse, like: ‘Guoshi! Bring forth Qianqiu! Call upon everyone! I want the entire population of Xianle wiped out! I want to bury them all with the dead!!!’”

His imitative tone of despair and fury was disturbing to listen to, and Lang Qianqiu was growing paler by the minute.

Qi Rong continued, “Even if he wasn’t killed on the spot, your old hag had an entire nest of thug relatives that were all killed before him. He’d have to open fire on the people of Xianle sooner or later. Your good master realized this, considered his options, and decided, no, the old man couldn’t be saved, so PLOrk and the old man’s heart goes cold. That’s the kind of person my good cousin is, a saint who can’t have sand in his eyes, always doing shit that harms others and hurts himself; he wanted to please both sides but succeeded with neither, hehehehe, hahaHAHAHAhahah...”

Ch.53: Truth or Deception; Difficult to Discern 3

Xie Lian shouted, "Qi Rong, you shut your mouth!"

Lang Qianqiu turned his head angrily. "Why does he have to shut up? Because what he said is the truth?? In that Gilded Banquet, you and An Le both struck; one killed my entire family, and the other finished the blow to my father. You're all lying to me?!"

Xie Lian responded hurriedly, "Don't listen to—"

Qi Rong cut in. "OF COURSE IT'S ALL A LIE! You're so stupid, if not you, then who else do we deceive? If not for some rando spoiling our plans, Xianle would've already taken your fucking life at the age of twelve, instead of giving you the luxury to grow up and ascend!"

"Twelve?" Lang Qianqiu repeated. The biggest thing that happened when he was twelve was that kidnapping, saved by Xie Lian. He demanded, "That year, the muggers who intruded the palace to kidnap me were sent by the people of Xianle?"

"Duh!" Qi Rong clicked his tongue. "Did you think any ordinary assassins can just kidnap the Crown Prince from hundreds of royal guards? Please. I was the one who helped An Le on that."

Lang Qianqiu nodded. "Helped? Good. I understand. So my friends are all fake. The people of Xianle never cared for our amity. Your Prince An Le never possessed good intentions, and instead came for our lives."

He turned to Xie Lian. "So, everything you told me was false too."

Qi Rong pretended to look surprised. "Come, come, come, hurry and let me hear what my saintly cousin told you!"

Lang Qianqiu ignored him and continued to address Xie Lian, "You said Yong'an and Xianle were but one nation at their roots; whatever conflicts the royals had with each other had nothing to do with civilians. Both sides used to be one family, and under our generation's rule, there could be changes for the better. As long as the people were happy, it didn't matter what the royal house was named, and both sides could let go of their grudge and unite in time. All that was false. All nonsense, bullshit, lies!"

This was what Xie Lian didn't want to hear the most. He cried immediately, "No! It's not false! Think: under your rule, weren't there real changes?"

Lang Qianqiu closed his mouth, his breath held.

Xie Lian continued, “Didn’t you do really well? Didn’t the remnant citizens of Xianle integrate peacefully with the people of Yong’an? There were fewer and fewer conflicts and riots, so how could any of it be false?”

There was a moment of silence, and tears rolled down Lang Qianqiu’s cheeks.

“But...but what about my parents? Yong’an and Xianle uniting was their greatest wish, that’s why they granted the princely title ‘An Le’ to the last of your royal bloodline. Their wish came true, but what of their end?”

Qi Rong clicked his tongue. “What a whiny crybaby, just like my saintly cousin once upon a time! You came crying for your old man, old hag; I haven’t even fucking harassed your ancestors for MY old man and old hag! Fucking uniting Yong’an and Xianle was their wish? What pretty words. An Le, An Le, settle first, joy after⁴⁶; you think I can’t tell it means you Yong’an dogs want to walk all over the heads of Xianle for the rest of our lives?”

Xie Lian yelled angrily, “QI RONG, STOP YOUR MADNESS!”

Lang Qianqiu on the other hand, glared at Qi Rong, tears still falling from his eyes.

“You’re the mastermind behind the massacre of my clan? And you’re part of the plot behind the Gilded Banquet too?”

Qi Rong snickered. “Yes, I’m part of it. An Le was part of it too. And your master! Us three people of Xianle all had our part. Hahahahaha...”

Suddenly, halfway through his laugh, Lang Qianqiu’s longsword abruptly swung down and struck. Qi Rong yelped, and his person was sliced into two!

It was an exceedingly gory scene, both halves of his bodies were rolling around the ground, and his upper body cried, “IT DOESN’T HURT! IT DOESN’T HURT! IT DOESN’T HURT ONE BIT! COMPARED TO THAT PUNCH FROM COUSIN CROWN PRINCE, YOU’RE NOTHING! HAHAAHHAHAHA!”

Lang Qianqiu didn’t say a word, grabbed him by the head and picked it up. Qi Rong was still spouting insults, but Xie Lian had noticed something off with Lang Qianqiu’s expression.

He said hurriedly, “Qi Rong, stop talking if you value your life!”

⁴⁶ An Le [安樂]: [安] means “safe”, “peace”, “to settle”; [樂] means “happiness”, “joy”. Qi Rong was dissecting the words on their own and drawing his own meaning from them.

Xie Lian always treated others with kind respect, yet Qi Rong was someone that couldn't be faced normally; he knew this, so every time he faced him, Xie Lian didn't want to be polite at all, and unconsciously became rude himself.

Lang Qianqiu dragged Qi Rong's upper body and came to the giant boiling, bubbling cauldron.

"Do you usually use this cauldron to cook humans?"

Having been dragged around, Qi Rong's bloodied carcass drew a thick trail of blood on the ground. "Yeah, so?"

Without another word, Lang Qianqiu let go of his hold.

"AAAAAAHHHH HAHAHAHAHA——"

It was hard to discern whether Qi Rong was screaming or laughing, and the moment he was dropped into that cauldron, his flesh was instantly burnt and boiled to mush.

Xie Lian had not expected this development; his pupils shrank and he blurted, "QIANQIU!"

Lang Qianqiu responded sharply, "What? How many people has the Green Ghost Qi Rong eaten? We can't teach him what it feels like to be cooked? He's the enemy that murdered my clan, am I not allowed to make him suffer???"

Of course he could. So, Xie Lian couldn't say anything, and he also had no right to say anything. Yet, no matter as the Crown Prince of a mortal kingdom, or the martial god of the east of heaven, Lang Qianqiu had never done a thing such as this. He had always been straightforward in fights, and never used any cruelty. These actions were far from the Lang Qianqiu Xie Lian knew.

After being thrown into the boiling water, after a while, when Qi Rong was fished up, his body no longer retained a human shape; it instead resembled a melted lump of skin and flesh, bones poking out in some areas, terrifying to behold. Yet he seemed quite pleased, and was still guffawing.

"Congratulations, cousin! Look at your good disciple! His wings have hardened! He's cruel and knows how to torture now!"

Lang Qianqiu released his hold again, and Qi Rong was once again submerged into the bubbling cauldron. This time when he was dropped, it seemed even his bones were dissolved by the boiling liquid. Qi Rong didn't float up again, and only remnants of some green cloth emerged on the surface.

After a while, having still not seen his shadow, Xie Lian couldn't help but call out, "Qi Rong!"

His younger cousin, who once upon a time couldn't shut up about his cousin the Crown Prince, had idolized him and praised him for everything he did. However, after the fall of Xianle, he had turned into a complete madman. He led the burning of his temples, the desecration of his palaces, and commissioned the kneeling Crown Prince statues everywhere, affixing them as thresholds. To make Xie Lian suffer, he could do anything. Xie Lian had done his best to put up with that behaviour, and if it involved others, he'd do his best to obstruct; until finally, when he could no longer tolerate it, he could only keep away and practice out of sight, out of mind.

Afterwards, they'd lost touch for many years, and Xie Lian thought Qi Rong had passed away. Who knew that, after so long, he would suddenly meet a figure of the past and see that face that so resembled his. He really couldn't tell whether there were any feelings of nostalgia or remorse. After all, the only ones left from the royal house of Xianle were the two of them. But they hadn't even seen each other for that long before he died before him, and he was even cruelly killed by a Lang Qianqiu who couldn't even use wooden rods to punish. So much happened in such a short period of time, Xie Lian hadn't even sorted the thoughts in his head, his heart a mess. Lang Qianqiu stood next to the cauldron with his head lowered, unspeaking.

Just then, Hua Cheng spoke up, "He didn't die."

Lang Qianqiu raised his head to look at him.

Hua Cheng continued, "You don't think this is actually revenge? You only killed one of his many clones. If you want to exterminate him completely, you need to find his ashes."

"Thanks for reminding me," Lang Qianqiu said coldly. "I will definitely capture him with my own hands, and use his ashes to pay respects to my esteemed father and mother. When that happens, I will come and tie things up with you. Guoshi, don't you dare think about running away!"

As he ended his words, he gripped his longsword and struck, slashing the cauldron, and turned abruptly to walk away. Boiling water spilled from the cauldron, and liquid filled with slivers of bones poured onto the ground. Xie Lian wanted to chase after him, but he knew that it wouldn't be of any use.

He braked in his step and stopped; standing still, unable to speak. Hua Cheng approached him.

"He just found out the truth, so it's better to let him be by himself and cool down."

Xie Lian was dumbfounded. "Why must he know the truth? Was the truth that important?"

"Very important," Hua Cheng replied. "He needed to know what was done by you and what wasn't, and why you had to do what you did."

Xie Lian whipped around in a fit and said coldly, "What's the use of knowing everything so clearly? Would I be any more blameless if I killed less people? Would things be less hard???"

Hua Cheng didn't respond.

A burst of anger rolled up from Xie Lian's chest, and he didn't even know who to be mad at. He blurted, "And what shitty hardship have I experienced? His majesty the king father had always wanted to integrate the two clans, did I not kill him? Prince An Le was the last to my family's bloodline, did I not kill him? No matter what, it's all my fault, so if all the blame goes to me what's wrong with that? What's there to be afraid of? Whatever comes at me, I can't die anyway! I did this. I bring misfortune. And now I've brought it to Prince An Le, to Qi Rong, and to everyone in Xianle. Is it not better to hate one instead of all? Must he think that everything I taught him was false, and nothing more than empty bullshit???"

Hua Cheng watched him quietly and didn't argue. The two stared at each other, and suddenly Xie Lian covered his face with his hands.

"I'm sorry. I'm sorry, San Lang. I've gone mad. I'm sorry."

"It's nothing. It's my fault," Hua Cheng said.

"No, you're not at fault. This is my problem." Xie Lian slumped to the ground, holding his head. "What a mess. What a disastrous mess."

After a moment, Hua Cheng sat down next to him. "You weren't wrong."

Xie Lian held his head and said nothing.

Hua Cheng continued, "The Yong'an king was killed to protect the remaining people of Xianle. Prince An Le was killed to prevent the two clans from fighting. In the end, to die at the hands of Lang Qianqiu, the murderer faced justice. Three lives exchanged for centuries of peace, it's worth it. If it was me, I would've done the same. Listen to me."

His voice was firm with no room for doubt. "You weren't wrong. No one could've done it better than you."

Xie Lian was quiet. After some time he finally said, "I just don't think it's right."

He slowly lifted his face. "I just don't think it's right for someone to have been kind, but still receive a bad end. I don't think it should have ended up this way."

"Even if it's fake, I wanted Qianqiu to remember that his benevolence to Xianle would be reciprocated. Doing the right thing will open endless paths. Not like now, where he thinks everything I told him, everything he believed in, were all false, lies, deception. That everything was goddamn bullshit! I just..."

He raised his right hand, and said while looking at it, "...I don't want to see anyone go through what I've gone through."

Hua Cheng listened silently. Xie Lian felt self-conscious about the vulgar words he used and apologized again.

"I'm sorry. But look how incredibly silly things are in this world. The first few generations of Yong'an rule were filled with violence and cruelty, but none died tragically. When it came to Lang Qianqiu's parents, all they wanted was to do some good, do something great, but it ended the way it did."

The king of Yong'an honoured him as the Guoshi, and treated him with the utmost respect for five years. Even at the end of his life, he passed on without any signs of that trust dispersing. Xie Lian's eyes looked far ahead, unfocused.

He whispered, "I really can't forget...the look on his face when my sword penetrated him."

Hua Cheng said softly, "Forget about it. That was Qi Rong and Prince An Le's fault."

Xie Lian shook his head, and buried it between his knees, his voice exhausted. "...And everything was going just fine too."

When Lang Qianqiu's father first ascended the throne, his first rule was to break the culture of oppressing the people of Xianle. The people of Xianle and the people of Yong'an finally experienced peace among each other for the first time; there were finally winds of change, finally signs of integration, finally hope for leaving conflict behind, and Prince An Le had to pick that time to wash the Gilded Banquet with blood.

That night when he escaped and found Prince An Le, he was originally going to warn him never to stir up trouble again. Yet, after the last descendant of his royal house discovered his true identity, he excitedly grabbed hold of him, and asked him to join his grand scheme of revenge and the recovery of their kingdom. His eyes were so red with passion and his voice, so high with excitement that it made one's hair stand on end; he first swore to spill blood at the Gilded Banquet, then annihilate Lang Qianqiu, and then cause havoc in Yong'an. They would do this even at the cost of destroying the growing amity amongst the two peoples, and at the cost of all the lives that remain from Xianle; as long as they could drag all of Yong'an, royalty and commoners alike, to the depths of hell, they would not hesitate.

But in the end, what was killed was killed, what was murdered was murdered. However just the reason, however compelling the reason, the truth was that he killed with his own hands an honourable king who had truly wanted to eradicate discrimination, and the last blood descendant of his family in this world.

So, he deserved all the blame.

Ch.54: In the Cannibal Lair; Ghost King Faces Heavenly Officials

Xie Lian turned his head to look at that dejected-looking kneeling statue and said, “Qi Rong was right about one thing. I am quite the failure.”

“Don’t believe in the words of useless trash like him,” Hua Cheng said gently. “Other than being good at not dying, and running away, he’s got nothing else going for him. He can’t even level up to a Supreme after eight hundred years. Even beating him up would only dirty your hands.”

Xie Lian’s lips jerked upwards, thinking, wasn’t he also the same? Only good at not dying, and running away; even after eight hundred years, he’d only gotten as far himself, which was nowhere.

At first, when he saw Lang Qianqiu as the Martial God of the East, ranking as a high heavenly official, but still maintaining his old character—still straightforward, still falling asleep in boring meetings—he felt rather comforted. And yet, from now on, who knows how he would change? He went in pursuit of Qi Rong; once that was done, how would he end things with Xie Lian?

Xie Lian stood up, and slowly walked to the statue. He stood in front of it head-on; that face was indeed exactly the same as his own, only it was carved in a sorrowful expression, its face covered in tears, scrunched up and ugly. After staring at it for a moment, Xie Lian sighed and placed his hand on its head, pouring in a powerful force of energy.

When he removed his hand, two long crevices crawled over the cheeks of the statue, and soon after, the crying face broke apart. The statue collapsed and crumbled into small rocks; falling to the ground, never to be restored.

When Xie Lian turned around again, his usual gentle and peaceful expression was back on his face. He rubbed his forehead and said, “Qi Rong’s lair probably still has a lot of humans hidden. I’ll go find them and release them.”

Hua Cheng stood up, too. “Let’s go.”

During the ruckus earlier, all the little green lantern ghosts in Qi Rong’s lair had run away, and those who didn’t were hidden in the shadows, afraid to come out. The two searched all over, nabbing a couple unfortunate little ghosts along the way and forcing them to lead, and they found many caves used for “storing fresh food”. Counting roughly, the number of people Qi Rong had captured for consumption was actually no less than three hundred; they were either nearby villagers or travelers passing by.

The two unlocked jail cells as they roamed, freeing all the detainees. With a task at hand, Xie Lian was able to change focus and calm down. Now that they were free, he also had the time to chat with Hua Cheng.

He pondered at his words, but asked anyway: "By the way, San Lang, I wanted to ask you about something."

"What is it?" Hua Cheng asked.

"How did you know that Qi Rong was the mastermind behind the Gilded Banquet plot?" Xie Lian asked.

At first, he didn't know why Hua Cheng had brought himself and Lang Qianqiu to the Green Ghost's lair, but now he did. Hua Cheng's objective was to have Lang Qianqiu hear for himself Qi Rong's confession to the whole Gilded Banquet scheme.

"Qi Rong didn't know that I was Fangxin," Xie Lian said. "If he had known, he would've harassed me from the start. At the time, although I knew the old Xianle royals were plotting something underhanded, I didn't know it was Qi Rong behind it all. So how did you find out? How long have you known this?"

"Not too long." Hua Cheng walked alongside him with his hands behind his back. "I've run into Qi Rong a few times and learned the kind of person he is. Qi Rong was of Xianle when he was alive, and regarded Yong'an with deep hatred. He was good at the art of provocation; fanning fires and fabricating situations. Many of the major assassination plots of the Yong'an nobles were all manipulated by him behind the back, but he hid really well."

Xie Lian shook his head. "So he already had a history. Good thing he's good at hiding; if the heavens found out he had a hand in all those mortal conflicts, they would not show him any mercy."

"Spilling blood at the Gilded Banquet was very much his style," Hua Cheng said. "So I had always believed the mastermind was him, and the Guoshi Fangxin was his lackey. But, in the upper court, since Lang Qianqiu identified you as the Guoshi Fangxin, then there was no way Fangxin and Qi Rong would be in the same boat."

Xie Lian's steps slowed. It seemed that even though Hua Cheng wasn't present in the heavens, he was still very informed of what went on in the Great Martial Hall. And not just that, he was also very knowledgeable of Xie Lian's personal relationship with Qi Rong.

Hua Cheng continued, "Nevertheless, I still leaned towards Qi Rong as the mastermind, or at least the one who started the whole thing. The remnant citizens of Xianle, after Lang Qianqiu's father had ascended the throne, had received many improvements to their lives, and no longer thought of avenging their fallen kingdom. The only ones who couldn't let go would be the royal family of Xianle. At the time, the only remaining descendant was Prince An Le. If Qi Rong wanted to instigate anyone into starting anything, it would have been him. Very conveniently, this individual randomly died of an unknown illness right after the Gilded Banquet. Was that not obviously suspect?"

Xie Lian nodded, and Hua Cheng concluded.

“So, he was more than likely killed, and the reason for his death had something to do with the Gilded Banquet. My first deduction was that it was the work of Yong’an nobility, but nothing happened to the remnant citizens of Xianle, so it couldn’t have been them. I thought about it, and came to my present conclusion.”

Xie Lian smiled and was amazed. “So few clues, and yet you could deduce so accurately.”

“It’s not hard,” Hua Cheng said. “You just have to know the main people involved well.”

“That’s for sure, but in your deduction, there was a significant preamble that I don’t understand.”

“And that is?” Hua Cheng asked.

“Why do you believe so firmly that the one who made the first move must be Qi Rong?”

“It wasn’t that I believed he did it. I just believed that you didn’t.”

Hearing this, Xie Lian stopped smiling. He was quiet for a moment before asking, “Why is that?”

“If you had admitted to spilling blood at the Gilded Banquet using any other reason, then I would’ve believed it was you,” Hua Cheng replied. “The Yong’an king was sincere in his rule, loved by the people, and yet Lang Qianqiu said the reason you told him was ‘I couldn’t stand seeing you in that position’.

“That was the model declaration of one overthrowing the crown. But if those words came from you, then it’d be a poor attempt at tarnishing your own name.”

Hearing this, Xie Lian puffed a laugh soundlessly. “Tarnishing my own name? Did you not think that I might not have harboured those thoughts deep down inside? Maybe I do have some resentments hidden?”

“Thoughts are thoughts; you wouldn’t have acted upon them,” Hua Cheng said.

Xie Lian shut his mouth. After a moment, he said, “San Lang, I’m not the person you think I am. You—”

Xie Lian closed his eyes and shook his head, as if undecided on whether to comment.

Hua Cheng urged, “What? Tell me. It won’t matter.”

Xie Lian chewed on his words, but finally said, "I just think, it's best for people not to have too much hope in another."

"Oh?" Hua Cheng hummed. "And what do you mean by that?"

"Don't think someone overly perfect," Xie Lian replied. "If it's just watching a shadow from afar and never having to interact, then whatever. But once acquainted and grown close, one day you'll end up finding that this person was not what you had imagined; maybe even the complete opposite. When that happens, you'll be very disappointed."

Hua Cheng disagreed, "You never know. I don't care if anyone else is disappointed. But to some, the very existence of a certain person in this world is in itself, hope."

Although he didn't specify who "some" were, and who "a certain person" was, his tone plain and casual like it was an offhand comment, Xie Lian's heart lifted, he felt light, even.

He paused in his step and couldn't speak. Some moments after he suddenly blurted, "San Lang, who are you, really?"

Hua Cheng stopped too, and turned his head to look at him.

Xie Lian looked him squarely in his eyes, and asked thoughtfully, "You knew who Qi Rong was, and knew the kind of person he is. You knew who I am, and knew how to paint the God-Pleasing Crown Prince. You seem to know everything about me. You know a lot. Maybe even more."

Hua Cheng raised his eyes. "Don't I always know a lot?"

Xie Lian shook his head. "It's not the same."

His left hand held his right elbow while his right hand propped his chin. He looked at Hua Cheng in wonder.

"I've always had the feeling that you are someone from my past, and must've known me from very early on. Maybe it was during my first ascension; no, maybe even earlier. Yet...I really don't remember. When have I ever met a character like you?"

Someone like Hua Cheng would be unforgettable after the first meeting. Xie Lian had never bashed his head in and lost his memories, so if they had met, there was no reason to not remember.

Xie Lian stared at him, looking somewhat bemused. "Who are you exactly? Have I met you before?"

Hua Cheng didn't answer, but his lips lifted softly. Xie Lian immediately came to, and realized his questions were extremely inappropriate.

A ghost's real name was usually a secret; unless it's someone unfathomably abnormal like Qi Rong, there was no reason to tell it to anyone.

Xie Lian hurriedly said, "I'm sorry, don't mind me. I was just asking. You don't have to answer me. Whoever you are doesn't matter."

Just then, Hua Cheng's eyes squinted. Xie Lian realized he must've noticed something, and turned his head back. Behind them, from not far within the cave, came noisy chatter and the clear, loud voice of a woman.

"I told you, my powers are stronger in my female form, even my luck is better! Yet you still wouldn't let me. Do you see now? We rolled it right this time!!!"

It was Shi Qingxuan's voice.

Xie Lian blurted out, "Lord Wind Master!"

As he had guessed, a white-clad lady cultivator came sprinting out of a cave opening, and her eyes lit up when she saw Xie Lian.

"I found him! His Highness is here!"

However, she then saw Hua Cheng standing behind Xie Lian, and her face fell immediately. She leapt backwards and flashed the Wind Master fan before her. Before Xie Lian had the chance to say anything, another voice of a man echoed from within the cave.

"Did you find him? How're things?"

The voice was coming closer, and soon the shadow of another appeared; it was Feng Xin. He had in his left hand a long, black bow, and the moment he saw Hua Cheng he pulled back the silver bowstring, high on alert. Hua Cheng chuckled and made no comment.

Xie Lian hurriedly said, "Put away your weapons, we can talk this out."

The four ran into each other on the narrow path of the Green Ghost's lair, two against two. Feng Xin had the bowstring pulled fully, a string of spiritual light formed into the shape of an arrow within his right hand, and he aimed it at Hua Cheng.

Feng Xin spoke first, his voice full of warning: "Your Highness, come here."

Feng Xin's bow was gifted by Jun Wu; named Fengshen⁴⁷, it was a rather troublesome spiritual device. Xie Lian was afraid he'd shoot for real, and rushed to stand in front of Hua Cheng, shielding him. But unexpectedly, Hua Cheng grabbed him from behind, and pulled him right back.

That pull startled the other two. Shi Qingxuan immediately raised his hand.

“Hua Cheng! Crimson Rain Sought Flower! D-d-d-don't do anything rash! The burning of your Paradise Manor was an accident! If you're displeased, we can talk! The heavens can pay you back. His Majesty the Martial Emperor isn't that short on cash. Let go of His Highness, and let's talk.”

⁴⁷ “Fengshen” translates to “God of Wind”.

Ch.55: In the Cannibal Lair; Ghost King Faces Heavenly Officials 2

Xie Lian didn't know whether to laugh or cry, but was still immensely grateful. "Lord Wind Master, you're mistaken. It actually..."

He wanted to explain that Hua Cheng didn't come looking for payback because of Paradise Manor, but Shi Qingxuan was throwing him guileful looks, as if telling him to not speak a word. Hua Cheng didn't argue either, and raised his voice to speak.

"I haven't even counted the whole incident with Jun Wu setting up a spy under my nose, so there's nothing to talk about."

Xie Lian finally understood. Shi Qingxuan could already see that Hua Cheng had no bad intentions, and all this was but an act—using Hua Cheng's kidnapping him as him seeking revenge, so the heavens wouldn't talk and say instead that it was Xie Lian who had run away. Hua Cheng had understood Shi Qingxuan's intent, too, and cooperated. However, Xie Lian didn't want to go this route.

"Alright, stop acting. He only came to the heavens to save me. San Lang had good intentions, so why hide it?"

"No more acting," Shi Qingxuan replied. "I already sent those two exchanges to the communication array. You don't understand; no matter how good the intention, after being passed around, words will always end up becoming negative, so they might as well be negative from the start."

"You get it," Hua Cheng commented.

"Of course! Otherwise how could I, the Lord Wind Master, be so popular in the heavens?" Shi Qingxuan preened. "General Nan Yang, lower your bow."

However Feng Xin still had the bow pulled at almost full strength, holding his breath and not saying a word. Shi Qingxuan smacked him.

"Put it down, can't you see they're close? Nothing bad's gonna happen."

Feng Xin said in a low voice, "Your Highness, the one next to you is a Supreme..."

Seeing that his hostility wouldn't drop, his bow unlowered, Shi Qingxuan suddenly rammed herself into his arm.

Instantly, Feng Xin's face paled; worse than if he were to see a ghost by a million-fold. He screamed, the shaft of the spiritual arrow dissipating powerlessly like clouds. He opened his mouth and a long string of loud curses came out; distressed to the core.

“WHAT THE FUCK!! WHAT THE FUCK ARE YOU DOING!!!!”

Turns out, Shi Qingxuan had used her bosoms to ram into his arm, the one holding the arrow. That blow had thoroughly terrified Feng Xin. Shi Qingxuan swung her whisk back, elegantly carefree, looking as if she hadn't just done anything inappropriate.

“I haven't even asked you what YOU are doing. I just said that Crimson Rain Sought Flower came to save His Highness, and you still point at him with your arrow. If you want to fight him so badly, well, I won't help you.”

Feng Xin had already backed away a million miles, looking like he would never approach her again. He cried in dismay, “DON'T YOU DARE DO THAT EVER AGAIN!!! EVER!!! DO YOU HEAR ME!!!”

Watching him avoid her like a snake, Shi Qingxuan, who was so confident about her ethereal beauty, actually felt rather depressed.

“Okay, okay, okay. I won't do it again. It's not like you suffered any loss, what's with that reaction?” As if feeling she'd lost face, Shi Qingxuan changed back into a man, and turned around. “Eh? Where's Qianqiu?”

Hearing his words, Feng Xin finally composed himself somewhat, and looked around too.

Xie Lian ah-ed and said, “He's not in the communication array?”

“No?” Shi Qingxuan answered. “After he rolled the dice and left, we haven't heard a single peep. I asked him multiple times what the correct roll was, but he never responded. Before, when I talked to Qianqiu, he'd always respond really fast; not just to me, but to all other officials regardless of ranking. So weird.”

Xie Lian huffed a sigh. “His Highness Tai Hua left to chase after Qi Rong.”

The other two were taken aback. “Qi Rong?”

“Yeah,” Xie Lian replied. “This place here is Qi Rong's lair. Sigh, in any case...”

Feng Xin cut in, “Wait. Why did His Highness Tai Hua go pursue Qi Rong? Didn't he come chasing after you?”

“No reason,” Hua Cheng answered from behind. “He was chasing the real mastermind behind the Gilded Banquet bloodshed, and the only thing his royal highness did was wipe up after that murderer's ass. Lang Qianqiu found out the truth, and went chasing after the real culprit. That's all.”

Feng Xin was shocked. "The real culprit? Is this the truth?!"

Xie Lian felt it really wasn't the time and place to explain all the complex details and shook his head. "It's not that simple. I'll explain more when we get back."

Shi Qingxuan, although ignorant of the inside story, was joyous. "I knew there was a misunderstanding in all of this! I've such godly premonition! Now even if you return, you would no longer be detained!"

"Good!" Feng Xin said too, looking like he was greatly relieved.

He put away his bow and the wariness he had shown also significantly decreased. Hua Cheng on the other hand, only snorted coldly.

"Have you known?" Xie Lian asked Feng Xin. "That Qi Rong was that Qi Rong?"

Feng Xin asked, "Which Qi Rong? Who?" Then startled. "The one we knew?"

"So you didn't realize it was him either?" Xie Lian remarked.

Feng Xin's face went dark. "No. I've never run into the Green Ghost himself, and had always assumed the name was just a coincidence. What kind of dumbass would run around with his real name? That's crazy!"

But the moment the words left his mouth, he instantly remembered that Qi Rong was indeed crazy, and his eyes met Xie Lian's, both falling silent in mutual understanding.

Long before the two had ascended, Feng Xin had despised Qi Rong. Qi Rong was the son of the younger sister to Xie Lian's mother, the last queen of Xianle. He grew up in the royal palace, spent his days clinging to Xie Lian, and as Xie Lian's personal guard, Feng Xin of course saw Qi Rong frequently. He was young, immature, bullheaded, energetic, extreme, and the worst thing was, as royalty, no one dared to educate or discipline him. It was easy to imagine just how lawless he was.

He used to always hang around on his lips the words: "My cousin the Crown Prince is perfect!" "My cousin something something". If anyone were to be even remotely disrespectful to Xie Lian, or had given him a sliver of a problem, it wouldn't matter who it was; Qi Rong would surely bag that person with a gunny sack and beat them to death. He had never in his mind any care or respect for the old, the handicapped, or the young. There was even once Xie Lian saved a child not over ten years of age from under Qi Rong's hands. The poor boy was beaten to a bloody pulp; miserable to the bone. Yet, Xie Lian was mindful of Qi Rong's lineage, plus he was genuinely on Xie Lian's side, so Xie Lian had never disciplined him physically. But if it was only lectures, Qi Rong wouldn't change no matter how many times he was scolded. He was truly a headache.

Feng Xin was a much more straightforward person, not as patient as Xie Lian, and constantly disputed with Qi Rong; disobeying his commands. And so, Qi Rong also despised him, and would always come up with new ways to get him in trouble, forcing him to run unreasonable errands. Moreover, after Xie Lian had ascended, Qi Rong became even more preposterous; such as, if anyone were to spit before the Palace of the Crown Prince, he would try and force burning hot coal down their throat. To prevent him from going too far, Feng Xin had to descend frequently to clean up after him. Truly aggravating!

He'd always tell Xie Lian: "Qi Rong's crazy, and he's gonna incite chaos one day!"

"If it was really him, then it's no surprise that he'd done it," Feng Xin said.

Shi Qingxuan was curious. "What, do you all know the Green Ghost??"

Xie Lian nodded. "He's my little cousin."

Shi Qingxuan was shocked, and crossed his arms. "Well, ain't that something else."

"He is quite something else," Xie Lian agreed.

"I'm not talking about him," Shi Qingxuan said. "I'm talking about you! Your Highness, look at you: the Martial Gods of the Southeast and Southwest are both your old buddies, the Martial God of the East is your disciple, that Night-Touring Green Lantern is your little cousin, the Crimson Rain Sought Flower is your sworn brother, and I, Lord Wind Master, am your friend. Ain't that something?"

Xie Lian smiled, thinking the Wind Master certainly had a breezy character befitting of his title; the moment the wind blew, all the gloomy clouds dispersed. However, when Hua Cheng and Feng Xin heard "the Crimson Rain Sought Flower is your sworn brother", both showed a disagreeing expression. Hua Cheng raised his brows, and Feng Xin knitted his.

After a moment, Feng Xin turned to Xie Lian. "If there's nothing else, you best hurry back to the Heavenly Court. Many of the heavenly officials still have no idea what happened in that ruckus, and are still waiting above. Jun Wu should be informed by now. You need to report back and give them a proper account."

Hearing his words, Hua Cheng laughed out loud.

"What're you laughing at??" Feng Xin demanded.

“And here I was wondering at how straightforward you are, but turns out you like to beat around the bush too,” Hua Cheng said. “You just don’t want His Highness to associate with the likes of demons and ghosts like me; why not just say so openly? Think it’s not your place?”

Xie Lian cleared his throat softly. “San Lang...”

“As long as you’re aware that he shouldn’t be associating with the likes of demons and ghosts,” Feng Xin said coldly.

Hua Cheng made no indication of agreeing or disagreeing with that sentiment, and Xie Lian intercepted, responding to Feng Xin quietly,

“I will report in and give a proper account, but right now there are more important things at hand. Qi Rong had hidden in his lair over three hundred humans for feeding. Thanks to San Lang’s help, they were all saved. There’s currently a number of little ghosts left that need to be taken care of. I will return to the heavens as soon as that’s done.”

“It won’t be good to take too long. Let me deal with this,” Feng Xin said.

Hua Cheng nodded. “By heaven’s efficiency, you’ll probably finish this by next month.”

“You say that as if you can handle this in a second,” Feng Xin said.

The two glared at each other. Shi Qingxuan asked Xie Lian with his eyes: did something happen between the two of them? But Xie Lian only shook his head. He was about to change the subject when Hua Cheng took out an umbrella from who knows where. The umbrella was crimson red like maple leaves, vivid like fire. Hua Cheng raised it with one hand and covered himself and Xie Lian, reflecting a blushing red on their faces.

This must be the same umbrella that Hua Cheng used to shield them through the hanging corpse forest at Mount Yujun. However, it wasn’t raining at the moment, so Xie Lian was curious.

“San Lang, why did you open an umbrella?”

Hua Cheng looked at him, and shifted the umbrella more to Xie Lian’s side, smiling. “Just wait. The sky’s about to change.”

Just as he finished his sentence, it suddenly poured from the sky! The rain thundered down, flecking and flacking. It came so suddenly, Xie Lian was startled. However, he was properly covered under Hua Cheng’s umbrella, and not a single drop hit him. Feng Xin, though, who was standing on the other side, had not prepared at all. He was drenched from head to toe by this rain.

And the worst thing was, this rain was the colour of blood. By the looks of it, Feng Xin was now covered in blood and dripping; only his wide, bulging eyes were white, the rest of him red. Shi Qingxuan was conveniently standing in the interior of another cave so he wasn't affected, but his eyes were also wide with shock; even forgetting to wave his whisk.

That pouring rain came suddenly, left suddenly, and soon enough, everything was quiet once more. It took Feng Xin some time to recover. He wiped at his face, but it was still smeared with red, his attempt useless.

"Wha..." Xie Lian was agape.

Hua Cheng closed the umbrella and laughed. "How's that for show?"

In four short words, he'd already taken a number of leisurely steps, and was quite the distance away. Xie Lian was fumbling all over his sleeves looking for some rags, but instead, Shi Qingxuan plucked some white strands from his whisk and handed them to the deeply muted Feng Xin. The moment Hua Cheng left, Xie Lian immediately sensed the void behind him and turned around in a rush, running a few steps after Hua Cheng.

"San Lang, are you going back to the Ghost City?"

Hua Cheng turned his head. "Aren't you also going back to the Heavenly Court?" He then added, half-jokingly, "But if you want to follow me back to the Ghost City, you're very welcome to."

Xie Lian chuckled. "Next time," he said sincerely. "Next time if there's a chance, I'll definitely visit the Ghost City again. I'll help you lay bricks when you rebuild Paradise Manor."

"No need to lay bricks. You can just sit back and watch," Hua Cheng replied.

Xie Lian's smile died a little. "The thing with Qianqiu, no matter how it went down, I should still thank you." He paused and continued, "I don't know what the right thing is to do, either, so maybe this wasn't a bad thing."

"You think too much," Hua Cheng said lightly.

Xie Lian was slightly taken aback and inclined his head.

"Just keep doing what you want to do," Hua Cheng said. After that, he turned around and waved his hand.

Soon after, that crimson silhouette gradually, from within the mountains and under the moonlight, disappeared completely from Xie Lian's sight.

Ch.56: In Search of the Past; Retracing Steps to Mount Taicang

Without knowing why, Xie Lian was suddenly filled with courage again.

After Lang Qianqiu had left, Xie Lian's steps had been hesitant, his shoulders slumped. But this courage came from nowhere, and who knew where it would be directed to; all that was known was that it had made him stand tall once more. He stood unmoving, and Shi Qingxuan approached, giving him a small pat on the back.

"What a guy. Your Highness, I don't know how you managed to befriend him, but you're very lucky."

This was the first time Xie Lian had heard someone tell him he was lucky. He glanced at Shi Qingxuan and smiled.

"Really? Maybe. I think so too."

Behind them, Feng Xin continued to wipe his face. When the two turned their heads around, they saw his face covered in white strands, miserable and unkempt, and laughed.

"Sorry about that," Xie Lian said.

That counted as an apology on Hua Cheng's behalf. Feng Xin finally picked off all the white strands from his face.

"I'm not as skilled, so I can't say anything."

The three of them then conducted a final search of all the caves, double-checking to make sure there were indeed no more humans or anything else left behind, before riding a draft of wind back to the Heavenly Court.

Once they passed the gates, they saw the streets were filled with crowds of junior officials from the Middle Court; moving about, checking every nook and cranny of every palace as if they were about to face a grave enemy. When they finally arrived at the Great Martial Hall, the audience chamber was already filled with heavenly officials of the Upper Court, and even from afar they could hear them arguing. The first thing they heard was:

"Hua Cheng dares accuse the Upper Court Heavens of sending a spy, how ludicrous! Why would the heavens need to send a spy?"

Xie Lian and Shi Qingxuan lightly cleared their throats when they heard. Sending a spy was most likely the truth. Nothing had been settled yet and the officials already couldn't wait to start blathering. If the incident was indeed true, then wouldn't it be a slap in their own faces?

The three entered the hall with Shi Qingxuan in the lead. When the crowd saw him they greeted, "The Lord Wind Master has returned!" "Thanks for your hard work!", but all eyes were on Xie Lian. They were about to press for more, but saw emerging from behind a Feng Xin that looked like he had crawled out of a bloody pond, his face dark. Everyone was frozen to their spot and immediately turned their eyes away. After all, no one wanted to be cussed at loudly in the great hall. Only Mu Qing, who not only didn't care to avoid him, he even purposely stared, held his gaze; his intent more than obvious.

Xie Lian raised his gaze and saw Jun Wu was seated above in his throne; a hand supporting his head, fingers pressed against his temple, his eyes closed, looking exhausted. Xie Lian could understand exactly how he felt.

In the past, there might not even have been conferences and meetings of this sort for months. But with all the incidents that had happened recently, the Great Martial Hall was filled to the brim time and time again; it was as if there was a situation happening every day, and they had to convene twice a day. If Xie Lian was in his shoes, he'd be tired too. Besides, there were many that wanted to have their voices heard, despite being nothing but noise.

One of the officials exclaimed, "He came and went as he willed. Scary to think he was able to connect the Palace of Xianle to somewhere else. Now that he can easily kidnap His Highness who offended him, who knows if he'll just kidnap any other heavenly officials. We can't possibly let this go! We need to stop him right now!"

If this was the mortal realm, this would be akin to a rebel digging a tunnel beneath the royal palace and sneaking about freely. Of course people were restless. No wonder the Middle Court officials were busy searching and safeguarding the grounds. Mu Qing, on the other hand, had something else in mind.

"Hua Cheng has so many devotees, and lords over the Ghost City. Something miniscule like burning the Paradise Manor is nothing to him. He might not have broken into the heavens just because His Highness offended him."

Shi Qingxuan immediately countered, "General Xuan Zhen, you're mistaken. Everyone heard Hua Cheng admit it himself. Speaking of, which general is responsible for security this month? That the Palace of Xianle had a spell cast upon it to be connected elsewhere without that general even noticing, isn't that a neglect of duty?"

Pei Ming had been standing quietly on the side, his arms crossed. When he heard Shi Qingxuan he spoke up. "Me."

Shi Qingxuan had accidentally remembered wrong, and thought it was Mu Qing on duty; but he'd ended up calling out Pei Ming, and now things got somewhat awkward. However, Pei Ming didn't push off the blame.

"I'm on duty this month. This is my oversight."

The heavenly official who was on good terms with him immediately tried to help him out. "If you ask me, we should just look at these matters one at a time. Let's first clear up the issue about the bloodshed at the Gilded Banquet."

Just then, Ling Wen, who was positioned next to the throne, suddenly spoke up. "We've news of His Highness Tai Hua."

Jun Wu finally opened his eyes. "What did he say?"

Ling Wen was quiet for a moment, then she replied, "He said the Gilded Banquet Massacre had an inside story. He will solve the conflict with His Highness himself, that there's no need for anyone else to interfere. Also that His Highness' request for banishment must not go through. Those are the two things."

"What inside story?" Mu Qing frowned.

"He didn't say any more. That's all," Ling Wen replied.

To think they would see a battle erupt and a hammer coming down heavily only to land lightly like a feather; the heavenly officials couldn't help but feel rather disappointed. Lang Qianqiu was the victim, and the victim was no longer accusing the culprit, so what fun was there to watch? Besides, Lang Qianqiu wasn't telling, and Xie Lian didn't look like he was going to say anything either, so there was nothing more to chew on in this matter.

Following Ling Wen's report, Jun Wu appointed Feng Xin and Mu Qing to aid Pei Ming in strengthening security, and settled a few other matters before waving his hand and dismissing everyone. Xie Lian stayed behind, and he could hear the faint conversations passing by.

"I knew it. Whenever he stirs up anything, Jun Wu would say he'd interrogate him but in the end nothing would come of it..."

"We've been blind; he's actually someone significant. Gotta watch what we say from now on."

After everyone had left, Xie Lian approached the throne and bowed.

"I've caused My Lord problems."

“This doesn’t count as a problem. The real problem was you stubbornly proclaiming yourself the only responsible one of the Gilded Banquet Massacre.”

Xie Lian was hesitant, but in the end still gave an account of the whole story.

After listening to the story, Jun Wu commented, “Xianle, in this matter, you really worked hard for nothing, and pleased no one.”

Xie Lian lowered his head. “I know.”

“Nevermind. You’re always like this,” Jun Wu said. “Tai Hua has now changed focus to pursue the Green Ghost. Once he’s done so, he will certainly come back for you. Have you thought out how you’ll face him?”

“Not yet. But let’s think about something else that’s more immediate,” Xie Lian replied.

Jun Wu chuckled. “Like what? Is there anything interesting that can amuse me?”

“Was it you who sent the Earth Master to the Ghost City as a spy?” Xie Lian asked.

“Yes,” Jun Wu answered leisurely.

“Why?”

Jun Wu answered slowly, “Because it was Hua Cheng who planted a spy in the heavens first.”

Xie Lian was taken aback. Jun Wu stood.

“These past years, news reached Hua Cheng’s ears too fast. Some things he shouldn’t have known, he knew too well. As for what can be done and what can’t be done, where the bottom line is and how to cross said line, he is overly perceptive and precise. That he could connect directly to your Palace of Xianle only proves he indeed has a spy here in the heavens, otherwise it couldn’t have been done.”

To be honest, Xie Lian had noticed this too. Hua Cheng really knew way too much, and so to have Jun Wu say it out loud, it wasn’t hard to believe.

“Does My Lord have any evidence?” Xie Lian inquired.

Jun Wu shook his head slowly. “It’s because there was no proof, but things were regardless suspicious, that I sent Ming Yi to the ghost realm. Who knew that Ming Yi would fall into his hands before the spy was even found? Although you saved him from Hua Cheng’s grasp, now it will be even more difficult to find that spy.”

“Is it the Upper Court or the Middle Court that’s the problem?” Xie Lian asked.

“Hard to say,” Jun Wu said. “Besides you, it could be anyone. Perhaps, there’s only one mole. Perhaps, more.”

No wonder Jun Wu didn’t appoint anyone else to investigate Ming Yi’s disappearance. If it could be anyone besides him, Xie Lian couldn’t help but think: so even the Wind Master, Qianqiu, Feng Xin; everyone could be a possible agent?

Just then, Jun Wu spoke. “Xianle, I know you think highly of Hua Cheng right now. You understand your own position, and others shouldn’t comment on the friends you make. However, when necessary, be wary of Hua Cheng. Don’t give anything away.”

Hearing this, Xie Lian schooled his thoughts.

Jun Wu continued, “To become a Supreme, one must have experienced an unimaginable suffering and pain. One either ascends from such calamities, or is doomed to the depths of hell, never to return. The two Supreme Ghost Kings that emerged from Mount Tong’lu, Black Water and Hua Cheng, are both far more terrifying than you think.”

Xie Lian lowered his head, neither agreeing nor disagreeing.

Jun Wu said, “I don’t know what his objectives or directives are, but he knows the motives and movements of the heavens. That in itself is disadvantageous.”

When he heard the word “disadvantageous”, Xie Lian raised his head and blurted, “San Lang, he...”

Seeing that Jun Wu turned his head to him, Xie Lian paused, then corrected himself.

“Hua Cheng shouldn’t do anything overly malicious. If My Lord thinks about it, with his strength, should he have wanted to cause havoc and raise hell, he would’ve done so already. If he didn’t before, then without real reason, he wouldn’t in the future.”

“I should hope so,” Jun Wu said. “But you know I cannot be too careful.”

After leaving the Great Martial Hall, Xie Lian paced slowly down the streets of the Heavenly Court.

When he passed by the Palace of Xianle, he stopped in his step, and looked it over.

This was the palace gifted him by Jun Wu; glamorous, new, but at the same time, foreign. The large crimson-red doors were shiny and bright, but it was already full of nailed-on talismans and charms, forming a giant “X”, alarming anyone who should see it.

When Shi Qingxuan exited the Great Martial Hall, he had told Xie Lian that his palace was currently sealed shut since it was connected to elsewhere, so Xie Lian was welcome to rest in his palace instead. However, after staring at this Palace of Xianle for a while, Xie Lian suddenly turned around. He didn't go to the Palace of the Wind Master, either. He stopped caring for what he was originally going to do, and instead headed straight to the Ascension Gates, and jumped.

Passing through the sea of clouds, the point of his landing was Mount Taicang.

Upon the summit of this Mount Taicang used to sit the cultivation centre of the ancient Kingdom of Xianle—the Royal Holy Pavilion.

The Royal Holy Pavilion was an impressively expansive cultivation centre; its training grounds and temples covered the entirety of Mount Taicang, worshipping innumerable gods and immortals alike, scintillating and glorious. The main god worshipped was the Martial Heavenly Emperor, and his golden temple was on the highest peak of the mountain. The Crown Prince Temple that once stood on the second-highest peak also used to be magnificent and grand.

Eight hundred years ago, the flaming-red maples that covered Mount Taicang were infamous, and within the crimson maples were endless crowds of devotees. However, when the Kingdom of Xianle fell, the crowds of devotees became crowds of angry mobs, scaling the mountain to set ablaze the Crown Prince Temple; however, they ended up setting fire to the entirety of Mount Taicang, burning it down to nothing but blackened earth and ashes.

The burnt earth, akin to ground seeded with the dead, seemed to become even more fertile. Afterwards, new seeds were planted upon the burnt earth, and new trees emerged. A few hundred years later, the mountain was fresh and covered once more, but the red leaves were no longer, and the scenery was very different than eight hundred years ago.

When hiking the mountain in the past, there used to be a wide, paved green path. On the path, one could often see a pilgrim or a young trainee hauling firewood or water. Now, this path was long gone. Rocks and debris, withered branches and sticks, had covered its tracks, burying it deep underground. As Xie Lian climbed, he used only the strength of his legs, and when he ran into thorns or bushes, he'd take Fangxin and cut them down.

When he reached halfway up the mountain, Xie Lian felt fatigued and leaned against a dead tree, ready to rest. Suddenly, the black shadow of an object came crashing down from above the branches, making weird crackling sounds as it came rushing towards him.

Ch.57: In Search of the Past; Retracing Steps to Mount Taicang 2

Xie Lian shifted his body and evaded the object. At first he thought it was a broken branch or a nest, but when he looked closer, it was a plank so rotten and rusty its original shape was indiscernible, and it had two steel chains connected on either side. If it was anyone else they might not be able to tell what it was, but Xie Lian knew immediately that it was a swing.

In the past, Mount Taicang had swings installed everywhere, both for fun and for training. Back when Xie Lian had only just started to retain memory, there was once when he accompanied his parents to visit the Royal Holy Pavilion to pray for blessings. He saw a group of young trainees sparring, flipping and flopping all over the swings. It was an exciting performance; the king and queen enjoyed it, and Xie Lian clapped and shouted his appreciation. The king and queen were so pleased they heavily rewarded the young trainees, and ever since then the impression that cultivation was something awesome and fun was left deep in Xie Lian's heart. However, as for him formally entering the sect for cultivation in his later years, the reason was no longer because it seemed fun.

After some rest, Xie Lian continued hiking. The higher he climbed, the thicker the bushes became, and every so often a critter would flash by, leaving behind a shadow of a bushy tail. There were a number of squirrels huddling in the trees, munching on pinecones, peeking at this uninvited guest.

Thorns blocked his path, ripping at his clothes and limbs, but Xie Lian didn't notice at all. Finally, he reached the peak of the Crown Prince Summit.

Of course, the Crown Prince Summit wasn't originally called the Crown Prince Summit, but was changed to this name after the Crown Prince Temple was constructed. Amidst the bushes and weeds, there were still remnants of pebble-paved grounds here and there; traces of a large, burnt foundation hidden. That was once the foundation of the temple. Going across it, through the rubble and ruins, through glass debris, was a fractured old well.

Looking from above into its bottom, it was easy to tell the old well had long dried up; the distance to the bottom only but a few feet, only mud visible on the ground. Without hesitation, Xie Lian crossed his legs over, and jumped in.

He didn't tumble onto the muddy ground, but instead traversed through that illusion, and descended for a number of meters before his feet touched solid ground.

The surroundings were so dark that if he were to raise his arms, he wouldn't see his hands. He raised his head to look up; there was no sunlight, either, as if a heavy piece of fabric had blocked it out. Xie Lian felt around the bottom of the well, feeling up several bricks, and pressed them down in a certain order. With a rumbling noise, a short, small door opened on the side. Xie Lian dropped down on all fours and slowly crawled through the path opened by the small door. The moment he entered, he could hear another rumbling noise behind, shutting the opening.

After half an incense time, he finally crawled to the end of the tunnel. Xie Lian stood and straightened his back, snapped his fingers and held up a small flicker of flames.

After that small ball of flames was ignited, as if in response, not far in the distance another faint light appeared like a pearl, waking up from its deep slumber, blinking open its bright eyes.

Soon after, more and more pearls lit up, spreading throughout and illuminating the surroundings that appeared clearer and clearer to be the Great Hall of an underground palace. Above the Great Hall, thousands of sparkling stars were embedded.

It must be hard to imagine that the Imperial Mausoleum of the ancient Kingdom of Xianle was hidden beneath the scorched earth of Mount Taicang. Those brilliant stars were night pearls⁴⁸ and diamonds embedded on the ceiling; the night pearls brightened with light, and the diamonds reflected their radiance. When they crossed paths, the result was a bedazzling brilliance, like a dream. It was like a miniscule Milky Way hidden below ground.

Each of the night pearls and diamonds were priceless; every single one was worth an entire lifetime of endless riches. However, Xie Lian didn't spare them any looks, and walked directly through the Great Hall, entering the crypt at the very back.

In comparison to the Great Hall, this tomb was exceedingly simple, as the chamber wasn't fully completed; there was no glamorous decor, only two coffins. Between the coffins stood a person: dressed in exquisite clothing, a golden mask on its face, and a sword extended, sharp and dazzling, pointed at him.

However, this person only maintained that position and didn't make any movement. Xie Lian approached, minding his own business, without a single care for that person. However, that was because Xie Lian knew, behind that golden mask there was no face, and under those exquisite clothes there was no person. The only thing standing was an empty stack held together by bundles of dried hay.

For so long, only this set of elegant dress robes and this mask stood by the sides of those two solitary coffins in his stead. On top of each coffin was a small golden plate, but the things in those plates were wildly disparate: fruits of some sort, dried and shriveled to the core, and blackened, rotten, hard blocks of who knows what. After Xie Lian entered the chamber he cleaned out those things and threw them out by the corner of the crypt. He felt around his sleeves and folds. Originally he had a half-eaten bun on him, but that bun was given to Hua Cheng, so now he had nothing.

Thus, he said, "Father, mother, I deeply apologize. I've forgotten to bring something for this visit."

⁴⁸ Night pearls are made of fluorite crystals.

Naturally, no one answered him. Thus, Xie Lian slowly sat down, and leaned against one of the coffins.

After zoning out for some time, he finally spoke again.

“Mother, I saw Qi Rong.

“Qi Rong didn’t die, he turned into a ghost. I really don’t know how he lived these past hundreds of years.”

Xie Lian shook his head. “He...killed a lot of people, and now there are people trying to kill him. The heavens probably won’t forgive him, either. Sigh, I really don’t know what to do with him.”

He was going to say more when suddenly, from someplace extremely close, came the sound of soft wailing.

Xie Lian froze, his expression changed drastically.

He listened closely; it wasn’t a hallucination. It really was the sound of crying. The cry was low, soft, and would’ve been easily missed if he didn’t pay close attention. The sound was also high pitched; if it wasn’t a child, then it must be a woman.

The cries were nearby, as if they were only separated by a thin wall, the sound clinging close to him. Xie Lian whipped his head around, and at last confirmed—the sound came from the coffin he was leaning on!

Amidst his shock, the first words that came blurring out were unconsciously joyous.

“Mother, is that you?!”

However, Xie Lian snapped out of it immediately, knowing that what he had desperately hoped for would never come true. His mother had passed eight hundred years ago, relieved of suffering, and she had never devolved to a grudging ghost. The emotion behind those cries was also not of despair, but terror.

In that very moment, who in the world would be hiding in his mother’s coffin and crying?!

Xie Lian couldn’t hold back for another second, and threw open the cover of the coffin with his left hand, his right on Fangxin, ready to strike. But, the moment he saw what was inside, the striking sword stopped in its path.

Lying in the coffin, singularly, was the form of a person covered in elegant, black attire, its face wrapped with a face cover.

The only possible person who it should've been his mother, but the one lying in the casket was most definitely not her. The form was small and short, its body type completely different, and the most significant thing was, this person was trembling—it was a real, live person!

Xie Lian ripped off the face cover. Sure enough, beneath the fabric was the face of a young child!

His heart froze that very moment. He grabbed the child and lifted him, his voice shocked and panicked.

“Where’s my mother? WHERE’S MY MOTHER?! WHAT DID YOU DO TO MY MOTHER’S BODY???”

Although that elegant black dress didn’t look anything out of the ordinary, it was in fact woven by the silk of an extremely rare worm. The silk was a tribute from a small foreign nation, and weaving it to clothing took intricate craftsmanship. Interwoven with fragrant herbal satchels and sealed into the coffin, the cadaver would remain preserved for thousands of years, allowing the dead to look as if they were still among the living. However, at that moment, the one wearing that silk black dress was this child, so where did the body of his mother go? What condition would it be in now?

Xie Lian didn’t dare to think deeply on it, and could only demand answers from this unknown child in his hold.

“Where’s my mother? Who are you? Why are you here? What did you do with my mother’s body???”

But how could a child scared to tears answer any of his questions? He was too scared to even speak. Xie Lian dragged him out of the coffin, and realized suddenly that some ashen white powder had been shaken out of the black dress from the movement.

Face white as a sheet, he looked into the coffin and found the bottom of the casket was also covered with a thin layer of powder. The world spun and Xie Lian felt his heart stop. His grip loosened, letting the child go, and he fell to his knees before the coffin, paralyzed.

He didn’t dare to touch that powder with his hands, but he couldn’t just let it sit and sift either, like incense ashes flying in the wind. Although in denial, he knew deep within what that was.

After having forcibly removed from the silk funeral garb, what else could a sealed cadaver of eight hundred years become?

Instantly, Xie Lian’s mind fell into chaos, unable to think; he held his head with his hands and there was ringing in his ears. Just then, his back tensed, his instincts sensed danger behind; he whipped his head around, his hand fast like lightning, and grabbed, bare-handedly, the blade of a sword. Someone behind his back had tried to stab at him, and this person was that stack of bundled hay!

Turns out, someone had long since snuck in, dressed themselves in that exquisite attire, put on the mask, and disguised themselves as a lifeless haystack, waiting for him silently. A loud clanging sound rang in the air, and Xie Lian broke that blade into two halves with his bare hands, face unchanging with the blood now pooling in his palms. In a flash, he raised his leg and kicked that person in the abdomen, stomping them firmly onto the ground. With their chest solidly pinned, that person grabbed at his boot and struggled yet unable to move an inch, as if they were nailed to the ground. Xie Lian bent down at the waist, and slapped away the golden mask with one hand, revealing the face of a young man.

Xie Lian yelled, “Who are you?? Graverobber??? How did you get in???”

Just then, the child on the side cried, “Daddy!”

This cry finally made Xie Lian remember. This man and child had looked familiar—weren't they the pair he saved that Qi Rong almost cooked and ate back at the Green Ghost's lair?!

Xie Lian understood the situation instantaneously. He swung a punch like thunder at the man's jaw, roaring, “QI RONG, GET THE HELL OUT! I'M GOING TO KILL YOU!!!”

That man laughed as he spat blood. “Cousin Crown Prince! What a joyous occasion! We meet again! Hahahahahaha!”

Although the face was different, who else could this insane psychotic laughter belong to, if not Qi Rong? When he became formless, he possessed that young father!

No need for further explanation, but after his material body was thrown into that cauldron by Lang Qianqiu and melted, to avoid pursuit, he must've used the chaos of everyone running for their lives to possess the young man, and came to the Imperial Tomb of Xianle. Otherwise, how could any commoner know of the secret catacomb of Xianle royalty? And how could they have come in such a short period of time?

The child he brought along may have been for food, or maybe it was for hiding him in the coffin to divert Xie Lian's attention so as to ambush him from behind. Qi Rong held his face, looking wronged by Xie Lian's punch, and shouted,

“Cousin why are you so mad? It's not like you'd die from a stab wound, hehehehehehe!”

Thud, thud, and Xie Lian punched him again twice, his eyes red around the rims.

“How had my mother always treated you?? And you treat her like this?! How could you, to her body—?!!”

Qi Rong humphed. "Auntie is long dead. The person is no more, so what difference do corpses or ashes make? The corpse only changed form, isn't it still there? Here you are, tears and snot, weren't you much tougher when you killed An Le? Can't believe my good cousin actually has two faces, hehe!" He then changed face and spat. "How could I treat her like this? You're the one to blame! Don't you even know how to reflect on yourself? This is all your fault! You, God of Misfortune, have the gall to come cry at the Imperial Tomb of Xianle?!"

Xie Lian stomped down again hard, and Qi Rong screamed, spewing blood from his mouth. But he looked even more excited, using both his hands to hold on firmly to the now blood-soaked white boot while howling.

"THAT'S RIGHT! THAT'S RIGHT! JUST LIKE THIS! THIS IS MORE LIKE YOU! FIGHT, FIGHT, KILL, FIGHT RUTHLESSLY! KILL CRUELLY! Don't give me that saintly look as if you are so burdened with unspeakable sin! Disgusting! UGH!"

That child came crawling over, bawling. "Wah! Dad! Dad, are you alright!"

He couldn't understand what was happening, only that his father was being trampled. From his point of view, Xie Lian was like a violent demon, but scared of losing his only father, he wouldn't back down, and tried desperately to pull off the boot on his father's chest. That young man wouldn't stop spewing blood, scaring the child half to death, and he used his hands to cover his father's mouth, as if that could stop the bleeding. Seeing this, Xie Lian slowly calmed down, realizing that the owner of this body was innocent, and eased his foot slightly.

He pointed the tip of Fangxin down, nudging it to Qi Rong's cheek, and said forebodingly, "Qi Rong, you, get the hell out yourself. Don't believe I won't pull out your spirit with your tongue!"

Technically, to pull out the tongue of another from the root, one could certainly pull out the attached haunting ghost along with it.

Qi Rong cried derisively, "I won't! I won't get the hell out! What are you gonna do? Go on, pull! Come, come come, gonna kill me? I might just die, so don't miss this chance, otherwise you won't ever find my ashes in this lifetime!"

He even stuck out his tongue intentionally, as if he couldn't wait for Xie Lian to make good on his threat, and use that bloody method to pull his spirit out from this fleshy body. He blew many raspberries.

"It's not like the person I'm possessing is anyone important, so why don't you? No one would know, no one would care, Your Highness' holy radiance won't be damaged. Look! I crumbled your mother to ashes, aren't you gonna kill me? Hahahahaha..."

That child couldn't move Xie Lian's boot, so he hugged his leg and cried louder. "Don't kill my dad! Don't kill my daddy!"

Xie Lian's breathing was becoming more laboured, his head dizzy, his body shaking, his hands itching to crush Qi Rong's skull, but he couldn't do it. Qi Rong spread his hands.

"Hahahaha cousin Crown Prince, what a failure, what an absolute failure!"

Xie Lian picked him off the ground, raised his fists and rained punch after punch on Qi Rong's face, yelling with each punch, "SHUT UP! SHUT UP! SHUT UP!"

Yet, the more enraged he got, the happier Qi Rong became. To be able to drag the both of them to the same hell, Qi Rong was filled with rapture, his eyes shone brightly.

"See! There's your true face! Cousin Crown Prince, who knows you better than me in this world? You might look like a pathetic, drowned dog that anyone can trample now, but I know. You're still proud on the inside; you couldn't stand anyone calling you a failure! You must hate me for calling you a failure! Have I stabbed your heart enough to bleed? Hurry! Come! Or are you gonna tell me loudly that this body is innocent, so you won't kill me in order to spare him? Come! Show me what you'll do!"

With so much provocation blended in that cocky, crazed laughter, Xie Lian couldn't stand it anymore.

Schwing, and Fangxin was unsheathed.

With a flash of a swing, the ominous black blade struck down!

BOOK 2: THE GOD-PLEASING CROWN PRINCE

Ch.58: On the Martial Deity Avenue; An Awe-Inspiring First Impression

The sword thrust, penetrating the heart of the ghost, and killed it dead on the ground.

“By heaven's blessings, ghosts are slayed and evil is subdued!”

On either side of the Martial Deity Avenue, cheers erupted like an ocean current, coming in waves after waves, each one higher than the other. Before the crimson-red gates of the palace, in the courtyard, the two cultivators who played the roles of god and ghost bowed to the surrounding crowds and stepped down, standing off to the side. The martial match that opened the act heightened the excitement in the city; not only were the streets elbow-to-elbow crowded, even the roofs were littered with brave climbers, clapping, hollering; the crowds were going wild.

A celebration of this magnitude was truly brimming and bustling. In the history of the Kingdom of Xianle, if any festival of Shangyuan⁴⁹ was to be described thus, it must be the one happening today!

Upon the towering platform, a row of finely-dressed royals and nobles, all wearing courteous smiles on their faces, looked over below to the crowd. Within the palace, a long line of hundreds waited silently.

When the bell chimed, Guoshi smoothed his non-existent moustache and called, “Path-Opening Warriors!”

“Present!”

“Crown Prince’s Celestial fairies!”

“Present!”

“Musicians!”

“Present!”

“Calvary!”

⁴⁹ Recap: Shangyuan Festival is also known as the Lantern Festival, marking the 15th and last day of the Lunar New Year. It’s a day for worshipping and celebrating the celestial heavens.

On a separate note, Zhongyuan celebrates the dead, and Xiayuan celebrates the waters. Yuan [元] means the origins of the universe in Chinese Foundation Philosophy (Iching), and the Yuan festivals divided the lunar year into three: the Upper (Shang), the Middle (Zhong), and the Lower (Xia), each celebrating the divine forces that invigorate the world.

“Present!”

“Ghost!”

“Present!”

“The God-Pleasing Martial Warrior!”

No one answered. Guoshi frowned, noticing a complication, and turned his head.

“The God-Pleasing Martial Warrior? Where’s the Crown Prince?”

Still, no one responded. The one who answered to “ghost” earlier hesitated, then removed the horrifying mask, revealing a clean, pale face.

This young man appeared to be about sixteen or seventeen. His skin and lips were both light in colour, fresh and neat, with a pair of eyes black like obsidian, shining bright. His hair was soft and silky, a few loose strands lightly littered on his forehead and cheeks. He looked quiet and obedient, contrasting with the monstrous mask in his hand.

He replied quietly, “His Highness the Crown Prince has left.”

Guoshi almost fainted. But, for the sake of this grand occasion he couldn’t faint, so he held on, and shouted with angry exasperation, “Wha—?! He left?! When did His Highness leave?? The ceremonial parade is about to leave the palace gates!! When the grand stage is revealed and there’s only a ghost but no god, my old bones won’t be able to swim out of all the spit that’ll come flying at me! Mu Qing, why didn’t you stop him???”

Mu Qing lowered his head. “When His Highness left he told me to pass on the message, saying not to worry, and everything can go as planned. He will return promptly.”

Guoshi was hysterical. “How can I not worry? What do you mean, ‘promptly’? When is ‘promptly’? What if he doesn’t make it??”

Outside the palace gates, some of the people who had been waiting since early morning were losing patience and were noisily demanding for the event to start. A cultivator came rushing forward.

“My Lord Guoshi, the queen sent a messenger asking why the parade hasn’t started? The fortuitous hour⁵⁰ is fast approaching, if we don’t leave now, we’ll miss it!”

⁵⁰ Fortuitous Hour: the best time to perform certain actions, based on the daily fortune calendar that stipulates how lucky each hour is based on the date, month, year, and the stars

Hearing this, Guoshi prayed that a rebel army would suddenly invade and disrupt the Shangyuan Parade completely.

That this headache would happen right at the most crucial moment!

If this Headache was anyone else, he would've roared with rage already; even raising his sword to kill wouldn't be strange. But, this Headache just so happened to be his pride and joy, and the very, very, very distinguished, precious son of another. He couldn't beat him, he couldn't yell at him, and he definitely couldn't kill him. Rather than kill him, he'd more likely kill himself!

Just then, someone ran across the black palace path, rushing into the palace, shouting, "Lord Guoshi, why hasn't the parade started? The time is about to pass, everyone outside is on edge!"

The one who came was also a young man of sixteen or seventeen, his form upright and tall, his skin the colour of wheat, his back carried a long black bow and a snow-white quiver. His lips were pressed tight, his brows knit. Even at such a young age his eyes were strong and determined. The moment Guoshi saw him, he grabbed him.

"Feng Xin! Where's His Highness??"

Feng Xin was taken aback, but instantly appeared to have understood something, and anger filled his eyes, turning his gaze to Mu Qing. As for Mu Qing, he had already put his ghost mask back on without a word, his expression unseen.

Feng Xin said gravely, "There's no time to explain! Please start the parade immediately, His Highness the Crown Prince will not disappoint you!"

There was no escape. Bringing out a grand stage without the God-Pleasing Martial Warrior was death; delaying the procession and missing the fortuitous hour was also death. Despairingly, Guoshi waved his hand.

"Start the music; depart!"

Upon receiving the command, the flutes and strings started to play, and the hundreds of royal warriors at the front of the procession cried, beginning their march, leading the massive, impressive parade. They had departed!

The warriors at the front symbolized the thorny paths of the mortal world. Immediately following were the virgin girls specially chosen, beautiful and elegant, a basket in their hands, tossing flowers in the air like fairies, paving the path with blossoms and filling it with fragrance. The musicians rode in carriages of gold. The moment the procession left the palace gates, the crowds were amazed and astonished, fighting to catch the flowers. However, no matter how glamorous, how grand, this was only the warm-up act. The grand float, a glorious stage, was about to emerge.

Sixteen white stallions decked in gold pulled the grand stage from the depths of the palace gates, slowly coming into sight before the eyes of millions. On the stage was a black clad ghost, a monstrous mask on his face, a nine-foot long sabre in his hand before him; gravely, he shifted to a fighting stance.

Guoshi's heart was tense, waiting for a miracle. Yet, no miracles happened. The crowd broke into chatter. Above on the high platform, the royals and nobles frowned, looking at each other, all wondering,

"What's going on? Why is the God-Pleasing Martial Warrior not on stage?"

"Has His Highness the Crown Prince not arrived yet?"

"Where's Lian-gege?"

At the centre of the tall platform sat a dignified, handsome man, and a pale-skinned, amiable, and gracious noble woman. They were the king and queen of the Kingdom of Xianle. Not seeing the one who should be there, the queen appeared worried and gave the king a look. The king took hold of her hand, using his gaze to comfort, telling her not to worry, and to watch and see what would happen. The crowds below, however, had no one to comfort them, and yelled crazedly, the shouting so loud it could almost raise roofs. The Guoshi could only hate himself for not having the courage to kill himself right there and then. Yet, Mu Qing who was on stage was quite calm. Even without his opponent he looked at ease, taking care of his own mission, and CLANG, threw his heavy sabre down, resting it upright before him.

Performing a round of chilling slaughter, the black-clad youth impressively ended the opening act of becoming a "ghost".

By face and by form, Mu Qing was delicate and elegant like a gentle scholar, but an impossibly heavy nine-foot long sabre was still swung like it was feather-light in his hands; as if it was weightless. Another group of cultivators playing ghosts leapt onto the stage—they were instantly defeated, and chased off the stage. The sword danced skillfully, calm and collected, and made the performance quite exciting to watch, so some in the crowds cheered for him. However, the people didn't come to watch "Ghosts Causing Havoc", so after that act there were more noise demanding,

"Where's the God-Pleasing Martial Warrior??"

"Where's His Highness the Crown Prince??"

"We want to see His Highness playing the Great Martial Emperor! Defeat evil!"

Upon the towering platform, a furious voice shouted, "Where's my cousin? What the hell!!! Who wants to watch this bullshit? Where the fuck is my cousin the Crown Prince???"

No need to see who it was; obviously that loud voice belonged to none other than Qi Rong, the Prince Xiao Jing. Sure enough, many looked up and saw a young man finely-dressed in a light turquoise brocade and a necklace rush to the edge of that platform, raising his fists angrily. This young man was no more than fifteen or sixteen, his face pale and his brows black, rather good-looking; but his face was twisted, as if he would jump off the tower at any time to punch someone. However, the tower was too tall, so if he jumped he'd break his legs, if not die. So instead, he grabbed a white jade teapot and threw it.

That thrown teapot was aimed directly at the back of the head of the ghost, flying at him speedily, looking like it might knock him out on the spot; surprisingly, the ghost shifted his body, raised the long sabre slightly, and caught the teapot on his blade.

The quivering teapot came to a stop at the tip of the blade, prompting another wave of cheers. Mu Qing then flicked the long sabre and the teapot was hurled into the air, later caught by someone below the stage. He continued to play the role of the ghost languidly, swinging the long sabre, slaughtering humans. Qi Rong was enraged and was going to throw something else but the queen had ordered someone to drag him down, and so he was dragged down reluctantly. Yet, the faces of the nobles were looking more and more grim, some becoming restless.

That the God-Pleasing Martial Warrior would disappear right before the Heavenly Procession of the Shangyuan Festival was no laughing matter!

Just then, a roaring cheer like a storm exploded from amongst the people, louder than the cheers from before. A snow-white silhouette had descended from the sky, and landed right before the black-clad ghost!

Upon his landing, his heavy white dress fluttered and covered the grand stage in the shape of a giant flower, a golden mask hiding his face. He held a sword in one hand; the other gently flicked the foreboding sword, the resounding ringing pleasing to the ear. This gesture was serene and confident, as if the ghost meant nothing to him. The ghost slowly raised his long sabre and pointed it at him, and the white-clad martial warrior unhurriedly rose to his feet.

Qi Rong's eyes were shining brightly, his face red. He jumped up and down, shouting, "Cousin Crown Prince! COUSIN CROWN PRINCE HAS COME!!!"

Above and below, all were stunned to silence.

This entrance was like a real descent of a heavenly being, exceedingly audacious!

That fortress tower was at least over ten meters tall, and as the eminent Crown Prince whose person was worth a thousand gold, he still jumped down from it! In that moment, thousands had thought a god had truly descended. When they recovered from their shock, fervor filled their veins; the crowd went hysterical, applauding with intensity. Qi Rong too was shouting, leading the crowd in mad applause, shouting until his voice was hoarse, clapping until both his hands were red. The king and the queen shared a look, smiling, and applauded too. The rest of the nobles eased their brows and sighed a breath of relief before joining in the cheer. On either side of the Martial Deity Avenue, crowds were going wild like crashing waves; hundreds and thousands of men so excited they pushed against the royal guards, wanting to approach closer and holler.

Upon the grand stage, two forms, one black, one white, faced each other. Each with their own weapon in hand, God and Ghost would finally face off.

Seeing that everything worked out, Guoshi finally relaxed his shoulders and mounted the towering platform. After nodding to his fellows in greeting, he found a seat for himself and sat down.

The king chuckled, "Guoshi, how did you come up with such an exhilarating entrance? How exciting."

Guoshi wiped sweat from his face and smiled. "It's indeed exciting. But unfortunately, this lowly servant didn't come up with it. I'm afraid it's His Highness the Crown Prince's own idea."

The queen patted her heart. "That mischievous child. To jump from such a height without a word of warning! I almost stood up in fright."

Guoshi couldn't help but lace his words with pride, "My lady queen can be at ease. The martial might of His Highness the Crown Prince is extraordinary. Tens of meters is nothing to him, and even with towers that are many times higher, he can easily mount and easily jump with his eyes closed."

The queen appeared pleased and said gently, "Thanks to the teachings of Guoshi."

Guoshi laughed. "It's nothing, it's nothing. His Highness the Crown Prince, darling of the heavens, is divinely gifted, marvelously talented, and graciously brilliant. It is the fortune collected for three lifetimes that gave this lowly servant the chance to become his teacher. I have a premonition that with His Highness the Crown Prince's presence, today will go down in history as the most impressive Martial Match of the God-Pleasing Ceremony."

His words of praise were smooth and alluded the heavens. The king smiled and turned his head back to watch the performance.

"I hope that's the case."

In the Heavenly Procession of the Shangyuan Festival, the God-Pleasing Martial Warrior and the Ghost were the two most important roles. Both must be young men exceedingly skilled in martial arts. Especially the God-Pleasing Martial Warrior: the presentation and make of his costume were strict, transcendently glamorous; after dressing, the weight of everything worn came to be about forty to fifty pounds. The Martial Warrior must, under this heavy burden, before the eyes of millions, march around the capital many times, and perform in the martial match for at least four hours. There must be no mistakes made throughout, and so, the performer must be extraordinarily skilled.

Fortunately, both young men were exceedingly talented. The sabre parried with the sword, one slashed, another struck; the thrilling match was a sight to behold. The moves were also calculated to the minutest detail, obviously having been practiced and rehearsed a number of times.

“Who’s the one playing the ghost and parrying with the Crown Prince?” the king asked.

Guoshi cleared his throat. “Your majesty, he’s a young trainee from the Royal Holy Pavilion. His name is Mu Qing.”

The queen said gently, “I see that child is also rather skilled in fighting, just a bit weaker than my son. Maybe about the same level as Feng Xin?”

Guoshi didn’t appear to agree with her sentiment. Qi Rong had been laying on the lap of the queen munching on grapes, and spat out the skins in a rush.

“Psh, psh, psh! No way, no way! Not just a bit weaker, he’s farrrr weaker! Not just anyone can compare to cousin Crown Prince!”

Hearing this, the queen patted his head, smiling, and the rest of the nobles all laughed, their bodies swaying back and forth in mirth. They teased, “Little Rong certainly clings to his cousin! If he doesn’t praise him for a day he’s miserable.”

Down below in the crowd, the cheers and hollers were rising to the heavens: “FIGHT! FIGHT! KILL HIM!”

“SLAY THE EVIL!”

The roars of excitement were growing stronger. Qi Rong was also adding to the noise, both his hands around his mouth like a trumpet, shouting and laughing.

“COUSIN CROWN PRINCE, GO! YOU CAN EASILY KNOCK HIM DOWN WITH ONE HAND, SHOW HIM HOW IT’S DONE!”

Suddenly, the ghost on the stage slashed forward. The Martial Warrior repelled the attack with his sword, but “hmm?”-ed.

Technically, during the Heavenly Parade, the martial match was a performance for pleasing the gods, and at most one should only use a seventh of their power, ceasing after swords touch. However, with the strike he received just now, the sword in his hand almost flew out. Obviously his opponent had used all of his might in that blow.

Xie Lian raised his head slightly and called out, “Mu Qing?”

The young man playing the ghost didn’t say a word, and slashed at him again. Xie Lian had no time to think, and received one attack after the other, their weapons clanging.

“Well, this is more exciting than fake play,” Xie Lian thought, and his spirit heightened, getting more into the fight.

Thus, under the crashing roar of cheers, the weapons clashed and sparks flew. The more invigorating the fight was on stage, the louder the cheers below. Suddenly, there was a deafening schwing, white light flashed, and the crowd “ah”-ed, their breaths held. That nine-foot long sabre of the ghost was snapped out of his hand by the long slender sword of the God-Pleasing Martial Warrior, and it flew toward a stone pillar of the towering platform, and became embedded into it. A few bystanders tried to pull it out, but even when they pulled with all their strength the long sabre didn’t move an inch.

“What kind of sabre is this? What strength you must need!”

Upon the grand stage, the God-Pleasing Martial Warrior shook his sword, and flicked his finger on the blade again. Another tinkling sound, and behind the golden mask came soft chuckling.

“You fought well, but you still lost,” Xie Lian said, calmly but cheerfully.

The ghost had lost his weapon, and half-kneeled on the ground, still silent; but his fist gripped tighter. Xie Lian craftily spun his sword, and under the cheers from all around, was about to lunge his final strike, “slaying” the ghost, when just then, there was screaming from above!

Shocked, Xie Lian lowered his sword and looked up, and saw a blurry shadow falling rapidly from the city wall.

In that moment, he didn’t have time to think, and in a flash, he tipped his feet and pushed off the ground, leaping into the air, darting upwards weightlessly.

He surged and flew, his sleeves fluttering open like the wings of a butterfly, then landed gracefully, light like a feather. Tightly in his hold was a person, and only when he touched solid ground did Xie Lian sigh a breath of relief and look down.

In his arms was a child, head wrapped full of bandages, dirty and unkempt, curled in his hold and watching him dazedly.

Ch.59: On the Martial Deity Avenue; An Awe-Inspiring First Impression 2

This child was no older than seven or eight, and quite the gaunt and small creature. Falling from such a height, his little body was shaking uncontrollably in his arms like a newborn animal. However, from that mess of bandages wrapped around his head peaked a large eye, black in color, reflecting the silhouette of a snow-white figure within; watching him unblinkingly as if he could no longer see anything else.

Loud gasps were heard from all around, and when Xie Lian raised his head, his heart sank. In his peripheral vision, he saw lying on the ground not far away a golden object.

The golden mask that hid his face had fallen.

Xie Lian had landed in the middle of the Martial Deity Avenue, and the ceremonial parade was miles behind him, the procession not having made it that far yet. The sudden commotion broke the steady march of the warriors, the flower-tossing celestial fairies looked panicked, the golden carriages stopped, a number of white stallions stomped their hooves and neighed in alarm, and the strings missed notes and their rhythms disrupted. Some kept going, and some stopped. Without being able to coordinate their march again, the entire situation was going out of control. The crowd on both sides of the street still hadn't had the chance to react, but the King of Xianle upon the towering platform stood up immediately, watching his son's silhouette, his expression worried and grave.

The moment he stood, how could the rest of the nobles remain seated? Thus they all rose to their feet in a frenzy. Guoshi's bottom had only just warmed his seat, but now it was cold again. He was rapidly thinking whether he needed to prostrate on all fours immediately to beg for forgiveness, and Qi Rong had already leapt onto the railing, his sleeves rolled up, shouting in rage.

“WHAT'S GOING ON NOW? WHAT'S HAPPENING? WHY DID THE PROCESSION FALL INTO CHAOS? WHAT THE HELL ARE YOU USELESS TRASH DOING? DID YOU ALL EAT NOTHING BUT PLAIN RICE, SO DUMB YOU CAN'T EVEN HOLD YOUR HORSES???”

The queen's face was pale, her brows slightly knitted, and hurriedly sent for another to drag him back. The crowds were growing agitated and a riot was about to erupt when just then, Xie Lian rose to his feet.

Usually, the honourable Crown Prince was hidden deep within the palace or training at the Royal Holy Pavilion, and rarely had the chance to show his face to the people. This was such a rare occasion that many couldn't help but be intrigued, their gazes all falling on him. Seeing his face, they all held their breath. That young man had long brows and charming eyes, dignified and handsome, radiating nobility; his aura blindingly bright, forcing down the eyes of those looking. With the child in one arm, he raised the other with the sword in hand, and pointed it to the grand stage.

That ghost had been observing the situation from above the stage, and seeing that gesture, he paused for a moment before leaping off the ground.

The crowd wowed in amazement as the ghost, his form like a streak of black cloud, flew through the air to the stone pillar where the sabre was deeply embedded. He pulled it out from the crack, then flipped again; landing in the middle of the street before the martial warrior.

Seeing that he instantaneously understood his intentions and came forth to cooperate, Xie Lian lauded under his breath, "Good, Mu Qing!"

Now both the God-Pleasing Martial Warrior and the ghost had descended from the stage. One black, one white, sabre and sword clashed once again, heightening the excitement, electrifying the crowd. Upon the towering platform, the faces of nobles finally relaxed, looking appeased.

The ghost feigned the act to aim for the child in the warrior's arms; with both his hands holding the sabre, gripping it to his side, he rushed towards Xie Lian. The two faked parrying, moves after moves, strike after strike, then they leapt back onto the stage anew. While the crowd was distracted, Mu Qing used the chance to do a somersault onto the street, grabbed the mask, then dashed through the procession, urging in a low voice.

"Don't scramble! Compose yourselves! Pretend nothing's happened and continue the march! Finish marching this round and return to the palace!"

All within the procession immediately steadied and returned to their posts, their spirits renewed. The moment Mu Qing returned to the stage, his attacks became even more vigorous, clinking and clanking, Xie Lian receiving more slashes. Just then, the child in his arms cried out, probably terrified by being stuck between the clashing weapons.

Xie Lian's left hand held him tighter and he whispered, "Don't be scared!"

Hearing his words, the small child gripped on to the folds of his robes at his chest. Even with a child in one arm and the other hand handling a sword, Xie Lian was still fighting with ease. Parrying for a while, he felt the child in his hold raise his trembling arms and grab hold of his shoulders in a deadly grip, as if he were hanging on for dear life.

Xie Lian soothed again, "Don't worry, nothing will hurt you."

After speaking those words, Xie Lian called in a low voice, "Mu Qing!"

The ghost facing him inconspicuously inclined his head, and Xie Lian struck.

Thus, before the eyes of millions, the God-Pleasing Martial Warrior pierced the heart of the ghost, slaying it on the spot!

Mu Qing, with his ghost mask on, clutched his “wound”, stumbled back a few steps, struggled for a moment before finally—THUD—he fell to the ground, and stopped moving.

Above, on the platform, Qi Rong laughed out loud, applauding.

“DEAD! HE’S DEAD! COUSIN CROWN PRINCE HAS SLAIN THE GHOST DEAD!”

While all this was happening, the magnificent Heavenly Procession had continued to march, and soon moved onto the path back to the palace. Because of how well the act was saved and how the unexpected improvised act was exhilarating to watch, not only did the people not complain, but rather their excitement grew even stronger. Countless within the crowd were shouting “Your Highness”, hollering “God”, and followed behind the grand stage, thousands upon millions rushing to the palace. A few of the generals had to send out many more troops of warriors and soldiers to block the overly excited people. However, in the end they still couldn’t hold them back, and the crowd broke through, pushing themselves towards the palace gates.

The King of Xianle called from the top of the towering platform, “Guards! Warriors!”

At the same time, the hundreds within the procession all had re-entered the palace, and the giant crimson gates closed soundly shut after the grand stage, the colourful banners of the performance now out of sight. The people rushed the gates, knocking and slapping upon it, their cheers ringing to the heavens.

Inside the tightly-closed palace gates, upon the grand stage, the white-clad God-Pleasing Martial Warrior and the black-clad ghost both threw their weapons onto the ground with two clanking sounds, before collapsing heavily on the ground.

Xie Lian was covered in sweat and ripped open layers and layers of his elegant costume before exhaling deeply.

“That was close. Too close. I’m exhausted.”

Mu Qing also removed his heavy ghost mask, and let out a long breath silently, but didn’t complain about being tired.

When he looked over, he saw Xie Lian was still holding onto that young child and frowned wordlessly. Feng Xin, on the other hand, called out as he followed after the grand stage in a jog,

“Your Highness, what are you doing, bringing the child in too?”

That young child was lying on Xie Lian’s chest, his small body frozen and unmoving, afraid to even breathe loudly. Xie Lian sat up.

“What was I to do, throw him back out on the streets? It’s a mess out there, he’s such a tiny creature. He’d get trampled to death.”

He held up the small child and patted his head, asking casually, “How old are you, little guy?”

That child didn’t blink, and his lips uttered no sounds.

Xie Lian continued his query, his tone soothing. “How did you come to fall earlier?”

“Your Highness, the child probably doesn’t dare to speak; he’s obviously scared witless,” Mu Qing said.

Xie Lian patted the head of that young child again, but his unresponsiveness made him lose interest, so he stopped patting.

“So silly,” Xie Lian commented. “Feng Xin, go find someone to take him out through the side doors when you get a chance; see if he’s injured, his head is wrapped in bandages.”

Xie Lian held the young child up and passed him over, but before he could do so, Feng Xin said, “Your Highness, why haven’t you let go?”

“I did let go?”

Xie Lian was puzzled, but when he looked down, he laughed exasperatedly. Turns out it was the child, who was still gripping tightly onto his clothes, refusing to let go.

A few were taken aback and started laughing out loud. While training at the Royal Holy Pavilion, so many devotees, men and women alike, tried their hardest to get a glimpse of Xie Lian, whether it be out of curiosity or devotion. But when they’d seen him once, they’d want to see him again; if they could train next to him, then even better. They couldn’t believe that a child at such a young age would also be the same. Guarding the grand stage were many young trainees from the Royal Holy Pavilion, and they all snickered.

“Your Highness, this child doesn’t want to leave!”

Xie Lian also laughed. “Is that right? That won’t do. I’ve got my own things to do. Go home, little kid.”

Hearing this, that child finally loosened his grip slowly, letting go of his clothes, and Feng Xin picked him up. Even when the person holding him was now Feng Xin, the child was still staring at Xie Lian with his large, dark eye, looking as if he was possessed. Many who were witnessing this started muttering silently, noting that intense stare. Xie Lian himself, however, wasn't even looking at the child anymore, and only spoke to Feng Xin directly.

"Don't pick him up like you're picking up trash, you're scaring him."

Feng Xin put the child back down on the ground. "Enough joking around. Guoshi is freaking out. Your Highness better think about how you're going to face him later."

Hearing this, everyone stopped laughing.

An hour later, at the Royal Holy Pavilion, on the Martial Deity Summit, inside the Great Martial Hall:

Clouds of incense wafted in the air, and the sound of chanting came in waves. Guoshi and three other Deputy Guoshi sat in a line by the side wall within the great hall; their faces clouded. Mu Qing was kneeling before them. Xie Lian was also kneeling, but before him was nothing but the golden statue of the Martial Heavenly Emperor. Feng Xin followed his master and knelt behind him.

Guoshi picked up that exquisitely crafted golden mask, and after a moment he heaved a heavy sigh. "Your Highness, Your Highness."

Even when kneeling Xie Lian's back was straight, his posture perfect and his head raised. "Present."

Guoshi looked pained. "Do you know that, in the history of Xianle, having held so many Shangyuan Heavenly Ceremonial Processions, never once did the grand stage only circle the capital thrice. Thrice!"

Every ritual of the Shangyuan Heavenly Ceremonial Procession, every decoration in every place, had a meaning behind it. To have the grand stage circle the capital once symbolized the kingdom's prayer for the peace and happiness of the people for one year; thus, however many rounds the grand stage made meant however many years another such grand ceremony need not take place. Not only did this signify good fortune, it also saved money. Having only made three rounds, didn't that mean the kingdom would only be protected for three years???

The worst thing on top of that was the golden mask on the face of the God-Pleasing Martial Warrior had fallen mid-ritual.

Since ancient times, the people of Xianle had believed that the spiritual aura of a person resided upon the five facial features; the spirit of a person was on their face, and the best must be offered to the heavens. Thus, in the midst of a ceremony, the Martial Warrior must wear a golden mask to hide their features, because his face could only be appreciated by the gods, and mortals have no right to see it.

Guoshi was both furious and disappointed. “The God-Pleasing Martial Warriors of the past circled the capital at minimum five times, at most fifteen or sixteen times. You? You can do fifty with your eyes closed! A hundred even! But you killed yourself dead at three—why didn’t you just kill me, your master, first??? Now look at you. Our dear Highness the Crown Prince is going to go down in history, dragging me along with you!”

No one dared speak in the great hall. Yet, Xie Lian still looked to be at ease, and calmly responded,

“Guoshi, why don’t you look at it this way. If that child had fallen to his death with no one to catch him, spilling blood on the path of the procession, wouldn’t that be equally ominous? Wouldn’t the parade still have to come to a stop? At the very least, the ceremony ended decently, and it was the best-case scenario. Let’s just call what happened an accident.”

For a moment, Guoshi’s words were stuck in his throat, but then he blew up. “You child! With so many royal guards on site, anyone could’ve caught him! Even if the catch is off and he breaks an arm, he wouldn’t die. You could’ve just marched forward a few steps, performed a little flashier, and everyone would forget whatever had fallen and move on.”

Xie Lian raised his brows. “Guoshi, you understand as well as I. Under those circumstances, no one else but me could have reacted as fast, and there was no second person who could’ve caught him without injuries. Let him fall, there’d be one dead. Catch him, and there’d be two dead.”

His words were confident and self-assured. The Guoshi’s also knew that what he had said was true, and couldn’t refute. But, seeing him kneel before the statue of god, looking like all was well and nothing was the matter, Guoshi was all angry, all amused, and all proud. Before his precious, darling disciple, he just couldn’t get angry, and could only pull at his own hair, and use the pain of his scalp to relieve the worry in his heart.

After a pause, Guoshi spoke again. “Another thing!”

Xie Lian inclined his head. “This disciple is listening.”

“You did well today on stage,” Guoshi said. “But, no matter how well you performed, you can’t just suddenly change things up right before the start without a word of warning. Both majesties were terrified by your act today. Do you know what would happen if we miss the fortuitous hour?”

Xie Lian knitted his long brows, looking puzzled. “Guoshi, in regard to this, hadn’t I already asked for your permission before today?”

Guoshi was taken aback, too. “You’d asked already? Before today? When?”

Bewildered, Xie Lian turned his head and looked, calling out, “Mu Qing?”

Ch.60: Lost Red Pearl; Inadvertent Eyes Red with Desire

Just then, Feng Xin, who was kneeling behind Xie Lian, spoke up grimly. "His Highness did indeed mention it a couple days ago."

All eyes went to him. Feng Xin continued, "Recently, His Highness has been putting a lot of thought into the Heavenly Procession, and yesterday he suddenly came up with the extraordinary idea of jumping off the tower to simulate celestial descent without changing anything else in the programming. At the time, His Highness was in the middle of rehearsals and couldn't get away, so he sent Mu Qing to pass on word to Guoshi to request for the go-ahead."

He raised his head, anger obvious in his eyes. "Mu Qing returned and told His Highness that Guoshi had been informed, so His Highness performed today under the impression that he got permission. Who knew Guoshi had not known, and almost ruined the event!"

The cultivators all looked at each other.

Guoshi asked, "Who knew of this?"

The other three Deputy Guoshi shook their heads, all denying knowing anything. Guoshi turned to Mu Qing, his cloudy expression turning into one of anger.

"Mu Qing, you intentionally withheld communication?"

His words and expression showed he already firmly believed Mu Qing to be sabotaging the affair purposely. Xie Lian glanced at the silent, expressionless youth kneeling on the side and pondered before speaking up.

"Guoshi, I think there must be some kind of misunderstanding here."

Hearing this, Mu Qing shifted his eyes to stare at him, his gaze going dark.

Xie Lian said, "If he had purposely held back word, once the event was over and we compared notes, his deceit would be revealed, and there'd be no way he could escape taking responsibility. Mu Qing is not a short-sighted imbecile, and he wouldn't have come up with such a low tactic. Besides, with the God-Pleasing Martial Warrior missing, what advantage does the ghost opponent have? Please hear him out, Guoshi, and then draw a conclusion."

Finishing his speech, Xie Lian inclined his head. "Tell us, Mu Qing. What happened?"

Mu Qing lowered his eyes and said softly, "I did pass word on what His Highness bade me to say yesterday."

Guoshi frowned. "Won't we know ourselves what you did or did not say? When did you tell us?"

"Yesterday, an hour after the evening lesson, when the four Masters were resting at the Sixiang Pavilion, this disciple spoke from outside the window," Mu Qing said.

Guoshi turned his head to his three fellows, looking puzzled. "Yesterday, after the evening lessons? What were we doing then?"

The moment the question left his lips, he remembered, and his face turned slightly blue from awkwardness. The other three Deputy Guoshi also coughed nervously, their responses ambiguous.

"Not really anything. Just...resting is resting!"

Seeing how the Guoshi stammered, everyone understood immediately.

The Royal Holy Pavilion was a place of quiet meditation and training, and there was very little entertainment; only some small games that could be counted as amusement. One of them, the most popular one, was playing cards.

Cards could only be played secretly, to be seen by no one. The Guoshi had long been bored out of their minds residing at the Royal Holy Pavilion, and so they were heavily addicted. When they started playing, they would forget everything and everyone; falling into a state akin to obsession or drunkenness, uncontrollably emotional, and definitely not able to hear anything from the outside. If Mu Qing had said anything at that time, what could they possibly hear?

One of the Deputy Guoshi said, "Oh, um...maybe there were too many people, your voice was too low, and we didn't hear. Or, um, we didn't hear clearly."

Guoshi demanded suspiciously, "Did you actually go to the Sixiang Pavilion yesterday?"

"I absolutely did," Mu Qing said, and as proof, he relayed the dress, look, and accent of the guard standing at the gate; without fault.

Guoshi had to believe him, but still he frowned. "If you had gone to the Sixiang Pavilion, you could've just passed on the message to the trainee outside the door, or enter the chamber and communicate in detail, why speak outside by the window? You didn't even confirm whether we heard?"

Mu Qing responded softly, "It's not like I didn't try. This disciple had begged the shixiong⁵¹ guarding the door, but for some reason that shixiong had to make things difficult, and wouldn't let me into the chamber or pass on word for me. His words were taunting, and he booted me out.”

After a pause, he continued, “This disciple had no other choice, so I went around to the other side of the Sixiang Pavilion and tried to pass on the message through the window. After I spoke, I heard one of the Guoshi say ‘I understand, now leave’; so this disciple had taken that as consent to His Highness’ plans, and returned.”

The Guoshi pursed their lips and didn’t speak.

At the height of a round of card games, who would pay attention to whatever was said outside?? If they should hear anything, of course they’d respond offhandedly with “I understand”; but in reality, they probably didn’t even know where the voice came from!

Xie Lian knitted his brows. “That such a thing would happen! Which trainee is this impudent? To be so disrespectful to one of my messengers, he’s got guts.”

Although Xie Lian was usually kind and gentle when interacting with others at the Royal Holy Pavilion, and never really put on airs, he was still nonetheless the esteemed son of the king, the prominent Crown Prince, and even as he knelt before the statue of god, he had not shown any meekness or timidity. In that moment of sternness, he was strong and authoritative without fury. Everyone stayed quiet, and the Guoshi wore unreadable expressions on their faces.

“Why didn’t you report this to me when you returned yesterday?” Xie Lian asked.

Mu Qing turned around while still kneeling, and prostrated, his voice quiet. “Your Highness, there’s no need to look further into this matter with that shixiong. I didn’t say anything after returning yesterday simply because I don’t want to make this into a big deal. And seriously, it’s nothing major. If Your Highness was to defend me openly, then it’ll hurt the friendliness between everyone.”

Xie Lian disagreed, sounding upset, “What is this friendliness with everyone? The kind of friendliness you use to abuse others?”

Hearing this, the Guoshi sitting on the side looked even more agitated.

At the end of the day, something like this happened because the Guoshi disliked Mu Qing.

Since they were displeased, then the trainee attendants naturally followed their lead; and truly, Mu Qing himself wasn’t that likeable. So, it was often that not only did fellow trainees inconvenience him, they’d also make things difficult for him at every turn. Of course, this high and mighty disciple wasn’t trying to be sarcastic, but he certainly did make a jab.

Through his words, it was obvious Mu Qing was backing off, but Feng Xin couldn't listen to another word, and suddenly interjected.

"It really was nothing major, but you had to go and make it complicated. If you had told the trainee at the door that you went to deliver a message by his royal highness' command, would he still be brave enough to block your way? Also, right before we departed today, Guoshi asked you where His Highness went, why did you answer so vaguely? Couldn't you have said clearly that His Highness was on top of the tower waiting for the procession to start?"

Mu Qing immediately argued back, calmly and steadily, "I thought Guoshi already knew and didn't expect to be asked that question, so I was confused. But right after, I told Guoshi His Highness had already said not to worry, and that the procession could start without delay as planned, that His Highness would be back promptly. His Highness might not have been there at the time, but there were many on site who heard me, so how can you say I did this intentionally? That I was being vague?"

Feng Xin stared at him angrily. But, if he thought about it in detail, Mu Qing did indeed say what he did; only Guoshi was too anxious and didn't want to make hasty decisions. So if he must pick at faults, there really wasn't much to prove anything.

Just then, Xie Lian spoke up again. "Alright, alright. It's all just an untimely misunderstanding. It's all just bad luck, so stop fighting."

Feng Xin looked extremely displeased, but mindful of his position, he dared not be noisy in the Great Martial Hall, so he stopped talking. Guoshi didn't want to pursue this topic any more either; after all, if they must get to the bottom of things, wasn't he at fault too for being too engrossed in card games? Thus, he simply waved and sighed.

"Let's talk more later. We will discuss more on what's transpired and think of a way to save the situation. The three of you are dismissed; go remove your costumes and do whatever else you must."

Xie Lian curtseyed and rose to his feet. Feng Xin and Mu Qing both properly kowtowed once before rising, following behind Xie Lian, who was about to leave. Xie Lian had one foot over the threshold when he heard Guoshi speak up.

"Your Highness."

Xie Lian turned his head.

"Both his majesty the king and her ladyship the queen asked after you today. If you have time the next few days, go and see them," Guoshi said.

Xie Lian smiled. "I understand."

After leaving the Great Martial Hall, the three of them traversed through a large part of the summit, and returned to the Xianle Palace Training Hall, built especially for the Crown Prince. Xie Lian could finally remove his ceremonial garb.

As aforementioned, for the Shangyuan Heavenly Ceremonial Procession, the ceremonial attire of the God-Pleasing Martial Warrior was exceedingly strict in every detail; every accessory and fold had meaning, and could not ever be misarranged or mixed up. For example, the outer robe was to be white, symbolizing “divine purity”; the inner garb was to be red, symbolizing “canonical tradition”; the golden crown that fastened the hair symbolized “royal power” and “wealth”; white plumes hidden by the heart meant “flight to ascension”; loose cordon ribbons along the sleeves meant “to carry all lives”; etcetera, etcetera.

It would be easy to imagine that, from head to toe, both to wear or to remove was no simple task. However, as the esteemed Crown Prince, naturally he needn't do anything himself; he only needed to stand and open his arms wide in that refreshing, fragrant chamber, and chat with Feng Xin while waiting on his personal attendant Mu Qing to help remove layer after layer of this God-Pleasing costume.

That outer white robe of the God-Pleasing costume was of high quality; the threads delicate and exquisite, the fringes sewn with intricate light golden patterns, elegant but not frivolous. In comparison, the black martial gi of the ghost costume was a difference of heaven and earth. Mu Qing himself hadn't removed his black gear yet, his hands full with the God-Pleasing costume he disrobed from Xie Lian, and his fingers twitched, inconspicuously feeling up the material of that white robe.

Next to him, Xie Lian removed the golden crown, letting his long hair loose, and sat down on the edge of his sandalwood bed, kicking off his snow-white boots, waiting for someone to bring him fresh clothes. He waited for a bit but noticed Mu Qing wasn't moving, so he inclined his head.

He asked, “What's wrong?”

Mu Qing instantly came around and replied, “The costume seems to be dirty in some places.”

Xie Lian “ah”-ed and said, “Bring it over and let me see?”

Sure enough, on the snow-white attire, were two distinct little black handprints. Xie Lian took a look and remarked, “It's probably from that little kid who fell from the sky. I remember he was grabbing on to me and wouldn't let go. That child's face was wrapped all over with bandages, maybe he had tumbled elsewhere or something. Feng Xin, did you check him out?”

Feng Xin was just wrapping up the sword and long sabre, and replied grimly, “No. I took him out of the palace, and was about to take a look at his face as you asked, but he kicked me in the shin! It actually fucking hurt.”

Xie Lian fell over on the bed laughing, pointing at him. "It must be because you're so mean. Otherwise how come he didn't kick me, but kicked you?"

"I wasn't!" Feng Xin cried. "It was like that damned kid was possessed or something, and ran away right quick. Or else I would've picked him up upside-down and shook until he cried from fright."

Mu Qing turned the white robe over in his hands. "That kid must be a beggar; he's too dirty. Just a simple grab and he could leave black prints like these. Your Highness, the God-Pleasing costume can't be dirty, isn't that also a bad omen?"

Xie Lian stayed in his lying position on the bed, and casually grabbed a book from the headboard, covering half of his face. "Three rounds around the capital, I've already got a good name going down in history with the best record. If it's dirty, it's dirty, just wash it."

After a pause, Mu Qing replied quietly, "I will do my best to be careful when I wash it."

Xie Lian flipped through the book and came to the page illustrating the art of the sabre, and recalled the exhilarating sparring earlier that day on the stage. He smiled.

"Mu Qing, you fought well today on stage."

Mu Qing's shoulders tensed.

Xie Lian continued, "Only today did I find out that you're much more skilled with the sabre than you are with the sword."

Mu Qing's expression relaxed and turned around. There was even a little smile playing on his lips. "Really?"

"Yeah!" Xie Lian answered. "But you might've been too hasty. Swinging a sabre is not like swinging a sword, look here..."

The moment the topic shifted to martial arts, Xie Lian became highly enthusiastic, even more possessed than when the Guoshi played cards; he jumped off the bed without even putting on shoes, demonstrating his point on the spot using his hand as the pretend sabre. Mu Qing wore a complicated expression, but after Xie Lian demonstrated a few moves, he started to watch seriously. Feng Xin on the other hand, swung the now properly wrapped long sabre, and chased Xie Lian back onto the bed, shouting,

"IF YOU'RE GOING TO SHOW OFF AT LEAST PUT ON YOUR SHOES BEFORE YOU DO! You're the Crown Prince! Hair loose and feet bare, what a disgrace!"

Xie Lian was just at the height of his excitement but then got chased onto the bed like ducks to the pen, and was rather bitter.

“Alright! Jeez,” he said, and ran through his long hair with both his hands, ready to tie it up before continuing his lecture to Mu Qing. Suddenly, he frowned. “That’s weird.”

“What is it?” Feng Xin asked.

The people of Xianle believed that the pinnacle of cultivation was the harmony of "yin and yang", the unity of male and female. The form of the gods was inexhaustibly ever-changing, and naturally unbound by gender restrictions, shifting to men or women as they willed. Thus, this belief was woven into the design of the God-Pleasing costume. Throughout history, every God-Pleasing Martial Warrior had donned adornments and accessories that possessed the form and details of both sexes, such as earrings, bracelets, and so on. When Xie Lian was preparing for the role, he pierced his ears and put on a pair of earrings.

It was a pair of brilliantly deep red coral pearls, lustrous and smooth, radiant and opulent, rare and sublime. However, when Xie Lian was combing his hair just then, only one of the pair of red coral pearls was left.

The moment he said it was lost, Mu Qing's relaxed expression froze again, but the other two did not notice at all. Feng Xin looked all over the chamber first, inside and out, but returned empty-handed.

"You're so scatterbrained, even something worn on your ears can be lost. I didn't find it in the Pavilion of Xianle, so I'll go out and look on the roads. Pray to the heavens you didn't lose it during the parade."

Xie Lian was puzzled too, but didn't care for it much. "Maybe. If that's the case, then there'd be no way you'd find it. If it's lost, it's lost."

Mu Qing on the other hand, brought out the broom he usually used to sweep. He said quietly, "That pearl is too precious; we should at least try and look. Maybe it rolled under the bed or a shelf."

He then started sweeping, and Xie Lian responded, "Then, why don't we call for a few more hands to help?"

"Crowds get handsy. We don't want people sneaking it in their pockets before we find anything," Feng Xin said offhandedly.

Mu Qing was quietly checking under the bed, but when he heard Feng Xin's words, his face momentarily turned a shade of deathly white. He rose to his feet in a fit, and CRACK, the broom in his hands broke into two. Xie Lian was startled.

Ever since they left the Great Martial Hall, Feng Xin was filled with complaints about Mu Qing, but the words never left his lips. Now that he saw Mu Qing blew up first, he got angry too.

“What are you doing, breaking things so suddenly? Who pissed you off now?”

Mu Qing replied coldly, “Why don’t you tell me straight what it is you want to say, instead of casting shadows where there are none? I have nothing to do with the lost pearl.”

Feng Xin had always been a straightforward individual, and this was the first time hearing someone accuse him of “casting shadows where there are none”, and puffed a laugh from anger. “Why don’t you tell that to yourself?! What did I say? I didn’t say you stole it, but you got all flustered. What, feeling guilty?”

Xie Lian broke out of his shock and sat up on the bed, feeling dread. “Feng Xin, that’s enough!”

A few veins popped instantly on Mu Qing’s forehead. Feng Xin really didn’t think much of it, and asked in confusion, “What?”

It really wasn’t the right time for Xie Lian to explain, so he could only try and pacify Mu Qing. “Don’t misunderstand, Feng Xin’s comments were offhanded; he wasn’t directing them at you.”

Mu Qing clenched his fists tight, then loosened them, but at last did not continue to blow up. However, his eyes were growing red, and he turned to Xie Lian, enunciating each word as he stared at him.

“You...don’t keep your promises.”

“No! You’re wrong!” Xie Lian cried.

Mu Qing closed his mouth and inhaled a few times, threw a furious stink-eye at Feng Xin, then without another word, ran out the door. Xie Lian jumped off the bed and was about to give chase, but was stopped in midstep.

“Your Highness, you haven’t even put on shoes! It’d be a disgrace going out with your hair down and in such a mess!”

“Help me stop him!” Xie Lian ordered.

“At least put on your shoes first and tie up your hair,” Feng Xin said. “And leave him be. He’s always weird like this, who knows what nerve we touched now; going mental out of the blue.”

Mu Qing was long gone by then, and Xie Lian saw he wouldn’t be able to catch up, so instead he grabbed for a hair tie to fasten his hair in a rush.

As he did so, he sighed and said, “He wasn’t going mental, you just accidentally said the wrong thing.”

Feng Xin brought out Xie Lian's usual white training garb from the closet and threw it at him. "What did I say wrong?"

Xie Lian replied as he slipped on his boots. "I can't tell you. Anyway, come with me to go find him, and tell him it was all a misunderstanding, and that you weren't accusing him of anything,"

Feng Xin frowned. "What is it that you can't tell me?"

Xie Lian's lips were sealed tight. Feng Xin was becoming more suspicious, and thought back on Mu Qing's furious expression.

He spoke up suddenly, "He didn't actually steal from you before, did he?"

Xie Lian immediately waved vigorously. "No! No!"

Seeing him like this, Feng Xin was even more sure. "So that's it! No wonder his temper flared, it's because he was guilty! So when did he steal?"

"Not so loud!" Xie Lian hushed anxiously.

Feng Xin lowered his voice, "Something like this happened and you didn't tell me?! Tell me now!"

Xie Lian saw that Feng Xin was already suspicious; if he continued to lie, then it'd be found out either way, so woefully, he had to relent.

"It doesn't really count as stealing, but...sigh, I'll start from the beginning. You remember, right? Two years ago when I first entered the Royal Holy Pavilion, there was once I lost a leaf of gold foil?"

Hearing this, Feng Xin's eyes widened and he slapped his thigh. "THAT TIME?!"

Three years ago, Xie Lian begged and pleaded in all manner of ways until finally his parents relented and permitted him to enter the Royal Holy Pavilion for training before the age of twenty. A year later, the Pavilion of Xianle completed construction. Xie Lian could at last move in, and he did so with great excitement.

When Xie Lian first moved in, he really didn't bring a lot with him. Only two carriages full of books, and two hundred treasured swords. But the queen loved her son dearly, and was afraid the training life would be too quiet and boring, so later she ordered for twenty servants and four large carriages full of trinkets that the Crown Prince loved to be sent to Mount Taicang; the mounting caravans impressive and dramatic. Included in this was a set of the one hundred and eight leaves that make up the Golden Foil Palace.

Building a palace out of golden foils was a popular game enjoyed by the Xianle nobility. At the time, to have so much luxury enter the mountain caused a small wave of complaints. The Royal Holy Pavilion consisted of serious cultivators who weren't quite familiar with the prince's character just yet, and although they couldn't say much publicly, behind his back there was much chatter: did His Highness the Crown Prince come to train, or did he come to play? What could this son of the royal family cultivate if he only came for fun?

When Feng Xin heard those grievances, he had the mind to dispute them, but Xie Lian told him not to worry about it, and smiled.

"It's only natural they should think that way. They'll know after a while that I'm not here to play games, and also, who the number one in this generation of trainees is."

However, not long after, something happened.

Xie Lian was trying to send away as many of the four large carriages and servants the queen gifted him as possible, but when he counted inventory, he found that in the one hundred and eight leaves of gold foils one was missing.

That set of gold foils was packed in the carriages, and once at Mount Taicang, it had never left the Pavilion of Xianle. If it wasn't lost on the road, then it had been stolen. Nothing was found on the road, so Xie Lian brought it up offhandedly to the Guoshi. However, when the Guoshi thought it might have been stolen, he became enraged at the idea that someone within the Royal Holy Pavilion would commit this crime under the allure of golden foils, so he was determined to recover the golden leaf no matter what. If it should be found on the person of anyone, the punishment would be severe to the utmost. Thus, all three thousand and more disciples of Mount Taicang had to stop what they were doing, and got dragged into forming teams to search room after room, chamber after chamber, of every single training hall.

It was a huge fanfare, tiring out everyone; yet unexpectedly, halfway through the search, Xie Lian suddenly corrected himself, apologized for causing everyone trouble, and said he suddenly remembered that he seemed to have already lost a leaf from that set of gold foils while he was still at the royal palace. Meaning, there should only be one hundred and seven leaves total after all.

In order to investigate the whereabouts of the missing gold foil, that night at the Holy Royal Pavilion was complete chaos, utter pandemonium; and right when everyone was sweating with exhaustion, to have His Highness the Crown Prince suddenly make such an announcement to never mind after all, it was inevitable for many to feel aggrieved. Thus, for the longest time there was a lot of noise behind his back; things like, well, he was the Crown Prince, so he got to call the shots, and hopefully next time his memory would be better, and remember the important things before calling for an investigation, and so on. Feng Xin was furious listening to it, but Xie Lian still told him to let it go, and let time pass quietly.

Sure enough, after that, Xie Lian was indeed able to change things around completely; rising to unashamedly become the number one trainee of the Royal Holy Pavilion, over all three thousand and some disciples. Because he was truly friendly and easygoing and not at all dependent on his background, gradually his reputation improved amongst the others.

Feng Xin wasn't one to remember the petty details, so he had forgotten this had happened. Now that it was brought up again, it dawned on him, and he was shocked and angry.

"IT WAS MU QING WHO WALKED AWAY WITH THAT GOLD FOIL???"

"Shh!" Xie Lian hushed him and looked around to make sure no one was around. "That gold foil leaf fell out of the rattling carriage while coming up the mountain. Mu Qing was passing by while carrying water, and found it in the bushes. He kept it under his bed and hadn't figured out what to do with it, but that very night the Guoshi suddenly struck, ordering everyone to search rooms. I didn't know him at the time, and only saw an errand boy who looked distraught. Later while I was sitting outside he came up to serve me tea and admitted everything. That's how I found out."

"Taking without telling is stealing!!! So you helped him bury this matter and told everyone that gold foil was lost in the royal palace???"

Whilst they were talking, Xie Lian had finished dressing, and headed out the door. "That's how it is."

Feng Xin was going to die from rage. He followed after Xie Lian. "Your Highness, did you know that when you first came to the Royal Holy Pavilion, just how many people talked shit about you?"

"Keep it down," Xie Lian said. "He really did look quite distraught at the time. Pale as a ghost. People here at the Royal Holy Pavilion already dislike him, if I had said anything, his life here would be over. Our places in life are different, and we stand on different vantage points in this matter, so consequences can't be compared."

Just then, a few young trainees approached them, and courteously bowed, their faces full of smiles greeting them. "Your Highness!"

Xie Lian smiled back, and the two parties brushed past each other. He said to Feng Xin, "See, I told you to give it time. Now I get along with everyone, who'd dare say anything bad about me?"

The two of them entered Mu Qing's bedchamber, but didn't see a soul, so they exited again to keep searching.

"I already thought it strange at the time, since I'd never known you to have lost any leaves at the palace," Feng Xin said. "But I can't believe you didn't tell me about this for two years, and that you even told me that you met him when he was sweeping!"

"Later, he asked me not to tell anyone," Xie Lian said. "Since I agreed, of course I wouldn't tell, not even you. But now that you know, I'm the one who went back on my word. But you mustn't tell anyone else."

"How does that even count as going back on your word?" Feng Xin said. "It's not like you told me anything, it's his own guilty conscience making him freak out that gave him away."

"No, no. You promise me right now that this stops here. Otherwise I'll break up my relationship with you, and you'll be cursed to never find a wife!" Xie Lian threatened.

Feng Xin "pfft"-ed. "You, break up with me?! The day after our breakup everyone in the Kingdom of Xianle will know one thing: His Highness the Crown Prince fainted from overly tight suspenders while dressing himself—!!—FINE! I won't say a word! Who gives a shit about gossip anyway."

After a pause, he still decided to comment. "I bet he thinks I'm always picking on him because he thought I knew about the gold foil business, but really, I just don't like people like him. A grown man thinking too much about this and that; he must've suspected you told me a long time ago. Even concubines in a harem don't have thoughts and moods as twisted as his, so annoying!"

"It's not as bad as you say," Xie Lian said. "The Royal Holy Pavilion had never lost anything before, meaning this was his first time, and at the end of the day it was for his mother...uh, anyway, he already assuredly promised that he would never do it again, so giving him another chance isn't wrong. And he kept his word. Besides, today when that little kid fell, if Mu Qing didn't cooperate with me, the parade wouldn't have ended so smoothly."

Feng Xin clicked his tongue. "You're already going down in history for only three rounds around the capital, of course he won't do anything else to you. Your Highness, I'm gonna say this right now, I don't believe a word of anything he said at the Great Martial Hall. Who here in the Royal Holy Pavilion doesn't know that, when the Guoshi plays cards, he hears and sees no one? He had to pick that time to pass on the message, and stubbornly refused to clarify under whose orders he was sent, as if he was purposely trying to screw things up."

Xie Lian shook his head and said gravely, "Actually, in regard to this, I might have been indelicate too. I knew Mu Qing is disliked, so originally I wanted him to run more errands for me; let people know that he's my personal attendant, so they'd be nicer to him. I didn't realize they were already nasty to that point. Not only did things get messed up, he got bullied too. If you think about it from another angle, you'll find his moodiness understandable."

Feng Xin disagreed wholeheartedly. "Why is it your fault that he's moody? You're the Crown Prince; how did you end up owing anyone anything for promoting them? Your Highness, I really don't understand why you think so highly of him."

Xie Lian grinned. "Feng Xin, did you know, there are so many people in this world that are nothing but rocks in my eyes."

Feng Xin didn't understand. Xie Lian walked with his hands behind his back.

"Rocks are everywhere, but precious jades are hard to come by. When it comes to martial arts, I've only ever seen two people who could be called jades. One is you. The other is him."

He suddenly stopped in his step, turned his head around, his eyes shining brightly.

"I truly think that Mu Qing is extremely gifted. Such a precious jade; how can it be left to collect dust, and hide its beauty just because of background and temper?" Xie Lian looked determined. "No! I think that's wrong. You ask why I think so highly of him? It's the same reason as why I think so highly of you. Ones that are destined to shine, I must let them shine. Besides, I don't believe that goodwill brings bad returns."

Feng Xin stopped too. After listening to Xie Lian's speech, he scratched his head.

"As long as you know what you want. How you do it is your business."

"Yeah. So. Where did Mu Qing run off to?" Xie Lian said.

Just then, another couple of young trainees approached them, a basket in their hands, playing around. When they saw Xie Lian, they called out to him in unison, their voices happy.

"Your Highness!"

Xie Lian responded with a smile, too. The trainees came up to them and thrust the basket before the two, saying happily, "Will Your Highness have some cherries? They've been washed in the springs already, very clean, and very sweet!"

The basket was full of vivid little round red cherries, looking rather precious. Xie Lian and Feng Xin picked out a few to eat, and they were indeed juicy and sweet.

One of the young trainees asked, "When we walked over we heard Your Highness asking about Mu Qing. Were you looking for him? I think we saw him when we passed through the cherry woods."

"Is that right? Thanks for letting me know," Xie Lian said.

Thus, the two walked hastily towards the cherry woods. Atop Mount Taicang, other than the abundant wild maples, there were also many fruit trees; peaches, pears, oranges, and also cherries. The fruit trees were nourished by springs, bathed in the mountainous mist and sunny dews, bearing fruits filled with spiritual aura. Other than offering them as tribute to the palace, the rest were reserved for the disciples in the pavilion, who could munch them after a hard day's work. Outside the Royal Holy Pavilion, it would be hard to buy a single one even with a hundred gold pieces.

The cherry trees stood row after row, and within the fresh new leaves hung beads and beads of red pearl-like cherries, looking delightfully enticing. Xie Lian and Feng Xin walked for a while looking for Mu Qing in the woods, but soon after, they heard quarreling voices coming from just ahead of where they were, and they unconsciously slowed to a stop.

Ahead of them stood four or five white-robed trainees, each with a basket in hand, appearing to have come to pick fruits. However, they weren't encircling any fruit trees, but rather a person. Even from afar, with their power of hearing, they could still clearly hear the particulars of the quarrel.

One of the young men said, "No wonder there seemed to be less fruit in the woods lately. So it was someone who's been squatting around stealing."

A soft voice replied, "The fruits grown on Mount Taicang can be picked by anyone who's a disciple at the pavilion, so how is it stealing? Besides, there's hundreds and thousands of fruit trees here. There's no way there'd be less fruit by my power alone."

The voice belonged to Mu Qing, and from the sleeve corner that could be seen through from that crowd, it looked like he had already taken off the black ghost costume and changed back to the usual plain training outfit.

That trainee humphed, "Of course if it was only you picking for yourself the fruit wouldn't be noticeably less, but you don't just pick for yourself, do you? You sneak them down the mountain for other people. Exploiting the benefits, how shameless."

Xie Lian understood the situation immediately. The trainees who couldn't stand Mu Qing were picking on him again.

Mu Qing came from a poor family; his mother, who lived at the foot of the mountain in the city, led a meager life. In the past, she could only make some money from seamstressing here and there, but after her eyes went bad she could no longer do that work, and could only wait for Mu Qing to bring home the money he'd earn from running errands on the mountain. Sometimes he would pick up some fresh fruit from Mount Taicang to have her try, and it wasn't really anything major because there weren't any rules against it. Nonetheless, when spoken of out loud, it still sounded bad. To have it brought up like this was even more insulting and embarrassing.

Mu Qing's voice was laced with ice. "Zhu-shixiong, we usually rarely talk, but you have picked on me again and again. Yesterday, too, you wouldn't let me through to the Sixiang Pavilion to pass on word. How have I offended you?"

That young man named Zhu was indeed the trainee that guarded the door to the Sixiang Pavilion, and when he heard the matter from the day before brought up, his anger flared.

"You're the one who wasn't mindful enough to do your job and almost botched the event, so why are you blaming me? You should blame yourself for acting all secretive, making other people think you're up to no good. If you had just said outright what you were doing, nothing would've happened. Thanks to you, His Highness almost messed up, and I got yelled at by the Guoshi!"

He threw the basket on the ground as he griped, gesturing for everyone to go in to attack.

Xie Lian couldn't watch anymore and shouted, "Stop!"

When the trainees heard his voice they were all shocked, turning their heads and called, "Your Highness!"

Xie Lian and Feng Xin approached, and by then, that Zhu-shixiong had already grabbed Mu Qing by the shoulder and had him pushed against the trunk of a tree; the brawl not yet started. If they really did start, even if it was one against twenty Mu Qing would've gained the upper hand; but, if he wanted to stay in the Royal Holy Pavilion, then he must never raise his fist.

Xie Lian smiled. "What's everyone doing?"

That Zhu-shixiong was a decent, plain-looking young man, and had looked up to the Crown Prince. He froze hearing Xie Lian's inquiry and hurriedly let go of Mu Qing.

"Um, this, we were..."

Xie Lian continued to smile. "Although I don't know why everyone is quarreling, Mu Qing is my personal attendant, so if he does anything it's generally under my command. I didn't realize there was some offense in having him pick some fruit for me?"

The trainees all bowed. "No, no! So it was His Highness that asked him to come! We misunderstood!"

On the side, Mu Qing leaned against the tree, and was first taken aback when he heard Xie Lian say him coming was under his command. He quickly righted his collar, lowered his head, and didn't speak. Cold sweat was rolling down the backs of those trainees as they profoundly apologized to Xie Lian then to Mu Qing, and finally hurried away after picking up their baskets, escaping the cherry woods.

Xie Lian saw the basket Mu Qing had brought on the ground, and bent down to pick it up and passed it to him. "Want some help?"

Mu Qing didn't take the basket, but raised his head and watched Xie Lian with an unreadable expression for a moment before he spoke. "Your Highness."

"What is it?" Xie Lian said.

"Why must you always show up at times like these?"

Xie Lian: “?”

Feng Xin, on the other hand, became upset. “What do you mean? Is it wrong to come and save you?”

Mu Qing gave him a look and took the basket.

Feng Xin stiffened, and said, “Listen up! What happened before was my fault! I didn’t mean to accuse you, and everything was only said offhandedly. There’s no need for you to think deeply about anything, suspecting this or that. I don’t care for anything other than His Highness, and I’m not interested in gossip. That’s all I have to say, so stop being so moody!”

“PFFFT!” At first Xie Lian thought his words were too aggressive, but towards the end, it was strangely funny. Mu Qing glared at Feng Xin, and Xie Lian waved his hand. “Alright, alright. Everything Feng Xin said is true. Let’s just forget anything happened. Nothing’s happened.”

A moment later, Mu Qing said begrudgingly, “I’ll look for that red coral pearl again later. Maybe it was dropped on the street.”

It wouldn’t be good for Xie Lian to look too much like he didn’t care, so he replied, “Alright. Only if you have the time. But if it was dropped on the streets then it’ll have gotten picked up by somebody by now.”

It seemed Mu Qing had nothing more to say, so he picked up the cherries that were dropped onto the ground and put them back into his basket. He didn’t pick that many in the first place, and moved to leave the woods. Xie Lian, however, saw many enticing fresh cherries, and casually picked a bunch and dropped them into his basket. Mu Qing was slightly taken aback.

Xie Lian said, “Next time you want to pick fruits for your mother, just say you’re picking them under my command, and no one will say anything. The Guoshi told me to return to the palace for a few days, so I plan on leaving tomorrow. Why don’t you make your visit down the mountain too? Let’s just head back for today.”

It took a while, but at last Mu Qing said in a quiet voice, “Thank you, Your Highness.”

The next day, Xie Lian descended the mountain with Feng Xin and Mu Qing in tow.

The moment they reached the foot of the mountain, right outside the giant mountain gates, they saw a shining, golden carriage. A young man dressed in a collared brocade, with whip in hand, was lying just in the front seat of the carriage; his legs crossed, looking lively and important. The second he saw Xie Lian exiting the gates, he leapt to his feet and ran towards him in a mad dash, shouting in obvious joy.

“Cousin Crown Prince!”

Naturally, it was Qi Rong. And only he would have the free time to wait for Xie Lian at the foot of Mount Taicang.

He skipped over and cried, “My patience has finally paid off!”

Xie Lian grinned and ruffled his hair, laughing. “Did Qi Rong grow taller again? How did you know I was returning to the palace today?”

Qi Rong giggled. “I didn’t. I just waited, and knew you’d have to come out sooner or later. I refuse to believe you wouldn’t.”

“You’re quite free, aren’t you?” Xie Lian said helplessly. “Are you studying properly? What about sword practice? If mother asks me to test your studies again, I won’t help you.”

Qi Rong blinked, his eyes shifty, and suddenly he jumped up and down. “Nevermind all that! Look at my new carriage! Cousin Crown Prince, come and board it, ride my carriage back to the palace!”

He grabbed Xie Lian’s hand and pulled him to the carriage, but Xie Lian only felt danger.

“You’re driving?”

Feng Xin and Mu Qing approached too. Technically, servants must sit at the front, but Qi Rong’s face dropped immediately, cracking the whip in his hand.

“I asked cousin Crown Prince to get on, but I didn’t say you two, too. Think I’d let lowlives touch my golden coach? Get the hell outta here!”

Xie Lian quietly barked, “Qi Rong!”

Feng Xin had met Qi Rong many times before, and already knew of his potty mouth, and his vulgar and condescending character, but Mu Qing had never entered the palace before, and so had naturally never gotten the chance to go near Prince Xiao Jing. Qi Rong was feeling extremely aggrieved, but seeing Xie Lian about to walk away, he painfully and begrudgingly consented the two shitty lowlives to board his precious golden coach.

However, they had only just entered the coach, and all three of them immediately regretted the decision. Qi Rong drove like a madman, the whip in his hand lashing nonstop, screaming who knows what, and the white horse neighed in shock, the wheels spinning frantically, thrashing down the streets, refusing to stop no matter how much Xie Lian screamed for him to. They almost crashed into a number of pedestrians and stalls, and thank goodness for Feng Xin and Mu Qing who sat at the front and grabbed the reins to sidetrack the horse, otherwise this berserk journey was going to cost at least twenty lives. When they finally reached the palace and the coach slowed down, Xie Lian, Feng Xin, and Mu Qing all breathed a sigh of relief at the same time. Xie Lian wiped off his cold sweat, and the other two had been lashed by Qi Rong's whip a number of times, their hands covered in welts. Yet Qi Rong rose to his feet, one leg stepping on the white horse's behind.

He proclaimed proudly, "What do you think, cousin Crown Prince? I drive pretty well, right!"

Xie Lian got off the carriage and replied, "I'm going to tell Father and Mother to confiscate your coach."

Qi Rong was shocked. "WHAT!"

Regarding Xianle culture: one, they loved gold; two, they loved precious stones; three, they loved beauties; four, they loved music; and five, they loved art. The Palace of Xianle was thus the most distinguished place, where all that they loved coalesced. Traversing through the large courtyard, walking down the crimson hallway, not everything was gilded or built of jade—as there were also masterpiece paintings hung all around, and soft music wafting in the air, creating the illusion of paradise.

The palace was Xie Lian's home, the place where he grew up. Feng Xin was chosen to be his personal guard at the age of fourteen, and had long gotten used to the sight. However, it was Mu Qing's first time seeing such a building, and he couldn't help but be awed. Yet, the more awed he was, the more careful he became, and the more he didn't dare to have others sense what he was feeling, didn't dare to take a wrong step.

Xie Lian went to meet with the Queen straightaway. The Queen was resting at Qifeng Manor, leaning on a small tea table tasting new leaves. She had long received the message that the Crown Prince had returned; her eyes crescent-shaped in joy, she extended both arms before her son even walked near.

She said, "Finally willing to come home to see mom?"

Feng Xin and Mu Qing stood guard outside. Xie Lian entered the chamber with Qi Rong in tow, and he reached out to hold his mother's hands when he approached.

"Didn't I just visit two months ago?"

The queen grumbled, "What a heartless child. Even Rong-er⁵² knew to keep an old woman like me company, but here you are, sounding all self-righteous when you haven't come home for two months."

⁵² "-Er" is the word for "son" or "child", but when added to a name, it becomes an affectionate tag; akin to meaning "Little" or "Sonny".

Xie Lian laughed. "And how is Mother old? You look no more than ten-something! Like we're of the same generation."

The queen was jubilant hearing those words of praise. Even if she had a son as old as Xie Lian, because of her status and wealth, she was very well-maintained, and still looked the part of a noble beauty. Still, the word that left her lips was light admonishment: "Flatterer."

Xie Lian glanced at the small tea table and there was a jaded cup, its contents emitting a strange fragrance. He asked curiously, "What's this?" and picked it up.

But the queen warned, "Don't drink it! You can't drink that!"

Ch.63: Lost Red Pearl; Inadvertent Eyes Red with Desire 4

Xie Lian was curious. "Why can't I drink this?"

The queen reached for the small jaded cup and took it from him, poured a bit of its contents on her handkerchief, and pressed it gently a few times on her face.

"Mount Taicang recently sent in a batch of fresh fruit. I don't like cherries, but there was a method of making it into paste for facials, so I squeezed some for fun. There's not much use for it and I was about to have it thrown out, so I can't possibly have you drink it!"

Xie Lian smiled as he listened, but suddenly recalled the events of the day before. There were very few times in a year where Mu Qing's mother could taste cherries, and Mu Qing himself would get bullied just for trying to pick some. It was something of a sensitive topic, and Xie Lian was afraid Mu Qing would be uncomfortable listening to it, so he smiled and changed the subject.

"Then do you have anything that I could eat?"

The queen chuckled. "The way you make it sound, others will think I starve you. But you've been a picky eater ever since you were young, I can't plump you up. You've gotten so thin since you entered the mountain; today you'll eat whatever I tell you to, no fuss."

The mother and son conversed for a while, and the queen asked about the incident during the Heavenly Procession, sounding quite concerned.

"By the Guoshi's report, it sounds serious. What's going to happen? Will you be punished?"

Xie Lian didn't have the chance to answer before Qi Rong cut in.

"Hmph! That wasn't cousin Crown Prince's fault. The one who fell off the wall wasn't him; if anyone must be punished, then it should be that little fiend!"

"What 'little fiend'?" Xie Lian thought in annoyance.

He hadn't corrected Qi Rong, but the Queen laughed. Just then, she noticed the two outside the manor.

"Who's the child next to Feng Xin? It's the first time I've seen another person by your side."

Xie Lian replied cheerfully, "That's Mu Qing. He was the one who played the ghost on stage yesterday."

Hearing this, Qi Rong slightly raised his brows.

The queen said, "Really? Have him come in so I can see his face. Feng Xin can come in too."

Thus, Feng Xin and Mu Qing entered the chamber and knelt before the queen. She took her time looking over Mu Qing and said to Xie Lian, "I thought he fought rather well yesterday; a good, courteous child. Looking at his face you'd think he'd be a gentle minister, but who knew he could be that tenacious using a sabre."

Xie Lian grinned. "Right? I think he's really good too."

Qi Rong on the other hand, commented coolly, "Oh? The ghost from yesterday was him?"

Xie Lian heard his tone and felt dread. Sure enough, the next second, Qi Rong suddenly exploded, snatched that small jaded cup from the little tea table, and swung it at Mu Qing's head.

"Here! Your reward!"

Fortunately, Xie Lian was faster, and smacked Qi Rong's hand, forcing him to drop the cup so the splash didn't make it to Mu Qing's face. Xie Lian pulled him back by the collar.

"Qi Rong, what are you doing?!"

Even whilst being held, Qi Rong was still rampant and raging. "Cousin, I'm helping you discipline an impudent servant! Before you made it yesterday, he sure was enjoying himself, taking in all the limelight! Who the fuck do you think you are? The star of the Heavenly Procession? Gonna overthrow the heavens too?!!"

The queen was stunned. "Rong, wh...what are you doing?"

Mu Qing's face was spared the splash, but his clothes hadn't been. Because the queen hadn't given word, he remained kneeling on the floor, his face grim and pale. Xie Lian passed Qi Rong to Feng Xin.

"Don't let him hit anyone."

Feng Xin only used one hand to restrain Qi Rong, but Qi Rong was kicking and punching, spitting as he shouted.

"And who the fuck do you think you are to have the fucking nerve to touch me so casually!"

Xie Lian could feel his head aching. "Qi Rong, you're getting more and more out of control!" Then he turned to the queen. "Mother, I forgot to mention something. Please take away his golden carriage."

Qi Rong was shocked and yelled, "NO! NO! WHY? THAT'S AUNTIE'S BIRTHDAY GIFT TO ME!"

"Even if it is, it must be confiscated," Xie Lian said. "We almost ran into trouble on the streets! Best not to touch it again until you learn how to drive properly."

The queen "ah"-ed and asked, "Trouble? What trouble?"

Xie Lian retold to her the crazy saga of Qi Rong's driving. Qi Rong was furious, his eyes red around the rim.

"COUSIN CROWN PRINCE IS WRONG! I DIDN'T RUN INTO A SINGLE PERSON!"

Xie Lian snorted. "That's because someone stopped you!"

Qi Rong struggled out of Xie Lian's hands and ran out of Qifeng Manor in a mad fit, not turning back even when the queen called out to him.

She said sadly, "I'll talk to him tomorrow about confiscating his carriage. Sigh, that child had wanted a coach for the longest time, so when his birthday came around, I saw that he was still desperately wanting one, so I gifted it to him. Who knew it'd turn out like this? Had I known, I wouldn't have given it to him."

"Why must he have a carriage?" Xie Lian wondered.

"He said it's so he could go to Mount Taicang anytime to bring you home," the queen replied.

Xie Lian fell silent, learning that at the end of the day, it was a gesture of goodwill. After a moment, he spoke. "It's better instead to find him a good teacher, and restrain that temper. He can't keep going on like this."

The queen sighed. "And what teacher can restrain him? He only ever listens to you. We could hardly have him enter the mountain to go cultivate with you? Besides, the Guoshi would die before taking him in as a disciple."

Xie Lian found the idea both hilarious and horrifying and shook his head. "With a temper like that, if he should enter the Royal Holy Pavilion, he would raise hell for sure."

Both the mother and the son were deeply troubled by this, and couldn't think of any ideas, and so they let it go for the time being. That evening, after having seen his parents and caught up, Xie Lian rose to leave the palace.

Everyone knew that the Crown Prince was deeply obsessed with cultivation, and ever since he entered the Royal Holy Pavilion, he visited his parents less and less. The king didn't say much on the matter, but the queen was always reluctant to see him go. After leaving the palace, Xie Lian casually strolled around the royal capital, and accompanied Mu Qing to make a visit to his home, as suggested the day before.

The opulent tall red gates and the impoverished slums were a street away from each other. Mu Qing's home was situated in a dark alley of the most bustling area of the royal capital.

The three of them had just turned into the alley when five or six children in rags surrounded them, calling out, "Gege. Gege is back!"

Xie Lian was confused at first, wondering why they would call strangers "gege", but then he discovered that the "gege" they were calling wasn't him, but Mu Qing. The children called out to him sweetly but Mu Qing ignored them.

"There's nothing this time. Don't call me anything."

His face was wooden, but his voice wasn't cold. He turned to Xie Lian.

"Don't mind them, Your Highness, they're just kids from the block."

However, that group of children was obviously very comfortable around him, having grown up playing together, and they weren't afraid of him at all. They giggled and surrounded them, their dirty little hands extended, begging for munchies from Mu Qing. Finally, Mu Qing reached for the gem-like cherries in his bag and handed them out.

Feng Xin was astonished seeing this, as if Mu Qing doing anything of the sort was a miracle. After all, Mu Qing had a pretty-boy face that looked extremely selfish and cold-hearted; the type that, despite seeing someone die from starvation on the streets, would still keep a tight hold on his own food. Xie Lian, on the other hand, wasn't surprised at all.

At first he had also wanted to find something to give to the children, but he didn't usually carry sweets on his person, and having Feng Xin give coins was too much like dismissing beggars that Xie Lian didn't think it appropriate. Suddenly, there was a boom of galloping noise coming from the main streets, the long shrieking whinny of a horse, and people screaming.

The three of them stopped, then Xie Lian rushed out of the alley. All around the main street was chaos; stalls toppled and people on the ground. The pedestrians were all running to get away; apples and pears rolled all over. He hadn't figured out what was happening when he heard the crazed laughter of a young man.

"OUT OF MY WAY, GET OUT OF MY WAY! I DON'T GIVE A SHIT IF ANY OF YOU GET TRAMPLED!"

Feng Xin swore. "It's Qi Rong again!"

Sure enough, Qi Rong stood atop that glamorous golden coach, his expression malicious, lashing his whip wildly, the white horse howling from the welting.

"STOP HIM!" Xie Lian shouted.

That golden carriage whooshed by them, and Feng Xin acknowledged, "Understood!" and charged on ahead. Xie Lian was about to go check for any wounded from all the toppled stalls and knocked-over pedestrians left behind Qi Rong's mad trail, when suddenly he noticed something wrong. He whipped his head around, and saw that just behind that large golden coach, something was being dragged along with a thick, long hemp rope. At the end of the rope was a gunny sack, and in that sack there seemed to be something struggling. It looked like there was a person in that sack.

That moment, Xie Lian could only feel his blood run cold. The next second, he rushed forward.

From all the whipping, that white horse was dashing like it was running for its life, spinning the wheels of that carriage furiously. Feng Xin went to hold the horse back, but probably wouldn't be able to stop it immediately. Xie Lian raced up to the carriage in only a few steps, unsheathed his sword, and struck down. That rope snapped in two, and the gunny sack dropped to the ground, rolled, and came to a stop.

Xie Lian bent forward to inspect it. That gunny sack had been dragged for who knows how long and was ripped from all the scraping. It was extremely dirty, covered in blood; looking like a dead body-bag. Another swing from his sword, and the rope tied around the opening was cut. He opened the bag and looked, and there was indeed someone inside. What's more, it was a young child!

Xie Lian ripped open that entire sack. The young child within was curled into a ball, hugging his head tightly; his filthy clothes were covered either in giant footprints or fresh blood. Even his hair was tangled with blood. He was a mess, and it was obvious he had been heavily beaten by someone, so much so that he didn't even look human anymore. Judging by his size, he was only seven or eight; a very small creature, shaking as if a layer of his skin had been forcibly peeled off. Truly incredible that he was still alive after such a violent beating!

Xie Lian reached out a hand to feel his neck, and found that his pulse wasn't too weak, and sighed a breath of relief. He immediately picked up the small body, turned around and yelled, enraged, "FENG XIN! ARREST QI RONG!!!"

He could not believe that something like this could happen in the Kingdom of Xianle. Under the light of day, on the main street, a member of the nobility stuffed a live human in a gunny sack to be dragged behind a horse carriage! If he hadn't seen and stopped it, this small child would've been dragged to death that day!

Some distance away came the sounds of whinnying and the angry roars of Qi Rong, and soon after, Feng Xin yelled back, "He's been stopped!"

Xie Lian rushed towards them just in time to hear Qi Rong howl in rage.

"YOU FUCKING LOWLY SERVANT DARE HURT ME! WHO GAVE YOU THE BALLS?!!!"

Turns out, Feng Xin couldn't stop him, so he tried to snatch the reins from him instead. Of course Qi Rong wouldn't let him, so the two pulled back and forth, and in a moment of carelessness Feng Xin bumped and pushed him off the carriage. He fell to the ground and rolled a few times, his knees scraped. Seeing that he was surrounded by bystanders, he felt nothing but rage and embarrassment.

However, Xie Lian cut in. "I did!"

Qi Rong opened and closed his mouth a couple times before finally crying, "Cousin Crown Prince!"

Xie Lian said angrily, "Look at what you've done! Qi Rong, I really..."

Just then, he suddenly felt the child in his arms twitch, seemingly to have loosened the hands hugging his head, and was peeking at him from the gap between his elbows.

Xie Lian immediately restrained his anger, and lowered his head to soothe him in a gentle voice. "How do you feel? Do you feel pain anywhere especially?"

That child was amazingly still conscious, not fainted from pain, not frozen in shock, and shook his head. Xie Lian saw that half of his bloody little face poked out and was about to check for other head injuries, but that child firmly covered the other half of his face with his hands, stubbornly refusing to show him.

Ch.64: Lost Red Pearl; Inadvertent Eyes Red with Desire 5

Xie Lian soothed, "Don't be afraid, I'm not going to do anything. I only want to check your injuries."

That child, however, pressed his hands harder, revealing only one large obsidian eye, looking panicked. But this panic didn't seem like he was afraid he would get beaten, but rather that something would be discovered.

Looking at this little face half-covered with only an eye, Xie Lian suddenly thought he might've seen this child somewhere, and squinted his eyes.

Qi Rong saw his upset face and explained, "Cousin Crown Prince, that little fiend ruined your grand ceremony yesterday, so I avenged you. Don't worry, I was careful, he won't die."

Sure enough, the child held in his arms was the one who fell from the city wall during the Shangyuan Heavenly Ceremonial Procession the day before!

No wonder Xie Lian thought he looked familiar. This little child hadn't even changed; he was still wearing the same outfit as the day before, but because of all the beating and dragging, he was filthier and looked nothing like he had before, not even like he was the same person.

Xie Lian couldn't hold back his anger anymore. "WHO TOLD YOU TO AVENGE ME??? IT HAS NOTHING TO DO WITH THIS CHILD, IT WASN'T HIS FAULT!"

Qi Rong justified himself: "Of course it's his fault. If not for him, you wouldn't have gotten scolded by the Guoshi!"

This ruckus was growing out of hand, and the crowd watching was becoming bigger, all whispering to each other. Just then, Mu Qing approached too, and Qi Rong pointed his whip at him, his expression laced with hostility.

"And you! You lowly servant. Just by the looks of him I can tell he doesn't know his place. If you don't discipline him, sooner or later he's going to overthrow and step on you, the master. I helped you discipline him, but you turned around and defended him instead, and told on me too. Now Uncle and Auntie not only disregarded my good will, they even confiscated my golden carriage! Cousin, that was my birthday gift! I've wanted it for over two years!!"

Mu Qing gave Qi Rong an unreadable sweeping look. Xie Lian puffed a laugh from rage.

"I don't need your good will, not like this. Are you really avenging me? Or are you avenging yourself?"

“...” Qi Rong said. “Cousin, why would you say that to me? And what have I done wrong in following after you?”

Xie Lian couldn't argue with him. “Qi Rong, listen here. From now on, you're not allowed to touch this child. Not even a finger! DO YOU HEAR ME?!”

Just then, Xie Lian suddenly felt a pull on his neck. He was just at the height of his fury and was startled. He looked down and saw that young child had buried his face in his chest; his two hands tightly encircled around Xie Lian's neck. Xie Lian felt him shake uncontrollably and thought he was hurting.

He asked hurriedly, “What's wrong?”

That young child was covered all over in mud, grime, and blood, filthy and unkempt, and it all smeared onto Xie Lian's white robe, but Xie Lian didn't mind it at all. He gently patted the child's back to comfort him and said in a gentle voice, “I'll go take you to the doctors right now.”

That child didn't respond but he hugged Xie Lian even tighter. He was tense and wouldn't let go, as if he was holding on to a lifeline. Qi Rong saw that Xie Lian wouldn't acknowledge his goodwill, his heart solely on outsiders, then saw that kid had sullied Xie Lian's robes with that bloody, muddy shit, and his anger flared. He raised the whip, and was about to lash the back of that child's head. Feng Xin was standing on the side, and in a split-second, his leg flew out and kicked Qi Rong right on the arm.

There was a loud CRACK and Qi Rong screamed; the whip fell to the ground, and his right arm dropped limply at an abnormal angle. He was frozen in disbelief, and it was a while before he slowly raised his head, glaring at Feng Xin, enunciating each word:

“You, DARE, BREAK MY ARM!”

The words were extremely cold. It was only until after he kicked that Feng Xin realized what he had done, and his face changed, but Mu Qing's face changed more.

It was no matter how much they detested Qi Rong behind his back, that was one thing. But as a personal guard, to have transgressed and accidentally broken the arm of royalty; that was something completely different!

Just then, Xie Lian had had his hands full with that child, and behind him was packed with onlookers, so he couldn't dodge; but if he had dodged, it would've been a piece of cake. Only, Qi Rong came at him with such aggression and so out of the blue, Feng Xin moved too fast without thinking, and Xie Lian didn't have the chance to stop him. Now everything was in even more of an uproar, and Xie Lian didn't have time to think. His clothes were getting soaked in blood, if they delayed any longer the child might just die right there.

Xie Lian made a split-second decision, inhaled deeply, and shouted in a clear voice, "EVERYONE, IF ANYONE WAS PULLED INTO THIS INCIDENT TODAY, PLEASE RECORD ANY DAMAGES AND LOSS. I WILL TAKE ALL RESPONSIBILITY WITHOUT FAIL!"

Then, he turned to Feng Xin and Mu Qing. "Save the child first. Take Qi Rong away, and don't let him continue havoc outside."

Finishing his instructions, Xie Lian ran towards the palace with the child in his arms. Feng Xin received the command, his expression back to normal, and picked up the raging Qi Rong before following after Xie Lian. The soldiers guarding the palace gates thought it was strange to see the Crown Prince racing back having only left but a short while ago, but naturally they wouldn't stop him. Thus, Xie Lian ran straight to the medical pavilion and entered the infirmary, leaving Feng Xin and Mu Qing outside the door with Qi Rong under arrest.

The Crown Prince rarely returned to the palace and rarely made demands, so the imperial doctors naturally rushed over speedily.

Xie Lian placed that young child in a chair and said, "Thanks in advance, everyone. This child was beaten by a number of adults, got stuffed into a gunny sack, and dragged on the roads. Please check for me if there are any head injuries first, that's the most important thing."

The imperial medical team had never seen a royal or a noble bring a dirty wild babe for them to heal before, but they also knew they needed to do whatever they were told to, and they all acknowledged Xie Lian's direction.

One of them spoke, "Put your hands down first, little kid."

However, although that young child was docile in Xie Lian's arms the whole time, he started struggling then and firmly covered the right side of his face, refusing to let go no matter what. No matter how skilled the imperial doctors were, if the patient didn't cooperate there wasn't anything they could do. The doctors looked to Xie Lian.

"Your Highness, how...?"

Xie Lian raised a hand. "He's probably afraid of strangers. Don't worry, let me."

That child was sitting in a chair and Xie Lian couldn't meet his eyes, so he bent forward and inclined his head.

"What's your name?"

The large eye of that child stared at him intently, his obsidian-black pupil reflected a snow-white silhouette. This gaze, if it must be described, was exactly like Feng Xin had said—"possessed by the devil"—and shouldn't be the gaze of a child.

It was for a moment before the child lowered his head.

“...Hong...”

His voice was tiny and soft; mumbled, as if he didn't want to say it, as if he was a little embarrassed. Xie Lian only sort of heard the word “Hong”⁵³ and asked again,

“How old are you?”

“Ten,” that child replied.

Xie Lian was only asking offhandedly, hoping to lower his guard, but hearing that he responded with “ten”, he was startled. He thought, “I thought he was only seven or eight, but he's ten? This child is truly weak and emaciated.”

After a pause, Xie Lian smiled softly. “The doctors will see to your wounds now, don't be afraid and lower your hands, okay?”

That child heard, but hesitantly shook his head.

“Why not?” Xie Lian asked.

He was silent for a while before replying, “Ugly.”

His response was just the one word, and no matter how Xie Lian soothed, he refused to remove his hands. Xie Lian promised that he wouldn't think him ugly, that he wouldn't look; turning around wouldn't do either. Such a young age, but such obstinance. Without much choice, the imperial doctors could only ask him a few questions, have him recognize a number of fingers, make sure he didn't feel faint or have any headaches, make sure he understood what he saw and what he thought, then tend to his physical wounds.

As the imperial doctors worked, they became more and more awed. Xie Lian guarded on the side, and hearing their sounds of wonder, he asked, “How is he, everyone?”

One of the imperial doctors couldn't help but ask, “Your Highness, did this little kid really get beaten and dragged on the roads in a gunny sack?”

Xie Lian was speechless. “Why should that be false?”

The imperial doctor replied, “If that really was the case, then...amazing. I have never seen anyone so tenacious. He has five broken ribs and a broken leg, a number of injuries big and small. Even with all of that added together, he remains conscious and converses while sitting up. Even adults would find this difficult to do, nevermind a ten year old child?"

Hearing how severe the injuries were, Xie Lian became even more furious at Qi Rong. He looked at that child and saw that he was sitting there on that chair as if he felt no pain, and was peeking at him with that large black left eye. When he noticed he was caught staring by Xie Lian, he immediately turned his head away.

Ch.65: Lost Red Pearl; Inadvertent Eyes Red with Desire 6

Seeing this, for some reason Xie Lian thought he was both silly and pitiful, then turned to ask, "Will his injuries all heal?"

One of the imperial doctors wrapped new layers of bandages around that child's head and replied, "Not a problem."

Xie Lian finally felt relieved and nodded. "Thank you for all your hard work."

Just then, an attendant entered to notify them of the imminent arrival of his majesty the king and queen. Each of the imperial doctors immediately stood up and exited the infirmary to greet them.

Xie Lian moved the child to the bed and said, "Lie down for a bit and rest."

He then thought, the child was afraid of strangers, and so many people crowding in might scare him, so Xie Lian lowered the bedside curtains before rising to his feet too.

A number of guards and attendants surrounded the king and the queen as they walked into the pavilion. The queen's face was pale.

"My dear child, why did you return all of a sudden after having just left the palace? Were you hurt outside?"

"Mother, please be at ease," Xie Lian said. "I wasn't hurt, it was someone else who was wounded."

Just then, Qi Rong called out from the corner, "Auntie, save me!"

Only then did the queen notice Qi Rong on the side, firmly held by Feng Xin and arrested, and she was shocked. She was only worried about the wellbeing of her son, and completely ignored everything else, but now that she saw, she asked, "Rong-er, what's happened?"

The king, on the other hand, slightly knitted his brows. "Feng Xin, why are you holding Prince Xiao Jing like a criminal?"

When His Majesty arrived, Feng Xin should've bowed in greeting like Mu Qing and all the others, but because he had Qi Rong in hand, he couldn't let go, and thus entered into an awkward situation.

Xie Lian spoke up. "It was under my command."

Qi Rong held up his right arm. "Auntie, my arm is broken."

The queen hadn't had the chance to sympathize before Xie Lian cut in harshly. "You broke an arm, but what about that child?"

"What child?" the king asked.

"A ten-year-old child," Xie Lian answered. "Powerless, vulnerable, and already weak. Qi Rong sent his lackeys to beat him. If not for his tenacity, he would've been beaten to death on the spot!"

Qi Rong looked as if he just heard a joke, his eyes widening. "A powerless, vulnerable ten-year-old child? Weak? Cousin, you don't know just how vicious, how savage, how spunky that little fiend was; he only pretends to be pathetic in front of you. I called for five or six guys and they still couldn't catch the brat. He thrashed and bit them until they were bloodied all over. If he didn't anger me, why would I have dragged him behind the horse carriage?"

Hearing this, both the king and the queen's faces dropped. Xie Lian took in a deep breath and shouted, "Enough! Do you think what you've done is impressive?"

Qi Rong wasn't one to shy away from showing his face. He was so arrogant and ostentatious that there was no reason the citizens of the capital did not see him. And after they had seen, there was no reason he wouldn't become the talk of the city as after-meal leisure.

The king gave the queen a look, his expression slightly blue. "Take Prince Xiao Jing away. Doctor, see to his arm. The golden carriage will be permanently confiscated. You are to be detained and reflect on your actions for a month without release."

The guard behind him immediately acknowledged the order and moved forward to take Qi Rong. Only then did Feng Xin let go. Qi Rong no longer cared and hmped.

"Take it, take it. I already knew today would've been the last chance to drive it."

Hearing that he possessed no repenting heart, the queen sighed sadly. Xie Lian spoke up.

"Looks like with only a month of detention to reflect, he will still do this again next time. There needs to be stricter discipline."

Qi Rong was taken aback and stammered angrily, "Cousin Crown Prince, you..." But the next moment he switched gears. "Fine. Then I admit, this time it was my fault. No matter how His Majesty punishes me, Qi Rong has no complaints."

His next words changed the subject's direction. "However, shouldn't Cousin Crown Prince's servant also be punished? Uncle, auntie, my arm was broken by that Feng Xin!"

Hearing this, the king instantly moved his gaze to Feng Xin, looking outraged. Feng Xin lowered his head, and Mu Qing inconspicuously moved two steps away.

The king said coldly, "Feng Xin, you are the Crown Prince's bodyguard. The Crown Prince treats you well and regards you highly, but have you forgotten your own place? What is this arrogance?! Your duty is to serve His Highness. Is this how you serve him? You dare raise a hand against the Crown Prince's cousin Prince Xiao Jing?"

Hearing his words, Feng Xin was ready to kneel, but Xie Lian stopped him.

"Don't kneel."

Feng Xin obeyed Xie Lian's commands first and foremost; even under the king's orders, his priority was His Highness, and so he instantly straightened again. Seeing this, the king became even more upset.

"It's true Feng Xin broke Qi Rong's arm, but the reason was to protect the master," Xie Lian said. "Besides, Qi Rong was at fault first, not Feng Xin, so why must he kneel?"

"It doesn't matter why," the king said. "Either way, he has offended Prince Xiao Jing. There's a difference between masters and servants, a distinction of superior and inferior. Nevermind if I, the king, was to make him kneel; if I were to punish him with one hundred lashings there wouldn't be anything inappropriate about it."

Although the king wasn't as affectionate towards Qi Rong as the queen was, Qi Rong was still nevertheless of the royal household; never to be disobeyed or offended.

Qi Rong knew this very well, and said with a sidelong glance, "No need for a lashing punishment. He belongs to Cousin Crown Prince, I don't want to make things awkward. As long as he breaks his own arm, and kneels to kowtow before me three times, I can let this go."

The king nodded slowly, looking to consent on the decision. However, Xie Lian spoke up,

"If you must punish Feng Xin then you must punish me first. He's my servant; first of all, he's done nothing wrong, and second of all, if he was at fault, it was still done under my orders, so I will take punishment on his behalf."

Hearing him say this, the king became outraged once more.

All fathers and sons in the world must go through this change. When the son was young, they would all idolize their fathers as the greatest hero on earth; their own personal role model, their worship apparent. However, when the son matured to a certain age, they would start to question everything the father did, even brew revulsion; until, in the end, neither side would acknowledge each other.

To enter Mount Taicang for training, Xie Lian's fundamental objective was to improve his martial arts and search for the direction of his heart. However, he never cared for where he trained, nor with what identity.

The word "dao" for cultivation meant exactly as it appeared, which was "to walk the path"⁵⁴. As long as one's heart was set on the path with one mind, then training could be done anywhere. He didn't need to follow any dictated norms, nor enter the Royal Holy Pavilion. But there was another reason why Xie Lian had begged to train on Mount Taicang, and that was because he felt he didn't really get along with his father.

As the honourable Crown Prince of Xianle, the moment Xie Lian was born, the King of Xianle had already drawn out every detail of the path of his life. It was alright when he was still young. A child had few worries, and Xie Lian only needed his parents to build gold foil palaces with him, to play around and laugh. As the years went by, Xie Lian felt more and more that his father wasn't only a father, but also the ruler of a kingdom, and many of their thoughts and actions could no longer concur. For example, the so-called Royal Prestige was one of the things Xie Lian hated.

If they couldn't agree, then it was best to stay far away. Every time he returned to the palace, he spent more time conversing with his mother, and never had any heart-to-hearts with his father. The two never took the initiative to talk to each other, either, and it was also the queen who always mediated between them.

The father and son had maintained this frozen relationship for many months, and now, with Xie Lian stubbornly refusing to back down, the king said, "Very well. Take his place, if you must. Let's see if you can actually withstand it!"

"Of course I can!" Xie Lian retaliated.

The queen saw the two of them were butting heads again and anxiously said, "Why must it be like this?"

Just then, Feng Xin who hadn't spoken a word, suddenly raised his left arm and struck down on his right. There was a loud CRACK; the crowd was startled and looked to the sound, and saw his right arm was dropped limply, exactly like Qi Rong's. Xie Lian was both shocked and furious.

"FENG XIN!"

⁵⁴ "Dao" [道]: in this context is translated to "cultivation", but the word originally means "the path"; used to indicate both the literal and philosophical. Thus, one who practices "the path" is a Daoist/Cultivator. To learn more, simply google "Daoism".

Cold sweat rolled down Feng Xin's forehead, and without a word, he knelt down before Qi Rong and ko, ko, ko, kowtowed three times. Qi Rong was feeling rather proud and laughed out loud.

"Alright, I guess I'll forgive you. Why couldn't you have done this earlier?"

Even though his arm was broken, too, when he left he looked energized and refreshed, as if he had fought a winning battle. As for Feng Xin, he was still kneeling on the ground, and Mu Qing stood on the sidelines watching, his expression gloomy, but his thoughts unreadable.

Xie Lian whipped around to face his father, yelling angrily, "YOU!—"

The queen also put her hands on him to pull him back. Xie Lian knew that Feng Xin had followed him since the age of fourteen, and was cared for deeply by the queen. He only did this because he couldn't bear to see the queen sad over the dispute between father and son. If Xie Lian threw a fit now, then Feng Xin's efforts would go to waste, so he swallowed his outrage, but the fire continued to burn inside his heart. The king finally looked appeased, and left with a grim expression.

The queen had always liked Feng Xin. She sighed. "My child, we've wronged you."

"Please don't say that, your majesty. This was my duty," Feng Xin replied.

Hearing this, Mu Qing's eyes squinted, like he'd snorted coldly. Xie Lian, however, closed his eyes.

"Mother, if you really can't handle Qi Rong, then lock him up."

The queen sighed, nodded, then shook her head; then left too.

Xie Lian asked for one of the imperial doctors to tend to Feng Xin's right arm, and apologized. "Feng Xin, I'm sorry."

Once the crowds had cleared, Feng Xin immediately changed face and clicked his tongue. "This is nothing. I dared hit him, so how could I be scared of his revenge?" After a pause, he advised, "Your Highness, of course it's right for you to discipline Qi Rong, but don't be resentful of His Majesty. His Majesty is the king, and a figurehead of the older generation, so he thinks differently than we do. Seeing the two of you fight makes the queen sad. She has her difficulties too."

And how could Xie Lian not know his mother's difficulties?

The mother of Qi Rong was the younger blood sister of the queen, and they got along very well. When she was young and immature, at the first bloom of romance, she thirsted for freedom, listened to words of honey and broke off a good engagement to elope with a bodyguard in the palace. Who knew that the one she had chosen was villainous? One who was born of nobility was stuffed into a doghouse-like shack, and after only half a year, the villain revealed his true nature, drunken and violent. After Qi Rong was born, he became even more abusive. Finally, the mother couldn't take it anymore, and when Qi Rong turned five, she took him and ran away from home. Because she had become a royal scandal, she closed the door and no longer stepped foot outside; she spent the rest of her life in grim depression, only showing particular love and devotion to her only son.

During an upheaval, Qi Rong's mother lost her life saving the queen, and before she passed, she asked Xie Lian's mother to look after Qi Rong.

Of course, the queen did her utmost. However, it was still awkward raising someone else's son. Discipline was difficult. Too strict and it'd appear to be abuse; thinking of past love and friendships, she could hardly be so harsh. Too lax, and it'd turn out to become the behaviour seen today, and without stricter restraints, it could only get worse in the future. The queen also wondered often: she raised Xie Lian and Qi Rong almost the same, so why were their characters so different?

Just then, Xie Lian suddenly remembered there was a small child still lying on the bed here in the infirmary. He raised the bedside curtain to check, and that child was sitting up, looking like he was trying to peek out of some crack to watch. The moment Xie Lian raised the curtain he laid down obediently.

Xie Lian said, "Did we scare you with the fight just now? Don't let it bother you, it has nothing to do with you."

"Your Highness, this little kid's wounds have been tended to. Now he only needs quiet rest," one of the imperial doctors said.

Xie Lian dipped his head slightly. "Thank you for your hard work."

He then bent down again to ask, "Where do you live? I'll take you home."

That child shook his head. "No home."

Feng Xin approached, holding the arm that was now in a sling. "No home? So he really is a little beggar?"

Seeing that this child was emaciated and small, his clothes filthy and unkempt, it wasn't impossible. If he had no home to return to, they couldn't possibly leave him at the palace or throw him out on the streets.

Xie Lian pondered a moment, then said, "If that's the case, then let's bring him with us back to Mount Taicang."

Unexpectedly, Mu Qing suddenly spoke up. "He's lying."

Ch.66: To Ascend is Human; to Fall is Also Human

Xie Lian turned his head and asked, "What do you mean?"

"The homeless street urchins of the royal capital all run together in a gang, and they'd come to my neighbourhood often to beg for food. I know all of them, but I've never seen this child before."

That young child stared at Mu Qing and didn't say a word. Feng Xin was incredulous.

"Who do they beg for food from? You? And you'd give it to them?"

Mu Qing glared at him. "If they pester relentlessly, there's no other way."

Feng Xin still thought the notion rather unbelievable but didn't make any further commentary. "Oh."

"Besides, there's sewn patches on his clothes; judging by the needlework, it must have been done by a grown-up only just recently, so there's at least someone of age in his household. His family situation might not be the best, but he's definitely not a beggar."

Naturally, Xie Lian would not notice the details of needlework on sewn patches, nor if it was done by adults. But Mu Qing used to be an errand boy at the Royal Holy Pavilion, and also did all kinds of chores at home, so when Xie Lian looked closely, it was indeed as he had said.

So he asked, "Do you have grown-ups at home?"

That young child shook his head, but Mu Qing said, "There must be. If he doesn't go back, his family must be worried sick looking for him by now."

"No, no way! There's nobody!" that young child cried, sounding like he was afraid to be sent back, and he opened his arms reaching for Xie Lian.

He was still covered with mud and blood, and Feng Xin couldn't stand it anymore. "Kid, what the hell are you doing? Things were urgent earlier so whatever, but shouldn't you know better by now? This is the Crown Prince. The Crown Prince, do you understand?"

That young child's arms immediately shrank back, but he was still gazing at Xie Lian. "There's fighting at home and I got kicked out. I walked for a long time but I've nowhere to go."

The other three looked at each other. After a moment, Feng Xin said, "So what now?"

One of the imperial doctors suggested, "If His Highness is troubled, he can be placed here in the palace, and have a few attendants take care of him."

Xie Lian hummed, but after some thought, shook his head slowly.

At the end of the day, he was afraid Qi Rong wouldn't drop the whole thing, and would sneak out to cause trouble.

"The way I see it, it's still best if I watch over him until his wounds are healed. It seems his family won't be able to look after him, unfortunately. Feng Xin, when you go take care of the affected stalls toppled by Qi Rong, see if you can find out where his parents are, and let them know so they don't worry."

"Alright." Feng Xin nodded.

One of his arms was still in a sling, but he extended the good arm to reach for that young child, intending to pick him up by the collar. Xie Lian laughed.

"You're wounded. Don't worry about it."

However, Feng Xin shrugged it off. "Only one arm is broken, the other's still fine. If both my arms were broken, I can still use my teeth to carry him by the collar and bring him up the mountain for you."

Mu Qing rolled his eyes from behind him, then spoke up. "Nevermind. Let me carry him."

But just as he made one step forward, that young child jumped off the bed himself and said, "I can walk on my own."

An expression filled with rejection spoke louder than words, and it made Mu Qing's second step extremely awkward, unsure of whether or not to proceed. That little kid had five broken ribs and a broken leg, but he was still as lively as a dragon. Xie Lian really didn't know whether to laugh or feel concerned.

He said, "Stop running around!"

Then he bent down and picked him up.

The three of them with a child in tow left the palace. Since Qi Rong caused havoc on the streets earlier and disturbed the townspeople, toppling a number of stalls, Xie Lian felt deeply guilty, having no face to meet any of the citizens; so the group snuck around, afraid to show their faces, using only the back alleyways. Throughout the entire way, that small child was extremely docile in Xie Lian's arms; they told him to be quiet and he uttered not a single sound.

Feng Xin glared. "This brat kicked me yesterday, but look at him now. He really knows how to pick them."

"It's His Highness the Crown Prince. Of course he's more well-liked than most people," Mu Qing said.

For some reason, even if he said something well-meaning, the words he used still made people feel uncomfortable. Feng Xin refused to acknowledge what he said. After walking for a while, Feng Xin spoke up.

"No. I still feel Your Highness shouldn't let anyone see you holding a strange child."

"What's the problem?" Xie Lian asked.

"You're the Crown Prince!" Feng Xin exclaimed.

While he spoke, he saw a worn-down handcart further up the alley and said, "Put the kid in that cart and pull it to go."

Mu Qing immediately voiced, "Just so we're clear, I will not pull that thing up the mountain."

"No one's asking you to," Feng Xin said. He reached out and pulled the child from Xie Lian's arms, and the child started struggling again.

"Nevermind, forget it. Maybe someone else needs that cart!" Xie Lian said.

Just then, from somewhere nearby, someone suddenly called out. "Are you...the Crown Prince?"

Another immediately shouted, "YES, YES, YES! THAT'S THE CROWN PRINCE! HIS MASK FELL YESTERDAY AND I SAW HIS FACE WITH MY OWN EYES! THAT'S HIM!!!"

"CATCH HIM!!!"

The three of them froze, their hearts dropped. Although Xie Lian didn't think he did anything wrong at the Heavenly Ceremonial Procession the day before, he also knew that others might not believe the same. To cut short the God-Pleasing Martial ceremony was an ominous sign of misfortune; it was unspeakable amongst the nobility, and when all the excitement wore off after the fact, when the people started wondering what it all meant, they probably wouldn't be as forgiving either. Adding on the havoc on the streets caused by Qi Rong, the complaints must be endless. If they were to be surrounded now, it might end badly.

Without thinking any deeper, Mu Qing grabbed him and shouted, "Your Highness, run!"

Feng Xin was pulling the cart and urged too, "Your Highness, I've a broken arm, I won't be able to stop anyone rioting. Go!"

However, outside the alleyway there was already a mass of people who were pouring in, their faces filled with excitement, blocking all viable exits. The four of them had nowhere to run, and watched wide-eyed as they became encircled.

Xie Lian thought boldly, "If anything, I'll just let them beat us down without fighting back."

However, unexpectedly, although the crowd poured in, they didn't pulverize them; instead, a number of hands reached out and threw him into the air, cheering, "YOUR HIGHNESS!"

Xie Lian was thrown into the air countless times but still maintained a calm and steady disposition.

The people shouted, "YOUR HIGHNESS, THAT LEAP ON THE MARTIAL DEITY AVENUE YESTERDAY WAS SPECTACULAR!"

Someone exclaimed, "That was such an amazing jump! Really, really, I totally thought the Heavenly Martial Emperor himself had descended! I had goosebumps!"

Another validated, "His Highness was right to save that kid! A life is a life, did they think kids from us poor people aren't the same? If it were me, I'd do the same!"

Another raged, "That's right! Today there was talk of how His Highness had ruined the event and I just couldn't stand it! If it had been a royal or a noble who had fallen, they wouldn't say the same! Your Highness, don't mind those people!"

"His Highness is the one who truly cares about us...."

Xie Lian went from feeling guilty at the beginning, then disoriented halfway through, until finally, he was affected by the passionate and cheerful faces all around. The crowd clustered around Xie Lian and when they emerged onto the main street, more and more joined them. Feng Xin, Mu Qing, and that young child were pushed away and separated a far way back without any means of pushing through, and could only follow along behind the parade. This large assembly of people was surprisingly not smaller than the crowd from the day before. Every time Xie Lian made a move to leave, he would be forcibly dragged back in and thrown into the air without any chance of being let down.

Xie Lian couldn't help but find it both funny and reassuring as he thought to himself, "The people and Guoshi have completely opposite sentiments. It looks like I was in the right."

When at last they reached Mount Taicang, the setting sun was ablaze brightly and vividly.

Passing through the large mountain gates, on the long winding stone path, there were a number of trainees and cultivators carrying water buckets and firewood going up and down the road, greeting Xie Lian and company, but many watched the four plus a cart with wonder. Feng Xin was pulling that handcart with one hand like a hardworking, serious young black bull. Xie Lian and Mu Qing smiled back dutifully at first, but after a while they stopped caring.

The maple trees were endless, and the wheels turned calmly. As they hiked, Xie Lian helped push the handcart from behind. He was feeling good, and asked that young child another question casually.

“Little kid, what is your name, really? Hong what?”

That young child watched him and said in a small voice, “I...I don't have a name.”

Xie Lian was taken aback. “Your mother didn't give you a name?”

That young child shook his head. “My mother passed.”

Xie Lian felt sad for him. “Then what did your mother used to call you?”

That young child was hesitant for a minute, then replied, “Hong Hong-er.”⁵⁵

Xie Lian smiled. “That's a cute nickname. I'll call you that from now on.”

Hong Hong-er seemed to be shy whenever they talked, and lowered his head. Just then the sun was about to set, and lights were ignited from each of the pavilions all over the mountain. Among them, the brightest was of course the highest peak, the Great Martial Summit.

Atop the Great Martial Summit, within the Great Martial Hall, it was as bright as day, the lights gathered like stars. Xie Lian sighed as he watched.

The sigh wasn't borne of sadness, but from the scenery that emanated such beauty and glory. Every bit of light within the hall was an offered Everlasting Lamp. Each lamp contained the prayers and wishes of a devout worshipper. The more Everlasting Lamps there were within the temple of a god, the more powerful that god became. The chance to offer a lamp within the Great Martial Hall of the Royal Holy Pavilion was difficult to buy even with a thousand pieces of gold. Wealth, power, ability, passion, affinity; there must be one of the five conditions fulfilled in order to enter the hall to offer light. Yet, there were more in the world that had none of the five.

The four of them stopped, gazing upon the Great Martial Hall that shone like the sun, their expressions dissimilar. Just then, there was a familiar voice that called out to them.

⁵⁵ “Hong Hong-er” means “My son, Reddie” or just “Little Red”.

“Your Highness!”

Xie Lian turned his head and saw a fair-faced young man hurrying towards him. It looked like the trainee who guarded the entrance of the Sixiang Pavilion, and Xie Lian schooled his expression.

“Zhu-shixiong, what’s the hurry?”

Zhu-shixiong noticed Mu Qing standing behind, but felt awkward, and spoke pretending not to have seen him. “The Guoshi has been asking after you for a while now. He’s waiting at the Great Martial Hall.”

Xie Lian was taken aback hearing this, but figured it must be in regards to the incident during the Heavenly Ceremonial Procession the day before. “Very well. Thank you, shixiong.”

Xie Lian had Feng Xin and Mu Qing take Hong Hong-er back to the Xianle Pavillon first before heading towards the Great Martial Summit.

Outside the great hall, clouds borne from the incense vessel floated and wrapped around the Great Martial Hall, forming a dream-like state. On either side of the vessel were long rows of bright Everlasting Lamps hung in the air, neatly lined into a wall of lanterns. Every Everlasting Lamp had on them the name and prayer of the worshipper in elegant, decorous writing. Once in the hall, on either side of the wall were also rows upon rows of hung Everlasting Lamps. The lamps offered within the Great Martial Hall were of course, even more valuable than the ones outside.

In the gigantic, spacious temple, the Guoshi was offering incense before the statue of the Martial Heavenly Emperor, and the three Deputy Guoshi were behind him, uniformly prostrating before the great god.

Xie Lian inclined his head when he entered. “Guoshi.”

The Guoshi completed their ritual before they turned their heads back and made a gesture for him to come forward. Thus, Xie Lian approached, took an incense stick, and also paid his respects in sincerity.

It was a moment before Guoshi finally spoke.

“Your Highness, the four of us have deliberated. In regards to the Heavenly Ceremonial Procession, there are but two ways to resolve it.”

“Please do enlighten me, Guoshi,” Xie Lian said.

“The first method,” Guoshi said. “Is to find the child who disrupted the procession, and then we shall conduct a ceremony. At the very least, one of his five senses must be sealed as penance.”

Ch.67: To Ascend is Human; to Fall is Also Human 2

Xie Lian whipped up his head.

“No.” He then repeated with severity, “Definitely not.”

Guoshi nodded. “I had expected this response from you. So, we’ve put the weight of our consideration on the second method.”

“Please enlighten me,” Xie Lian said solemnly.

“The second method,” Guoshi said. “Is to have Your Highness publicly repent before the people of Xianle, ask the heavens for forgiveness, then face the wall in reflection for a month.”

“Not possible,” Xie Lian said calmly.

Guoshi was taken aback. “We’re not really asking you to face the wall to reflect, you just have to look like you ar...ahem.” He suddenly remembered they were before the statue of the Heavenly Martial Emperor, and immediately corrected himself. “As long as you are sincere it will suffice.”

Still, Xie Lian responded with, “No.”

“And the reason?” Guoshi asked.

“Guoshi, when I descended the mountain today, do you know what I saw?” Xie Lian said. “Not only did the people at the royal capital not condemn the accident that happened during the Heavenly Ceremonial Procession, they very much approved of it. This proves that the people of this kingdom all believe that the decision to save that child was right.

“If I were to do as you say, and be punished for something that was done right, what would they think? Doesn’t this only tell everyone that to save a life, not only do we not obtain fortuitous merits, but instead, we’ll be punished for our sin? How should they think or act after that?”

“Whether it's right or wrong isn't important,” Guoshi said. “Only that you must choose between the two paths. Nothing is perfect in this world. Either that child shoulders this blame, or you do.”

“Whether right or wrong is very important. If I must choose, then I choose the third path,” Xie Lian replied.

Guoshi rubbed his forehead. “Um...Your Highness, excuse my boldness, but why do you care what they think? Today they think in such a way, tomorrow they’ll think another. There’s no need for you to mind the small details; trust me, people will carry on doing what they need to do, and will not be touched by your actions, nor take you as an example. It’s best if we focus on serving what’s above our heads.”

Xie Lian was silent for a moment, then spoke, “Guoshi, ever since I’ve entered the Royal Holy Pavilion to become a disciple here, the more I train, the more I’ve reflected. There’s actually something I’ve always thought, but didn’t dare to speak of.”

“And what’s that?” Guoshi asked.

“Is it really right for us to worship and prostrate before the gods like this?”

Guoshi was speechless for a moment. “If they don’t worship the gods, then what are we to do? Go homeless? What, Your Highness thinks that the thousands and millions of devotees who come here to worship have the wrong beliefs?”

Xie Lian shook his head and chewed on his words. “The beliefs are not wrong. Only, this disciple doesn’t think it right to prostrate.”

He raised his head and pointed to the golden, scintillating, glorious and large statue of the Heavenly Martial Emperor.

“When humans ascend, they become gods. To humans, gods are elders, are teachers, are the everlasting light, but they are not our masters. In such regard, we should be full of thankfulness and also admiration, but never idol worship. Just like the Shangyuan Heavenly Ceremonial Procession, the correct attitude should be of thankfulness, of joy; not of fear, not begging to please, not of intimidation, and certainly not putting myself in a position of servitude.”

Guoshi remained poised and silent, but the other three Deputy Guoshi appeared to have become restless, turning their heads back.

Xie Lian continued, “An accident happened, it couldn’t be helped. I am willing to offer a thousand lamps to brighten long nights; like moths to flames, I’m not afraid. But I refuse to bow my head for something I did right. Face the wall in reflection? What have I done wrong? What has anyone done wrong? Just like how Qi Rong committed evil, but Feng Xin who subdued the wrongdoer had to be punished: where’s the logic in all this? If the heavens have eyes, they would not condemn me for this.”

Guoshi looked away. “Then, Your Highness, let me ask you. If the heavens really do condemn you? Will you apologize then?”

“If that should happen, then, the heavens are in the wrong. I am right. I will stand against the heavens and defy until the end.”

Hearing this, Guoshi’s face changed slightly, and he smiled. “Your Highness, you’re pretty brave to say such words.”

The other three Deputy Guoshi watched him, wanting to speak, but stopping themselves. Just then, a sudden huge alarm went off outside the hall, like the chiming of multiple bells at once. The four Guoshi could no longer remain in their seats, and all rushed up at the same time, running towards the back of the hall.

Xie Lian followed closely behind. They traversed through the many buildings behind the Great Martial Hall, and came before a black pagoda. The doors to that black pagoda were open, and countless wisps of dark smoke were whooshing out.

The Guoshi let out a despairing scream. "WHERE'S ZHU AN??! WHERE THE HELL DID HE GO! HOW DID THIS HAPPEN??!"

A number of trainee guards rushed over, the one leading was that Zhu-shixiong. "Guoshi!! I'M HERE! I don't know what happened, the door was locked, but it suddenly opened on its own!"

Guoshi pulled at his hair. "QUICKLY! BRING ME A NEW SOUL-SEALING JAR!"

Xie Lian rushed straight inside. Within that black pagoda, the walls were covered in lattice sandalwood panels of varying sizes and shapes, stacked unevenly atop each other; within each panel were various clay jars, porcelain vases, jaded boxes, and so on. Each of those containers were originally securely placed, the red cover stoppers stuffed firmly in place, the openings sealed with yellow talismans inscribed with crimson spells; but now, many were shattered, and many more continued to drop off the shelves themselves, those not yet fallen were all swaying and vibrating.

Those soul-sealing containers each had a demon or ghost who once caused havoc sealed within, and such a black pagoda existed in every single temple on Mount Taicang, purposely utilizing the clean, saintly essence to keep them suppressed. However, something happened that caused this sudden insurgence, and they had all escaped!

"It's too late!" Xie Lian shouted.

He immediately kicked the doors closed. The steel lock that originally chained up the door had been broken by the resentful spirits, so Xie Lian unsheathed his sword, used the tip and drew out some characters, then plunged it down. He brought over two hundred swords with him when he entered the mountain, and he'd switch the one carried on his person almost every day; each was an incomparable, singular treasured sword. That sword, having been slantily stabbed into the ground, sealed the door shut, and only the sounds of resentful spirits within rioting and roaring could be heard.

Once they left the black pagoda, they looked up and atop each of the summits, all the black pagodas behind each temple were filled with black clouds; all the resentful spirits were rushing to the sky, flying towards a certain direction that was now heavy with smoke.

“What’s over there? Why are they all flying over there?” Zhu An asked.

Guoshi yelled, “ARE YOU DUMB?! THAT’S THE XIANLE PAVILION!”

The group ran like the wind, and in the blink of an eye, arrived at the Xianle Summit. On top of Mount Taicang, heavy, thick smoke emerged from countless temples across innumerable peaks, and rolled over to form an enormous swirl above the Xianle Pavilion.

“What’s going on in that Xianle Pavilion of yours?! All the demons and ghosts are being lured over, what exactly did you put inside?” Guoshi demanded.

Xie Lian was bewildered too. “Nothing! Just…”

Just what? Xie Lian suddenly remembered: that small child!

Just then, Zhu-shixiong cried, “Guoshi, this is bad! His Highness’ place is on fire!”

Sure enough, a corner of the Xianle Pavillon was alight, flames bursting towards the sky, reflecting dark crimson in the black clouds above. Yet, at the foot of Mount Taicang, all those in the royal capital who hadn’t gone to bed had no idea what was going on when they witnessed the scene from afar, and were excitedly dragging others to watch in awe.

“Wow! The great immortals on the godly mountain are conducting a ceremony! What a show!”

Soon, the group of them arrived at the Xianle Pavilion. Xie Lian didn’t keep too many servants, and so a number of cultivators from the other summits had rushed over, desperately drawing well water, trying to put out the fires. Xie Lian didn’t see his two attendants, and immediately rushed inside. All the resentful spirits of Mount Taicang had been gathered there; the Xianle Pavillon was completely pitch-black inside, nothing could be seen.

Xie Lian sensed two silhouettes within the main hall and yelled, “FENG XIN! MU QING!”

The two had drawn a protection array so as to not let the evil spirits invade, holding on, but just barely. Sure enough, Feng Xin’s voice rang out.

“YOUR HIGHNESS, DON’T COME IN! THIS CHILD IS STRANGE, ALL THOSE SPIRITS WERE COMING FOR HIM!”

Only then did Xie Lian notice that behind the two silhouettes was another small shadow, seemingly to be kneeling on the floor, his head in his hands.

He screamed, “IT’S NOT ME!!!”

After observing them for a moment, Xie Lian shouted, “Stop holding on. Let it go!”

Mu Qing cried back, "We can't let go! If we do, those things will go crazy! Let me find the most—"

Xie Lian cut him off. "NO FEAR. LET GO. NOW!"

Mu Qing gritted his teeth, and dropped his hands with Feng Xin at the same time. Sure enough, with the restraints off, those resentful spirits screeched and started going wild.

However, in the next second, Xie Lian reached out, lightning fast, and choked a particular wisp of black smoke.

He didn't even look, and grabbed that black smoke with his bare hands, holding in his palm firmly. The moment he caught that one resentful spirit, all the crazed swarm of resentful spirits within the Xianle Pavilion slowed down.

Outside, everyone silently nodded.

In a situation where a large swarm of resentful spirits gathered in the same place, they would usually follow the lead of the strongest one. Once that one is caught, without a leader, the spirits would lose direction. At that moment, Xie Lian immediately recognized the strongest one and choked it, not giving it any chance, and with only a squeeze, that one resentful spirit disintegrated into nothing in his palm.

Immediately after, the four Guoshi raised their sleeves and called out, "Come back!"

That swarm of resentful spirits, having lost its leader, flew haphazardly around the Xianle Pavilion like headless flies until finally they had no choice but to give up, and reluctantly returned to the seal within the Guoshi's sleeves. The other cultivators continued to put out the remaining fires, and only until the heavy smoke had gradually dispersed did Xie Lian see clearly the figures of the other three.

Feng Xin and Mu Qing were half-kneeled on the floor, still in shock. Behind them, that child was still holding his head, uttering not a word. The Guoshi entered and spoke after only a look.

"Where did that child come from? Feng Xin said all the resentful spirits were going after him? What's going on?"

"That's the child who fell from the city wall during the Shangyuan Heavenly Ceremonial Procession."

All the Guoshi were taken aback.

Guoshi demanded, "Why did you bring him here?"

Xie Lian shook his head, not wanting to explain, and instead asked Feng Xin, "What did he do to attract all the resentful spirits of the black pagodas?"

One of Feng Xin's arms was still in a sling, and he rose to his feet. "I don't know what he did! But once he entered the mountain, soon after coming inside the Xianle Pavilion, all those black things suddenly flew over from all over the peaks and broke in, swarming around him, gathering more by the minute, and we couldn't get out."

Xie Lian looked around at the walls and pillars burnt to a crisp inside the pavilion. "Then what's with the fire?"

Mu Qing, whose face was covered in soot, said, "We couldn't leave so we had to draw an array to defend. Those resentful spirits kindled the candlelight and burnt the curtains, hoping to force us out."

"Thank goodness Your Highness came swiftly and immediately seized their vitals! Otherwise if it kept burning, we'll all be dead along with the array!"

Hearing his words, Mu Qing closed his eyes and lowered his head. On the side, the Guoshi had already surrounded that young child, observing him closely.

"Guoshi, is there anything the matter with that child?"

If there was anything the matter, such as being possessed by ghosts, Xie Lian should've been able to recognize it immediately. After having trained at the Royal Holy Pavilion for a number of years, he had worked on his sight especially, and very few things could deceive his eyes. Yet he couldn't see anything off with this child. The Guoshi shook his head, also seeming to have observe nothing amiss.

He asked, "What's your birth date, month, year, and time?"

Hong Hong-er seemed to be guarded against everyone, tensed with hostility, and would only stare at him, not speaking.

Xie Lian encouraged gently, "Just tell him. Guoshi only wants to tell your fortune for your own good."

The moment he spoke, Hong Hong-er obediently told the time of his birth in a low voice. Guoshi knitted his brows and started calculating with his fingers. The people around watched him, talking in low voices, and saw his expression grow dimmer and dimmer. Xie Lian watched, and became more and more solemn too.

Guoshi looked to be no more than a tender thirty-something young man, but Xie Lian knew better than most just how powerful his teacher was, to be able to rule over the Royal Holy Pavilion. The number one Guoshi of Xianle, Mei Nianqing was famed throughout the land for his fortune-telling. Xie Lian learned the art of the sword and of spells from the Deputy Guoshi, but never learned the art of fortune-telling from the Guoshi himself; only because Guoshi told him it was an art of the streets, the golden stature of the Crown Prince had no need for such tricks. Plus, Xie Lian himself wasn't interested, so he never tried. However, whenever Guoshi worked his art, there were never mistakes.

A while later, more and more cold sweat was rolling down the forehead of Guoshi, and he mumbled, "No wonder...no wonder...no wonder he ruined the Heavenly Ceremonial Procession; that the spirits of the black pagodas grew excited from sensing him; that the Xianle Pavilion was burnt too...This...This...This is truly..."

"Truly what?" Xie Lian asked.

Guoshi wiped his sweat and suddenly backed a meter away. "Your Highness, you really brought something you shouldn't have up the mountain! That small child is toxic! His sign is borne of the most ominous star, the Star of Solitude⁵⁶, destined to bring misfortune and destruction, the kind that evil loves the most. Whoever touches him will have misfortune befall them, whoever gets close will lose their lives!"

Before he even finished, there was a loud scream, and Hong Hong-er leapt to his feet, running towards Guoshi to headbutt him.

His voice was young and tender, but his screams were filled with rage, as if his heart was filled to the brim with unspeakable pain and anguish, making many of those present shiver. That young child was covered in injuries, yet he tore and hit out at them like a red-eyed rabid dog, violent and aggressive.

The Deputy Guoshi blocked Hong Hong-er and Guoshi backed away, yelling, "MAKE HIM LEAVE THE MOUNTAIN, HURRY! Don't touch him, I mean it! That fortune is too toxic, don't touch him!"

The Deputy Guoshi hurriedly moved aside, and Mu Qing and Feng Xin didn't know whether to act. Seeing that everyone was avoiding him like he was a poisonous snake, that child was shaken and started thrashing even harder, biting and screaming.

⁵⁶ [天煞孤星] The Star of Solitude: People with this sign in their fortunes are said to bring the greatest misfortune to those around them, while they themselves are fine, which is why it's called the Star of Solitude. This sign can be nullified with the meeting of a saviour.

On a separate note, Sha Po Lang is the other great sign of misfortune along with the Star of Solitude. These two signs are the most devastating in Chinese divination.

“I’m not! I’M NOT!! I’M NOT!!!!”

Suddenly, a pair of arms wrapped him around the waist, encircling his small form. A voice came from above his head.

“You’re not. I know you’re not. Don’t cry, now. I know you’re not.”

That young child pressed his lips closed tightly, grabbing on to that pair of snow-white sleeves around his waist with a death grip. He forced himself to hold back for a long time, but in the end, he couldn’t. A stream of tears suddenly rolled down from that round, black eye, and he burst out crying.

Xie Lian embraced him from behind and reiterated firmly, “It’s not you. It’s not your fault.”

Ch.68: To Ascend is Human; to Fall is Also Human 3

Hong Hong-er whipped around, stuffed his face in Xie Lian's chest, and wailed.

This wailing contained no words, utterly meaningless, and was nothing like the sound of sobbing, but was nevertheless hair-raisingly dreadful. Without looking at who it was, it would sound like the desperate cries of a full-grown man breaking down, or the struggling of a small beast with its throat cut open by a knife; as if only by immediate death could he be relieved. Anyone could make such a sound, it just shouldn't be coming from a child of ten years. Everyone was shaken.

A moment later, Guoshi said, "I mean it. It's best to let go."

Feng Xin finally came to and yelled, "Your Highness! Let go! Be careful of..." But in the end, he didn't have the heart to continue.

"It's fine," Xie Lian said.

That Zhu-shixiong, however, was quite concerned for His Highness' welfare, and saw that Hong Hong-er was smearing blood and snot all over Xie Lian's white robes, so he ran over to pull at that young child, berating, "Little kid, you can't!"

Yet the harder he pulled, the harder that young child held on to Xie Lian, refusing to let go no matter what, using both his hands and feet to grip on, screaming "AAHHH". Three or four more people came forward to try and rip him off, but instead that made him hang on to Xie Lian like a little monkey. Xie Lian found it both funny and pitiful, and held Hong Hong-er with one hand, gently rubbing up and down that emaciated small back in comfort, while raising the other hand.

"Nevermind. Don't worry, let him be."

Some moments later, after feeling that the child in his arms stopped struggling and quieted down, Xie Lian asked the people closeby in a low whisper, "Was anyone else hurt in the Xianle Pavilion fire?"

"No," Mu Qing replied. "There were only us inside at the time."

As the Xianle Pavillon was burnt to a crisp, Xie Lian could no longer stay. After making sure that it was only the building that was burnt and not any of the people, those who came to help put out the fires started to help clean up the vicinity, feeling rather distraught at all the charred precious gems and treasures. Xie Lian wasn't concerned, however.

The things he used daily were a little more intricate, but other than that, Xie Lian didn't really have anything of importance stored inside the Xianle Pavilion. The most precious items were his collection of over two hundred treasured swords, but they were made of durable metals unafraid of fires, since they were all forged in flames anyway, so they were all unharmed. After having dug them out himself, Xie Lian stored them temporarily at the Sixiang Pavilion that belonged to the Guoshi.

As for Hong Hong-er, he was still firmly holding on to Xie Lian, and after having cried himself to exhaustion, fell asleep. Xie Lian had wanted to bring him down Mount Taicang to find a safe place to settle him, but the Guoshi asked him to make a visit to the Sixiang Pavilion first, so Xie Lian carried the child over too.

Tucking that young child in the divan, righting the covers, Xie Lian dropped the bedside curtain and backed out of the room with Feng Xin and Mu Qing in tow.

“Guoshi, is that child’s fate really that terrifying?”

The Guoshi pursed his lips. “Why don’t you think for yourself; after he appeared, what has happened?”

The three were quiet. The moment that young child appeared, he’d fallen off the city wall before the eyes of millions, forcing the Shangyuan Heavenly Ceremonial Procession to be cut short after having only made three rounds. When he appeared again, Qi Rong was dragging him through the streets in that horse carriage in rage, causing a riot, made Feng Xin break an arm, and Xie Lian butted heads with the king, making the queen roll tears. This time, all the resentful spirits of Mount Taicang broke out of their seals within the black pagodas and even burnt down the Xianle Pavilion. Misfortune was indeed following after him like a shadow.

“Is there any way to break this?” Xie Lian asked.

“Break this?” the Guoshi said. “What do you mean? Change his fate?”

Xie Lian nodded. The Guoshi said, “Your Highness, you haven’t learned the art of fortune-telling from me, so when it comes to matters like these, you really don’t understand anything. If you did, you wouldn’t have asked.”

Xie Lian was taken aback and sat himself up straight. “Please enlighten me.”

The Guoshi thus took the teapot on the table and poured a cup. “Your Highness, do you still remember that day when you just turned six, when his majesty and the queen bade me to enter the palace to tell your fortune, that one question I asked you?”

Watching that steaming cup of tea, Xie Lian pondered. “Did you mean, the two people and the cup of water?”

That year, the Guoshi had asked Xie Lian many questions in order to help tell his fortune. There were questions with answers, and ones without, and with every answer Xie Lian gave, the Guoshi would praise the boy, making the king and queen smile with pleasure; many exchanges from that conversation were later passed around as delightful stories. But there was one question to which, when Xie Lian answered, the Guoshi made no commentary. Very few knew of the details, not even Feng Xin, nevermind Mu Qing. That question was “Two People and a Cup of Water”.

The Guoshi spoke, “Two walked the desert, about to die from thirst, and there was only one cup of water. The one who drinks lives, the one who doesn’t, dies. If you were a god, who would you give that cup of water to?—Don’t speak yet, I’ll ask the other two and see how they answer.”

The last part of his words were directed to the two standing not too far behind. Mu Qing contemplated and responded cautiously.

“May I ask who those two people are, what their natures are like, and what of their merits? A decision can only be made once all the details are known.”

Feng Xin, on the other hand, answered, “I don’t know! Don’t ask me, tell them to decide amongst themselves!”

Xie Lian “pff”-ed and laughed. Guoshi admonished, “What are you laughing about? Do you remember how you answered?”

Xie Lian schooled his expression and said solemnly, “Give another cup.”

Hearing this, between Feng Xin and Mu Qing, one turned his face away, the other lowered his head, as if they couldn’t bear to listen. Xie Lian turned his head back and said in all seriousness,

“Why are you guys laughing? I’m serious. If I was a god, I would definitely give another cup.”

The Guoshi gently shook that cup of tea in his hand, and the tea swirled in the cup, as if it had life on its own. He continued, “All fortunes in the world, good or bad, are limited. Just like this cup of water, there’s only so much. Once you’ve drunk your fill, there’ll be no more left for others. If one receives more, the other must receive less.

“Throughout the ages, all conflicts are borne from the fact that there are many in this world, but only one cup of water, and no matter who it’s given to, there’d be a good reason. You want to change fate? It’s difficult, but not impossible. But if you change that child’s life, someone else’s life will also be changed, and more grudges shall be created. Once upon a time you said to just give another cup of water, just like today how you wanted to choose a third path. Your intention is to expand the source; a beautiful thought. But I will tell you it’s impossible.”

Xie Lian listened silently but disagreed wholeheartedly; still, he didn’t rebut. “Thank you, Guoshi, for your wisdom.”

The Guoshi drank that tea, smacked his lips and said, "Don't trouble yourself. Wisdom or not, you don't listen anyway."

"..." Having been seen through, Xie Lian softly cleared his throat. "Guoshi, earlier today before the Great Martial Hall, in a moment of passion, this disciple has offended you. Please forgive me for my affront."

The Guoshi shook out his sleeves and smiled. "You're my proud disciple, and the Crown Prince; how can I not forgive you? Your Highness, I can tell you that you are the most beloved by the heavens I've ever seen."

Xie Lian didn't understand, so he listened closely.

The Guoshi continued, "You have the talent, the ambition, the heart, and you're not afraid of hard work. You have a prestigious background, yet a compassionate nature. No one is more suited for the title 'Darling of the Heavens'. Still, I am worried about you. I'm afraid there will be a trial you won't be able to pass."

"And that is?" Xie Lian asked.

"Although you've already achieved such a high level, there are some things you are still far from understanding, and others can't teach you. Just like how today at the Great Martial Hall, that speech you made, that bit about not worshipping god or something; very few are able to think that far, and that you were able to reach such thoughts at such a young age is already impressive. However, do not think yourself the only one who to have had such thoughts in the world."

Xie Lian's eyes widened slightly.

The Guoshi continued, "The things you spoke of today were already spoken by others decades, maybe centuries ago, but their words never took form; their voices were too small, so not many heard. Have you ever wondered why that is?"

Xie Lian hummed and replied, "Because even if they thought of it, they never acted on it, and weren't determined enough."

"And you? What makes you think you're determined enough?" the Guoshi asked.

"Guoshi, do you think I can ascend?" Xie Lian asked.

The Guoshi gave him a look and said, "If you can't ascend, then no one can. It's only a matter of time."

Xie Lian smiled. "Then, just you watch." He pointed to the sky. "If one day I ascend, I will for sure do all that I said today, and become a power to behold!"

Feng Xin and Mu Qing, who were standing behind him, having heard his declaration, both unconsciously held their heads higher. Feng Xin's lips curved upward, and the light shining in Mu Qing's eyes were exactly the same as Xie Lian's. The Guoshi nodded.

"Very well, I shall wait and see—however, I don't think it's a good thing for you to ascend too early. Let me ask you, what is The Path?"

Xie Lian inclined his head. "As you have said, that which is walked is The Path."

"That's correct," the Guoshi said. "But, you haven't walked enough. So, I think it's time for you to take a walk down the mountain."

Xie Lian's face lit up. The Guoshi continued, "You're seventeen this year. I will permit you to descend Mount Taicang, and gain some experience through travels on the outside."

"That's excellent!" Xie Lian exclaimed.

Every day spent at the royal capital, just thinking about the king, Qi Rong, and many others, Xie Lian couldn't help but feel crabby. Plus, having such a glamorous Xianle Pavillon be torched, he wouldn't be able to avoid another bout with his parents. If he could go further away, he could focus on walking his own path.

Just then, the Guoshi added, "Your Highness, throughout the ages there's been a saying that's passed down like it's the ultimate truth; but, it's actually wrong, only no one had ever noticed."

"What saying?"

"When humans ascend, they become gods; when humans fall, they become ghosts."

Xie Lian gave it a thought. "Is there something wrong with that?"

The Guoshi replied, "Of course it's wrong. Remember: when humans ascend, they are still human; when they fall, they are still human."

Xie Lian chewed on those words, and the Guoshi patted him on the shoulder and glanced behind.

"In any case, as for that child...Don't let it worry you too much. Everyone has their fate. Many times there won't be a way to help just because you want to help. If anything happens, we'll deal with it then. Go out and experience the world. I pray that when you return you will have matured."

However, that very night, outside everyone's expectations, that child escaped from the Royal Holy Pavilion and disappeared.

And what was even more, outside of everyone's expectations, after his travels, at the age of seventeen, the Crown Prince of the Kingdom of Xianle Xie Lian soundly defeated a nameless ghost at the Yinian Bridge; and just like that, he ascended to the heavens amidst the roars of thunder and lightning.

It was the shock of the three realms.

Translation Notes:

The idea of Ascension is a Daoist one.

The basic gist of it is: All gods and immortals are mortals and other beings who cultivated deeply and attained enlightenment. Their bodies shed the troubles of a mortal body, and are removed from the corporeal world. "Heaven" is only an imperial court for the enlightened ones, and other than the ones in administrative roles (like the Jade Emperor, etc.), many watched and protected over an aspect of the celestial and mortal realm: eg. love, marriage, a piece of land, etc. There are also carefree immortals who'd just wander the world and help mortals as they go, or become hermits deep in the mountains.

However, there is a formless will (Dao) of the universe that guides the world's destiny. Thus, things like fate and such are beyond a god's ability to change. It's the will of the universe that deems when a mortal is fit for ascension, and it will send forth a "heavenly calamity", usually a blast of thunder and lightning, to test the mortal. If the mortal passes, they ascend to become a god.

There are three different levels of godhood:

- lowest level is godhood after death
- mid level is godhood after living on earth for an insane number of years
- top level is ascension in broad daylight, before the eyes of all

For the top tier, the will of the universe usually picks those who have done deeds so great they have shocked the wheel of fortune, or have the potential to change the course of history. It's amoral; the question of whether the deed is right or wrong is not figured into this, which is why earlier in the book, MXTX said there's usually a lot of bloodshed involved.

tl;dr: Xie Lian attained enlightenment and shed his mortal body. He did not die. Everyone knew because of the thunder and lightning.

Ch.69: Fishing for Offerings; Boor Meets Crown Prince

“UNVEIL—”

Along with the strong, spirited call, an enormous red brocade fell to the ground. A roaring cheer exploded from the crowd of thousands.

This was a golden divine statue of the Crown Prince. A sword in one hand, a flower in the other; symbolizing “the power to end the world, but with a heart as gentle as a flower”. The face of that statue was soft and beautiful, the brows long and elegant, lips thin and clean, slightly curved, as if smiling. Affectionate but not coquettish, fierce but not heartless. It was a compassionate and handsome face.

This was the eight thousandth Temple of the Crown Prince within the Kingdom of Xianle.

Three years after ascension, there were eight thousand temples raised in his name. Such a passionate following was unseen in history and likely would not have any more like it in the future; the one and only.

However, this eight thousandth temple didn't have the most glamorous divine statue of the Crown Prince. Atop Mount Taicang, the summit where the Crown Prince resided in his youth during training was renamed “The Crown Prince Summit”. It was where the first Xianle Pavilion was built. Once the first divine statue of the Crown Prince was sculpted, it was also there where the king personally unveiled it. That divine statue of the Crown Prince was five meters high, its craftsmanship legendary. It was built of pure, solid gold, truly an invaluable “golden body”.

Within the Xianle Pavillon, devotees were endless, breaking through the threshold. The incense vessel before the Pavilion was stuffed with incense long and short, and the donation box was also much bigger than the average donation boxes in other temples, because if it wasn't built big enough, it would be full of offerings before the day was over and those who came after wouldn't be able to donate. In the courtyard of the temple was a clear pond, also filled with coins, shimmering brightly in the water. Many of the turtles residing in the ponds didn't dare to peep their heads out anymore from all the coins that were thrown by the devotees, many bouncing off their shells. No matter how the cultivators asked the people not to do, so they were fruitless. Within the massive red walls of the temple were planted plum trees, the branches tied with countless bright red ribbons of wishes, painting an impressive scenery of flowing red amongst a sea of blossoms.

As for the interior of the temple, Xie Lian was seated just below his divine statue, watching over the crowd. No one could see him, but he could see and hear their chatter:

“How come the Temple of the Crown Prince doesn't have prostration cushions?”

“Yeah, even the Temple Master said we can’t prostrate. The temple’s already unveiled, so why can’t we prostrate?”

Another said, “This must be your first time at the Xianle Pavilion. The Xianle Pavilions are all like this. I hear after his royal highness ascended, he sent dreams to many temple donors, to the Temple Master, telling them not to have the devotees prostrate. So, none of the Temples of the Crown Prince have anywhere you can prostrate.”

Although no one could see him, Xie Lian still nodded his head. However, a few others laughed.

“What’s the logic in that? Aren’t we meant to prostrate before gods? That must’ve been a rumour.”

Xie Lian “eh”-ed.

Another added, “That’s right! We must kneel! Only kneeling can show our sincerity!”

Thus, one took the lead and knelt down, and soon after, a large number of others followed suit and knelt down on the ground. Hundreds and thousands of people squished inside and outside of the great hall, and started kowtowing before the divine statue, their forms rising and falling, muttering and silently praying for blessings.

Xie Lian quietly hid. “Nevermind, we’ll take it slowly.”

The next moment, a large wave of noise came at him from all around.

“Achieve a high rank! A high rank! This year I must achieve a high rank! If I obtain it I will return my gratitude!”

“Pray for safe passage!”

“The girl I like likes my shixiong, please make him uglier, please I beg you.”

“I won’t believe I still can’t give birth to a fucking chubby brat!!!”

...There were all kinds of prayers, Xie Lian was getting a headache just listening, and hurriedly cast a spell, blocking out those endless voices. His ears had only just quieted down when there was yelling, and a man clad in black came running out from the back of the pavilion, his hands covering his ears.

He roared, “WHAT THE HELL ARE THOSE PRAYERS!!!”

The devotees also didn’t sense the appearance of this man and continued kowtowing. Xie Lian breathed a sigh, patted his shoulder and laughed.

“Feng Xin, thanks for your hard work.”

Such an exuberant Xianle Pavilion, the number of prayers that Xie Lian could hear every day exceeded thousands. At first, he was filled with the energy brought forth by the new position, had little care whether the matters were big or small, and worked through them personally. After a while, there were really way too many prayers, so he'd split off a block and gave them to Feng Xin and Mu Qing. What was within his duties and what could be ignored, after filtering through the prayers, the two would pass the important matters back to him.

After filtering through the prayers, Mu Qing would report back without ever a complaint, but Feng Xin, on the other hand, just couldn't understand why there were so many who'd blindly pray over petty business; even blessings for harmonious bedchamber matters were brought to the Xianle Pavilion. Xie Lian was a martial god, and certainly couldn't take care of such things. This kept up and offended other heavenly officials too, blaming them for taking matters they had no control over, taking devotees they had no business to take, to which Xie Lian couldn't rebut.

Feng Xin still had his hands covering his ears, even if that gesture did nothing. “Your Highness, why do you have so many female devotees?”

Xie Lian shook out his sleeves and remained seated within the clouds of incense, smiling. “What's wrong with having so many female devotees? Beauties are like the clouds, pleasing to the eyes.”

Feng Xin dropped his face. “Not good at all. It's like those female devotees had no other prayers than wishing to look nicer, marry nicer, give birth to a nice son. Nothing of importance; just looking at them gives me a headache!”

Xie Lian grinned and was about to continue when suddenly there was a commotion among the crowd. The two looked outside the hall and heard someone speak with a low voice.

“Prince Xiao Jing has come, let's get out of here! Prince Xiao Jing is here!”

Hearing “Prince Xiao Jing”, it was like everyone heard “The Devil”. All dropped their faces and dispersed like birds. A moment later, it was as if a tornado blew by, and all the devotees who were in the hall escaped. Soon after, a young man dressed in lavish brocade and a cape crossed the threshold swaggering, a glass gem lamp in his hands. Without looking at his eyes, his face resembled that of Xie Lian, but seeing the eyes, one would think him overly cocky. It was none other than Qi Rong.

Qi Rong had reached the age of seventeen or eighteen by now, his face broadened, his disposition much more mature; he finally had an air of nobility. He entered through the doors, but didn't allow any of his attendants to come in. He held that lamp with both his hands and knelt down on the clean floors of the hall, his cape fluttering down. He raised the lamp to his forehead and solemnly prostrated. The two on top of the altar shared a look. Feng Xin smacked his lips and Xie Lian understood the annoyance in his eyes.

Three years ago when Xie Lian first left the royal capital to travel the world, Qi Rong was still in detention. After his return, he hadn't yet had the chance to see his little cousin before he suddenly ascended that very night in his sleep. Within those three years, Xie Lian sent a number of dreams to his parents, to the Guoshi, and a few others. He sent one to Qi Rong once, admonishing him to be kind to others from then on, to keep his behaviour in check and not to cause trouble. Thus, Qi Rong had been doing his utmost to build temples everywhere, offering donations and lamps for good merits.

Although he worked hard, sincere to the bones, he would still stir up trouble every now and then, and it would be Feng Xin who had to go clean up after him. Because of this, Xie Lian could understand Feng Xin's annoyance.

On the floor, Qi Rong finished paying his respects and started whining, "Cousin Crown Prince, this is the five hundredth lamp I've offered. I'm such a loyal little brother, when will you come see me? Even a dream is fine. Uncle and auntie both miss you dearly, but you only ignore us. Truly high and mighty and cold."

He did not notice at all that Feng Xin was right there, who was reminding Xie Lian, "Don't pay attention to him. The Heavenly Emperor has told you that, unless it's a matter of importance, heavenly officials are not allowed to show themselves privately before mortals. Families must be avoided."

"Don't worry, I know," Xie Lian said.

Qi Rong rose to his feet holding that lamp, reached for a brush, and started writing on that lamp with his head lowered. Xie Lian and Feng Xin felt bad so they approached to see what he was writing. Seeing that it was something normal like "Pray for the country's prosperity and blessed climate" and so on, and not praying for some family to be beheaded before the marketplace or some such, the two breathed a sigh. Watching Qi Rong write so carefully and properly, Xie Lian was reminded of something.

When Qi Rong first returned to the palace with his mother, there was once a group of royals and nobles who mounted Mount Taicang to pray for blessings. Qi Rong's mother was a returnee after having eloped with a lowly peasant and didn't dare to see anyone, but she always wanted blessings for her son, have him experience the world, and not be stuffed inside like herself turning into an ignorant nobody, so she begged the queen to bring Qi Rong along.

Although it was already kept fairly low-key, a royal scandal went around faster than an arrow, and there wasn't anyone in the royal capital who didn't know what happened to that mother and son. Thus, along the way, many sons of nobles purposely left Qi Rong out, not playing with or talking to him. Xie Lian saw a swingset and ran over to play, and all the children of the same age ran after him, taking turns to push the Crown Prince on the swings, taking it as an honourable task. When Xie Lian was swung to the highest point, he subconsciously looked down and saw Qi Rong hiding behind his mother's shadow, a head peeking out, watching him with envy.

Once they reached the Great Martial Hall, the grown-ups, after having offered lights, moved to beg the Guoshi for fortunes, or for deciphering their fortunes, and conversed amongst themselves, leaving the children within the hall to offer up small lamps for play.

It was Qi Rong's first time meeting the queen, and he did not know she had already offered a light in his and his mother's name. He saw how beautiful the lamps were and wanted to offer one up for blessings, too. He was young and didn't understand much, so he asked all those around how to write words of prayer for his mother. The children from Qi Rong's branch of the family already detested him, under the influence from their elders. They all thought that mother and son had shamed the family, so they intentionally tricked him.

When Xie Lian finished writing on his lamp and put down the brush, he heard malicious giggling from behind, and when he turned his head, he saw Qi Rong with his hands covered in ink, holding a lamp like a precious treasure; his face full of smiles, about to offer the light. Yet on that lamp, the words "Pray My Mother and I Pass Away to the Heavens, Qi Rong" were written in ugly scribbles.

Xie Lian broke that lamp on the spot, furious and outraged.

He wasn't very old at the time, but all the noble young men and children were terrified, prostrating on the ground, afraid to speak. After containing himself, Xie Lian personally rewrote prayers on a new lamp for Qi Rong, and no one dared play any tricks after that. Later, when they descended the mountain, Xie Lian went to swing on the swings again. This time, Qi Rong emerged from behind the queen and pushed him. He was shorter than Xie Lian, but he pushed especially enthusiastically, still gazing at him from below, only this gaze had changed into one of worship. After that, he became Xie Lian's tail, wagging behind his "cousin Crown Prince".

It must be said that Qi Rong had once been somewhat normal, but somehow had become more and more off the track along the way. However, in those three years, there were too many people and too many matters Xie Lian had to care for, and had no time for relations of old; he certainly didn't know whether Qi Rong had matured.

While he was still reminiscing, Qi Rong had already offered his light and was getting ready to leave the hall. Unexpectedly, as he backed away, he bumped into another. Qi Rong staggered then whipped around, and started cussing without even seeing who it was.

"WHAT THE HELL? ARE YOU BLIND OR DID YOU DIE ON THE SPOT FORGETTING TO MOVE?"

The moment he opened his mouth, Xie Lian and Feng Xin both covered their faces, thinking: "He hasn't changed at all, still the same!"

Maybe it was because he had lived with his father until he was five, and couldn't help but be influenced by the rowdy market environment and his father's violent temper, but even after, when the queen patiently tried to educate Qi Rong, the moment he got agitated, by the Guoshi's words, he'd "reveal his true form".

The one who bumped into Qi Rong was an unkempt young man, of twenty-four or -five years; carrying a simple satchel, his straw slippers so worn they were almost rimless and baseless, covered in dust. However, even though this young man was wan and sallow, his lips dried and cracking, his form slumping, his face was bright, thin but not weak, and his eyes were shining.

"What is this place?" he asked.

"This is the Xianle Pavilion, the Temple of the Crown Prince!" Qi Rong replied.

That man started mumbling, "Temple of the Crown Prince? Crown Prince? So this is the palace?" He saw the divine statue inside, the gold reflecting on his face, and he asked again. "Is that gold?"

Seeing how glamorous the pavilion was, he had taken the temple as the royal palace.

A guard approached to chase him away, and Qi Rong said, "Of course it's gold. The Temple of the Crown Prince is a temple, not the pavilion at the imperial palace! You don't even know where you are; where did a barbarian like you come from?"

"Then where's the palace?" that man asked.

Qi Rong squinted his eyes. "Why do you ask?"

That man replied in a serious tone, "I need to go to the palace and see the king. I have something to tell him."

Qi Rong and the guards burst out laughing, their expressions condescending. "Where did this country bumpkin come from? You want to do what at the palace? Want to see the king? Is he someone you can see just because you want to? They probably won't even let you through the gates when you get there."

That man didn't seem to be affected by the taunt. "I'll go try. Maybe it'll work."

Qi Rong laughed. "Then go try!" Then he raised his hand and purposely pointed in the wrong direction.

“Thanks,” that man said, adjusted his satchel, then turned to walk out of the hall.

When he reached the stone bridge, he suddenly stopped in his step. Through the clear pond water, layers upon layers of coins could be seen sunken below. That young man seemed to have pondered for a moment, and the next second, he leapt over the bridge railing and jumped into the pond.

He was agile and skilled; once in the pond, he bent down and started fishing up bundles and bundles of coins, stuffing them into the satchel in his arms. Since they had never seen anyone who dared rob the offerings of a god, Xie Lian and Feng Xin were both stunned. Qi Rong was also taken aback and immediately erupted in anger, rushing to the bridge and slapped at the railing, yelling.

“WHAT THE FUCK! WHAT ARE YOU DOING?! SOMEONE PULL HIM OUT!!! WHAT THE ACTUAL FUCK!!!”

A number of guards immediately jumped into the water to pull that young man out, but unexpectedly, he was also quite skilled, throwing punches and kicks, not letting anyone close. Qi Rong was jumping up and down in rage, and none of the cultivators in the yard could do anything. That young man fished up a bag full and heavy with coins, carried his satchel anew and was ready to climb ashore but accidentally stepped on moss, his feet slipped, and fell back into the waters in a large splash. The guards thus took this chance to seize him, wrangling him back ashore.

Qi Rong raised his leg to stomp, yelling, “YOU DARE STEAL THIS MONEY?!”

When Qi Rong raised his leg, Feng Xin was already standing on the side, catching the right moment and blocked, so it looked like Qi Rong’s stomp was vicious but it actually landed lightly. Although Qi Rong couldn’t see the one playing tricks, he still felt something was off, like a ghost clinging to his leg. He kicked a number of times and it was the same feeling, making him feel rather lousy.

That young man seemed to have choked on water and coughed a few times. “That money was just lying there in the pond, why can’t I use it to save people?”

Qi Rong, unsatisfied by his kicks, finally stopped from irritation. “Save who? Who are you? Where’d you come from?”

He only asked so he could sentence that young man to a crime and throw him into prison, but that young man still answered honestly.

“My name is Lang Ying⁵⁷, I’m from Yong’an. We’re going through a drought, there’s no water, the crops won’t grow, and everyone’s starving because there’s no income. There’s water here, and food, and money. You use gold to build statues, and throw coins into water, so why can’t you share some with us?”

Yong’an was a large city within the Kingdom of Xianle. Xie Lian rose to his feet, his expression serious.

“Feng Xin, there’s a drought in Yong’an? How come I didn’t hear of this?”

Feng Xin turned his head back. “I don’t know. I didn’t hear anything either. Let’s ask Mu Qing later?”

Ch.70: Fallen Golden Statue; Boor Buries Suffering Son

“Call him over right this instant,” Xie Lian said.

Feng Xin closed the index and middle fingers of his right hand together and pressed them against his temple, connecting with Mu Qing in the spiritual communication array. On the other side, Qi Rong clicked his tongue.

“So you came out of that remote place, Yong’an? Truly, barren lands produce unruly radicals. Think you can rob the gods just because you’re poor?”

“Then I won’t rob,” Lang Ying said. “I will pay my respects and worship this god of yours right now. I will kneel and kowtow and beg him to give me money to save the lives of the people of my hometown, but will he do so?”

Qi Rong was momentarily stumped, thinking, if I said yes, this guy wouldn’t actually run away with all the money like it’s his right?! Thus, he replied, “His Highness the Crown Prince has become a god now, and gods are busy to death! Who has the time to mind you radicals?”

Hearing this, Lang Ying nodded slowly. “I didn’t think he’d care either. It’s not like we never prayed nor begged, but it didn’t work at all. Those who are meant to die will still die.”

Xie Lian was shaken, and another cultivator shouted, “YOU! TO BE SO DISRESPECTFUL IN THE HALLS OF GOD, AREN’T YOU AFRAID OF HEAVEN’S CONDEMNATION!”

However, Lang Ying replied, “It doesn’t matter anymore. Condemn me if they must. I’m no longer afraid of not being saved, so why should I be afraid of being condemned?”

Qi Rong gave a wave and a number of guards waiting on the side rushed forward, surrounded that young man, and started beating him down. Feng Xin was still working to soften their attacks and it only appeared like Lang Ying was being pulverized. However, he was in a dazed state, not avoiding or evading, and only occasionally raised his hands to protect the satchel on his back. On the side, Qi Rong grabbed a handful of melon seeds and munched, shaking his leg.

“HIT HIM! HIT HIM HARD IN THE NAME OF THIS PRINCE!”

Truly, the very image of a mobster. Hearing him call his own title, Lang Ying shot his head up.

“You’re a prince? Prince of what? Do you live in the palace? Can you meet the king?”

Qi Rong spat, “I’M YOUR GRAND DADDY! You still think you can see the king, don’t you? His majesty’s got a million things on his plate, he ain’t got time for you!”

Lang Ying twisted his neck and demanded stubbornly, "Why hasn't he got time for me? The gods don't have time for me and neither does his majesty, then who has time to hear me? Just who should I go to? Does the king know just how many have died in Yong'an? Do the people of the royal capital know? If they knew, why would they rather throw money in the water than giving it to us?"

Qi Rong chuckled coldly, "It's our money, we'll spend it as we will. Even if we use it like stones to skip it in the water it's nobody's business, so why do we have to give it to you? What, you've more reason just because you're poor?"

Although that had logic in its own way, it was incredibly inappropriate for that time and place. Xie Lian was about to find a way to seal Qi Rong's mouth when just then, a black-clad youth appeared in a hurry from just behind the pavilion.

"Your Highness sent for me?"

Xie Lian waved him over. "Mu Qing, come over here quick. In all the prayers you've received recently have you heard anything about the drought in Yong'an?"

Mu Qing was also taken aback. "No, I haven't heard anything."

Feng Xin blurted in the midst of his task, "How could you not? The refugees have already escaped here!"

His tone was overly accusatory and Mu Qing stiffened. He replied in a hard voice, "I told the truth, there really wasn't anything. Are you trying to say that I'm purposely withholding information? Well, did you receive anything yourself? I'm on duty at the Temple of the Crown Prince on odd months, and you're on duty on even months. If there really were people from Yong'an praying for the end of a drought, there's no reason all the drought related prayers were sent in on odd months, and you knew nothing."

Feng Xin paused and realized that was certainly the case. "I didn't say you did it on purpose. You think too much."

Seeming like they were ready to start quarrelling again, Xie Lian gestured a "pause" hand signal in annoyance.

"Alright, Feng Xin didn't mean anything. Both of you stop this instant."

The two immediately closed their mouths and stopped fighting. At the same time, Qi Rong finally got tired of watching his subordinates beat up Lang Ying, and grabbed for a small pouch to dump all the melon seed shells while saying, "Drag that robbing crook to the prison and lock him up."

The guards acknowledged the command, “Yes sir!”, and a number of them picked up Lang Ying.

“Let’s deal with the problem at hand first,” Xie Lian said. “Save this man and I’ll ask him about Yong’an properly later.”

Mu Qing relaxed his expression, and asked cautiously, “Your Highness, what do you plan to do? You can’t just casually show yourself.”

After ascension, that was one of the rules Xie Lian just couldn’t understand. The heavenly officials said they needed to help the common people, yet they all put on airs and positioned themselves above mortals, barring themselves from appearing before the mortals at will; which often restricted him left right and centre, causing much frustration. Good thing Xie Lian also had a number of ways to get around this. Without blinking, he raised his hand and pushed. The people standing just ahead noticed the shadows on the ground shaking and turned around, confused.

The next moment, Qi Rong yelled in horror, “COUSIN CROWN PRINCE—”

Xie Lian had pushed his own divine statue over!

That sword- and flower-holding, kind and beautiful golden statue swayed back and forth, then slowly toppled to its side. Qi Rong looked as if he’d just seen his own mother kick out the stool after hanging herself, his heart bursting, and he lost all mind to care for Lang Ying as he rushed desperately to grab hold of the leg to that statue, stubbornly trying to keep it upright, screaming in fright.

“WHAT ARE YOU USELESS TRASH ALL WAITING FOR? HELP ME HOLD HIM UP! DON’T LET COUSIN CROWN PRINCE FALL!! HE CAN’T FALL!!!”

While he was terrified into distraction, Xie Lian passed by him calmly and casually and stepped out of the hall. Feng Xin and Mu Qing’s faces both dropped to the ground.

It took a moment before Feng Xin finally cried, “YOUR HIGHNESS! THAT WAS YOUR OWN DIVINE STATUE!”

Something like a fallen statue really was a bad omen, so it was something of a taboo. A heavenly official who’d push over his own statue just like that was unheard of, a rarity of the three realms.

“It’s only a big chunk of gold,” Xie Lian said. “If I didn’t do this, their attention wouldn’t shift otherwise. You two go and keep pushing down on that golden statue, don’t give them a chance to leave. I’m going to meet with that man.”

Feng Xin and Mu Qing were still speechless and could only obey. They obediently stood next to that divine statue, each using but a finger to press it down. They only needed to use that bit of power and it was enough. The ones on the other side holding on had to use every ounce of their strength and still they could only keep the status quo, their teeth gritting.

“...this is indeed pure gold through and through, such weight!”

Lang Ying, who had fallen on his bottom, saw that those guards were no longer attending to him, stared at the golden shine of that divine statue for a long while before he rose to his feet, dusted himself off, and ran away carrying his satchel. Xie Lian followed behind him. He ran for quite a distance and entered a lush and heavy forest, then looked around before sitting down under a tree to rest. Xie Lian hid behind that tree, easily cast a spell, and transformed into the form of a little white-clad cultivator.

After changing, he looked himself over, making sure there was nothing amiss, and swung the whisk. He was just thinking how he should appear without alarm when he saw Lang Ying squat next to a puddle by the tree, his head down and using his hands to dig at it.

“...”

That young man's hands were large, and one gouge was enough to create a wide and deep dent. Mud and dust flew as he dug, looking very much like a thin black feral dog. Xie Lian was just wondering why he was suddenly digging holes when he saw him wipe off mud on his pants, scoop a handful of water with both hands, and bring it to his lips.

Seeing this, Xie Lian couldn't hide anymore and rushed out. He stopped his hand, took out a water bottle from his charmed sleeves, and passed it to him.

Lang Ying already had a mouthful of that puddle water, his cheeks round, and swallowed. He watched the little cultivator who had appeared too suddenly, but didn't think it strange and didn't reject his offer. He took the water bottle to drink, gulping down the entire contents in one go.

He only uttered after he finished, “Thanks.”

Since he already abruptly appeared, Xie Lian stopped caring for any natural opening. He tried his best to swing that whisk like a practiced immortal, someone trustworthy, and asked, “My friend, where did you come from and where are you going?”

“We came from the Bay of Lang-Er in the city of Yong'an. I was going to go to the royal palace, but I've changed my mind. I'm not going anymore.”

Xie Lian was taken aback. “We?”

Lang Ying nodded. “We. Me, and my son.”

Xie Lian was growing even more confused, but his heart was dropping. He watched as Lang Ying removed that satchel from his back and opened it.

“My son.”

Inside that satchel he was carrying on his back was the dead body of a small child!!!

That infant was a tiny creature, looking no more than two or three years of age. His face was yellow, his cheeks sallow, and his head had a few strands of thin and yellowing hairs stuck to it. There were even rashes. That little face was twisted into a strange expression, as if crying, very much miserable. His eyes were already closed but the mouth was open; nevertheless, no longer able to make a sound.

Xie Lian’s pupils shrank, his spirit shocked to the core, unable to speak. No wonder he had felt this young man had a strange air about him. He couldn’t describe what that strangeness was, but just that he was abnormal. The way he spoke, the way he behaved, it was like he didn’t consider consequences at all; blunt and berserk without a care. But, by the looks of things, for what did he need to consider consequences?

After showing him his son, Lang Ying wrapped his child anew, and carefully stringed up the fringes. Watching how focused he was in his action, Xie Lian was miserable. It was his very first time seeing the dead body of such a young infant.

He asked, stammering, “How...how did your son die?”

Lang Ying adjusted the satchel on his back and replied, bemused, “How did he die...I don’t know how he died. Thirsty, hungry, sick, maybe a bit of everything.”

He scratched his head. “When I first carried him out of Yong’an he would still cough a bit, and called ‘Dad!, Dad!’ on my back. Gradually there were no more cries, only coughing. And then there were no more coughs. I thought he’d fallen asleep. Later when I found something to eat and wanted to wake him up, he wouldn’t wake up.”

That child had died on the road of escape.

Lang Ying shook his head. “I don’t know how to take care of children. If my wife knew our son died, she’d yell at me to death.”

After a moment of silence, he added, “I really wish my wife could still yell at me.”

His expression had been calm the entire time, like a branch off a withered tree; a pool of dead water without a trace of life or ripples. Xie Lian’s throat tightened, unable to swallow.

He said in a small voice, "Why...why don't you bury him?"

Lang Ying nodded. "Yeah. I wanted to pick a nice place. Here's not bad. There are trees to block the sun, and water too. I'll go back after burying him. Thanks for your water."

He coughed a few times and bent down again, continuing to dig with his hands.

Xie Lian mumbled softly, "No, don't thank me...don't thank me, don't."

Just then, Feng Xin and Mu Qing appeared, and were confused to see before them one digging a hole, and the other watching in a daze. Xie Lian wasn't in the mood to speak, and repeatedly muttered a few jumbled words. It was some time before Xie Lian remembered that just giving water wasn't enough; this man was returning to Yong'an. Thus his hand went back into his sleeve and rummaged around, finally finding what he was looking for, and passed it to him.

"Here, take this."

Lang Ying stopped and looked at what was in Xie Lian's hand closely. It was a deep, red pearl no bigger than a nail; its luster smooth and sleek, polished and brilliant, and soul-stirringly beautiful. Even if he didn't know what it was, just one look and it was obvious this little gem was invaluable.

This was indeed that one remaining red coral pearl earring Xie Lian had worn during the Shangyuan Heavenly Ceremonial Procession three years ago. That pearl left a rather deep impression on Mu Qing, so the moment he saw it his face changed. Lang Ying didn't reject it, as if any proper manners and concerns of a normal person had left him, and he reached out his hand to receive it.

"Thanks."

He carefully tucked the pearl in his belt, then he removed the satchel on his back, and gently laid it into the dug pit.

"Dad will come back soon to visit you."

Finished, he used his hands and solemnly pushed the earth back to cover the satchel. Xie Lian used a hand to support his forehead and closed his eyes. A moment later, that young man left in a stride.

Feng Xin asked curiously, "Your Highness, what did he bury here? He said 'dad'? He buried someone?"

Mu Qing was concerned with something else. "Your Highness, I went and investigated earlier, and figured out what happened. Yong'an has never been a wealthy place; their temples and shrines are few in number. It seems they also have a local rule where those who don't offer donations can't pray, so those who visit the Temple of the Crown Prince have all been the wealthy, and the poor suffering from disasters can't even enter..."

Xie Lian didn't respond to the report but said in a low voice, "You two, go to Yong'an, and see what the situation is. I will go meet the Guoshi, and ask exactly what's going on."

His face had never been this dark. The two subordinates didn't dare to be negligent and both acknowledged his command, departing an instant after. Xie Lian himself thus turned and raced towards the direction of Mount Taicang.

It appeared the disaster in Yong'an could only be big and not small. But, even if he couldn't hear the voices of prayer, it didn't mean those at the royal palace had no clue at all!

Ch.71: God of Heaven Interferes in Mortal Matters

Mount Taicang, the Crown Prince Summit.

It was at the time of the day when visitors could no longer linger and were asked to leave the Royal Holy Pavilion in droves. Sounds of chanting sutras came in waves from within the Xianle Pavilion, and some thousands of cultivators were conducting their evening rituals with the four Guoshi leading the service beneath the feet of that five-meter-high golden divine statue.

Within the Temple of the Crown Prince, on either side of the walls were innumerable everlasting lamps in rows that hung from the ground to the ceiling. Xie Lian descended from the sky, lightly landing on the altar, and seated himself in position right before his own statue.

He waved a hand. A light breeze blew from nowhere, and the countless lamps spun gently. With the swaying light, many of the cultivators looked up, voicing their awe, whispering among themselves.

The Guoshi, who was composedly seated with his eyes closed, suddenly blinked them open and said, "That'll be it for today. You are all dismissed."

The cultivators rose to their feet and left. The other three Deputy Guoshi couldn't see Xie Lian's form, but could also guess that something had descended, so they also departed the hall, closing the doors behind them. Once those tall doors were shut, Xie Lian immediately spoke, unable to wait another second.

"Guoshi, did you know about the drought in Yong'an? There's been no word from father, did something happen at court? Or is it that he's unaware of what's happening?"

Heavenly officials were not allowed to secretly show themselves before mortals, but there were exceptional cases; such as Guoshi, religious ministers, or such high-level cultivators. Those who had cultivated to certain levels were representatives of heavenly officials in the mortal realm, thus, Xie Lian could speak directly to the Guoshi. The "no prostrating within the Temple of the Crown Prince" rule was thus dictated through the mouth of the Guoshi from Xie Lian.

He had originally thought there were some exceptional circumstances that made the king unable to free himself to handle the disaster at Yong'an, or that the king had no idea that the situation had worsened to the point of massive deaths.

Unexpectedly, however, the Guoshi replied, "His majesty the king is doing well, nothing major has happened, and he knows very well of what's happening in Yong'an."

Xie Lian was taken aback. "Then how come every time Father has visited the Royal Holy Pavilion, I've never heard him pray for Yong'an once? Not even a word?"

Even if he didn't get along well with his father, he also knew that the king was not a fatuous leader. He may have seen himself as high above others as the son of god, and regarded hierarchy highly, but that didn't mean he wouldn't care for refugees.

The Guoshi replied, "This has nothing to do with his majesty. It was I who advised that he nor the queen mention Yong'an in their prayers."

"...Why?" Xie Lian demanded.

"Because it's pointless," the Guoshi replied.

Xie Lian was shocked. "What do you mean by 'pointless'?"

A moment later his mind worked it out.

"Are you saying that, because I'm a martial god with no control over droughts, telling me would be pointless? Did you forget that I may be a martial god, but I'm also the Crown Prince of Xianle? My people are in trouble, how can I sit back and do nothing?"

After a pause, he continued, "The most important thing right now is to save the disaster victims and take care of them. Please speak to my father on my behalf to stop constructing any more temples; there are already too many Temples of the Crown Prince in this kingdom, I don't need them. And those golden statues—they could be melted down to help fundraise for the disaster. Yong'an sits in the west, and they need water. We can dig a canal, irrigate the waters from the east, water the crops and nourish the land..."

As he spoke, the Guoshi only shook his head, muttering, "Too early. Too early."

Xie Lian didn't understand. "What's too early?"

"Do you understand now why I said you shouldn't ascend too early?" the Guoshi said. "It's because your people haven't died out completely yet."

"..." Xie Lian's eyes widened, and he shouted in outrage, "Guoshi! WHAT...WHAT ARE YOU SAYING? WHAT DO YOU...WHAT DO YOU MEAN MY PEOPLE HAVEN'T DIED OUT COMPLETELY YET??!"

"You've already become a god, but you can't forget who you were as a mortal, unable to let go and differentiate between the two realms," the Guoshi replied. "You're involving yourself, but you are also powerless, and in the end it will only result in an utter mess."

Xie Lian was seated upon the altar and the Guoshi stood below; even though it was obvious Xie Lian was the one looking down, when the Guoshi spoke, it was like he was the one above.

“How can I be powerless? As long as I act, there will be results. Every small bit counts, even if I could save but one, it’s still better than not doing anything. If you won’t speak for me to my father, then I will go seek him out myself,” Xie Lian said.

Xie Lian jumped to his feet, but the Guoshi grabbed at the corner of his sleeve, yelling.

“COME BACK! Do you know why heavenly officials can’t show themselves before mortals at will? There’s a reason behind that thousands of years of rule, don’t do anything foolish!”

Xie Lian whipped his head around. “THEN WHAT CAN I DO? I CAN’T DO THIS, I CAN’T DO THAT; GUOSHI, THERE ARE PEOPLE DYING RIGHT NOW IN MY LAND! AREN’T GODS CALLED GODS BECAUSE THEY CAN SAVE THE PEOPLE? IF I DON’T APPEAR NOW, THEN WHEN CAN I APPEAR?? WHAT WOULD BE THE MEANING OF MY ASCENSION THEN??!!”

The Guoshi held him down, sighing. “Your Highness, sigh, Your Highness. Do you know what I’ve seen?”

Xie Lian huffed and forced himself to calm down before sitting again. “Please enlighten me.”

The Guoshi stared at him. “I’ve seen your future, and it’s pitch black.”

Xie Lian looked him straight in the eyes and said, “You must’ve seen wrong. I only like to wear white.”

“I worry that, not only will you be unable to save your people, they will turn around and drag you down from the divine altar,” the Guoshi said.

“My people aren’t like that; they can clearly recognize what’s right and wrong. If I can’t save them, then there’d be no meaning to me being on this altar anyway,” Xie Lian replied.

A moment later, the Guoshi sighed. “What your father has done can’t be said to be right, but it can’t be said to be wrong either. You said to fundraise, but it’s not like your father hasn’t tried, and you can go see how that ended. You said to dig a canal to irrigate the waters, then go see that river for yourself as to whether it could be done.”

Xie Lian nodded his head. “I understand. Thank you, Guoshi.”

Upon leaving Mount Taicang, he headed westward and arrived at the city of Yong’an of the Kingdom of Xianle.

In the twenty years of his life, Xie Lian had never thought the sun to be so scorchingly deadly. The first step he made upon that earth, he could already feel how wretchedly hot and dry it was, like everything in the air had been contorted. With the blazing sun above, the land had already cracked into broken chunks of earth, horrifyingly aged. There was a deep gutter that seemed to have been a river once, but it was already dried up to the bottom, and the blackened riverbed was emitting a strange stench. He walked for a long time and didn't see a single field. Maybe there were fields once, but they were unrecognizable at this point.

Xie Lian looked around as he walked, that dry and hot breeze blowing his long hair into a mess, but he was too occupied to mind it. Just then, someone suddenly called for him from behind.

"Your Highness!"

Xie Lian turned his head and saw two silhouettes in black approaching in a rush. It was Feng Xin and Mu Qing.

Xie Lian cut straight to the heart of the subject: "Any news?"

Feng Xin flapped the front of his shirt to fan himself. "Yes. In the past two years, the whole western territory has experienced a water shortage, and it finally erupted this year. Yong'an is the worst affected: the river's dried and the rain doesn't fall, so the crops won't grow. The wealthier families are still faring alright; as long as there's money, then food and water can be bought from elsewhere. However, most of the wealthy have already moved to the eastern territories. Those who are left are either poor or handicapped."

Xie Lian knitted his brows. "The Guoshi said my father didn't just sit back and also gave command for send disaster relief, so why is it still so serious?"

Mu Qing said coldly, "When funds go through government checkpoints, each checkpoint will skim off an amount, until finally there's nothing left. Of course it's still this serious. If it were up to me, it would have been better not to have sent anything, rather than feed those parasites."

Xie Lian held his breath, forcing his anger down. "I will tell those parasites to throw every single cent they've eaten back up."

However, Mu Qing reminded him, "Your Highness, did you forget? This is not within your control. Heavenly officials can't interfere in mortal matters. Three meters of ice weren't formed by one day of cold; his majesty the king is the one responsible for the mortal realm, this is his duty, and he still couldn't deal with it. You've got your hands full of countless prayers from your devotees, so how can you handle that too? Mind this, mind that, in the end you'll only bring trouble onto yourself. Besides, that only cures the symptoms, not the root cause."

Feng Xin blocked out the sun with his hand. "To cure the root cause, there still needs to be water. How about Your Highness ask the Guoshi to tell his majesty to irrigate the waters from the east to the west for now?"

Xie Lian shook his head. "I suggested that to the Guoshi already."

“What did the Guoshi say?” Feng Xin asked.

“...” Xie Lian swallowed. “More or less that it’s not feasible. But now I’ve realized it really can’t be done. To irrigate we’ll need to bore the river. However, something like boring for a canal requires mass conscription; who knows how many years that’d take, and it’d only exhaust the people and the treasury. It won’t do.”

Feng Xin nodded. “True enough. Distant waters can’t put out nearby fires.”

Xie Lian hummed. “But, if this can’t be solved by mortal means, maybe we can try divine methods. I heard the Rain Master has changed in recent years. The new ascended Rain Master seems to be a reclusive person, but I’ll see if I can pay a visit and request for moving waters in the east westward in the form of rain.”

Ever since Xie Lian ascended, other than greeting Jun Wu, he had never personally paid any visits to any other heavenly officials, and never tried to purposely befriend anyone, treating all as equals within the spiritual communication array. Him taking the initiative to pay visits was thus a rare occasion.

Mu Qing, however, objected. “No.”

Xie Lian turned his head. “Why not?”

“Your Highness, I’ve investigated thoroughly. In truth, these past two years, it’s not just Yong’an or the western territories that were experiencing a shortage of water, but the entire Kingdom of Xianle. Only, the eastern territories are close to the sea and have surrounding lakes and ravines, so it’s not as obvious, and hasn’t become an issue yet. But overall, the amount of water and rain have significantly decreased compared to before.”

Xie Lian’s eyes widened as Mu Qing continued, “If we really dug a canal or used rain to move waters from the east to the west, then it may temporarily relieve Yong’an, but it won’t save it completely. It would only be helping them hang on by a thread. At the same time, the eastern territories could very well fall into disaster.”

Xie Lian’s heart squeezed. “And most of the population of Xianle, along with the busiest places, are all in the east, more than three times the size of the west, especially the royal capital. If drought was to happen there...”

Feng Xin immediately understood too. “The consequences would be way more serious than Yong’an. A greater number would die!”

Mu Qing nodded, his expression solemn. “There’d be a much bigger riot born from it.”

Xie Lian took a deep breath. "So, is that what Guoshi meant when he said what father did wasn't right but wasn't wrong either? Only that he made a choice."

"So, Your Highness, that no one went to your temple to pray was a good thing," Mu Qing said. "Leave it to his majesty to decide what to do."

Xie Lian didn't respond and turned around.

The entire time they walked, everyone he saw was nothing but skin and bones; men and children had their upper bodies bare, rows of ribs visible and clear on their torsos, and the women bore dead eyes, their faces bereft of life. No one wanted to move; they didn't have the energy to move, and everything emitted the disgusting stench of death, making one want to scream and escape this decaying earth and return to the glory of the bustling royal capital.

It was a long time before he finally said, "You two stay here and assist me, deliver as much water as you can. Let me think on this."

"Fine. Go and think carefully," Feng Xin said. "Just let me know what to do once you've decided."

Xie Lian patted his shoulder, then turned to leave.

Behind him, Mu Qing said quietly, "Your Highness, do think about this carefully. We can help ten days, maybe twenty, but not one or two years. We can save one hundred lives but not a hundred thousand. You're a martial god, after all, not the god of water. Even if you were the god of water, you can't create water from nothing. If we can't fix the root of this problem, we can't keep going like this; this is merely an inadequate measure, like using a cup of water to douse a burning cart of firewood."

Ch.72: To Meet You in the Mortal Realm; To Find Flowers Beneath the Rain

After hearing what Mu Qing said, Xie Lian paused briefly in his step, but he didn't turn back. He waved his hand and continued forward by himself.

When he returned to the Xianle capital, Xie Lian first headed straight for the royal palace.

He didn't know why he needed to go there, since it was not exactly to see his parents. It wasn't only because of the fact that, as a heavenly official, he was forbidden to reveal himself to his closest family members; but more so because, in the time he had left home and in the years that had passed, he didn't really know how to initiate conversation with his parents anymore. This was probably the same for every child in the world. Thus, he concealed himself and haphazardly ran about the palace he was so familiar with, but his majesty the king was nowhere to be seen. Finally, when he came to Qifeng Manor, he found his father and mother.

The two had just dismissed the palace servants and were chatting between themselves. The queen sat on the side of the bed. The mask that she was fiddling around with in her hands was the very one that Xie Lian had worn three years ago at the Heavenly Ceremonial Procession. The shape of the golden mask was carefully molded with Xie Lian's features, which was why it had fit him perfectly and comfortably when he had worn it. When it was seen by others, the degree of replication was almost frightening.

The king chided from the side, "Stop playing around with that and come give me a head massage."

Even though the king and the queen put up a front in front of the people, ever since Xie Lian was little, he had seen clearly that behind the scenes, his parents would bicker like any other normal married couple. The queen put down the mask as expected and sat down by the king's side to help massage his temples.

As she was combing through his hair, she suddenly said, "You've more white in your hair again."

Xie Lian took a closer look. True to his mother's words, the sides of his father's hair were greying, and it aged him a few years.

He wondered to himself, "Didn't father visit the Royal Holy Pavilion to pray just a while back? At the time, his hair was still black, how did it grey so suddenly?"

The queen handed a copper mirror to the king, but he pushed it away. "No need to see. Just dye it black again next time we go visit Mount Taicang."

It was then that Xie Lian realized, "His hair didn't grey only recently! It greyed a long time ago, it's just that he dyed it black every time before coming to see me. Yet because I've been too occupied listening to the prayers of my devotees and running about, I rarely made time to come back and visit, which was why I didn't suspect anything."

Coming to this conclusion, Xie Lian was filled with guilt. For once, he was glad his parents weren't able to see him.

As the queen massaged the king's head, she murmured, "I told you to rest early every day, yet you never listen to me and even say that I nag you day and night. Now look at how unseemly you've become. If our son saw you, he definitely wouldn't want anything to do with you."

The king huffed. "Ever since your son grew up and his wings toughened, he stopped caring about me anyway." Though he said it in such a manner, he still couldn't help but take a peek at the copper mirror by the bedside and muttered, "It's not that bad, isn't it still the same face?"

Xie Lian was speechless. He never realized that his father had this side to him, talking bad about him behind his back with such petulant bitterness, and he couldn't help but smile.

The queen laughed. "Okay, okay, it's not bad. Your health is more important than the heavens, you should rest early today."

The king shook his head. "I can't rest right now. Recently, there are a number of people from Yong'an that have arrived at the capital. If they want to come, that's fine, but they've also stirred up trouble, making people feel uneasy. It's a tricky situation."

It turns out that the reason behind his father's greying hair was because of the drought at Yong'an. There was an unspeakable kind of misery in Xie Lian's heart. The queen nodded.

"I heard from Rong-er that he met someone from Yong'an today. He said that the man tried to steal money from the temple, how frightening!"

The king had a wary look in his eyes. "Indeed, it's shocking. If there were only tens or hundreds of them, that would be fine, but if a couple hundred thousand of them come and go rogue all over the capital, then who knows what's going to happen?"

The queen debated for a while and finally said, "That might not happen. If they follow the laws and keep to themselves, then let them come."

The king became agitated. "As the king of a nation, how can I take a risk with something that 'might not' happen? Besides, they definitely can't come over. Looking after a few more people isn't as simple as placing a couple more sets of chopsticks down at the table. There are many complications involved that you don't understand, so stop talking."

The queen soothed, "Okay, let's not talk about this anymore. I don't understand the things you spoke of to begin with anyway. If only our son was still here. Then he could at least help take some burden off of you."

The king scoffed. "Him? What can he do? As long as he doesn't cause me any more worries, then that's already good enough."

At the mention of Xie Lian, the king seemed to liven up again. "That son of yours, he's already ten-something years old, but he was raised like a princess. Even if he knew, it won't do any good, he'll just add more problems to it. It's best if he stays carefree in the heavens without knowing anything. Let him do what he wants to do. He's not the Crown Prince anymore, there's no need for him to care about matters in the mortal realm. Let him fly to his heart's content."

Xie Lian listened silently as his father ranted with growing excitement. With a knowing smile on her face, the queen nudged the king.

"Now you call him a princess. Weren't you the one who spoiled our princess since he was young? And now you want to blame it all on me?" She then sighed. "That child is good at everything except for missing home. Before, when he was studying at the Royal Holy Pavilion, he'd only come back to visit once every few months. Now that he ascended, it's even more difficult. We haven't seen him once in three years. Who knows if we'll see him again?"

Hearing her complain, the king took Xie Lian's side. "How would a woman know anything? The Guoshi said those were the laws of Heaven, how can we treat him like a common mortal? If you call your son back, you'd be weighing him down."

The queen hurriedly explained herself, "I'm only just saying. I won't make any such demands when we're in front of him." Then she muttered to herself, "It's not too bad looking at the statues either; they look pretty much like him, and the statues are everywhere."

Watching them for so long, Xie Lian felt an ache in his heart and a hard lump lodged in his throat, making it painful for him to swallow. He couldn't stay hidden any longer, yet he couldn't reveal himself either. It wasn't because he was afraid of breaking Heaven's laws, but rather, even now, he still didn't know what to say. As for the situation in Yong'an, he didn't have any solution at the moment. If he were to suddenly appear, it would only cause his parents more agitation and stress.

He dashed out of the royal palace. The moment he was outside, Xie Lian took in a couple of deep breaths, and it was only then that he was finally able to calm down. He steadied his heart and pulled himself together, thinking action was better than standing around sighing, he cast a spell and transformed himself into a plainly-dressed young cultivator. He ran around the capital, digging for information and recorded his findings. Traversing all over, after a full day of work, he finally got the answers he wanted.

Indeed, the water level in all the lakes and rivers within the royal capital of Xianle was lower than the previous years. Back when he was still at the Royal Holy Pavilion, there were a few times when he'd snuck down the mountain to play. As he rowed his boat happily along the largest river that crossed through the Kingdom of Xianle, the water level at that time was only just a tad short of the levee, yet now, it had dropped several meters. On top of that, the residents of the city said it had been like that for a while; it wasn't something that happened overnight. Before this, Xie Lian really hadn't paid much attention, but now that he had, he was shocked to see all the warning signs. He had originally hoped there'd be some mistake in Mu Qing's report and thus decided to come and see it for himself. But now he can't deny the fact that Mu Qing had never let him down before.

Once the situation was confirmed, Xie Lian stood solemnly by the riverside, deep in contemplation. Pedestrians passed behind from time to time, some nodded and smiled, others looked on curiously, but most went about happily minding their own business. An unknown amount of time passed, and quietly, clouds gathered from the edge of the skies; sounds of pitter-patter filled the surroundings. It had started to rain. Numerous pedestrians on the street looked up to the sky.

"So unlucky! It's raining, let's hurry back!"

"Yeah! How troublesome!"

Plip plop plip plop. Raindrops were beating down on Xie Lian's face and clothes before he finally became aware of his surroundings.

"It's raining?"

When the people in the capital saw rain, they would drop everything to find shelter. Little did they know just how many were dying on the other side of Xianle for a rainstorm like this to come. A group of people with umbrellas ran past, and when they saw Xie Lian, alone, getting soaked by the rain, they pulled him along and beckoned.

"Young Cultivator, why aren't you getting out of this rain? It's coming down harder!"

Dazed, Xie Lian followed along and ran to seek shelter under a long roof. Not soon after the group of people tucked away their umbrellas, they broke out in laughter.

"Luckily, I saw the clouds gather when I came out today and grabbed an umbrella, or else I would've really become a drowned rat!"

"It's been too long since it last rained. The storm is way overdue, so it's going to be a big one."

"Gosh, see! It really is coming down harder! At this rate, it's going to turn into a deluge!"

The raindrops were beating down on the ground, splattering outwards. Those people spoke in such a familiar accent that Xie Lian felt deeply that this was his home; this was the place he was born and grew up, and those were the citizens he knew.

As the chitter-chatter continued, the rain became a little lighter. A few people urged, "While it's still light, we should hurry and go!"

Right after that, the men opened their umbrellas and stepped out from under the roof one after another, but Xie Lian still stood where he was. A couple of them glanced back and after a brief discussion among themselves, one came over and handed him a worn-down umbrella.

He offered politely. "Young Cultivator, are you not able to return home? This rain is quite heavy, why don't you take this umbrella?"

Xie Lian snapped out of his daydream. "Thank you very much, but what about you?"

A few people in the group under the rain called out, "We still have a couple of umbrellas here that we can squeeze under together. Let's go, let's go!"

Urged by his companions, the man left the umbrella in Xie Lian's hand and ran back. The pa pa sounds of their footsteps slowly faded away in the distance as Xie Lian stood for a while longer, holding onto the umbrella. Suddenly, his eyes caught a glimpse of an inconspicuous shrine not too far away. He opened his umbrella and walked towards it in the rain. Upon a closer look, the two sides of the small shrine doors were written with the verses, "Body in Abyss; Heart in Paradise". Turned out that this was a Shrine of the Crown Prince.

Since eight thousand temples were built within only the span of three years, it was only natural not every one of them would be as extravagant and breathtaking as the one on Mount Taicang. Amongst the shrines, there were quite a few that were built by amateurs to fill the number and generate the excitement. Not only did they lack a donation box, but they also didn't have any shrine priests. The only things that they had were a clay statue, and a couple of offering plates filled with assorted fruits and refreshments. Those with kind hearts would come by once in a while to freshen the place a little, so that it could at least pass for a decent shrine.

Well-hidden in an area like this was such an inconspicuous Shrine of the Crown Prince. Without stepping in, Xie Lian could already make out what could be described as a charmingly tacky Crown Prince statue. Exquisite clothing, a pale, round face with a slightly pinkish undertone, and a silly smile. The statue looked like a big doll. If he didn't have so much on his mind, he probably would've laughed out loud.

In the past three years, Xie Lian had seen three thousand, if not five thousand Crown Prince statues. There were none that looked exactly like himself; even the most similar one was still seven points off. As for the rest, they were either too ugly or too beautiful. A majority of the divine statues of most other heavenly officials were too ugly, and yet, Xie Lian was the exact opposite. There were some that were beautiful beyond recognition, to the point where he, himself, was embarrassed. He didn't really take a good look at this clay statue to begin with, his eyes had glossed over it quickly, but unexpectedly, a snow-white blur caught his eye and grabbed his attention.

Grasped in the left hand of that crudely-made clay Crown Prince statue was a flower, white as snow.

The pearl-white petals, with crystal dew clinging on to them, looked beyond delicate. One could faintly catch a wisp of its fragrance floating in the air, lovely and endearing. The signature pose of the Crown Prince statue was "Sword in One Hand; Flower in the Other". Said flower that was held in the left hand would, of course, be a finely-crafted flower of gold, flower of gems, flower of jade. However, this was the first time Xie Lian had seen a real flower clasped within his statue's hand, and he couldn't help but lean forward to get a better look.

After a close examination, he discovered that the Crown Prince statue had probably held a clay flower once upon a time. Whether it fell due to the sculptor's poor skills or if someone had intentionally picked it off as some form of a prank, only a small hole remained in the left fist. That little white flower just so happened to be placed in this hole. If there was a person that had especially picked a flower to fill the empty space within this statue, then that person was truly kind-hearted.

Xie Lian's thoughts came to a halt when he heard a series of hurried footsteps. He didn't look back immediately, but instead hid his form. With the umbrella in hand, he lightly leapt onto the altar, and then turned around to look down. Within the grey fog of rain, a young boy barged in.

This boy was no older than twelve or thirteen. His dirt-stained, patched clothes were soaked from head to toe, and his face was covered by filthy bandages. His right fist was tightly clutching onto his left, as if protecting something important. It was only after he had entered the shrine did he finally release his hands.

A tiny, single flower, as white as snow, was sitting in his palms.

Ch.73: To Meet You in the Mortal Realm; To Find Flowers Beneath the Rain 2

Xie Lian made a small sound as if he had just remembered something in the back of his mind.

The face that was wrapped under the layers of bandages inevitably reminded him of the child he had met three years ago. However, he wasn't completely sure. Pessimistically speaking, could that child still be alive three years after escaping from Mount Taicang?

Just then, the young boy came forward. He lifted himself up on tippy-toes and swapped the flower on the clay statue with the one he had in his hands. From atop the altar, Xie Lian could see it as clear as day. The petals on this new flower were fuller and even more delicate. It carried twice as many dewdrops, and from the strong fragrance, one could be certain that it was freshly-picked. Could it be that the sole reason for this boy to visit an inconspicuous shrine like this everyday was just to replace the flower with a fresher one?

Moreover, after offering the flower, the young boy stood in front of the clay Prince statue. Unlike the others who stubbornly wanted to kneel, he interlocked his fingers, and silently made a prayer while standing. He had actually followed Xie Lian's wishes.

It had been three years. Among all of Xie Lian's followers that had prayed, there were officials, nobles, names that travelled across this land, and talents that would even impress the heavens. Yet the one Xie Lian felt was the most sincere was actually this child, who looked barely over thirteen. Furthermore, it was a child who had probably been kicked out of those fancier golden temples simply because of his patched clothing, and could only come to this kind of shabby, run-down shrine to offer his prayers.

Truly, an indescribable sentiment.

Just then, more sounds of wet footsteps came from outside the shrine. A group of children with umbrellas rowdily ran past. At first, Xie Lian thought that they were only passing by, but unexpectedly, they circled back again. Acting like they discovered something extraordinary, one child clapped his hands.

"Wow, wow. The ugly monster got kicked out again!"

Even though the group of kids and the boy in the temple were all around the same age, every one of them was taller than him, and looked as if their parents had fed them well. There was probably a holiday coming up, as all of them were dressed in new clothes and new shoes. As they splashed around in the puddles playfully by the shrine entrance, their innocent smiles were full of life and void of any ill intent. It was as if they didn't really understand that "ugly monster" were awful words, and didn't think that their own words would be hurtful. They probably thought that it was funny. The boy tightened his fist, but his fist was so small that it wasn't threatening at all.

The kids by the door teased. “Hey, ugly monster, you sleeping in the shrine again tonight? Better watch out, that ‘mom’ of yours is gonna beat the living hell outta you when you get home!”

Xie Lian frowned. Under the wrapped bandages, the boy’s one eye flashed with anger. He raised his fists and yelled.

“I don’t have a home!! I don’t have a mom! She’s not my mom! Get out! Get out! Keep talking and I’m gonna beat the crap outta you!”

Yet, the group of kids couldn’t care less. They stuck out their tongues and challenged, “You dare? Careful, we might just tell your dad again, and let him teach you a lesson.”

Some raised their brows and sneered. “Oh right, you don’t have a mom, because your mom didn’t want you. You don’t have a home, because your family doesn’t want anything to do with you. That’s why you can only sleep in this pitiful shrine...”

The young boy couldn’t endure it any longer. With a loud cry, he lunged at them.

For such a scrawny kid, he sure could pack a punch. The loud cry had almost sent a couple of the kids running in fear, but the kid that had originally started the fight held his ground.

“What’s there to be scared of?! We have more people!”

Upon hearing that, the ones who wanted to run away returned and joined the fight, pulling at the boy’s hands and feet. Xie Lian finally couldn’t stand it anymore. With a wave of his hand, an invisible force shot out of the blue and separated the boys. Immediately after, a powerful wave of puddle water flew up from the ground and knocked the group of children off their feet.

In the end, they were still kids. After falling to the ground without knowing why and getting a whole mouthful of muddy water, their new clothes were completely soaked. Now that they’d become even filthier and uglier than the kid they made fun of, the happy laughter from before was replaced with loud wailing. They crawled up from the ground and ran away sniffing with umbrellas in their hands.

Xie Lian shook his head in disappointment. As a proper martial god whose job was to ward off evil ghosts and bring protection and peace, this was the first time that he’d gotten tangled in this kind of juvenile dispute. Even though he had chased away the wrongdoers, he didn’t feel accomplished at all. His gaze returned to the young boy.

During that chaos, the bandages on the boy’s head had been yanked off half-way. The half-revealed face was swollen with blue and purple bruises. It was obvious that these hadn’t been caused by the brawl just now. Before Xie Lian could get a better look, the boy had already rewrapped his bandages without a word. He sat down by the clay statue's feet and hugged his knees close.

Xie Lian had originally wanted to come to this Crown Prince shrine to think. He had planned on summoning Feng Xin and Mu Qing to discuss an important matter, but the child that he had unexpectedly bumped into had drawn his attention. He sent out a summoning, then squatted down beside the boy and stared. Not long after, a rumbling sound came from the boy's stomach. The offering plate still had a couple of fruits and sweets. Although they looked dried out and probably wouldn't taste that good, it was better than nothing. Xie Lian picked one and lightly tossed it towards the boy.

Having gotten hit by the fruit, the young boy immediately wrapped his arms around his head and curled up defensively, as if the thing that hit him was a rock, and that it would be followed by more. After a while, he finally looked around and realized it was only a fruit, and that there wasn't anyone nearby. Hesitantly, he picked up the fruit, dusted it off twice against his clothes, and returned it to the offering plate. Turns out he would rather endure the hunger than eat the offerings on the plate.

After that, he walked towards the door, and looked at the heavy downpour outside of the shrine as if debating whether to venture out to find food. However, the rain was coming down too hard. Since he didn't want to get soaked again, he walked back and curled up on the ground by the clay statue's feet.

Just then, Feng Xin and Mu Qing arrived after receiving the call. The two stepped out from behind the shrine.

Feng Xin gloomily said, "Your Highness, how did you find such a small Crown Prince shrine? Why did you send out a call from here?" When he looked down, he suddenly noticed a curled-up figure on the ground that he could've almost stepped on unknowingly, and blurted out, "What the hell is this kid doing here!?"

Mu Qing also looked down, took a good look and immediately asked, "Your Highness, is this the child that ran from Mount Taicang three years ago?"

Xie Lian shook his head. "I'm not sure. I didn't know what his name was nor what he looked like."

As the three surrounded the unsuspecting child and chatted, the boy on the ground shifted. As he wiped his face, Xie Lian realized there was blood running down his nose and the corner of his mouth. Seeing this, Xie Lian felt he couldn't just do nothing.

He said, "Let this child leave first. It's getting dark. This shrine isn't a good place to pass the night."

“Could it be that he has nowhere to go? If that’s the case, then I’m afraid this is the only place that he could spend the night in,” Feng Xin said.

“He has a home, though the situation there might not be great,” Xie Lian said. “Even so, this shrine isn’t any better. If he leaves, then we can find something for him to eat. He’s also injured.”

Mu Qing spoke up, “Your Highness, please excuse my frankness, but we don’t have time to bother with these minor things. Did you call us here because you’ve come to a decision?”

Of all the heavenly officials who resided in the Upper Court, there had never been one that would accept every prayer from all of their devotees. With countless amounts of followers, if one was to care for every single one of them, it would be exhausting. Which was why, sometimes, they would turn a blind eye to those minor and less impactful wishes, and pretend that they didn’t hear, to lessen the workload. Maybe it was due to Xie Lian’s young age, with a body bursting with energy and passion, that he had yet to learn about how to properly prioritize and work those things out. After some thought, he walked towards the entrance of the tiny shrine while carrying the umbrella that was gifted to him earlier by those pedestrians on the street.

Xie Lian slowly opened the umbrella. The falling raindrops beat down on it, creating a pitter-patter sound. On the ground, the young boy heard the noise and thought that someone had entered and shifted slightly. But, after thinking no one would really bother with him, he laid back down again. Xie Lian placed the opened umbrella by the entrance. The young boy waited for the sound to disappear, but when it didn’t, he sat up in suspicion to take a look. When he saw a red umbrella leaning against the ground under the rain, like a lonely crimson flower that had bloomed by itself, he froze in surprise.

Watching the boy rushing forward to grab the umbrella, Mu Qing lectured, “Your Highness, you’ve done more than enough here. If you’re too obvious and he finds out, it would be troublesome.”

Before Xie Lian could reply, the young boy ran back and shouted from behind them, “Your Highness!”

The three gods almost jumped in surprise and turned around. That boy, cradling the umbrella in his arms, had an eye that was reddened and filled with emotion. He lifted his head and shouted to the clay statue.

“Your Highness! Is that you?!”

Feng Xin didn’t know Xie Lian helped the boy chase away the other group of kids and had even chucked a fruit at him prior to this. He mused, “This kid is quite clever, he actually figured it out.”

Mu Qing, on the other hand, suspected that something must have happened before, and eyed Xie Lian.

The boy begged, "If you're here, please, answer my one question!"

From his place high atop the altar, Xie Lian would hear countless pleas of "please appear before me" every day. When a sound becomes repetitive, it would numb the ear and eventually fade into the background. Even so, whenever he heard a voice like this, he couldn't help but drop matters at hand and perk up his ears.

From his side, Mu Qing cautioned, "Your Highness, just leave it be."

Xie Lian didn't speak. The young boy clutched onto the umbrella tightly with both hands, gritting his teeth.

"I'm suffering! Every day, I wish I'd die. Every day, I want to kill off everyone in this world, and then kill myself! I'm living in agony!"

From a boy that couldn't be older than thirteen, shouting words like "suffering" and "kill off everyone" sounded almost ridiculous and laughable. However, hidden inside this tiny body was something explosive; something that nurtured his rage and roars.

Feng Xin scoffed, "What's wrong with him? 'Kill everyone in this world', is that something a kid could say?"

Mu Qing said flatly, "He's still young. When he gets older, he'll know that what he experiences now is really nothing much." After a pause he looked at Xie Lian. "There are too many suffering in this world. Take Yong'an's drought, for example; name one Yong'an citizen that has it better than him. There's no need to bother with this, Your Highness. Let's focus on our priorities."

Xie Lian said softly, "Perhaps."

To another, the suffering of one probably only looked like trivial problems.

The boy was still looking up at the statue. His eye was becoming even redder, yet there were no tears. With the umbrella in one hand, he reached out with the other and tugged on the clay statue's robes.

He persisted, "For what should I live for in this world? What does it mean to live?"

However, his questions were met by silence, not a soul to give him answers. It seemed that the young boy had expected as much and, slowly, dropped his head.

To his surprise, suddenly, a voice from above broke through the dead silence: "If you don't know how to live on anymore, then live for me."

Next to Xie Lian, both Feng Xin and Mu Qing had not expected him to actually answer, and such an answer too! Their eyes widened. "...Your Highness?!"

The young boy's head shot up, but there was no one there. Only a soft and gentle voice came from that clay statue:

"I have no answer to the question you asked. However, if you don't know the meaning of your life, then make me that meaning, and use me as your reason to live."

Feng Xin and Mu Qing's faces looked as if they were about to explode, and both reached out their hands to smother Xie Lian's mouth, sputtering, "No more, Your Highness! You're violating the rules! The rules!!"

But before they could fully cover up his mouth, Xie Lian managed to shout out, "Thank you for your flower! It's beautiful; I like it very much!"

Ch.74: Praying for Rain; The Rain Master Lends the Rain Hat

That young boy was completely and utterly stunned.

Meanwhile, Feng Xin and Mu Qing both wished they could grow several more arms and legs to smother Xie Lian. With great difficulty, they finally pulled him down.

Yet, Xie Lian effortlessly pushed them away and said, "Alright! I'm done! I know I violated the rules, but you just pretend you've heard nothing and all will be well. As long as you guys don't say anything, no one will know. Just this once. Don't say anything, you hear me?"

Mu Qing looked like he'd been forced to eat a sock and shook his head, muttering, "I can't believe you...saying something like 'live on for me' with such confidence, you're really..."

Xie Lian didn't think what he said was much of anything, but hearing Mu Qing, now it sounded like it was quite the something indeed, and he flushed a bright red colour. Feng Xin immediately frowned.

"Enough. His Highness already said not to speak of it, so why are you still talking about it?"

Yet the corners of his lips were twisted. Xie Lian couldn't stand it anymore and defended himself.

"What, what? What I said clearly worked! Look!"

That young boy sat dazedly for a long while, but when no more of Xie Lian's voice came, he rubbed hard at his face, reached for the offering plate on the altar, held it in his arms, and started munching at the dried-out fruits and refreshments. He chewed and chewed vigorously, looking like a small animal both vicious and pitiful. Xie Lian bent down to watch him, a smile appearing on his face.

He said to the other two, "You see? It worked. He refused to eat before, but now he's eating."

"Alright, fine. It works. Because you're a god," Mu Qing said.

"Right, right. It works. Because you're a god," Feng Xin said, too.

"..."

Xie Lian straightened and became serious once more. "That's right, I am a god. I called you both over because I've indeed come to a decision."

In an instant, the relaxed atmosphere turned heavy again.

“What do you want us to do?” Feng Xin asked, while Mu Qing questioned, “Are we still minding this matter?”

“We are. It’s simple,” Xie Lian said. “There’s not enough water in the Kingdom of Xianle, so we’ll go to the kingdoms outside Xianle.”

“Go to the other kingdoms?” Mu Qing asked, hesitant. “Wouldn’t that be too far? We’d need to borrow water-creating spiritual devices from some water god, and impose ourselves in the territories of other heavenly officials. They might not be willing.”

Of course, Xie Lian had considered this. “I’m going to give it a shot. It’s still better than doing nothing. You two stay and continue to watch over Yong’an. Assist the worst affected areas and I will return to the Heavenly Court. Any problems?”

“No problems. I’ve got your back,” Feng Xin said.

Mu Qing gave it some thought and questioned: “Then what about all the prayers from the devotees at the Temple of the Crown Prince, Your Highness?”

“I was going to get to that,” Xie Lian replied. “Pick out the important ones and take care of them for me. The not-so-dire ones can wait.”

Mu Qing didn’t look too optimistic, but still acknowledged, “You’re the Crown Prince, we’ll listen to you. But, I’d advise not to let them wait too long.”

Xie Lian patted their shoulders. Feng Xin and Mu Qing bowed then departed, leaving only Xie Lian and that child in that small shrine. Xie Lian exited the shrine, and took a glance back, but didn’t stay another moment longer; rushing straight for the Heavenly Court.

Initially, he was going to pay a visit to the few heavenly officials that controlled water, but strangely, a number of them were away from the Heavenly Court, and only the Rain Master, who didn’t reside in the heavens, was around. Xie Lian was hurrying down the streets of the court and bumped into a black-clad woman official with a number of scrolls in her arms.

She smiled. “Your Highness, you’re finally back.”

Xie Lian immediately asked, “Nangong, you’ve come in the nick of time. Do you know where the Rain Master’s residence is located?”

This black-clad woman was named Nangong Jie, and was a low-ranking civil official from the Middle Court. After Xie Lian had ascended, much of the grunt work and errands were taken care of by her. This individual was well-informed of news and handled affairs well, so Xie Lian thought well of her.

“The Lord Rain Master’s new palace hasn’t finished construction yet, so the current residence is temporarily situated at the Kingdom of Yushi in the South,” Nangong Jie said. She gave him the address to the Rain Master’s residence, then added, “Why are you looking for the Lord Rain Master?”

“For urgent business. Thanks for your help,” Xie Lian said. He was about to leave, but turned back and cleared his throat, sounding embarrassed. “Nangong, you’re more familiar with the heavenly officials of the Upper Court. Can you tell me if the Lord Rain Master...likes anything?”

Usually, when a newly-appointed heavenly official ascended, the clever ones would pay a visit to all the palaces of every official and greet them with gifts as a form of social salutation. This was pretty much an unspoken rule, but Xie Lian ascended too suddenly, and when he first arrived no one taught him. It was only afterwards that Guoshi reminded him, but by then it was already too late, and things would have been awkward. Also, something like this felt too much like backhanded bribery, and as a Crown Prince, Xie Lian didn’t appreciate the practice; in the end, he decided to just go about things naturally, hoping for a chance to build relationships with the other officials through more genuine means.

It was an admirable act, but now he’d turned back on it and proactively asked after what a heavenly official would like; sounding quite obvious, like he was about to bribe someone, so he couldn’t help but blush with shame. However, he had no other choice. The other gods who resided at the Heavenly Court communicated through the spiritual communication array, and that would have made negotiation much easier. The Rain Master was involved in none of these interactions, so for a first visit, Xie Lian didn’t want people to misunderstand that he’d be borrowing spiritual devices for nothing.

Nangong Jie immediately understood. “Regrettably, I’m afraid I can’t help Your Highness in this. The Lord Rain Master is quite low-key; not just me, but there’s probably no one in the entire heavenly realm who knows this lord’s personal interests. Sorry.”

Xie Lian reddened. “No worries, don’t take it to heart. Thanks.”

Nangong Jie added, “But, if my lord has anything the matter, it won’t hurt to pay a visit directly. By the Lord Rain Master’s temper, you might still very well be received.”

Xie Lian thanked her again, and followed her direction going southward, arriving at the temporary residence of the Rain Master.

It was a small village, the mountains green and the waters clear; a land of picturesque scenery, but Xie Lian had no mind to appreciate it. He crossed through the ridges of fields, and finally saw a stone slate with the word “Rain” engraved on it. This meant that, after passing the stone slate, it would be the temporary domain of the Rain Master, and those working within it should all be the Rain Master’s subordinates. But as Xie Lian walked, it was only lush green fields all around. In the fields were oxen mooing, mills turning, assiduous farmers planting rice, and next to the fields was a small, crooked thatched cottage. There was neither trace nor signs of divinity, and Xie Lian wondered if he'd gone in the wrong direction. Wasn't this only an impoverished, small farming village?

While he was doubting himself, a black ox from a field farther away suddenly moo-ed twice. It stood back on its hind legs; the forelegs stretched, and it helped itself remove the plow from its own back. That strong and solid body narrowed, that long oxen snout shrank, and within a blink of an eye, it had transformed into a barebacked farmer from a buff black ox.

That farmer was tall and strong, his muscles well-defined, his expression stubborn; his nose had a steel nose-ring hooked through like that of an ox, a long weed hung from his lips. The other farmers witnessed this extraordinary transformation, but continued to work like it was nothing. Thus, Xie Lian concluded that no one there was mortal and approached, raising his hands and folding them into a polite fist.

"Fellow cultivator, may I inquire if this is the temporary residence of the Lord Rain Master?"

That black ox farmer pointed to the field-bank across and replied, "Yeah. The Lord Rain Master lives there."

"..."

Xie Lian looked around several times before confirming that in the pointed direction, there was indeed only that thatched cottage that looked like it would topple from a mere breeze, and for sure leaked on a rainy day.

Even his most shabby, decrepit shrines looked more solid than that little cottage. Xie Lian was full of wonder. They said the Lord Rain Master was of royal descent like himself, from the Kingdom of Yushi. It was for this very reason that he didn't bring any precious gems or rare treasures as a greeting gift, thinking perhaps that the Rain Master felt the same way he did in regard to those things; which was disdain. Why such destitution after ascension? Maybe it was another form of cultivation?

Without forgetting his manners, Xie Lian thanked the farmer and approached the little cottage, calling with a loud and clear voice.

"Lord Rain Master, please forgive this Prince of Xianle for making this abrupt visit without prior notice."

There was no response from within the cottage, and that farmer came forward, hauling the plow.

"Oh? You're that Crown Prince who ascended at the age of seventeen?"

"Regrettably," Xie Lian said.

"It's nothing regrettable. It's the truth," that farmer said. "But, the Lord Rain Master doesn't like meeting people and was injured recently, so I'm afraid you won't be received today."

Hearing this, Xie Lian felt disappointed, but still wanted to keep trying. "Then may I ask you to pass on a message for me? I have an urgent request. However, if the Lord Rain Master should feel inconvenienced by it I won't push."

That farmer chuckled. "No need to pass on word, we all know why you're here. Feels bad, right? Having no water in Xianle."

Xie Lian was taken aback. "You know about the affairs of Xianle?"

"Of course I know," that farmer said. "It's not just us here in this shoddy mountain ravine: at present, who doesn't know that catastrophe is about to befall your Kingdom of Xianle? You don't know anything about your own affairs, but everyone else watching closely understands what's going on better than you yourself, and they're probably all enjoying the show, haha. You're here to borrow the Rain Master's spiritual device for disaster aid, right?"

Those were enlightening words. It was only then did Xie Lian realize, it wasn't that those heavenly officials in the Upper Court were all gone at the same time: they all had known what his intentions were, and purposely shut their doors or left a long time ago to avoid him, not wanting to get pulled into his mess.

He sighed, thinking, "Should I maybe really have paid everyone's palaces a visit at the beginning, so it would've been easier to find cooperation amongst my peers going forward?"

It was a depressing thought. He responded in a small voice, "That's right. If it's inconvenient for the Rain Master, I won't be bothersome."

However, that farmer said, "Why not be bothersome? Because it's shameful? This relates to the survival of your kingdom, shouldn't you cause trouble and annoy us to death? Is it so hard to lower yourself a little? Young people shouldn't be so easily unnerved. Let me say something unpleasant: should the Lord Rain Master help, it's on account of kindness, if not, it's on account of duty. Lending the device to you would be based on mood; you can't complain after, either."

Xie Lian knew what he said made sense, but with such a dire situation at hand plus his unfriendly tone, a wave of anger rolled up and he held his head higher, sounding grave.

"I understand everything you're saying, and I would never complain behind anyone's back, so why must you predetermine how I am? I said I won't be bothersome simply because I don't want to do anything pointless and cause trouble for Lord Rain Master at the same time. But if the Lord Rain Master doesn't feel inconvenienced and I can borrow the spiritual device so long as I am bothersome, then it'd be nothing for me to offer up all eight thousand of my temples and kowtow one hundred times.”

That farmer laughed out loud. “Angry? The temper of a child. Here!”

He tossed something; Xie Lian raised his hand and caught a verdant bamboo hat, the very one that farmer had on his back.

“What's this?” Xie Lian asked.

“That thing you wanted to borrow,” that farmer said. “The Lord Rain Master already asked me to pass this to you before you came. Use it carefully. If you break it, we won't forgive you.”

Xie Lian's eyes widened. “Why?”

“Didn't I already tell you why?” that farmer said. “Lending it to you was based on mood. Other heavenly officials won't help you, so the Lord Rain Master just had to. Whatever the Lord Rain Master wants to do, it shall be done.”

“THANK YOU SO MUCH! THANK YOU!!” Xie Lian cried.

That farmer added, “Don't be too happy so soon, Your Highness. The Lord Rain Master may have ascended before you, but there aren't as many devotees; therefore, not as powerful as you. In addition, there are recent injuries to consider. Other than lending you that thing, the rest is all up to you. Distant waters cannot quench nearby thirst; that Rain Master Hat can move rain, but not create water. There's not enough water in your Xianle, so you must borrow from other kingdoms, and they may not be willing. Only the Kingdom of Yushi has an abundant collection over the years, and is rather wealthy in that aspect.”

Xie Lian was more than aware of just how difficult it was to lend your own spiritual device to a stranger. He bowed deeply to that thatched cottage.

“That the Lord Rain Master would lend a helping hand, I am profoundly grateful. I will not forget this kindness; should there be anything I can do to help in the future, pray the Lord Rain Master does not hesitate to ask for me. Farewell!”

With the spiritual device in hand, Xie Lian immediately found a lake in the south, and ladled a large quantity of lake water with the Rain Master Hat. He crossed thousands of miles and returned to Yong'an in Xianle. He found the worst-affected village, the Bay of Lang Er, and flipped that bamboo hat from the clouds.

Soon after, a small bout of rain fell from the sky. Xie Lian jumped off the clouds, landing both feet on the ground. Those half-dead villagers could not believe their eyes; some rushed out of their doors to cheer under the rain, and some hurriedly brought out buckets of all different sizes to collect the water.

Seeing this, Xie Lian sighed a breath of relief, and finally revealed a smile. Just then, he heard a voice call out from afar.

“Your Highness!”

He turned his head and saw Mu Qing appear from behind a tree, his face dark. Seeing his gloomy expression, Xie Lian knew something was wrong.

“What is it? Did something happen?”

Ch.75: Closing the Capital Gates; Survival of Yong'an Barred

"Your Highness, what took you so many days?" Mu Qing asked.

Xie Lian was taken aback. "Did I leave for very long?"

Traveling all over, through the heavens and the earth, scooping lake water, mounting clouds and making rain, all without care for day or night, Xie Lian hadn't realized just how much time had passed.

"It's been several days!" Mu Qing said. "The prayers from all the devotees at the Temple of the Crown Prince have piled up into a mountain."

Just then, Xie Lian felt the rain fading and extended a hand. "Didn't I tell you both to take care of the important ones first?"

"The ones we can take care of have all been sorted," Mu Qing replied. "But...but there are too many prayers that we haven't the right to take over. That's why I asked Your Highness not to let them wait too long, and hurry back."

When he finished, the rain stopped at the same time. This bout of rain lasted much shorter than Xie Lian had expected, and he felt his heart sinking. As the clouds dispersed, the verdant bamboo hat fluttered down, and Xie Lian caught it with both his hands.

"But do you see this situation? I can't get away either."

Mu Qing frowned. "Your Highness, you were able to borrow the Rain Master's spiritual device? Where did the water come from?"

"The Kingdom of Yushi from the south," Xie Lian replied.

"That far?" Mu Qing said. "How much power does that sap from you for moving water just once? And if every bout of rain is this small in size and quantity, if you keep this up, how will you manage to answer your followers' prayers?"

Even without him saying it out loud, Xie Lian knew. He was a martial god, and the devotees to the Temple of the Crown Prince were his foundation; the source of his spiritual powers. What he was doing was no different than abandoning his base, and if he wasn't careful, both sides would suffer. But what else could be done other than what he was doing right now?

"I know," Xie Lian said. "But if things go on like this and a riot breaks out in Yong'an, the Temple of the Crown Prince would also be affected sooner or later."

"It's already breaking out!" Mu Qing said.

Xie Lian was shocked. "What?!"

After hearing Mu Qing's report, Xie Lian rushed back to the royal capital of Xianle. Just as he arrived at the Martial Deity Avenue, there just so happened to be a band of royal guards, decked in full armour, sharp weapons in hand, walking over with a group of detained, unkempt men with shackles on both their hands and around their necks. Citizens crowded on both sides of the road, each face full of rage. Feng Xin gripped his black bow, tense and ready, as if prepared for any sudden riots.

Xie Lian cried, "Feng Xin! Who are these detainees? What crime did they commit? Where are they taking them?"

Hearing his voice, Feng Xin stomped over. "Your Highness! They're all people of Yong'an."

There were over ten men, all tall and gaunt, their skin slightly dark. Behind the soldiers trailed a few old men and a number of anxious women and children.

"The ones following behind are too?" Xie Lian questioned.

"They all are," Mu Qing replied.

Turns out, in the past several months, at the height of the drought in Yong'an, many of the residents uprooted and escaped to the east in waves. When it was only some tens of people it wasn't obvious, but the flow was endless; by now there were more than five hundred people. When five hundred people gathered, it became quite the sight.

Those people of Yong'an were strangers to the land, had nothing to their names, and the moment they opened their mouths their dialects would give them away, so when they arrived at a strange bustling city, naturally they all stuck together for warmth. Thus, they looked all over the royal capital and finally found an uninhabited green field. Overjoyed, they thus built sheds and huts as temporary shelters.

Unfortunately, although that green field was uninhabited, to those of the royal capital, it was a field of leisure. The people of Xianle had an indulgent culture, and those of the royal capital were leaders in that lifestyle. When free, many would take walks, dance, practice the art of the sword, sing poetry, paint, and gather at that green field. As for Yong'an, sitting at the west of Xianle, they suffered an impoverished land and had always been poor, so the temper and culture of those citizens was completely opposite that of the royal capital. Thus, those of the royal capital often believed themselves the purer of Xianle blood. And now, with their land of elegance overtaken by a large number of refugees—cooking herbs, crying, doing laundry, starting fires, the stench of leftovers and sweat filling the air—it made many nearby residents recoil with disgust, their complaints abundant.

Some of the Yong'an elderly leaders understood the situation in their hearts too, and had wanted to move elsewhere. Yet, the royal capital was already heavily populated. No matter where they went, it was full of people, and there wasn't anywhere else that could settle so many; nevermind all the wounded, sick, old, and children. It wasn't easy to move, so they boldly and carefully clung on to that field. As much as the people of the royal capital were displeased, they were still all citizens of the same country; in light of the ongoing disaster, they tolerated the strangers' presence.

Xie Lian listened to the report to this point when that band of soldiers brought those Yong'an men to the mouth of the marketplace, shouting, "KNEEL!"

Each of those men looked angry and incredulous, but with sabres at their throats, they had no choice but to kneel. After the onlooking crowd of the royal capital saw the men kneeled in unison, some sighed, some were relieved.

"According to your report, both sides have tolerated each other, so what's going on today?" Xie Lian asked.

Before Feng Xin and Mu Qing could answer, a woman started screeching from the crowd.

"YOU BARBARIC THIEVES! NEVERMIND YOUR STICKY FINGERS! BEATING MY HUSBAND LIKE THIS, HE CAN'T EVEN GET UP ANYMORE! IF ANYTHING HAPPENS TO HIM I'LL HAVE YOU PAY!"

Next to her a number of people were trying to comfort her, and some pointed their fingers in reproach.

"Don't you know to mind yourselves when you're in other people's territory?"

"Yeah, you're a guest in our homes, and yet you crudely steal!"

One of the young men in shackles finally couldn't take it anymore, and argued back, "We already said it wasn't us who stole! We didn't throw the first punch, either! Besides, we've got wounded on our side, too..."

An elder shouted, "Stop talking!"

That young man shut his mouth angrily.

Feng Xin explained, "A dog went missing in the royal capital, and because there was a case where a child of Yong'an stole and ate someone's duck from hunger, there were assumptions that the dog was stolen and eaten by those of Yong'an, too. A mob went to interrogate, and soon started a brawl."

Xie Lian was incredulous. "A riot over just a dog? And they detained that many people?"

"Yes, over a dog," Feng Xin said. "It's gotten this big because both sides have been putting up with each other for too long, and anything small becomes big. Both sides swore the other started it first, that it's the other's fault, and this mess of a fight somehow grew bigger and bigger."

One of the leading soldiers proclaimed, "Violent assemblies shall be severely punished! You are all shackled for a public demonstration, any further crimes are forbidden!"

He stood down after, and the next second, many started chucking and throwing lettuce leaves and rotten eggs at those men of Yong'an. The old men that trailed behind started bowing to the crowd all over, crying out.

"We apologize, everyone, we apologize."

"Please have mercy, have mercy!"

Xie Lian thought this whole thing was making a mountain out of a molehill, utterly ridiculous, but he could also somewhat understand. "So in the end did they steal? Did they find that dog?"

Feng Xin shook his head. "Who knows. Who can find anything if the bones were cleaned out and thrown away? But judging by their faces, I don't think they stole it."

However, verdicts from the soldiers of the royal capital would naturally be partial to the royal capital citizens. Stolen or not, there was a brawl, and so the fault must lie with those from Yong'an. Especially since the men of the royal capital loved to play around but weren't as tough as the men of Yong'an, this brawl must've ended in shame, creating more awkwardness between the two peoples. Xie Lian shook his head, gave the crowd a sweeping look, and suddenly noticed that in that row of Yong'an men, there was a young man in the middle with his head drooped, whose face looked familiar. It was that young man from the woods, Lang Ying.

Xie Lian was stunned. Just then, someone nearby complained.

"How come I feel there've been more and more from Yong'an in the royal capital in the recent months? And now they dare pick fights."

"No way, are they all coming over?"

Another merchant gestured his hands wildly. "His majesty the king won't allow it! My house was robbed by Yong'an thieves just the other day. If they all came over, there'd be hell!"

Hearing this, Lang Ying, who had kept his head low letting all the groceries be freely thrown at him, suddenly looked up. "Did you see it?"

That merchant hadn't expected to actually be spoken to and responded without thinking, "What?"

"Yong'an thieves robbing your house. Did you see them with your own eyes?"

"...I didn't see with my own eyes, but it's always been peaceful before, and only after you all arrived was I robbed, so how does it have nothing to do with you?" that merchant argued.

Lang Ying nodded. "I see. I understand. Before we came, you guys were the ones stealing, and after we arrived, we became the thieves..."

Before he finished, a rotten persimmon came flying at him and smashed against the side of his lips, making him look as if he vomited a large bloody blossom. That merchant burst out laughing, and Lang Ying's eyes dimmed. He closed his mouth and stopped talking.

Xie Lian softened the sharp rocks being thrown at the young men, ensuring that they wouldn't be severely injured. This public humiliation continued until evening, and only when the onlooking citizens gradually dispersed did the soldiers feel it was enough. Only then did they unlock the shackles, warning them never to cause any more troubles, otherwise they'd be severely punished, etcetera, etcetera. The elders bowed deeply repeatedly with apologetic smiles, promising to never violate any more rules; however, Lang Ying, lifeless, walked away by himself. Xie Lian watched his lone figure, caught the right moment, and appeared in a flash from behind a tree, blocking his path.

The minute he appeared, that young man's eyes sharpened, and in that instant, it was as if he was going to choke Xie Lian dead. A flash of a second later, after having seen clearly who it was before him, he tucked away the hand that was ready to attack.

"It's you."

Xie Lian had transformed back into the form of that young cultivator. He was startled by Lang Ying, whose hand almost attacked him. He thought to himself, "This man is strong."

He spoke up, "I gave you that pearl, so why didn't you take it back to Yong'an?"

Lang Ying gazed at him. "My son is here. I'm here too." After a pause, he took out that coral pearl from his belt. "Did you want this back? Here."

The extended hand that held the pearl still had marks of those shackles. After some silence, Xie Lian didn't take it.

"Go back. The Bay of Lang Er rained today," He pointed to the sky. "Tomorrow! There will be rain again, I promise. It's for certain."

But Lang Ying shook his head. "It doesn't matter if it rains or not. There's no going back."

Watching his back as he walked away, Xie Lian was left dumbfounded, and only felt endless frustration.

Before he ascended, it was like he had not a cloud of worry. Whatever he wanted to do, it would be done. Who knew that after ascension, all of a sudden, he would be surrounded by incessant worries. Both worries of others and his own. Had it always been this hard to get something done? He had never felt so lacking, so powerless. Xie Lian sighed and turned to leave, too. There was a mountain of prayers waiting to be answered by him at the Temple of the Crown Prince.

Yet, he wasn't the one with the most frustration. It was the king.

The worry of the King of Xianle had become reality. Those five-hundred-some refugees of Yong'an were only the beginning.

With the borrowed Rain Master Hat in hand, Xie Lian ran back and forth between the north and the south unceasingly, and created rain by his own power. Yet every bout of rain would use up an immense amount of spiritual power, and five to six days worth of time. If it wasn't him, there might not be another who could keep this up; of course, with the exception of Jun Wu. However, the Heavenly Martial Emperor ruled over a far greater land than he, and the number of devotees and domains to care for were significantly more than that of Xianle, so how could Xie Lian possibly ask Jun Wu for help and distract him? On top of that, each bout of rain could only wet a small area of Yong'an, lasting but a short while; even if there was some relief, it couldn't fix the root of the problem.

Thus, after a month, the people of Yong'an officially started to migrate to the east in droves. At first, it was only bands of ten-something people. Now, it was hundreds, thousands, massive hordes that flocked together, streaming like a river.

After another month, the King of Xianle announced a new decree:

Due to the endless disputes and incessant conflicts of recent months, for the sake of peace within the royal capital, as of that day, all Yong'an refugees must leave the city. Everyone would be given a set amount of travel expenses to help settle elsewhere.

Before the massive, teeming horde of migrating Yong'an refugees, the grand gates to the royal capital of Xianle closed.

Ch.76: Closing the Capital Gates; Survival of Yong'an Barred 2

TW: Violence

“OPEN THE GATES!”

“LET US IN!”

The soldiers backed into the fortress city and pushed shut the thousand-tonned gate. The people that had been expelled by the soldiers outside came rushing back towards it like black water tide, slapping on the doors. On top of the towers, the soldiers roared.

“BACK AWAY! LEAVE! TAKE YOUR TRAVEL EXPENSES AND GO, EASTWARD, DON'T STICK AROUND!”

However, the Yong'an refugees had turned their backs on their hometowns, fled their lands, and arrived at the one capital that was closest in distance. The gates to the royal capital closed on them, but if they wanted to survive, they would be forced to go around the fortress city and walk an even farther distance, to the cities further east.

The journey to the royal capital was already arduous and rough, crossing through thousands of obstacles. Many were already wounded or dead, so how could they have any more energy to continue on? Even if they were all given travel expenses, rations and water, how many more days could they hang on on the road?

Each of their faces were ashen, some dragging their household goods, some carried babies on their backs, some holding stretchers. They held each other up, some lying on the ground, unable to move anymore, and others simply sat. Fields and fields of them remained before the fortress walls. Some younger men still had the energy to be enraged, banging on the doors yelling.

“YOU CAN'T DO THIS! YOU'RE GONNA KILL US!”

“WE'RE ALL CITIZENS OF XIANLE, YOU CAN'T JUST KILL US OFF LIKE THIS!”

One of the men yelled until his voice was hoarse, “You can kick us out, it doesn't matter, I won't stay, but can you at least take my wife and my children? Please?!!”

They were like ants trying to shake a tree; the fortress city gates remained unmoved.

Xie Lian stood on top of the tower, his white robes fluttering in the wind; he crossed the parapet to watch below. Outside the royal capital, there were endless heads, black and squirming, dense and tightly-knit, very much like swarms of ants he used to see when he played in the royal gardens in his younger years.

Back then, out of curiosity, he'd looked closer and extended a finger, wanting to poke at them secretly, but there was immediately an attendant who cried out, "Your Highness! Those things are dirty, you can't touch! Don't touch!"

With her dress lifted, she ran over hurriedly and squished all the ants under her foot.

When those ants were alive, other than a dense swarm, there wasn't much to look at. After having been squished into something less than mudpiles, there wasn't anything left to look at.

Within the royal capital walls, lights filled millions of homes, and sounds of music wafted in the air. This one fortress wall separated two completely different worlds.

Nevermind that the Yong'an refugees who arrived after were kept out, even the ones that were already settled within had been expelled. Although harsh, Xie Lian could somewhat understand that this was because there was more and more friction between the Yong'an refugees and the royal capital residents in the recent months. To keep such men inside the city walls, there could very well be collusion inside and out, causing havoc.

However, just one thing he felt still had room for negotiation. He spoke out loud absentmindedly, "Why must the women and the vulnerable be expelled too? There are some who can't walk much further."

Feng Xin and Mu Qing were waiting on him just behind.

Mu Qing replied, "If they must be expelled, then they must all be expelled. Everyone must be treated equally; there mustn't be any favouritism, lest people be provoked: 'How come they could stay and not me?'"

"You think too much," Feng Xin commented.

Mu Qing said flatly, "There are very well people who would think like this. Besides, if the wives and children remain, then the men wouldn't want to go too far either. They would return sooner or later. Keeping people in the city is keeping future problems."

Those Yong'an refugees refused to leave, so the soldiers on the towers couldn't leave either.

"Humph! Suit yourselves!"

Since the king made the command, did they think just sitting there loitering would do anything? They could loiter for one or two days, but hardly a month or two, or a year or two?

The soldiers and residents of the royal capital all believed this. Some of the Yong'an refugees hopelessly accepted their fate, and decided to gamble traveling eastward. But such numbers were few. Most still sat stubbornly by the fortress gates, hoping the royal capital would open their doors to them, or at the very least give them somewhere to rest before journeying onwards. When new refugees arrived, although disappointed in seeing the closed city gates, when they saw so many still keeping watch, they joined the masses.

Thus, after several days, there were more and more gathered outside the city gates. Almost a million people had settled and built temporary shelters, forming an impressive and curious sight. They used the rations and water given by the king to hold on, but they were almost at their limit too.

This limit was crossed on the fifth day.

Those past five days, Xie Lian had divided each day into three: one third devoted to the followers at the Temple of the Crown Prince, one third for moving water and creating rain, and one third for caring for the Yong'an citizens outside the city walls. Even with Feng Xin and Mu Qing helping, sometimes Xie Lian felt the weight of those responsibilities. The spirit was willing, but the flesh was weak. That day, it just so happened to be a time when he wasn't guarding outside the city walls; under the scorching sun, there was suddenly a wail outside the gates.

The wailing came from a couple holding their child in their arms. Many came forward to see.

"What's wrong with the child?"

"Hungry or thirsty?"

And soon, a shout, "Everyone come share some water here! This child's not looking too good!"

That woman sobbed as she fed water to her red-faced child, but all the water was thrown back up.

The father said, "I don't know what's going on, he's sick. A doctor! We need a doctor!"

Carrying his son, he ran to the gates and started slapping the doors. "OPEN UP! HELP! SOMEONE'S DYING! MY SON'S DYING!"

Naturally, the soldiers within didn't dare to open the gates. Whether or not someone was actually dying, there were hundreds of thousands outside. If they opened up, there'd be no closing the gates; instead, they reported to the officers higher-up. The weather was hot, and the heat was making the soldiers standing watch over the past days cranky.

They said apathetically, "Give him some water and food."

Thus, they used a rope, hung some water and food, and lowered it down.

“Thank you, thank you my lords and brothers, but we don’t want water and food. Can you help us find a doctor?” that man said.

This made things difficult. They couldn’t let him in to find a doctor, and they certainly couldn’t lower a doctor down the city walls. Who knows what those starving refugees would do once the doctor got outside?

Thus, those high-ranking officers replied, “Nevermind. Ignore them, they can’t die. If they ask again, then tell them the message has been sent through to request a response from the king.”

The king had been deeply troubled by the Yong’an matters and easily angered the past many days, and naturally no one really dared bother him with such a small thing. The soldiers responded accordingly and that man, feeling relieved, thanked them profusely, thanked his majesty, and knelt to kowtow multiple times. Yet, hours upon hours passed, shadows under the scorching sun moved from one end to the other, but the asked-for doctor still hadn’t appeared, and the temperature of that child in their arms was growing hotter.

The arms of that couple holding their child were trembling, and that man was covered in cold sweat, mumbling, “Will anyone come? Will anyone open the gates?”

Finally, they couldn’t wait any longer, and yelled to the towers, “Officers! My apologies, but I want to ask...Where’s the doctor?”

A soldier responded, “We’re waiting for a formal response from the king. Wait for a while longer.”

Some citizens couldn’t sit still anymore: “They said that four hours ago, so why hasn’t anyone come yet?”

The soldiers heeded their superiors’ command and ignored them after responding. The crowd under the fortress walls was furious, forlorn, and distressed. They surrounded the child and started wondering in doubt.

“Did they actually pass on the message to his majesty? They’re not lying to us, are they?”

The father of that child couldn’t wait any longer; he hardened his heart, tied the child to his back, and turned to his wife to say a few last words. That woman removed a protection charm from around her neck and put it around her husband’s neck. That man ran towards the city wall, and started to try and scale it.

The city wall was smooth, built to make climbing difficult, and after grabbing at it a few times, he still couldn’t climb up. The rest of the men called out, “Let me help you!”, and they pushed him up. A crowd of ten-something men stacked themselves into a human pyramid, and helped deliver him higher upon the wall. There, that man managed to grab on to the rope that had been used to lower water and food, and he continued to climb. At the bottom, hundreds of thousands watched anxiously, not daring to cheer for him, scared they might be discovered.

The soldiers on top of the towers had been standing watch for many days and the Yong'an refugees hadn't started anything, so they were fairly lax in their watch. It wasn't until that man had reached halfway did they notice with a start someone pressing close onto the wall.

They shouted, "WHAT ARE YOU DOING?! NO CLIMBING! CLIMBERS WILL BE KILLED WITHOUT MERCY! DO YOU HEAR ME? CLIMBERS WILL BE KILLED WITHOUT MERCY!"

Under their threat, that man also shouted back, "I DON'T HAVE ANY ILL INTENTIONS! I JUST WANT TO BRING MY CHILD TO THE DOCTORS, I WON'T DO ANYTHING ELSE!"

He continued scaling the wall as he shouted. One of the superior officers was just having his meal, and upon hearing of this he became outraged. If that man was to scale the wall safely and set an example, wouldn't many more Yong'an refugees attempt the same? He must be stopped!

Thus, he strode out, and shouted down the parapet, "DON'T YOU VALUE YOUR LIFE? GO BACK DOWN THIS INSTANT! IF YOU DON'T YOU'LL BE SORRY!"

Yet that man had already reached high on the wall, past halfway, and with just one more push he'd be able to reach the top, so naturally he didn't stop. That superior officer never had anyone disobey him like this, his words were law. Whoever disobeyed was easy enough to take care of, however. He approached the parapet, pulled his sword, and struck; that rope snapped in two.

With the snapped rope in hand, that man fell from mid-air. In the midst of thousands screaming, he landed heavily on the hard ground before the city gates.

That was the moment Xie Lian arrived.

That man had fallen with his backside down, and on his back was his child. WHUMP, and the child was crushed into a clump of ground meat, spraying blossoms of blood. That man's neck was broken, his eyes bulging, and around his twisted neck rolled a protection charm with the words "Xianle" written on it, embroidered with golden threads—it was the protection charm from the Temple of the Crown Prince.

The moment before he started to climb, that man and his wife both held that protection charm in their hands and silently prayed for the blessings of His Highness the Crown Prince, which was how Xie Lian heard their voices and rushed over.

Nevertheless, he was not a hero from any of those legends written in books, and could in no way appear right before the executioner dropped their axes, and save lives from under knives. That woman didn't even have the courage to flip her husband's dead body to check on the condition of her son; she covered her face and screamed, and without looking, she dashed forward madly, and bashed her head against the wall. CRACK, and she dropped, her body limp.

Right before Xie Lian's eyes, in the flash of a second, three dead bodies piled before the city gates of the royal capital!

He hadn't had time to react before the crowd outside the city gates were riled up, unable to hold back any longer.

Someone yelled, "DEAD! A FAMILY OF THREE, ALL DEAD! LOOK, THAT'S THE GOOD OL' OFFICER WORKING FOR HIS MAJESTY! HE WON'T SAVE US, BUT INSTEAD IS FORCING OUR DEATHS!"

"YOU WON'T LET US IN BUT YOU WON'T LET ANYONE OUT EITHER, WHAT SHOULD WE HAVE DONE? THREE BLOODY LIVES ARE NOW ON YOUR HANDS!"

"YOU SAID TO EXPEL ALL YONG'AN REFUGEES FROM THE ROYAL CAPITAL BUT HOW COME I DON'T SEE ANY OF THE RICH ONES EXPELLED? SO US THE POOR AND POWERLESS DESERVE TO DIE? I'VE SEEN THROUGH YOU!"

"I CAN'T STAND IT ANYMORE...I REALLY CAN'T. YEAR AFTER YEAR WE PAID OUR TAXES BUT NOW THERE'S A DISASTER WHERE DID ALL THAT MONEY GO?"

"RATHER THAN AIDING DISASTER VICTIMS DID ALL THE MONEY GO TO PARASITES AND BUILDING YOUR SON'S TEMPLES? JUST THIS BIT OF FOOD AND RATIONS TO SHUT US UP? WHAT DO YOU TAKE US FOR? USELESS KING! INCOMPETENT KING!"

The soldiers on top of the towers were yelling down at the crowd for them to stop, but that officer had seen much in his lifetime, and didn't take any of it seriously. Yet, the situation was slowly getting out of control. Thousands and hundreds of thousands pushed furiously against the gates, some even using their own heads or bodies to slam, and this time, it wasn't mere ants on trees.

The gates moved; in fact, even the entire fortress wall and towers were slightly shaking!

Ever since Xie Lian was born, he had never witnessed a situation such as this. The people he met had all been kind, peaceful, happy, satisfied, and endearing. Those twisted faces, crying and screaming, forced him to enter a completely foreign world, and he couldn't help but feel cold in his bones. Even against the most horrifying ghosts and demons, he had never felt this way. Just then, there was an angry roar from above.

He whipped his head around, and saw a tall and gaunt silhouette, choking that officer who had cut the rope and caused the three deaths below the city walls. There was a loud and clear CRACK, and his neck was broken.

That band of soldiers had no idea how that man suddenly appeared; all were shocked and bewildered, and they rushed forward with their swords in hand to surround him.

“WHO ARE YOU?!”

“HOW DID YOU GET UP HERE?!”

Xie Lian immediately noticed that man's hands: they were smeared with blood and ripped flesh. That man had scaled that crevice-less wall using his bare hands! When that figure turned around, it was indeed Lang Ying!

Lang Ying was calm and collected even when surrounded by soldiers. He crossed over the parapet, threw the corpse of that officer down, and he himself jumped off, stepping onto the corpse and using it as a stepping stone to break his fall.

That moment when he jumped, he looked straight at Xie Lian, but what he was looking at wasn't Xie Lian. Instead, he looked through him to gaze at the royal palace sitting right in the centre of the royal capital.

From that day onwards, the entire Kingdom of Xianle was thrown into chaos.

Ch.77: Xianle in Chaos; Crown Prince Returns to the Mortal Realm

For displaced disaster victims like those from Yong'an, to fight against the imperial army was a losing battle, a gross overestimation of their own strength.

Yet, those who were cornered often possessed the courage to court one's ruin and bite off more than they could chew. After that one riot, the hundreds of thousands of Yong'an refugees finally left the city gates, backing off to some distance away, and changed where they built temporary camps.

However, they just wouldn't leave. They might die on the road if they keep going, and hanging around was also death, so what was the difference? Using the rations and water the king distributed from before, plus munching on bark skins, wild herbs, plant roots, critters and insects, and with a build up of resentment and loathing on top of all that, those people possessed an unimaginably persistent will to live, and stubbornly persevered. After a few days, they managed to assemble some thousands of men, all carrying hoes, rakes, rocks, branches, and returned for a bout of fighting.

Although this clash was a mess, an utter defeat with over half of that thousand-some dead, it wasn't fruitless. Lang Ying invaded the castle tower and returned hauling a few large bags of grain and weapons. There may have been serious casualties, but it provoked a will to fight to the death amongst the people.

Their nature was akin to that of bandits. They attacked once, twice, thrice. The soldiers of Xianle soon discovered that those "bandits" were rapidly improving.

The initially-inexperienced rioters had gradually gotten the hang of things, and every time they attacked they were more difficult to deal with than the last; those who could return to camp alive increased with every attempt. There were also endless waves of new refugees joining, significantly growing the size of the group. How to best deal with those "bandits" became the hottest topic for debate within the Kingdom of Xianle, and after five to six such ridiculous guerilla attacks, Xie Lian could no longer sit still on the parapet and simply watch.

He hadn't reported to the Heavens in a long time, but this time when he arrived at the Heavenly Court, he dashed straight for the Great Martial Hall without a word. When he broke in, Jun Wu was seated in his throne, and a number of heavenly officials were bowing to receive a command, seeming to be discussing an important matter. In the past, Xie Lian would've chosen a different day to pay his visit, but now, he couldn't wait, and went in bluntly, opening his mouth to speak without pause.

"My lord, I'm returning to the mortal realm."

The heavenly officials were all startled, and immediately covered their mouths, keeping silent, not wanting to show any kind of reaction. Jun Wu looked at him knowingly for a moment, then rose from his throne, speaking in a gentle tone.

“Xianle. I know something of what’s happening, but you must remain calm.”

“My lord, I didn’t come here to request permission. I came here to inform,” Xie Lian said. “My people are currently sunken in the depths of hell, so please forgive me if I cannot remain calm.”

“The universe has its own rhythm,” Jun Wu said. “Do you not realize that if you descend to appear before mortals, it will be a violation of heavenly law?”

“IF IT’S A VIOLATION THEN SO BE IT!” Xie Lian cried.

Hearing this, all the faces of the officials present dropped. There had never been any heavenly officials who dared to speak such words with such gusto and confidence. No matter how highly Jun Wu regarded this young, early-ascended Prince of Xianle, it was still an act of daring arrogance.

Soon after, Xie Lian bent to bow. “Pray my lord let me go this once; just give me a little time. Since the fighting has started, casualties are unavoidable, but if I could stop this and reduce the number of dead, minimize the conflict, then after the fighting ends I will for sure return willingly to repent, and have my lord sentence me as see fit. Whether I shall be sealed under a mountain for a hundred years, a thousand years, a hundred thousand years!—I WILL NOT REGRET!”

After having had his say, he remained in the bowing posture and stood down, leaving the great hall.

“Xianle!” Jun Wu called.

Xie Lian’s feet paused in his step. Jun Wu watched him, then sighed.

“You can’t save everyone.”

Xie Lian slowly straightened up. “Whether I can, I won’t know until I’ve tried. Even if the heavens say I must die, if that sword doesn’t pierce my heart and nail me dead on the ground, then I am still alive, and ‘til my last breath I will struggle to the end!”

Returning to the mortal realm for the first time in solid form was unlike all the previous times he descended. Xie Lian felt like something had been thrown away. He was both somewhat light and at the same time, somewhat heavy. His first action was to return to the palace immediately.

The king and the queen were in the chamber behind the royal bureau, whispering between themselves, their expressions solemn and exhausted. Xie Lian came to the door and was anxious at first, but then he calmed his nerves, raised the beaded curtain, and walked in.

“Father.”

The king and the queen both looked back at the same time and were stunned. A moment later, it was the queen who stood up first, crying joyously.

“My son!”

She extended both her hands and came forward to welcome him. Xie Lian caught her arms, accepting the gesture. But before the smiles went away, he suddenly saw the king’s growing dark expression.

The king demanded, “Why have you descended?”

Xie Lian’s smile froze.

Before, when he heard his parents talk behind his back, Xie Lian had felt maybe his father did still miss him, and wasn’t as opinionated against him as he made it seem. He had thought that the king would at least show some degree of pleasure in seeing his return, and if that was the case, then surely he would return the affection. But who knew the king would react this way, so full of scorn, and so Xie Lian’s own temper flared up.

He replied sharply, “Why have I descended? Isn’t it all because of you?! That the situation with Yong’an had come to this, shouldn’t you ask yourselves whether you’re responsible?”

The king’s expression completely changed, and he countered harshly, “My responsibility? Is that something you can say to me?!”

His fury had made him forget to refer to his own title, and the queen teared up. “The situation has already come to this, so why are you two still arguing?”

“We’re not arguing,” Xie Lian said. “We’re talking about sense. Even if you are the king, my father, if you are the one responsible, why can I not say anything? Why didn’t you work harder to fundraise? If the funds were all swallowed by government checkpoints, why didn’t you punish the corrupt officials? If you were tough like thunder and fast like lightning, catch one jail one, then would there still be so many corrupt parasites who’d dare steal? Wouldn’t the situation be better than it is now?”

Veins popped on the king’s forehead, and he banged on his bureau desk. “QUIET! Do you take the royal treasury for a bottomless well that can fix any hole that leaks?! Catch one jail one, if it was that easy, if by just one order from this king and it’d work fast like lightning, tough as thunder, then why has history never had a dynasty untouched by corruption? WHAT DO YOU UNDERSTAND? YOU IGNORANT CHILD DARE SPEAK POLITICS WITH ME!”

“Fine,” Xie Lian acquiesced. “I don’t understand. Then even if the royal capital had no room for the victims to settle and expulsion was inevitable, why not provide more expenses for them? Why not provide more comfort and security and have an army escort their journey eastward?”

The king’s eyes bulged with rage, and he pointed to the sky. “SCRAM. GET OUT OF HERE! GET BACK TO THE HEAVENS! JUST LOOKING AT YOU ANNOYS ME! DON’T EVER APPEAR AGAIN!”

Xie Lian had descended with a heart full of fervor, yet the first encounter with his parents was his father yelling for him to scam back to the heavens. Without a word, Xie Lian bowed to him, and stood down to leave. The queen chased after him out of the bureau and pulled him to a stop.

“My son!”

Xie Lian said gently, “Mother, don’t worry. I’m just going to go make a round around the royal capital and check on the situation.”

The queen shook her head. “My son, I don’t understand those political matters, but I understand your father. Throughout the years, I’ve seen how he is as a king. You can think from the bottom of your heart that he isn’t competent, and sometimes I think so too, I just don’t say it out loud. But you can’t say that to his face. He’s your father, after all. If you tell him straight on that he’s no good, it really kills the heart.”

Xie Lian opened and closed his mouth.

The queen added, “You might have been the Crown Prince, but you have never been king. Politics isn’t like cultivation. When you first entered the Royal Holy Pavilion, the Guoshi had said cultivation only concerns the heart, isn’t that right?”

Xie Lian nodded slowly, and the queen clutched his hands.

“But, there are many other things in this world that by just having heart isn’t enough. You must be capable too; and not just you, but your subordinates must be capable as well; and not just ability, they must share the same heart as you.”

Xie Lian remained silent. After a moment, he asked, “Is the royal treasury suffering? I don’t need temples; tell him to stop building so many temples for me. Those golden statues can go.”

The queen replied miserably, “My child...of course there’s some of your father’s partialness in building temples, he wanted to give you the best, and have you look impressive in the heavens.

But, do you know just how many of those eight thousand temples were actually built by your father? You don't know, do you?"

Xie Lian really didn't know, and he gave it a thought. "...half?"

"If your father really used funds from the royal treasury to build four thousand temples, we needn't wait for the Yong'an refugees to start anything, the royal capital would revolt first," the queen said. "So if the royal treasury is empty, where did all that money come from? Your father built maybe twenty-some temples, and others followed suit; masses of them wanting to build too to get on his good side, to get on your good side, so is that counted on your father's head too?"

"I..." Xie Lian was stumped.

The queen said softly, "Your father isn't the greatest king, but...he's done his best. Only, in this world, just doing your best isn't good enough."

After a pause, she added, "Right now, you feel sympathy for those Yong'an refugees, so you blame your father. But they're all his people, do you think we're the ones bullying them? In truth..."

Halfway through her words, the enraged voice of the king rang from within the bureau.

"WHAT ARE YOU DOING SAYING SO MANY USELESS THINGS TO HIM? MAKE HIM LEAVE AND GO BACK TO THE HEAVENS!"

The queen turned her head back and sighed. "My son, don't...don't descend for this. Go back."

After leaving the palace, Xie Lian wandered down an alleyway near the Martial Deity Avenue, and as he walked, Feng Xin and Mu Qing appeared in a hurry.

The moment Mu Qing approached, he questioned in disbelief, "Your Highness! You requested to descend into the mortal realm? You went and spoke to the Heavenly Emperor??"

"Yes," Xie Lian answered.

"Why didn't you tell me first?" Mu Qing demanded.

Feng Xin was puzzled. "What do you mean? Does His Highness have to report to anyone what he wants to do?"

However, Mu Qing appeared to be losing it. "Why not? We're his subordinates, and right now we're all tied together. His every action affects us, so is there something wrong in me wanting to know what he plans on doing?"

“We’d have to follow His Highness no matter what he does anyway? Heaven or earth, he has his plans, what are you afraid of?” Feng Xin said.

“You!” Mu Qing shouted. “I’m not afraid! I’m only…”

Xie Lian raised his hand. “Enough. Stop arguing!”

Feng Xin and Mu Qing quieted immediately. Just then, a long line of demonstrating crowds paraded down the main street, and thousands of citizens were hollering:

“THERE WILL BE NO PEACE IN THE KINGDOM UNTIL YONG’AN IS EXTERMINATED!”

“THEY’VE GONE TOO FAR IN CREATING DISORDER! THEY’RE CANCEROUS!”

The people of Xianle had never been so aggressive towards anything, and with such a roaring protest demonstration, too. Xie Lian couldn’t help but think something was amiss. Feng Xin, on the other hand, frowned.

“How come there’s a woman in there?”

Sure enough, in that parading crowd, a young woman was leading at the forefront. That young woman was slender, her skin snow-white, her eyes bright and black, her cheeks flushed not from shyness but from rage; a catching sight.

By then Mu Qing had calmed himself down and said coldly, “His Highness doesn’t recognize her?”

“No,” Xie Lian replied.

Feng Xin knitted his brows. “Looks familiar?”

“She’s one of the catalysts,” Mu Qing said.

“What catalyst?” Xie Lian asked.

“The catalyst for the standoff,” Mu Qing replied. “Before, because there were more and more Yong’an refugees in the royal capital and some would go around causing issues, not quietly minding their own business, the parliament was discussing the matter of expulsion, and word of it was spreading. There was a Yong’an refugee who wanted to stay and not be expelled, so he decided to take a risk. One night, he snuck into the house of a wealthy family, and kidnapped their daughter.”

Hearing this, Xie Lian couldn’t wrap his head around it. “Why would he kidnap a rich family’s daughter if he didn’t want to leave?”

Mu Qing gave him a look. "To marry her. It's just that, if it wasn't through forcible means, no daughter of a good standing family in the royal capital would marry a person of Yong'an."

He didn't say it plainly, but Xie Lian understood.

He had never thought that it was something that could be done—that there were actually people in this world like that. That something like this actually happened, a sudden desire to vomit rolled up from his chest.

Feng Xin angrily cursed on the spot, "Despicable!"

Just then, a group of aunties rushed over, grabbing and pulling at that young woman. By the looks of it, she had come out when her family wasn't paying attention.

That young woman wouldn't yield, yelling, "I'm not afraid! I've nothing to be embarrassed about, I wasn't in the wrong!"

Feng Xin was amazed. "That chick's pretty spunky."

"Yes," Mu Qing said. "Because she didn't come from a commoner background. Her father is a high-ranking official, and her mother came from a family of wealthy merchants in the royal capital. They refused to suffer this shame quietly, and definitely wouldn't marry off their daughter like that for the sake of shame, so they beat that Yong'an man to death. Soon after, all the wealthy merchants and gentlemen of renown in the capital signed a petition, listing all the crimes the Yong'an refugees had committed since entering the capital, and bade the king to jail all of them to be punished severely. There's no need to speak on where the government officials all stand on this."

After a pause, he said with a casual air, "I hear that the girl's father had once wanted her to enter the harem and fight for the position of the Prince's Consort. Your Highness must've seen her face a few times a long time ago, yet you don't recognize her."

Xie Lian finally realized that everything was much more complicated than he had imagined.

Two sides of a tumultuous standoff had long been formed within and outside the city. All the peoples were enraged, wishing to kill off the other. If the king's decree was partial to Yong'an, wouldn't that be slapping his own people's faces? When at last the decision was made to distribute some travel expenses to the Yong'an refugees from the royal treasury, there were probably also a large number of residents who were displeased.

What was even more frightening than a displeased enemy was the dissatisfaction of a kingdom's own people. Although technically everyone was of Xianle, right now, there were probably very few who'd think so.

Xie Lian had been standing from high up and had long not known the matters of the mortal realm, but his father was still in the mortal realm. As a king, he needed money, he needed people, and in his position, the stress, the pressure, the compromise he needed to make between people and issues were not comparable to any of the troubles Xie Lian knew. When the Yong'an refugees arrived they took over land, created noise, stole and robbed, and so on; to a martial god sitting in a temple, these were all small matters. However, to the residents of the royal capital, they were all very real, unchasable, intolerable tortures; a crisis waiting to erupt. To think this a simple, trivial matter; it was only because he wasn't the one situated within.

Xie Lian couldn't help but recall that the king's moustache tails were even whiter than the last time he had seen him. Last time, the king said he was going to dye it, but he probably didn't have the energy to care anymore.

When Xie Lian was younger, he firmly believed his father was the world's greatest king. But the older he got, the more he realized that wasn't the case. His father, although king, couldn't be said to be wise and competent, and was even a little corrupt, making mistakes often. Taking away his prestigious status, he was no more than a common man.

The more he realized this, the more disappointed he became, and the king had also noticed his disappointment. And all the more the king couldn't accept every disagreeing look, every disagreeing word from Xie Lian. What he couldn't accept the most, however, was having Xie Lian see his failure.

No father in the world wished to have their son see their failures. Every father wished that before their sons, they would always be the greatest. Yet Xie Lian appeared before him at such a time to berate his own father: "You're making a mess of things! So much so that I had to descend to help you out!"—as both a king and a father, how could he have withstood hearing that?

That young woman was finally taken away by her servant ladies, and the remaining hundreds of demonstrating residents continued their protest, waving signs and hollering. They were only crying for one thing:

"KILL THEM! START THE BATTLE! SHOW THOSE YONG'AN REFUGEES OUTSIDE THE CITY WALLS!"

A moment later, Mu Qing spoke up.

"Your Highness, it's best if you go back and apologize to the Heavenly Emperor. At this point, fortune, time, and place, are all lost. There is no helping."

Just as Jun Wu had told him at the Great Martial Hall: the universe has its own rhythm. It was like telling him: the Kingdom of Xianle's time has come, let it go.

Even the queen, his mother, who wished day and night only to have a glimpse of him, when she finally saw him, asked him to leave with tears in her eyes. How could Xie Lian not know that they simply didn't want him to go through this difficult trial, and would rather he watch from afar, taking a good care of himself instead?

But, how could he possibly?

"..." Xie Lian said gravely, "No!"

And he strode out.

Ch.78: Quell Yong'an; Crown Prince Enters the Battlefield

Behind him, both Feng Xin and Mu Qing were in shock, and they cried, "Your Highness!", and immediately rushed out too to guard next to him.

However, all the citizens in the entire Martial Deity Avenue had already seen the young man in white who appeared right in the centre of the main street. The demonstrating protesters were broken up but soon reorganized themselves, and crowds of thousands soon surrounded Xie Lian.

The first person spoke, unsure: "My lord...my lord is His Highness?"

The second one was doubtful: "Didn't His Highness the Crown Prince ascend? He's no longer mortal, so why would he appear here?"

The third one yelled: "IT'S HIM! THREE YEARS AGO AT THE HEAVENLY CEREMONIAL PROCESSION I SAW HIM WITH MY OWN EYES, IT'S HIS HIGHNESS THE CROWN PRINCE!"

More and more started to recognize the face of that martial god they worshipped day and night, and Xie Lian spoke up slowly.

"It is I. I have returned."

The people went wild.

"A GOD HAS DESCENDED! A GOD HAS REALLY DESCENDED!"

"A DIVINE BEING HAS RETURNED TO THE MORTAL REALM!"

"—Your Highness must have returned because you could no longer tolerate seeing us suffer the abuse of those thieves!"

Immediately there were those who pressed on, full of hope. "Your Highness, will my lord lead us to defeat those Yong'an refugees? It's for certain, right? It must be so!"

After some pause, Xie Lian answered peacefully, "I returned for the sake of protecting the Kingdom of Xianle, to protect my people."

Feng Xin and Mu Qing, who were next to him, listened intently, but they couldn't be sure what exactly those words meant; yet the citizens whose heads were rushed by hot blood were all taking it in and understanding what they willed. As for Xie Lian, he had his own considerations; his heart was beating faster and faster, and he gritted his teeth.

“...Believe in me!”

He clenched his fists, and cried: “YOUR BELIEFS WILL GRANT ME GREATER POWER. WITH THIS POWER I PROMISE I WILL SHIELD XIANLE, PROTECT THE COMMON PEOPLE. PLEASE BELIEVE IN ME!”

The people had been waiting for that very moment; all they wanted was his pledge, and immediately they erupted in fervent cheers, then circle by circle they kneeled to prostrate.

“WE’LL FOLLOW MY LORD TO THE ENDS OF THE EARTH! WE’LL FOLLOW YOUR HIGHNESS!”

“PROTECT XIANLE!”

When the residents of the royal capital heard a god had descended upon them, they all poured out into the streets, if only just to witness this miracle that might not come even in a thousand years. Even the informed royal guards who came in a hurry didn’t dare to be impudent, and joined the prostrating crowd. The three of them were stuck in the middle of the main street, unable to move, and Feng Xin and Mu Qing had to keep maintaining order, shouting.

“DON’T PUSH! STOP PUSHING!”

However, they weren’t very effective. Everyone wanted to push and get closer to His Highness the Crown Prince, and touch even just a sleeve corner of this divine god from heaven, so some of his holiness would rub off on them. Several generals and fully-armoured soldiers were dispatched before the wild crowd was broken up.

When all the people were gone, all that was left behind was dust-filled air and messy footprints littering the ground. Xie Lian noticed something, and he bent down to pick it up.

It was a single flower. After having been trampled by many, it was almost the colour of dirt. Only a few ripped petals remained that still had their original tint of purity peeking through.

That faint fragrance didn’t last, and it soon dispersed.

After coming to an understanding of some things, this time when Xie Lian returned to the palace, his temper was much softer towards the king. Thus, the king also became more agreeable towards him. Having both taken that one step back, the father and son established a tentative peace between them. As for the Guoshi, he seemed to have already expected that Xie Lian would descend, so he didn’t say much on the subject.

In the past, Xie Lian always believed that a nation possessed one heart, and before a grave matter, everyone would undoubtedly follow the direction of the king. Only when he finally sat down to participate did he fully understand just how vexing the position of a king really was.

Within parliament, the officials were actually split into small parties, and each party had their own plans. In regard to forming an agreement on any one matter, it could take up to a week of endless debate. Every one, every party proclaimed they were working for the people, but in reality, that might not truthfully be the case.

As for dealing with the revolting Yong'an refugees camping outside the city fortress, the officials were sluggishly slow at coming to an agreement. Some advocated for a direct extermination, and if there weren't enough reasons to do so, then just make some up. Some disagreed with that idea.

The Revolt of Yong'an began with a natural disaster but the situation was deteriorated through human action. That family of three who fell to their deaths at the city gates was the worst catalyst imaginable; if that army official who cut the rope hadn't gotten his neck snapped by Lang Ying, he would've been severely punished upon his return. In other words, no matter how convoluted the circumstances, no matter the reasons, on the surface everything looked like the common people rightfully rebelling against an oppressive authority.

With things developed to this point, complete pandemonium, making up more crimes to sentence would only further provoke repulsion, and whatever reason they could come up with would not be able to deceive the people. If they were to deploy an army to exterminate, it'd be without cause and difficult to appease. Preventing the people from talking was just as important as preventing floods; once a reputation of insensible cruelty was established, not only would they no longer be able to rule over the people, nearby kingdoms could very well use the chance and invade under the banner of eradicating evil.

If they were to think about it from a different angle, however, what was there to be afraid of? Those Yong'an refugees were stuck in wild forests without food and arms, so how long could the revolt last? Thus, the most favoured proposal at the end was this: if the Yong'an refugees dare attack, they shall be repelled and killed each time; if they didn't, then they shall be left to their own devices to survive or die, and Xianle wouldn't need to waste a single resource. There was no way Yong'an could keep up the fighting.

As a martial god, Xie Lian's descent naturally meant he needed to be effective on the battlefield. Thus, the army had boisterously campaigned: the side with His Highness the Crown Prince was the side of Justice; the army with His Highness the Crown Prince was the army of god!

It didn't take long before a large number of young men in the kingdom excitedly enlisted. It caused such a stir that even news of it seemed to reach the Yong'an camp. Initially they were still rather active in their sieges, but suddenly everything stopped, as if they were afraid and were instead silently building strength. This made the soldiers in Xianle nervous, and they unceasingly described to Xie Lian just how terrifying that Lang Ying who always charged at the forefront was. Hearing that name and recalling the dead body of that infant always made Xie Lian feel complicated.

Two months later, after waiting with bated breath for such a long time, the Yong'an refugees finally attacked again.

In this battle, Xie Lian only brought a light sword and didn't even wear any armour. It didn't take two hours before the battle ended.

Blood stained all, from the earth to the sky, and in that stench-filled air, the remaining Yong'an warriors abandoned their gear and frantically ran away. Before the Xianle soldiers could react, they were already surrounded by countless slain bodies, and not a single enemy left standing. As for their Highness the Crown Prince, he was slowly sheathing his sword, not a stain on his sleeves.

It was a moment before they realized their overwhelming victory and jumped, raising their swords to the sky, screaming in joy.

That night, the Xianle soldiers held a victory feast atop the towers.

It had been a long time since the soldiers had felt this relieved; the cheers were endless as they raised their cups to praise His Highness the Crown Prince. However, Xie Lian rejected all the wine, and left the party to go to the edge of a tower corner by himself to feel the breeze and sober up.

Even though he didn't drink a single cup of wine, he could still feel his heart burning, his face hot and flushing, and his fingertips slightly trembling.

This was the first time in Xie Lian's life that he had killed. The first time, and he had killed thousands.

Mere ants.

Those two words appeared in his mind. Before his might, mortals were nothing, and there wasn't anyone who could withstand his light taps. It was so easy to rob another's life, just like how that palace attendant had stomped on those ants, that in between swings of his sword, he almost lost the heart of reverence.

Xie Lian leaned against the parapet and inhaled deeply, shaking his head to shake off the noise, watching absentmindedly at the flicker of sparks in the mountains afar. Soon after, sounds of two footfalls approached.

Even without turning his head he knew who they were. Xie Lian asked, "Aren't you two going to go drink and celebrate a little?"

Mu Qing humphed. "What's there to celebrate? It's not an optimistic situation."

Hearing this, Xie Lian turned around. "You guys noticed too?"

It really wasn't an optimistic situation. Although they won this round, in reality, this attack was stronger than any previous Yong'an attacks.

Not only did their numbers increase, their formation, weapons, management; all had significantly improved. In fact, there were many who were geared up in armour. Although still simple and pathetic, they already had the form of a formal army. It would be hard to believe they were actually outcast nobodies.

Mu Qing crossed his arms and frowned. "Extreme environments would certainly force one to improve rapidly, but no matter how difficult the situation, you can't create something out of nothing. Something's not right."

Feng Xin was even more blunt, and said plainly, "They must have gained reinforcements."

Xie Lian nodded.

Mu Qing added, "I don't believe none of those soldiers noticed, either. But they're still celebrating only because they have you on their side, and they believe they will win for sure."

Xie Lian didn't think much of that, and said, "It's the first battle with me in it and we won. It's fine to let them rejoice a bit. Just think of it as encouragement."

Feng Xin hesitated, but still asked, "Your Highness, you don't look so good. Are you still creating rain over at Yong'an?"

"Yeah," Xie Lian replied.

Disapproval expectedly appeared on Mu Qing's face. "Excuse my bluntness, but it's pointless to create rain now. That's the real bottomless hole. Your Highness, even if the drought in Yong'an can be thoroughly relieved, that crowd outside the city walls probably still won't back off."

"I know," Xie Lian said. "But my creating rain wasn't intended to make those people back off. It's for those who remained in Yong'an not to die of thirst. This was my original goal, and it won't change for anything."

Feng Xin was still worried. "Can you still hold on?"

Xie Lian patted his shoulder. "Don't worry. I have eight thousand temples! There are enough devotees, so of course I'm fine. But..."

His other hand circled around Mu Qing's shoulders, and Xie Lian sighed. "Thank goodness you two helped today. Thank you for staying by my side."

Today on the battlefield, his two attendants suffered much more than he did, their persons covered in blood and grime from all the killing.

“There’s no need to say those things,” Feng Xin said.

Mu Qing vaguely squeezed out an “oh” sound.

Xie Lian squeezed, pulling the other two close, and said earnestly, “Not just for today, but for always, thank you so much. I hope the sight of the three of us standing together fighting will become a tale of the ages.”

“...”

“...”

A moment later, Feng Xin burst out laughing, and Mu Qing said incredulously, “I found that you always manage to say things with such...with such shameless confidence. You’re really...” He shook his head. “Nevermind.”

Xie Lian’s lips finally curled up. But the smile didn’t last long when he suddenly froze.

“WHO’S THERE?!”

SCHWING, and Xie Lian’s sword was unsheathed. He flicked his sword and pulled out a shadow from the corner of the parapet.

That person had been hiding in the corner for a long time, holding his breath, and hadn’t been noticed. Initially, Xie Lian had only wanted to hang him off the tip of his sword to scare him, but he had been killing too aggressively on the battlefield that day, his arms were still shaking, and his hands lost control. The simple flick was overly powerful, and he threw that person directly over the wall.

Under the moonlight, in midair, all three of them were able to see clearly that the uniform and gear of that person belonged in their army, and looked to be a boy of fifteen, sixteen years. A breath later he fell downwards, his form disappearing below. Seeing that person was about to fall down the wall, Xie Lian cried “oh no!” mentally, and leapt out.

His foot hooked onto the edge of the parapet, his body leaning downwards, and swiftly he extended an arm to pull, and managed to grab onto the arm of the other. That young soldier’s body hung in midair and swayed a few times before he looked up. Borrowing that faint moonlight, Xie Lian saw his face, and his eyes slightly widened.

Ch.79: Upon Beizi Hill; Crown Prince Falls into the Devil's Nest

Xie Lian's sudden leap into the air was certainly alarming, but his two attendants were more than clear just what he was capable of; Mu Qing didn't move, but Feng Xin still went over and helped pull him up. Xie Lian only used a little bit of strength to pull and that young soldier was hauled up, the two of them landing feet flat back onto the tower wall.

"Which troop did you come from? Why are you hiding here?" Xie Lian asked.

That young soldier's arms and head were wrapped full of bandages, and there were even spots of blood on them, appearing to be covered in wounds. It wasn't anything strange; after the battle today, there were many wounded soldiers who were all wrapped up like this. However, that he would hide in the shadows without making a sound was highly suspicious.

"He might be a Yong'an spy, tie him up and interrogate him," Mu Qing said.

Xie Lian suspected it too, but the royal capital was rigorously guarded and the chance of enemies sneaking in was low, unless it was Lang Ying himself. However, this young soldier was clearly only a child, barely legal.

Feng Xin, however, was puzzled. "Your Highness, you don't remember this brat? During the day today, he kept charging to fight in front of you, in that formation that was ahead."

Xie Lian was slightly taken aback. "Oh, really?"

In the midst of killing during the day, he had no time to notice anything else, only that if someone raised a sword to fight him, he'd swing to strike back. He didn't even bother with Feng Xin and Mu Qing, so how would he notice any other soldiers?

Feng Xin was sure. "It is. I remember this brat. His charge was quite aggressive, like he doesn't care for his life at all."

Hearing him, Xie Lian looked over the young soldier carefully. For some reason that boy stood taller, his shoulders squared and head raised, as if a little stiff, but also like he was standing at attention.

Mu Qing remarked, "Then he shouldn't be sneaking around hiding here, who knows if he's here to spy or listen in?"

Even if that's what he said, Xie Lian still relaxed his guard. This was because, due to the campaign by the Xianle military promoting "Army of God, Holy Crusade", there were quite a number of young people who enlisted to follow after Xie Lian; many equally as young, and most were loyal worshippers, having grown up worshipping his divine statues, listening to his tales of valor, and they wanted to get close secretly if only to steal a glimpse of the martial god. It wasn't the first or second time this had happened, so it wasn't anything special.

"Alright, it was a false alarm," Xie Lian said. Then he turned to that young soldier and said warmly, "I must've scared you just now. Sorry."

Yet that boy didn't look frightened, and only stood straighter. "Your Highness..."

However, he trailed off and suddenly moved to tackle Xie Lian!

Xie Lian thought he wanted to ambush him and sidestepped immediately to dodge, his hand reaching for his sword to strike. With his might, just one strike and that boy would undoubtedly die on the spot. But just then, he suddenly felt a rush of cold air behind him. His hand changed track abruptly and flipped to catch, and caught a sniping arrow that was aimed for his back.

Turns out that boy ran to tackle him because he saw a flicker of that arrow flying through the air. Xie Lian's back was leaned against the edge of the parapet, and having been attacked from behind, he wasn't scared in the slightest, and instead jumped onto the wall to look downwards.

In the vast fields before the city gates, he could see faintly the lone figure of a man standing in the far distance; because that man wore dark-coloured clothing and blended into one with the night, he was difficult to see. Feng Xin was instantly by Xie Lian's side; he drew his bow and shot. However, it seemed that man had already calculated the distance and stood just out of reach. That one arrow he shot got Xie Lian's attention, so he waved, then turned swiftly to leave without a word. When Feng Xin's arrow reached him, it was already too late, and it only nailed behind that man's retreating feet by inches.

Furious, Feng Xin knocked at the wall, and rubble came tumbling down. "WHO WAS THAT?!"

Who else could it be?

"Lang Ying!" Xie Lian shouted.

The Xianle soldiers also noticed something off, and started yelling, running around, but for the sake of caution, they didn't immediately open the gates to give chase, and instead reported to the superiors for instructions. Lang Ying waved and left after shooting that one arrow, as if he came especially to greet Xie Lian.

Mu Qing furrowed his brows. "Why did he come? Was that a declaration?"

Feng Xin said angrily, "On the battlefield today Yong'an was completely defeated, and he himself barely escaped from His Highness' hands, so what can he possibly declare?"

Xie Lian, however, felt that the arrow in his hand had something else tied around it, and when he brought it to the firelight to see, it was a ripped piece of fabric that seemed to come from a verdant brocade robe. There were even traces of wet blood on the fabric, and when he unfolded it, there was a scribble of the word “Qi”.

Xie Lian immediately clutched that fabric and said, “Where’s Qi Rong? Is Qi Rong not in the palace?!”

Feng Xin turned to the nearby soldiers. “Go quickly to the palace and confirm!”

The soldiers immediately left. That fabric was indeed a sleeve corner of Qi Rong’s favourite robe, and Lang Ying was known for his stealth, so there was a high probability of Qi Rong having been kidnapped. Things couldn’t be delayed.

Xie Lian said, “I’m going after him to see.” Seeing that Feng Xin came back, he added, “You two watch over the city gates, but don’t make any moves. This might be a feint.”

Feng Xin shrugged his bow on his back. “You’re not bringing anyone?”

If there wasn’t any major attack from Yong’an’s side, Xie Lian didn’t want Xianle to deploy soldiers first. If Qi Rong had fallen into enemy hands, then Xie Lian himself could bring him back; if he brought troops with him, it would cause a stir, and it wouldn’t just be only one or two dead. At the moment, Xie Lian wanted to minimize any issues.

“No. They can’t do anything to me.”

Then, he pushed off the wall lightly and leapt over, landing down on the ground softly, and dashed rapidly in the direction where Lang Ying had retreated. After running for a while, he heard footsteps behind catching up to him, and when he turned his head to look, it was that young soldier.

Xie Lian shouted at him, “I don’t need help, go back!”

That boy shook his head.

Xie Lian tried again, “Go back!” And he sped up, leaving that boy far behind in an instant, no longer to be seen.

After running for five, six miles, he reached a mountaintop. This mountain wasn’t steep, and was more like a hill; so it was called the Beizi⁵⁸ Hill. According to scouts, Beizi Hill was covered in foliage, and in the deep night, there were strange noises all around inside the dark forest, as if there were countless creatures lying low, watching. Xie Lian went deeper into the mountain and searched with his breath held for a long while until suddenly, he saw far ahead the shape of a long human form hung off a tree.

He looked closely and cried, "Qi Rong!"

It was indeed Qi Rong. He was hung upside-down off a tree, looking like he had been beaten to a pulp and had fainted; his nose bleeding downwards, one of his eyes blackened. Xie Lian unsheathed his sword and cut that rope, catching the fallen Qi Rong, then slapped at his face. Qi Rong slowly came to, and yelled the moment he recognized him.

"Cousin Crown Prince!"

Xie Lian was just loosening his bind when he felt cold behind his back, and immediately swung his sword behind him. He turned his head and it was Lang Ying, with a longsword in hand, lunging at him.

The two of them parried a few times, and it didn't take long before Xie Lian knocked Lang Ying's sword flying. Then Xie Lian kicked his legs, tripping him, and brought his sword to his throat, ending the fight.

"You know you're not my equal, stop fighting."

They faced off earlier that day on the battlefield. Whoever charged at Xie Lian was killed; except Lang Ying, who still survived after taking on Xie Lian's sword face-on, and dragged himself away wounded. Anyone could see that Lang Ying was the leader of those Yong'an refugees, and Xie Lian telling him to "stop fighting" naturally had a deeper meaning.

"As long as you people don't transgress, I promise the soldiers of the royal capital will not attack you. Take the water and the rations. Leave."

Lang Ying laid on the ground, and stared him straight in the eyes, that gaze making him uncomfortable. He spoke up, "Your Highness, do you think what you're doing is right?"

Xie Lian froze. Next to him, Qi Rong cursed.

"Rubbish! Do you know who cousin Crown Prince is? He's a god of heaven! If he's not right, what, you think you treacherous dogs are in the right?!"

"Qi Rong, quiet!" Xie Lian shouted.

The question Lang Ying posed, he couldn't answer. Deep down, he did feel there was something not right with what he had done. But, this was the best course of action he could think of. If he didn't protect Xianle, defend against transgression, could he really allow the Yong'an rebels to freely raid again and again, even invade the royal capital?

If only one or two swung their swords at him, he could touch lightly and knock them out to end things. But on the battlefield, blades were merciless, and there was no way he could have the energy to simply knock everyone out. He could only stop himself from feeling and swing the sword. Lang Ying's question had woken that voice deep within, asking him: do you think what you're doing is right?

Qi Rong didn't have this dilemma and kept talking, "What did I say wrong? Cousin, since you're here, hurry and kill all of them dogged thieves! A bunch of them beat me up, and I was only one person!"

Qi Rong had been a figure of domineering arrogance within the royal capital, and naturally there were many from Yong'an who hated him, so they certainly took this chance to take revenge. Of course, more than many from Xianle also hated him. Xie Lian had no time for him, and said to Lang Ying,

"What do you want? If you want rain, Yong'an will rain. If you want gold, I'll push over the golden statues and give them to you. If you want food, I'll...think of a way. Just, don't start a war. Can't we solve this together and find a third path?"

Xie Lian blurted those words in spite of himself. Lang Ying might not have understood what the "third path" meant, but he answered without hesitation.

"I don't want anything, and I don't need anything. The only thing I want is for the Kingdom of Xianle to cease existing in this world. I need it to disappear."

His tone was flat, but his words were cold.

A moment later, Xie Lian said gravely, "...if you bring forth people to attack, I will not be able to sit back and watch. You don't have any chance of winning. Must you do this even if those of Yong'an who follow you will die?"

"Yes," Lang Ying said.

"..."

His answer was so calm, so firm, that while Xie Lian's knuckles cracked, he couldn't say anything back.

Lang Ying enunciated each word: "I know you're a god. That's okay. Even if you're a god, you can't make me stop."

Xie Lian knew that what Lang Ying said was true. Simply because what was in his tone was more than familiar to him: it was the determination of one steeped in justice and righteousness.

When he told Jun Wu “even if the heavens say I must die”, the determination within was exactly the same as Lang Ying’s at this very moment!

Lang Ying’s words were no different than a proclamation that he would continue to call forth endless people of Yong’an to continue to attack unceasingly. Then, Xie Lian knew what he must do.

The sword in Xie Lian’s grip was held with one hand, but now he gripped it with both. Just as he was about to pierce Lang Ying’s throat with his trembling hands, there was suddenly a weird scrunching sound behind him, and then a cackling laugh.

That someone could appear soundlessly and without notice, Xie Lian was startled, and when he looked back, his eyes widened.

Usually those who appear at a time like this were most likely to be enemy soldiers, and perhaps countless blades were already pointed at him, but he had not expected that behind him would be such a strange figure.

That person wore a deadly-white funeral garb, his face bore a deadly-white mask, and that mask was exceedingly bizarre; with half the face crying, the other half smiling. He was sitting on a vine hung low between two trees, and that scrunching sound came from him swinging that vine back and forth like a swing. When he saw Xie Lian look back, he raised his hands and slowly, pa, pa, clapped; cackling coming from his lips, raising hair on Xie Lian’s back.

“What are you?!” Xie Lian said sharply.

He used “what” because his instincts told him that thing wasn’t human!

Just then, Xie Lian suddenly noticed the feeling of the sword in his hands was wrong, and Qi Rong screamed at the same time. When he turned back to look, the ground in front of him was split wide open into a deep ditch, and Lang Ying, who was lying on the ground, was being swallowed by that gap. The ground was rapidly closing the mouth, and without thinking, Xie Lian stabbed into the heart of the earth. Only when feeling that the tip of his sword only touched soil and didn’t pierce any flesh, did Xie Lian realize he failed in killing Lang Ying. He couldn’t tell whether he felt regret or relief. Just then, that white-clothed being started cackling again. Xie Lian raised his sword and flung it at him.

That strike was fast as lightning, penetrating through that being, nailing him onto the tree; that being crumpled to the ground without uttering a single sound. Xie Lian rushed over to check, but only saw a pile of white robes on the ground. The one wearing the robes had disappeared into mid-air!

That being’s appearance and disappearance were both incredibly peculiar. Xie Lian was in shock and didn’t dare to drop his guard.

Picking Qi Rong off the ground with one hand, he said, "Let's go."

Yet Qi Rong whined, "Let's not go! Cousin, let's set fire on this mountain, cousin! There's a bunch of those Yong'an peeps on this mountain, those boorish radicals who wouldn't leave the city gates are all hiding here, let's set a fire and torch this place clean!"

Xie Lian dragged him with one hand for some distance, feeling the essence of evil around them growing heavier, as if countless eyes were watching them.

He said, "Did you not see how strange that being was just now? We shouldn't stick around."

"So what?" Qi Rong said. "You're a god! You're not afraid of those little ghosts? If they dare obstruct you then just kill them off!"

"Let's go back first," Xie Lian said.

Hearing that Xie Lian was paying him no mind and wouldn't set the mountain ablaze, Qi Rong's eyes bulged.

"WHY? THOSE PEOPLE BEAT ME TO A PULP AND WANT TO ANTAGONIZE US. YOU HEARD HIM. HE SAID HE WANTS TO ANNIHILATE XIANLE! HE WANTS TO ANNIHILATE OUR KINGDOM! WHY DON'T YOU KILL THEM ALL OFF LIKE YOU DID TODAY ON THE BATTLEFIELD?"

"..." Xie Lian inhaled and shouted angrily, "Why do you only have 'kill! kill! kill!' in your head? Soldiers and civilians are different!"

Qi Rong countered, "What's the difference? Aren't they all people? Isn't killing either the same thing?"

It was like he stabbed Xie Lian where it hurt, and a burst of anger rolled up. "YOU—!"

Just then, he felt tightening around his ankle, and when he looked down, a swollen hand had poked out of the bushes and seized his boot!

At the same time, there were innumerable tumbling noises coming from ahead of them, and a number of human forms fell down from the trees like rain; paralyzed on the ground, unable to get up. Although they were shaped like humans, they were limp like countless giant flesh worms, slowly squirming towards them.

Qi Rong cried out in fright. "WHO ARE THEY?!"

Xie Lian chopped off that hand with his sword and said gravely, "They're not people, they're binu!"

In the past, Xie Lian had never heard of their appearance in any of the mountains near the royal capital; even if there were any kinds of ghosts or demons, they were usually quickly exterminated by the cultivators of the Royal Holy Pavilion. Which meant, these binu were intentionally let loose by someone.

Xie Lian had never expected that this war would involve anything inhuman. Thinking back on what transpired, he believed more and more that those things were allied with Lang Ying, and that kidnapping Qi Rong was no more than to lure him out. Nonetheless, he had no time to think at the moment. Every time he swung his sword, he could cleanly slice seven to eight binu in half, but when binu appear, they usually come in flocks. Sure enough, all around them the bushes and trees started to rustle, shaking harder and harder, and more and more blurry fleshy forms crawled out, coming at Xie Lian unceasingly. He could kill ten with one strike, but twenty would charge. Just as Xie Lian was striking endlessly, a binu on a tree narrowed in on Xie Lian's back, and leapt down to grapple!

Unexpectedly, before it got close, it was sliced up by a flash of a flare. Qi Rong didn't have any weapons on him, so it couldn't have been him. Xie Lian turned to look and saw the one who swung the sword was that young soldier!

He was left in the dust by Xie Lian by the city gates, but he actually still followed along and found them. That boy was carrying a worn sword and struck down a number of binu, highly effective. Those things crawled and emitted a thick, glue-like body fluid, and Qi Rong was crying at how disgusting they were. He stomped on the head of one that looked weak and noticed that creature wasn't exactly scary.

He said dejectedly, "So they're not that impressive?"

Yet little did he know, binu usually appear alongside more violent, cruel evils. Xie Lian bit his lips and broke skin, using two fingers of his right hand to dip at the blood, then smeared it on his blade. Then he stuffed the sword in Qi Rong's hands.

"You two, take this sword and go! Nothing will dare approach. Don't turn back even if you hear anything. Remember, don't look back!"

Qi Rong protested, "Cousin! I..."

Xie Lian cut him off. "The powerful ones are right behind them. I won't be able to take care of you once they show up. It's better if you go back and report!"

Qi Rong stopped talking, and frantically ran away holding the sword. The sacred sword in his hands had the essence of Xie Lian's divinity, and all along the road no binu or other evils would dare come close; his path was unbound, and he disappeared quickly. Yet, that young soldier still didn't leave, and Qi Rong himself was already long gone. Xie Lian didn't have another sacred protection sword to give him, and could only use his palms to shoot out spiritual blows, blasting away. That boy was also vigorously cooperative, and after an hour, all the binu were exterminated.

A ground full of sticky fluids and corpses, the stench was stifling. After making sure not a single binu escaped, Xie Lian calmed his breath and turned around, speaking to that boy.

"You're pretty good with the sword."

That boy gripped his sword harder, and while he was huffing at first, he instantly stood at attention again. "Y-yes sir."

"I'm not giving you orders, so why are you saying 'yes sir'?" Xie Lian said. "When I ordered you to go back earlier, why didn't you say 'yes sir' then?"

"Yes sir!" that boy answered, but then realized his response was strange, and stood even stiffer.

Xie Lian shook his head, mulled, and suddenly his lips curled up.

"But, you're better suited for a sabre."

Ch.80: Land of the Tender; Body of Gold Hard-Pressed Against Desire

That boy was taken aback. “Why?”

Xie Lian thought back to that boy’s strikes and moves when he killed those binu, and casually showed off a few maneuvers.

“You’ve never used a sabre, right? You use a sword, but the sword is tricky. Although it’s extremely fast and aggressive, it’s still rather restrictive, difficult to extend out. If you’ve never used a sabre before, try it next time. I think you might be even stronger with it.”

If ever Xie Lian saw someone with a notable skill in martial arts, he couldn’t help but want to approach and talk. It wasn’t criticism of any sort, he really was just very interested and wanted to exchange ideas. Because he possessed a wealth of experience in martial arts, oftentimes he didn’t even need to think; just one glance and he could pick up on the particulars. Even if he couldn’t explain why what was, still he would feel it must be so. Usually, out of respect for his status, people would listen, but there were very few who’d actually pay attention. However, that boy listened intently, gobbled up his suggestions, and would look down at the sword in his hand from time to time.

Xie Lian rambled on for a while, before suddenly, there were more rustling noises from within the woods, like something was crawling around rapidly. Xie Lian immediately remembered that they were still in danger, and it really wasn’t the time and place to get excited. Right away, he became serious again.

“Who knows if there might be more evil on this mountain? This place needs a thorough cleansing.”

That boy nodded vigorously, and presented that steel sword to Xie Lian with both hands. Xie Lian shook his head.

“Just defend yourself. You didn’t leave earlier, and now there’s no way for you to go. I’ll do my best to protect you, but stay alert.”

Just then, the bushes rustled and something briskly jumped up. Xie Lian flicked his wrist to shoot out a blast from his palm, and it hit dead-on. A terrible yelp, and that thing stopped moving. There was a strong stench of blood, and Xie Lian was puzzled: if it was a binu, then after having been blown up they would leak sticky bodily fluids; the viscosity was such that the smell of blood usually wouldn’t emit. So, he approached to check.

Pushing the bushes aside, there was indeed a large binu on the ground, blown into several pieces from the blast. But that stench of blood didn’t come from it; rather, from something in its mouth—it was a scrap of skin off a human head, with long hairs still attached!

Binu's were scavengers that foraged for scraps, and by the looks of it, a human had been killed. It left small drops of blood in its trail in the bushes, and Xie Lian immediately followed it, that young soldier tagging along right behind. The further they walked, the thicker the spots of blood became, and the stronger that stench. Soon, they heard cries that sounded weak and powerless.

That little soldier raised his sword and ran in front of Xie Lian to shield him, but Xie Lian pulled him back behind. Winding past a field of blooming shrubs, a semi-large cave appeared before them.

That cave was probably the resting place of some passersby, but now, corpses carpeted the ground; twenty to thirty binu were clambering over those dead bodies, munching to their hearts' content. There were also several of them surrounding a young woman. That young woman looked to be in pain; her guts split open, her innards spilling all over, but she herself was still alive. It appeared she might have been dressing herself; a bright red flower worn on her hair. The fresh blood complimented that crimson blossom, and the picture looked particularly cruel.

Those binu were licking at her fresh, steaming organs, ready to chomp, but hearing the sounds of someone approaching, they all turned to look, and charged in their direction. Xie Lian blew out a blast from his palm without blinking and slayed all of them before checking the dead bodies immediately after. Among the corpses were men and women, old and young, their faces ashen, their attire simple. They were no doubt Yong'an civilians, and Xie Lian couldn't help but be shocked.

He had thought the sudden appearance of monsters and demons were called forth by that strange white-clothed being. That white-clothed being saved Lang Ying, so they must be allies, but then how come the binu would feast on these Yong'an civilians? Non-human creatures would never form a pact with humans for no reason, so did this mean this was the condition Lang Ying agreed to for the alliance? Were the lives of his followers his bargaining chips?!

That young woman was full of pain and terror, blood spitting from her lips, and she sobbed, "Don't kill me, I didn't do anything bad, don't kill me!"

In spite of himself, Xie Lian recalled that family of three who died below the city walls; and what sins had they committed? He knelt and bent down, leaned over and spoke in a gentle, soothing voice.

"Don't be scared. There's nothing to be scared of, we're here to save you."

Yet that little soldier pointed his sword at the young woman. "Your Highness, be careful. She might be an evil spirit from the deep mountains."

Of course Xie Lian knew that was a big possibility, but after much consideration, he still felt he couldn't leave her alone; as long as he was prudent, it should be fine. He felt the pulse of that young woman, checked her palm and fingers for prints, and instantly confirmed that she was indeed a human, and one that had never practiced any martial arts, her arms limp and powerless. He immediately began treating her. He took out a bottle of medicine from his sleeve, twisted the cork open, and a faint, white smoke permeated slowly, its scent fragrant.

That medicine could temporarily slow down any poison, and was amazingly effective against wounds. Xie Lian didn't go stingy on the holy cure, and used up the entire bottle on her.

"Do you feel better?"

That young woman's wounds were heavy, terrible to look at, but after sniffing in that smoke, some blood returned to her face, and she weakly nodded her head.

"Are you from Yong'an? How did this happen?" Xie Lian asked.

Tears rolled down that young woman's face. "...I, I am. I don't know how this came to be either. Every, sss, everything used to be just fine, but suddenly, my dad died, my brother died too..."

Xie Lian gently patted her shoulders. "Who's the murderer who killed them? Or, what killed them?"

That young woman sobbed. "The murderer who killed them was...was...was YOU!"

At the last word, her face suddenly turned fierce, her two eyes flashed and bulged. She opened her arms and pounced, clutching Xie Lian in her embrace!

That young soldier had always been standing by, high on alert, and reacted extremely fast; immediately piercing her heart with his sword. That young woman was already severely wounded, and after being stabbed, her death should've been a sure thing. Yet, she started laughing uproariously in delight, clutching onto Xie Lian firmly, refusing to let go, and stayed in that position until she at last stopped breathing. She clung on so tightly that the young soldier strained to pull her dead body off.

He asked anxiously, "Your Highness! Are you ok?"

Xie Lian had thought that the young woman was going to ambush him as a last-ditch effort. Yet, she had no weapons on her; she didn't even bite or scratch, and only clung on to him tightly as if that was enough, unrelenting even after death.

Confounded, he replied, "I'm alright, I..."

He trailed off as a sudden dizziness mockingly assaulted him.

That little soldier widened his one bright eye. "Your Highness?!"

It was like Xie Lian's innards were on fire; he couldn't speak, didn't want to speak, and didn't want to hear anyone speak either. He shook his head and raised his hand, unspeaking. All around them came the sound of a woman giggling.

"Heeheeheeheehee..."

"Heeheeheeheehee..."

The two of them startlingly realized there wasn't a third person around. That giggling came from that bright red flower!

Xie Lian instantly understood he'd fallen into a trap—

Land of the Tender!

This "Land of the Tender" wasn't that Land of the Tender⁵⁹. The Land of the Tender was a flower demon that loved to gather and suck to feast on the essence of men; living off of their blood.

Their fragrance wasn't anything good, and Xie Lian immediately cautioned, "Cover your mouth and your nose tight, don't breathe in that flower's fragrance!"

That young soldier already had bandages wrapped securely around his face and had a layer of filter, so he didn't breathe in any scent. Hearing Xie Lian, he tightened his bandages, but then realized Xie Lian had nothing to cover with, so he ripped a piece off of the cleanest part of his sleeve, rubbed it hard, patted it down until it was cleaner, and passed it in both hands.

Yet Xie Lian said, "No need. It's too late."

When he went to treat that young woman, he may have been guarded, but he didn't guard against scent and was pressed closely; not knowing the flower pinned on her hair was a blossom of Land of the Tender. Before she died, she clung on firmly to Xie Lian, ensuring she wouldn't fail. This meant Xie Lian had already unknowingly inhaled many mouthfuls of that Tender Fragrance, truly "refreshing the spirit".

Once that Tender Fragrance entered the body, men would become impetuous. Numbness to start, then mania. Right then, Xie Lian's whole body was already listless, like all of his nerves were removed. Once the numbness passed, he'd become a cask of explosives. If that strange white-clothed being was to appear once more, Xie Lian really didn't know how certain he'd be able to face it, and he couldn't be sure of its might either. His first reaction was to reach for his bottle of medicine, but then he realized that bottle was emptied to help treat that young woman. Yet, in the end, the person still didn't survive.

He glanced at the dead body next to him. That young woman wore a happy smile as if she was sincerely glad to sink the enemy into a trap before death and could finally pass in peace to see her family. Xie Lian could only blame the bloody scene that softened that flower's dangerous shade, and the stench of blood that lightened the strange fragrance of blossoms. He had never imagined that the face of a young girl only in her teens could bear such resentment, that she could commit such an extreme act.

Around him, the flower demons were exploding with excitement, muttering:

"He took the bait!"

"Caught him!"

"It's really His Highness the Crown Prince!"

"It's him!"

"He's so handsome...my root, my root can't hold back any longer, it's going to thrust out of the ground!"

That young soldier swung his sword to slash, cleaving a field of flower shrubs. Yet those stems were nimble, and that sword was worn; after one slash, it became dull. Those flower demons rocked back and forth, squealing.

"My gosh! This little gege, your bush hasn't even grown in yet, but you're so ferocious! I'm on the verge of blooming, how will you repay me!"

That young soldier's eye was flashing with rage. "You're dead! I'm gonna burn you all to death!"

The green leaves of those flower demons perched on the stems, yelling, "My, so scary! We didn't provoke you, why are you so mad!"

Xie Lian spoke up too, "Don't burn them! They're demons, if you set them on fire...they will emit poisonous gas. You can't pull them out either!" That boy immediately dropped the hands that were ready to pluck, and Xie Lian explained weakly, "There are poisonous thorns all over the stems..."

The flower demons flirtatiously gibed, “My gosh, Your Highness is so sweet, thank you for protecting us. Just wait, we’re going to bear fruits soon! We’ll definitely take good care of you, hee hee hee hee...”

“Men who cultivated abstinence from birth are so hard to come by; even if your power will drop a level if we deflower you, there’s no other way, sorry! Hee hee hee hee...”

The flower petals of the Land of the Tender rubbed against each other, giggling, their ambrosial perverse intentions more than obvious. That young soldier was bewildered, not quite understanding the meaning of “abstinence”, “deflower”, or “level”, but he could still tell they didn’t mean anything good, so he continued to swing his sword madly, cutting down the flowers, roaring in rage, trying desperately to cover up the sound of that teasing laughter, not wanting Xie Lian to hear. Xie Lian on the other hand, was cracking his knuckles.

So, that was it!

So everything that transpired tonight was truly designed especially for dealing with him.

Kidnapping Qi Rong was them counting on the pride and consideration he possessed as the martial god of Xianle, that he would for sure choose to come after them alone, minimizing the situation. And that heavily-wounded young woman was meant to use up his medicine, leaving him powerless to relieve himself. The cooperation between humans and demons was meant to lead him to this point.

Xie Lian’s method of cultivation really did require a body of purity. The followers who worshipped the ascended cultivators who practiced this stream were firmly convinced in the transcendence of their gods who were untouched by earthly desires. Thus, if they couldn’t protect their purity, their following would no doubt collapse, devastating their powers. Although it wouldn’t be serious to the point of falling back into mortality from godhood, and there was still the possibility of redemption after many more years of cultivation, but at that very moment, there was no way, no time for him to sit behind closed doors to cultivate for years!

The statute of purity was strict at the Royal Holy Pavilion, and Xie Lian excelled as the number one in upholding those rules; never having broken or breached any of them, and thought himself as steady as a rock of steel, not even gales could ripple the water in his heart. He also went through many trials, completing them perfectly each time. Yet, even if his heart was as still as water, he was still young and easily unnerved. With a little young soldier right beside him, listening to those flower demons blatantly splashing words of depravity onto him, plus that lingering fragrance making his blood boil, his mind tempestuous, Xie Lian couldn’t help but become embarrassed, his face reddening. But no matter what, he just couldn’t stand.

He could still somehow hang on for the moment, but if those Land of the Tenders really bore fruit, then it’d be very troublesome. The best course of action was of course to return to the royal capital immediately and have Feng Xin and Mu Qing shield him, but Xie Lian's legs were limp; he could barely stand.

Without any other way, he called to the little soldier with a strained voice, "You...come over here."

Losing virginity will only damage spiritual power, not martial might. Although martial might and spiritual power can be combined and amplified, their nature is different. Besides, only Xie Lian's chosen stream is this troublesome, that an X life would damage his cultivation. Some heavenly officials are much smarter and would choose a stream where the more they X the stronger they become; but in most streams an X life and cultivation are completely unrelated.

Ch.81: Land of the Tender; Body of Gold Hard-Pressed Against Desire 2

Hearing him, that young soldier's back flinched and froze. He turned around hesitantly, but didn't dare go over. The situation at hand didn't allow for any time wasted; seeing his hesitation, temper flared in Xie Lian's chest, but he forced it down.

"Don't be scared, I won't do anything to you. Get over here, quick!"

At last, that boy moved. He rushed close to Xie Lian's side, but came to an abrupt stop two feet away. Xie Lian sucked in a breath silently and extended a hand towards him.

"...Help me up, take me away."

That young soldier very carefully took that hand and grasped it. It was like a man on the brink of death had finally found someone to rely on, and in an instant, Xie Lian's entire body slackened, and collapsed onto that boy.

Sunken deep in the Tender Fragrance, his temperature was high, his body burning. Yet, somehow that boy's hands were equally as hot, and there was even slight trembling.

Xie Lian leaned on him for a bit, saved some energy, then inhaled and pushed himself to stand. He didn't want to have someone smaller than him support his person entirely, but with the boy's help, they walked agonizingly for a few steps. Those flower demons called out to him when they saw them move away.

"No, Your Highness, don't leave us! He is waiting for you on the road, so if you leave here, you'll bump into him."

He?

"Who's 'he'?" Xie Lian demanded.

Speaking of that person, even the Land of the Tenders were slightly terrified. After some hesitation, they mumbled, "'He' is 'him'."

The flowers all nodded to each other.

"'He' is 'him'. The one who brought us here."

Even if they didn't dare to speak of that person's name or identity, that half-crying half-smiling mask immediately appeared in Xie Lian's mind.

"So what you're saying is if I go back now, then the one who planted you all will hunt me down halfway on the road, but if I stay here, he won't come, correct?"

The flower demons were pleased and chattered as they nodded their heads. Fury burst into flames in Xie Lian's chest.

To trap him without killing him in this hateful situation, were they playing with him? Why not simply just battle to the death?

He collected himself and forced down his irritation. It seemed the other party had no intention of facing him head-on, and only wanted to damage his spiritual power, make him fall from grace, and lose followers.

Those flower demons may not be speaking the truth; even if they told lies, if he thought about it, even though this boy could support him or carry him on his back, they still might not be able to return safely. Should the other party purposely throw some women at them halfway down the road, the situation might get even worse or more awkward.

After some consideration, Xie Lian exhaled a feverish breath and closed his eyes.

"Take me to the cave over there."

That young soldier followed his instructions and helped him cross over that ground piled with corpses. When they came before the cave, Xie Lian gasped in a low voice.

"Stop."

That little soldier halted. Even just raising a hand, Xie Lian shook uncontrollably.

"Where's your sword?"

That boy supported him with his left arm and freed the right to take out his sword. Xie Lian extended his hand, rolled up the sleeves and revealed a small part of his arm. Under the white moonlight, it was smooth and pale like the softest white jade. That boy suddenly held his breath, but Xie Lian didn't notice.

He ordered, still in a low voice, "Stab me."

The hand that held up the worn sword immediately dropped.

Xie Lian prompted, "Don't worry, just stab, and stab deeply. I need to draw an array. There's no other spiritual devices on hand, so there needs to be blood."

However, that young soldier protested. "Your Highness, please use my blood!" And he raised his own arm and carved without holding back.

Xie Lian hurriedly said, "No need! Your blood..."

But his words didn't make it in time. A deep gash had already appeared on that boy's arm, fresh blood flowing from it.

Xie Lian sighed. "Sigh...you...nevermind."

Xie Lian's blood was an invaluable holy treasure, so how could a mortal's blood compare? But seeing how sincere this little soldier was, he couldn't bear to tell him that what he'd done was pointless.

Instead, he said, "Thanks. But, we still need some of my blood as a catalyst."

Thus, Xie Lian took that sword, and with trembling hands, it took him a few tries before successfully stabbing into the centre of his arm. Crimson holy blood streamed down his white arm and dripped into two curved lines before the cave, drawing two barriers. It could be said to be a waste of god's gift. Xie Lian also took care to mix in some of that boy's blood, and after completing the array, the dizziness grew stronger.

"...Let's go in."

It was dark inside the cave; that boy took out a small flare torch from inside his robes, ignited it, and the firelight brightened their surroundings with intense light.

That young soldier's face was hidden behind the bandages, covering him completely, yet Xie Lian's discomposure was open for all to see. His cold sweat sticky, his hair disheveled, his lips red and swollen. It was the cut created when he bit his lips to sanctify his own sword earlier. The firelight stabbed at Xie Lian's eyes, hurting them, and the waves of heat were also torturing him.

Xie Lian demanded immediately, "Don't light the fire, kill it."

That boy immediately threw the small flare torch on the ground and stepped to extinguish it, and they sank into darkness once more. After being helped into the cave, Xie Lian sat himself down and seated into a meditative position. A moment later, he spoke laboriously.

"I have a mission for you, can you do it?"

"..." That boy dropped to the ground, kneeling. "I'm willing to risk my life to do my duty!"

Xie Lian painfully restrained his heavy breathing and said with a forced calm, "I drew two sets of barriers in front of the cave. The outer barrier is to ensure nothing outside gets in; the inner barrier is to prevent anyone inside from getting out."

He gasped harshly for air silently, then continued, "There's enough space between the two barriers for one person. Stay there and watch over the cave entrance. No matter what you hear outside, don't go out. Same logic; don't come in no matter what sounds you hear from me."

That boy was slightly perplexed. "Your Highness, you're staying here by yourself?"

"Yes," Xie Lian said. "I don't know what I'll do...In any case, you can't come in no matter what."

Under the circumstances, Xie Lian couldn't leave. But waiting for reinforcements, Qi Rong was probably still stumbling down the road, and just the trip back to the royal capital would take a long while. Who knew when reinforcements would come? He could only seal off this small area temporarily, set off wards, and figure out a way to treat that Tender Fragrance.

He rasped, "Fruits born of flower demons are powerful temptresses. They're most likely going to ripen soon..."

Just then, the fragrance in the air suddenly surged, cutting off his words. That gentle affectionate scent filled the air from the earth to the sky, and the flower demons let out ecstatic, delicate cackling.

They trumpeted, "MY ROOT! MY ROOT IS HARD!"

"The fruits have ripened!"

Smelling that exceedingly sweet fragrance, Xie Lian could feel his heart beating faster, and blood rushed to his brain. He gritted his teeth.

"Hurry and go! Don't breathe in that scent, and if they get close, don't be scared. Nothing can cross that blood line, but as long as your feet remain inside the barrier you can strike them with your sword."

That boy glanced outside, nodded with conviction and rushed out with the sword in hand, stationing himself between the two blood lines by the entrance of the cave. Outside the cave, in that field of corpses, bushes of flower shrubberies grew vividly in colour. That briar field was quivering as if something beneath was about to rupture the ground. Soon, there was indeed something that broke out—it was the head of a woman!

That "woman's" head sprouted from beneath the soil, breathed in the fresh air above ground, and looked to be drunk with joy, her eyes squeezing shut into crescent lines. Following immediately after was a round and smooth shoulder, and then an entire arm crawled out.

The fruits of the Land of the Tender were formed under the whiskers of their roots. When their fruits ripened, they shape into various forms of women.

The time of ripening had come, and countless naked women broke out from the earth. They raised their arms to pluck those bright red blossoms from their heads and bathed under the moonlight, stretching their limbs to their heart's content. It was those little flowers that emitted that fragrant scent, but now the ones secreting that sweet odour were those enchanting women. They patted off the remaining mud on their bodies, fixed their hair, and walked towards the cave, giggling seductively.

"Your Highness, we're coming!"

That sweet fragrance also suffocatingly filled the interior of the cave. Xie Lian sat in the lotus position with his eyes closed, chanting the ethics sutra mentally. Yet, it had little use; those flower demons called to him without shame, chirping familiar language like baby, sweetheart, gege, didi⁶⁰; all sorts of monikers, throwing his mind into turmoil, so Xie Lian changed to reciting out loud:

"Five sights cause blindness five sounds cause deafness galloping hunts cause madness rare goods cause obstructions...calm over impatience coldness over heat silence is the ultimate virtue...those who are kind will receive kindness those who are unkind will receive unkindness..."⁶¹

Xie Lian had not noticed at all that the sutra he had memorized without fault was recited incoherently.

Outside the cave, the flower demons clapped and laughed tauntingly.

"My dear Crown Prince, my sweetheart, my good Highness, you're not a monk, why are you reciting sutras—aiyoh!"

Suddenly there was shrieking all over, and it sounded like that young soldier had wordlessly become violently aggressive; chopping and slashing madly, chasing those flower demons away as they cried.

"Murder!"

Some yelled from far away: "YOU CURSED LITTLE BRAT, LITTLE DESTROYER OF BEAUTY! NO TENDERNESS IN YOUR HEART AT ALL!"

"Scary, scary! Vicious at such an age! Imagine him full-grown!"

⁶⁰ "Didi" is the familiar address for "little brother".

⁶¹ These are verses from the Ethics Sutra (Tao Te Ching, The Book of the Way of Virtue) by Laozi. It's a Chinese literary classic alongside the I-Ching and also one of the philosophical foundation texts for Daoism.

Those flower demons were trying to squish themselves into the cave like starving beasts, but they just couldn't squeeze in. They didn't notice the blood array on the ground and had thought the blockage was all caused by that boy. After some discussion, they gathered not too far away and called to him.

"Little gege, why must you block us from going in? It's not like we're going to do anything bad, we just want to have a good time with His Highness!"

"Be good, little soldier, and don't hinder us from doing His Highness some good."

"That little didi is so mean. A shame that he's so young, too tender. He probably doesn't even know what 'doing good' means!"

The flower demons fell over themselves over another round of mocking giggles, and Xie Lian blinked open his eyes slightly; only to see at the entrance of the cave stood a black shadow, one of that boy who, with a sword in hand, was determined to never move, even in death.

Suddenly, one of the flower demons said, "I say, little gege, don't stick yourself in there like a hard shaft, what are you planning? Why not come with me over there to have some fun? What sorts do you fancy? Do you like my type?"

That young soldier still didn't respond. Those flower demons thought in order to enter the cave they must pass by him, so they all brought forth their tricks, coddling with their words:

"What about me?"

"How about this? Do you fancy my sort?"

"Look at me, do you like this?"

Yet, from flirtation at the beginning changing to complaints then to curses at the end, that boy still only ignored them if they were far away, and struck at them if they were close. Xie Lian knew that, before Land of the Tenders emerged from the ground, they could change their own shapes at will. He had wanted to warn the boy, but due to his current distressing predicament he daren't open his mouth.

Finally, at last, when those pressing waves of heat passed, was he able to gasp, "Don't look at them..."

Just fighting against the hot blood rushing to his head already exhausted him, so Xie Lian's voice was terribly soft and low; but that young soldier instantly heard him and cried in response, "YES SIR! Your Highness, how...how are you?"

"I'm fine," Xie Lian said. "If things get too hard, shut your eyes, seal your nose and your mouth..."

That young soldier hadn't had a chance to answer when another flower demon suddenly burst out laughing.

"I KNOW! Little guy, I bet your favourite type must look like this!?"

It sounded as if another new Land of the Tender had emerged. There was a sudden dead silence that blanketed outside the cave. That young soldier also seemed to have stopped breathing.

The next second, the crashing waves of laughter of those flower demons surged against Xie Lian, drowning him.

They clapped and screeched.

"AIYOOHH!! WHAT A HAND! WHAT A HAAANNDDDD!!"

"My GOD! How did you come up with this? IT'S THE BEST HAHAHAAAAAAAAH...LOOK! THAT BRAT IS COMPLETELY STUNNED! I BET IT'S LIKE THIS!"

"IT MUST BE LIKE THIS! AND HERE I THOUGHT THAT SHITTY BRAT IS A ROCK. WHO KNEW WE WERE WRONG! SUCH BALLS AT SUCH AN AGE!"

"You win, we are nothing! How about it, little guy? Come quick and enjoy this sweet delicious sight!"

"There won't be another shop that serves this dish if you leave this land. If you don't seize your chance now, even if you dream for eight hundred years you still won't be able to have a taste! Or, do you want us to give you a hand? That state...heehheehhee..."

That young soldier was thoroughly incensed, and his tone of voice was filled with frost. "...YOU, ARE, SEEKING, DEATH!!"

At the same time, inside the cave Xie Lian was about to reach his limit.

His sight blurred and his ears drummed, he could no longer sit up straight. He collapsed forward and barely held himself from the ground with his hands. But, this tumble loosened his gritted teeth, and in that moment of delirium, a painful, wretched moan escaped his lips.

Ch.82: Land of the Tender; Body of Gold Hard-Pressed Against Desire 3

TW: Graphic Self Harm

Xie Lian swiftly covered his mouth the moment the sound leaked.

That young soldier whipped around. "...YOUR HIGHNESS?"

With one hand supporting himself off the ground, Xie Lian used the other to cover his mouth doggedly; his breathing erratic, his shoulders shaking. Just by listening to him and seeing his silhouette, one would probably think he was sobbing.

Never in his life, before and after ascension, had Xie Lian experienced such a grueling ordeal. This was much more arduous than the toughest trial at the Royal Holy Pavilion. The strength of the arm supporting his weight drained, and his body keeled over to the side. As he laid on the ground delirious and barely conscious, he saw that boy looked as if he wanted to enter.

Xie Lian shouted, "DON'T COME IN! I SAID DON'T COME IN NO MATTER WHAT YOU HEAR!!!"

That boy stopped in his step, and Xie Lian laboriously flipped onto his back, facing up, and somehow regulated his breathing despite wave after waves of heat crashing through every part of his body. The flower demons outside the cave heard him tossing and turning, that fire burning intensely, and they clapped while laughing.

"My good highness, why be so hard on yourself! Today you're refusing yourself a good time because you're scared of losing followers; tomorrow you'll be scared to do other things because you'd be scared of losing followers. How is that any way for a heavenly official to live? More like a prisoner, hands tied by those devotees! It's not worth it being a god like that. You're gonna lose your place sooner or later, so why not just enjoy yourself for now? Things come and go, no need to mind the petty details!"

Veins popped on Xie Lian's forehead and he lost control of his temper. "SHUT UP!!!" he shouted, outraged.

The flower demons naturally weren't afraid of him right now, and they started teasing that little soldier anew.

"Little didi, don't you think we're right? Hahahaha..."

"Hee hee hee...aren't you feeling miserable standing there?"

Cold sweat had already drenched his entire body. Feeling exceedingly hot and bothered, Xie Lian violently tore at his robes, wanting even just a sliver of coolness. As he ripped, he suddenly noticed: how come strength was returning to his arms? Although that bit of power didn't last long and left just as quickly, when he checked himself, sure enough, the numbness had passed, and energy was gradually increasing. Yet, Xie Lian's heart was dropping.

The effect of the Tender Fragrance was numbness at first, followed by mania. The numbness had passed, so in a moment, madness and passion would fill his veins. Although he drew two lines of barriers at the entrance of the cave, the interior one drawn especially to prevent his crazed self from going out, once mania took over, he was not certain whether the barrier would be enough to stop him. This moment of clarity was a rare blessing, and Xie Lian grabbed on to it with both hands, thinking rapidly of ways to handle the situation.

Suddenly, a small realization came to him: the Tender Fragrance worked rapidly; usually the moment blood rushed to the brain all control would be lost, so how had he managed to stay afloat until now? Was there no other reason than his exceptional steadiness of the mind?

Thinking of this, Xie Lian inhaled a long breath and inclined his head, then he called to the silhouette of that boy by the cave's entrance, still looking indecisive over entering.

"You...come in."

Hearing his call, that young soldier appeared to want to run to his side immediately, but after a few steps, he seemed to remember Xie Lian's angry instruction of "don't come in no matter what you hear", and he hesitated. Xie Lian was also feeling woeful at changing his mind so quickly, and he called again miserably.

"Just come in here first."

That boy stopped hesitating and rushed in.

The tunnel of that cave was long and narrow, the interior warm and humid. Darkness filled the space, not even raised fingers could be seen; that boy used Xie Lian's rasping breaths to find where he was.

Xie Lian then instructed: "Put down your sword...put it on the ground. Right next to me. Not too far away."

"Yes sir!" that young soldier acknowledged, and handed over his only defense; he placed it where Xie Lian could easily reach for it.

Xie Lian then added: "Please help me up."

That boy half-knelt next to him and extended both his arms to help support Xie Lian. However, the moment his hands reached out, what he touched wasn't fabric, but feverish skin.

Those hands immediately shrank back. Xie Lian himself felt burnt by that boy's hot hands, and only then did he remember he tore off his upper robes earlier in the midst of madness. Men naked from the waist up usually didn't mean anything, except under the current circumstances, it was a little more awkward. But there was no need to highlight that awkwardness; they just needed to do what they must. That boy seemed to realize it too, and he didn't wait for Xie Lian to say anything before he reached out again, circling his arm around Xie Lian's bare shoulders to help him up; he then immediately let go. Xie Lian leaned against the wall of the tunnel; with his back pressed against the cool rock he felt some relief.

Noticing that the other had backed away a few steps, he hurriedly said, "Wait, don't go out yet!"

That young soldier heeded his every word, and immediately halted.

"Cut off a lock of my hair. I have a need for it," Xie Lian said.

That boy acknowledged the order and reached out again. However, nothing could be seen clearly in the darkness, and Xie Lian's long locks were cleanly tied behind his back, so his first contact wasn't Xie Lian's hair. Instead he accidentally felt the skin of Xie Lian's chest, soft and supple with a sheen of glistening sweat. Xie Lian was already in torment and that boy had touched somewhere sensitive. It was as if a jolt of electricity shocked through his torso, spreading pleasure throughout his whole body, and he moaned softly.

The two in the cave instantly froze.

The flower demons outside the cave were desperately trying to listen in, so how could they miss it? They giggled.

"My gosh, what are they doing in there?"

"So embarrassing!"

"I daren't listen!"

Listening to their teasing of his suffering, Xie Lian gritted his teeth. "YOU—!"

That boy immediately dropped his hands at the sound of Xie Lian's fury, afraid to make any more contact. Obviously Xie Lian wasn't furious at him; in his eyes that little soldier was nothing more than a child. He softened his tone, thinking the boy was probably scared of offending him.

He said, "Don't panic, continue. Don't mind them."

That boy croaked, "Yes sir."

But he did indeed seem to be panicking, feeling everywhere he shouldn't, and every time he found he had touched the wrong place his hands would shrink back. In the end he could only trace his hands up Xie Lian's chest to find his hair, flaring unspeakable pleasure and agony in Xie Lian. Such misery; Xie Lian longed to smash his head against the tunnel wall and just pass out for good. Finally, that boy felt Xie Lian's throbbing Adam's apple and sought behind the neck, grasping a lock of hair. With only a few strands in his grip, he very carefully cut with the sword.

He said instantly after, "Your Highness, it's done!"

Another small bout of strength returned to Xie Lian just then, and he raised his hand. "Give me your hand."

That boy heeded, and from his hands, Xie Lian retrieved those long, thin strands and tied them into a knot onto a random finger of that boy's hand.⁶²

That boy was baffled, and he asked with a quivering voice, "Your Highness, what's this?"

Xie Lian sighed. "The flower demon's poison is about to enter the second stage. I need to borrow your sword. If anything wants to harm you later, just raise this hand and it can protect you. Now, leave."

A moment later, that young soldier returned to the entrance of the cave. Those flower demons thus became rowdy again.

"Out again?"

"Finally."

"Blocking us outside like this while you went in yourself. Little buddy, you're not very nice!"

At that same time, Xie Lian could feel more strength surging through his limbs. He sucked in a deep breath, and grabbed the worn sword that the young soldier left behind with his right hand. He steadied his spirit, raised the sword, and made a cut on his left arm.

In a flash, it was like the fog had lifted, and his senses refreshed.

⁶² [斷髮/ 結髮夫妻]: The traditional wedding ritual of spouses cutting off a lock of their own hair, then intertwining and tying them together; symbolizing "Til Death Do Us Part". Xie Lian cutting off a lock of his hair to tie around Hua Cheng's finger might be as inconsequential as Lan Wangji biting Wei Wuxian's arm, but it's a point of interest anyway knowing MXTX, lol. (Obviously Hua Cheng thought more of it than Xie Lian did, since he tied the red string of fate on his finger later?)

He knew it!

Blood streamed down Xie Lian's left arm, but it was like he had finally grasped a lifeline in the midst of that chaos.

The fragrance of Land of the Tender could aggravate one's temper and arouse deep, slumbering urges. Typically, the stronger the repressed urge, the stronger the rebound after taking in the fragrance. As for what Xie Lian repressed deep down, taking "lust" away, there was only the urge to kill left.

This "urge to kill" couldn't be in reference to monsters or demons. He had slain much evil in the past, so it didn't count as any sort of repression. The target to be killed must be human or a god in order to inflict the sense of transgression. Before entering the cave, Xie Lian cut himself in order to draw the arrays, and so blood was spilt. It was somewhat effective against the Tender Fragrance because injuring himself was also a form of inflicting harm.

At the end of the day, "lust" and "murder" were both extremely aggressive desires, and Xie Lian had even heard that some thought the nature of both were one and the same. Then, using himself as proof, there was indeed an alternative method to pass the current trial.

Sure of his own reasoning, Xie Lian cut another line on his left arm without hesitation, and each cut brought more clarity to his mind. He was just rejoicing and didn't realize that the Tender Fragrance was stirring more evil within his body; when that urge to kill was satisfied, instantly, another wave of pleasure poured through his person.

That sudden surge of pleasure coursed through him from head to toe, easily breaking the wall of defense he painstakingly built, and by the time Xie Lian had realized it, he was already quietly moaning.

If it wasn't only him inside the cave, Xie Lian wouldn't be able to believe that sound came from him. He shuddered violently and widened his eyes, thinking, "This method should've worked, so why would this happen?"

He glanced at the sword and suddenly remembered: that young soldier had used it to cut down the stems of those flowers, and had struck the humanoid flower demons. The blade was covered in the sap of those Land of the Tenders. He used twenty percent of his power to make the first cut on his arm, and the same relieving effect could only be achieved if he used thirty percent of his power to cut. Wasn't this no different than drinking poison to quench thirst?

Madness must've gone to his head, otherwise, he should've already noticed this. Xie Lian cursed himself mentally, but since the act had already been done, he could only rip off a piece of his left sleeve to wipe crazedly at the sword, then tear off his right sleeve to stuff it in his own mouth, biting it down mulishly, and do his best to restrain himself.

The damned quiet moans continued to escape through his bitten lips and gritted teeth intermittently. However, voices echo within caves, and every small sound was amplified and reverberated outwards. That boy heeded his instructions and covered his eyes, using only his sense of hearing to work, and his ears became more sensitive; there was no reason to think that he noticed nothing.

Unable to hold back any longer, he asked with a quivering voice, "Your Highness?"

To be in such an unspeakable state was the biggest shame of his life. Xie Lian could hardly imagine what would happen should anyone see him now, and even submerged in darkness he could not tolerate the thought.

He yelled, "DON'T COME IN!!!"

However, that piece of cloth was still stuffed in his mouth so his command only sounded like muffled whimpering, exceedingly pitiful and wretched. Hearing him, that young soldier became even more agitated.

Ch.83: Land of the Tender; Body of Gold Hard-Pressed Against Desire 4

TW: Graphic Self Harm

Xie Lian's left arm was bleeding profusely from the gash he'd created on himself, but at the end of the day, it was only self "harm", not "murder", and so the urge wasn't fully fulfilled. His mouth slackened and that stuffed piece of cloth fell from his lips. Xie Lian became more aggressive, and stabbed his left leg. It was a deep cut; the sound of the blade penetrating his flesh was clear. That young soldier couldn't stand back anymore and ran towards him. Hearing his hurried footsteps, Xie Lian backed away in terror. Even when his back was pressed against the wall, he continued to push backwards.

"NONONO! DON'T COME NEAR ME, DON'T..."

The second blood barrier by the entrance of the cave was drawn especially for Xie Lian to bar himself, but it couldn't bar that boy, so he still had a chance to return to safety. But the Tender Fragrance poison was about to enter the second stage; if that boy approached, Xie Lian could very well end his life right then and there, and spare him no chance of escape. He was terrified he'd kill that child by accident, and could only avoid him.

That young soldier heard the terror in his voice and called anxiously, "Your Highness..."

The urge to kill was boiling in his blood. He raised that worn sword with his shaking hand, and a voice inside his head screamed, "I WON'T DIE, I WON'T DIE, I WON'T DIE!!!"

The next moment, in a split second decision, the blade turned.

In the darkness, that young soldier could see a cold light flash, and he yelled, "YOUR HIGHNESS!!!"

The sword had struck, and it penetrated Xie Lian's own stomach, nailing himself dead onto the ground!

A sharp pain exploded from his abdomen, spreading throughout his whole body, dispersing the heat. Xie Lian's hands were gripping tightly onto the hilt, his eyes bulging. He choked a cough, a thin thread of blood flowed down from the side of his lips, his breathing stagnated, and he stopped moving. That young soldier was dumbfounded, and fell to his knees next to his body.

Just then, there was screeching and shrieking outside the cave.

"WHO ARE YOU?!"

The voices of the flower demons were delicate but shrill, and their shrieks piercing to the ears. Yet, there was another who thundered louder, dominating over all of their cries:

“WHAT THE HELL!!!”

Hearing that angry roar, Xie Lian suddenly sucked in a breath anew.

Feng Xin!

Another muffled voice said, “It’s Land of the Tender. If you don’t want to get poisoned then cover your face.”

That was of course the Mu Qing who already had his face covered. Feng Xin covered his face but then seemed to have seen something, and muffled an angry shout.

“IS THAT...YOUR HIGHNESS? YOUR HIGHNESS?? FUCK! WHAT THE FUCK!! WHAT’S THIS!”

Mu Qing also let out an “eh?” and noted, “What a disgraceful sight!”

But his tone wasn’t as angry as Feng Xin’s, more like the reaction of having heard someone utter a bad joke. Xie Lian laid inside the cave and couldn’t hear what they were saying, but he could guess that those flower demons probably showed their naked selves before them, looking highly inappropriate.

Feng Xin was cursing uproariously. “HURRY AND BURN THEM! DON’T LET ANYONE ELSE SEE!”

Soon, there was a field of flames and the sound of burning. In that roaring fire, the shrieks and curses of those flower demons gradually disappeared.

“Make sure to burn thoroughly. That fragrance from those flower demons is poisonous, if there are any leftover seedlings they’ll come back,” Mu Qing said.

Xie Lian sucked in a breath, waited, then coughed weakly once; but the other two immediately heard his voice and charged to the cave, yelling.

“YOUR HIGHNESS, ARE YOU IN THERE?”

“...I’m here...” Xie Lian called.

Even though he tried to steady his voice, it was still weaker than normal. The two of them rushed over but were stopped by the barriers outside the cave’s entrance. However, they were very familiar with the arrays drawn by Xie Lian and knew how to break them. Feng Xin ignited a palm torch, walked a few steps, and before the deepest of the cave was illuminated, he suddenly called out.

“Who’s there?”

Mu Qing was alarmed too. “Is there someone else in the cave?”

“Don’t worry. Just a little soldier,” Xie Lian said.

The two dropped their guard and entered. The bright firelight brightened the entire cave with a warm orangey glow, and illuminated Xie Lian; who laid there on the ground, his long hair strewn about, his robes shredded, and a long sword impaled through his abdomen, nailing him to the ground.

The two were horrified by the sight.

Feng Xin leaned over. “WHO DID THIS?!”

“Me,” Xie Lian replied.

Mu Qing was aghast. “What happened?”

Xie Lian shook his head. “I don’t want to talk about it. This only happened because there was no other way. Hurry and free me from this.”

Mu Qing approached and pulled out the sword with a frown, throwing it to the side with a clang; that young soldier retrieved it. Feng Xin helped Xie Lian sit up, covered him with an outer robe; only then did Xie Lian finally recount roughly the ghastly night with the Land of the Tender.

“You guys came faster than I expected. Where’s Qi Rong?”

“Qi Rong got locked up by the king in the palace,” Feng Xin said. “He’s too overbearing in the markets, so of course he was an easy target. But he knew to find us after he got back, so not too bad.”

So it seemed that as much as Qi Rong despised those two servants, he still acknowledged how competent they were. The two had planned to have one stay behind to guard the fortress, but Qi Rong was screaming and howling with a sword smeared in Xie Lian’s blood, so they thought the danger might be more than they expected, and decided to both come together in the end. Beizi Hill was thick with the essence of evil, so it wasn’t hard to find, which was why they were so quick in coming.

Although Xie Lian possessed an ascended body—normal blades could not hurt his essence, and a jab to himself like this wouldn’t kill him—still, he had never really truly lost in a battle of life and death in his twenty years. This was the very first time he had gotten so heavily wounded, so he needed time to recover. And so, Feng Xin carried him on his back on their return to the royal capital. Foreign pain stabbed at him from his stomach, making Xie Lian furrow his brows, but he tried to control himself.

“Did you guys bump into anything on your way here?”

“No,” Mu Qing replied.

Xie Lian sucked in a breath and said, “Be careful, there are inhuman creatures about...”

He had wanted to tell them about that white-clothed being, but because he was really quite exhausted, and seeing from the peripheral of his vision that young soldier following behind with that bloody steel sword in hand, he finally relaxed, closed his eyes to restore his energy, and fell deeply asleep.

Since he had capriciously descended into the mortal realm, Xie Lian had not closed his eyes to rest for over a month; with stacking pressure growing, this whole ordeal finally crushed him, and he was comatose for three whole days. After three days he woke with a start and found himself inside his bedchamber. The ceiling above was glamorous and beautiful—it was the palace—and he immediately sat up.

“Feng Xin!”

Feng Xin was just outside testing his bow, and entered when he heard the call. “Your Highness!”

Xie Lian’s stomach injury had long since healed, and he immediately jumped off the bed. “Was I knocked out for a long time? Did anything happen?”

“Relax,” Feng Xin said. “It was only a few days. There were no enemy attacks. If there were, wouldn’t I have already woken you up? Go back to bed, you forgot your shoes again.”

Calmed, Xie Lian went back to bed. After a pause, he asked, “Where’s Mu Qing?”

Just then, Mu Qing walked in too, holding the prepared robes in his hands. “Here.”

He attended to dressing the Crown Prince, and Feng Xin spoke up beside them.

“However, even though we didn’t battle in the past few days, we did find something out.”

“Find out what?” Xie Lian asked.

“Didn’t we say before that there’s something off with Yong’an? That there might be reinforcements? We went to scout Beizi Hill and saw several people that were dressed like our citizens, but had a weird accent. They didn’t look like they were from Xianle. I captured them, and sure enough, there are other kingdoms supporting them from the shadows, secretly shipping supplies and arms.”

Otherwise, with so many people of Yong'an squished on a barren hill, there was no way they could support themselves until now surviving on wild roots and weeds!

Feng Xin cursed. “Fucking fakers pretending to be all friendly, gotta stir shit up now, hoping Xianle would fall completely into chaos!”

The Kingdom of Xianle possessed a vast territory with bountiful resources, its wealth abundant, its production of precious jewels plentiful, and the nearby kingdoms had long watched with eyes green with envy. Xie Lian had expected this and shook his head gravely.

He recalled something else, and asked, “Where’s that child?”

“Which one?” Feng Xin asked. “Oh, that little soldier? We were rushing you to the Guoshi that day, no one cared for him; he probably went back to his troop.”

Dressed, Xie Lian lowered his arms and sat down with poise on the bed. “That child was pretty skilled; I think he’s got really good potential with the sabre. If he’s taught well, he’d definitely be spectacular when he’s older. Mu Qing, remember to find him for me when you get a chance. Settle him well. He could be appointed.”

Xie Lian was someone who loved those who were skilled in martial arts, and just had to appoint them to his side just so he could watch them everyday and soak in delight. This wasn’t the first time he had made such a comment, but it was the first time it was directed to a child. Mu Qing heard him make those “really good potential with the sabre”, “spectacular when he’s older” remarks, and his expression turned unreadable. He scrunched up the hair band he’d just untied from Xie Lian in his hand, and turned around to throw it to the side.

Feng Xin, on the other hand, remarked, “That brat only looked to be about fourteen or fifteen, isn’t that too young? What’s he gonna do after getting appointed?”

Mu Qing spoke up too in a flat voice, “It’s not proper. It’d be against military rule.”

“A god can descend into the mortal realm, so what can military rule do to me?” Xie Lian said, then praised, “You guys should’ve seen the way he killed those binu! It was so good!”

Speaking of binu, that strange white-clothed being flashed before his mind.

“Your Highness, why have demons like those Land of the Tenders appeared on Beizi Hill? That’s never happened before?” Feng Xin said.

Xie Lian rose to his feet. “That’s what I wanted to tell you guys that day.”

Finally free, he recounted his meeting with that one who bore the crying-smiling mask. The three of them talked it over, but didn't dare to be negligent; they decided in the end that it was better to report it to the heavens. Thus, once Xie Lian left his bedchamber, he briefly met with the king and the queen before hurrying to the Great Martial Hall on Mount Taicang.

If this was the past, Xie Lian would've gone to the Heavenly Court directly to tell Jun Wu face-to-face. Yet the circumstances had changed; he was the one who deserted the Heavenly Court, and that was like handing the keys back. Even if he wanted to go back, the doors would be locked. Plus, he'd left with such upset and spoke with such friction in the Great Martial Hall, that he was a little embarrassed to face Jun Wu. Thus, with great reverence, he lit a few giant sticks of incense in the Great Martial Hall, and passed on the message to the divine statue of the Heavenly Martial Emperor, hoping that he would hear it. However, the number of incense respects Jun Wu received were at least eight thousand to ten thousand; an overwhelming amount, with a number of big believers mixed in. Whether he would really hear his message would depend entirely on chance. Xie Lian didn't dare leave things be for too long either, and immediately returned to the battlefield to continue his watch over the fortress city.

Maybe it was because the damage inflicted in the first battle was too great and their reinforcements had been cut off secretly by Feng Xin and Mu Qing, but Yong'an seemed to have changed tactics and didn't recklessly attack again. After a few months, they fought a few small battles, but didn't lose too gravely. Compared to the first battle, those bouts were nothing. That strange white-clothed being didn't appear again, either. Thus, the royal capital of Xianle was growing slack, and Xie Lian himself found a rare chance to leave from the front lines, strolling through the royal capital to relax a bit.

He stepped onto a small stone bridge, stirring long twines of the weeping willow next to the bridge; he watched lively, red koi fish swish their tails, swimming happily through the coursing waters below, feeling envious. He was lost in thought for a while when suddenly he felt eyes staring at him from behind, and when he turned his head, there was no one there. Puzzled, but not sensing any malintent or killing intent, Xie Lian didn't mind.

After crossing the bridge, he strolled along the Martial Deity Avenue, and passersby on the road bowed to him excitedly or reverently or delightfully, greeting "Your Highness". Xie Lian nodded and smiled, and after walking for a while, he felt that staring gaze on his back again.

This time, he took it to heart, and whipped around without warning, catching the culprit. Behind a willow tree there was a flash of a shadow. Xie Lian walked up and was about to grab at the person when he realized with a start that it was that boy with his head wrapped in bandages.

"You're...?"

Even with bandages wrapped all over his head, that boy still raised crossed arms to cover his face, leaving only a bright eye peeking through his patched sleeves.

He stammered, “Y-Your Highness, I didn’t mean to.”

Xie Lian pointed at him. “You’re from that night…”

He trailed off, recalling immediately what exactly transpired that night many months ago, and just how discomposed he was. Images filled his mind and he reddened, feeling slightly awkward, and hurriedly cleared his throat.

“So it was you. I was going to look for you a while back, but with so much on my plate I’d forgotten. Ahem, aren’t you a soldier in the army? Why are you in the city?”

Hearing him, that boy was taken aback and replied, a little mopingly, “I’m not in the army anymore.”

Xie Lian was bewildered. “Huh? Why not?”

That boy was even more bewildered. “I…got kicked out. Your Highness, did…did you not know?!”

Xie Lian was perplexed. “Know what?”

He had clearly told Mu Qing that that child was a good sprout, to be settled and appointed, so how did he get kicked out of the army after Xie Lian’s specific instructions???

That boy looked to be both excited and happy, immediately dropping his arms. “So Your Highness hadn’t known! I had thought… I thought…”

Xie Lian was becoming more and more curious. “Come, tell me, why did you get kicked out? Who kicked you out? Why did you think I would know? Also, what had you thought?”

That boy made a giant step towards him, but before he could speak, just then from the Martial Deity Avenue came a loud, horrified scream.

“AAAAHHHHHHH——!!!”

Xie Lian whipped his head around and saw a man holding his face, running and stumbling in his direction.

Ch.84: From the Earth of Buyou Forest, Human Face Disease Breaks Out

He was a tall and burly man, dashing crazedly, and many on the streets fell as he rammed past. They complained loudly.

“What gives!”

“What’s up with the heated run on such a hot day...”

“Wow, my first time seeing anyone come out without wearing their face.⁶³”

Many started laughing as they commented, since they weren’t really angry anyway. But that man rampaged all the way, and crashed himself head-on with a large, luxurious horse carriage, and blood splattered on the spot!

He fell back first onto the ground in a heap, and the pedestrians who were joking around all screamed.

The horse carriage owner was also shocked, poking his head out to ask, “Who was that? Who crashed into me?”

Everything was so sudden, Xie Lian had to put the matter with the boy onto the back burner for now, and he rushed over.

“What’s happened?”

That man who rammed his head into the hard, solid carriage seemed to have passed out, his disheveled hair blocking his face, and there were a number of people surrounding him carefully and watching. Before Xie Lian got close however, he suddenly leapt up in a fit, and wailed.

“I CAN’T STAND IT ANYMORRREEE! SOMEONE! SOMEONE KILL ME! HURRY, SOMEONE COME KILL ME!!! PLEASE!”

A few of the other burly men passing by couldn’t watch anymore, and commented, “Which house let their psycho loose? Take him away, jeez...”

They were originally going to arrest that man, but when they approached, when they saw that lunatic’s face up close, they all screamed too, and backed away in a hurry.

“WHAT IS THIS MONSTER!!!”

⁶³ “Face” refers to shame, but the man was punning on the guy being both shameless and hiding his face at the same time.

That psycho man, however, chased after them, crying manically, “HURRY AND BEAT ME TO DEATH!!!”

Those men were horrified; as Xie Lian approached, they saw it was His Highness the Crown Prince, and rushed to hide behind him like he was a divine reprieve. Without blinking, Xie Lian raised his leg and kicked, knocking that crazy man down; he tumbled a few times, ending up like a mud-covered dog. Some pointed at him.

“Your Highness! This man...this man...he has...HE HAS!!!”

No need for them to point it out, Xie Lian also saw it—this man had two faces!

Technically, it was one face, with another grown from it. The second face was squished on half the cheek of that crazy man; about the size of a palm. Although this man was young, that small face was a wrinkly old man, ugly to the core!

Xie Lian was also shocked to the core, his mind filled with only one thing: what is this monster?!

He immediately gripped the sword that was hung at his waist and unsheathed it. That sword was an enchanted weapon gifted to him by the Heavenly Martial Emperor; Hongjing. Ever since he met that white-clothed character, he had kept this sword on his person at all times in case there was a need for it; just maybe, he'd get to see that creature's true form one of these days. Under the current circumstances, that sword was certainly useful; once unsheathed, the shine of that blade was brighter than snow. Yet, when he looked, the reflection on that blade did not change whatsoever. It was still just this man, and it was still just those two terrifying faces. That meant this crazy man wasn't in any shape or form a monster or a demon: he was indeed human!

However, was there really anyone in the world who would have such a growth? If he was born this way, then how could it not be known within the royal capital after years? Xie Lian was both astonished and suspicious, and suddenly, someone on the side spoke up with a quivering voice.

“How...how did he become like this?”

Hearing him, Xie Lian immediately sheathed Hongjing and turned his head. “You know him? Was he not like this before?”

A number of people replied: “We know him! We used to work with him. Of course he's not like this. Before, his face...how could it have something like this!!!”

Seeing that the crowd was growing bigger, almost to the point of blocking the whole main street, with a grave expression, Xie Lian inhaled and shouted loudly and clearly.

“EVERYONE, DON'T COME CLOSE. IT'S NOTHING, BREAK IT UP!”

That bandaged boy helped him keep the crowd away, but Xie Lian didn't notice. He was busy calling for Feng Xin and Mu Qing in the communication array:

"Come quickly to the Martial Deity Avenue in the royal capital!"

After lowering his hand, he saw another close by who looked tentative and floundering, exceedingly hesitant; so Xie Lian took a step towards him.

"Do you have something you want to say?"

With the Crown Prince's query, that man seemed to have found courage, and said, "Your Highness, there's something I don't know if I should tell..."

Xie Lian had no time to listen to him ramble winding words, and cut in bluntly. "Get to the point!"

"A few days ago, some bumps appeared on my chest; three big ones and two small ones. I didn't feel anything, they don't itch or hurt, and they actually feel pretty good when you nudge at them. I didn't think much of them, but seeing this buddy here, I'm feeling pretty...like I might be punished for something, yanno, haha." He laughed flatly and loosened his robe, showing his chest. "There's nothing wrong with me...is there?"

The moment he took off his robe, everyone fell silent. On the chest of that man wasn't just "some bumps". It was clearly the blurry face of a woman with all five of her senses intact!

That man looked down and was also shocked. "HOW DID IT BECOME LIKE THIS?! IT CLEARLY WASN'T THAT...THAT..."

Lifelike? Realistic? No matter what adjective used, it was fully horrifying!

Everyone around was terrified, and in spite of himself, that man grabbed onto the hem of Xie Lian's robe and cried, "YOUR HIGHNESS, SAVE ME!"

At that same moment, Feng Xin and Mu Qing received his call and came rushing over by the towers. Seeing the picture before them they both furrowed their brows.

Feng Xin shouted, "STAND BACK! WHAT ARE YOU PLAYING AT?"

Xie Lian didn't have the time to explain. He patted that man's shoulders and comforted, "Don't worry. Keep calm."

His tone of voice was warm and firm, serious but kind. That man thought Xie Lian had everything under control, and believed without a doubt that a small matter like this was nothing to His Highness the Crown Prince, and so he relaxed. However, Xie Lian's mind was in turmoil.

That “human face” was actually something that grew gradually! And those with the symptoms—he would call it a “symptom” for now—it wasn’t only just the one person. Then, dare he assume there were many more?

He immediately gave Feng Xin and Mu Qing a rough account and commanded, “Report this to the palace, pass down this order: search the whole city and see if there’s anyone else with similar affliction. Do not miss a single one!”

Because that thing was so shocking, once the king received the news he made it a priority; dispatching a large number of troops to search and investigate, the work highly efficient and effective. By that night it was confirmed: within the entire royal capital, there were already five people with faintly visible faces growing on their bodies. Of those five, either they saw and didn’t take it to heart, or the “faces” were growing in areas not easily detected. In addition, the “faces” didn’t itch or hurt, so they wouldn’t have noticed. Other than that, there were over ten others who had shallow bumps appearing on their bodies, no doubt the still-immature “faces”.

In this group of twenty-some people, there were more women and youth; when they were sent forth before Xie Lian, one after the other, they were filled with unease and greeted each other, comforting one another at the same time. Initially, Xie Lian was speaking to someone on the side, taking care of some business, but when he noticed them, he felt something was amiss.

He asked, “Do you all know each other?”

The officials, who had worked all night, briefly glanced at their report and replied, “Your Highness, many of them live on the outskirts of the royal capital, fairly close together, so maybe they’ve crossed paths as neighbours.”

Many who lived in the same area? Mu Qing was aghast.

“People who lived close together all grew those human faces? That thing is contagious???”

Xie Lian thought of it faster than he did, he just didn’t say it as fast. Immediately, he commanded, “Isolate them! Disperse the non-affected, don’t let anyone come close to this place. Find a place to quarantine everyone here!”

“A contagious strange disease”. When those words leaked out, it was more effective than the order to disperse any strong-arming troops. Not only did the onlooking crowd scatter, more than half the houses on the street emptied out. Xie Lian ordered for the officials and soldiers he had appointed to gear up for protection, and brought those twenty-some people to the outskirts of the royal capital where some of them lived.

Nearby the residential area, on the outskirts, there was a large forest called Buyou. The government officials had intended to build a quarantine there to temporarily settle the “sick”.

However, when they entered the woods, while others were busy building camp, Xie Lian was feeling more and more unsettled the more he walked. Feng Xin and Mu Qing noticed too. It was Feng Xin who spoke up first.

“Your Highness, isn’t this where that Lang Ying...”

Xie Lian dropped his hands by his side, frowning deeply. “Yeah. It was here.”

This Buyou Forest was the very place that Lang Ying had bare-handedly dug and buried the dead body of his son!

Having realized this, the three looked at each other. Although they couldn’t put their fingers on it, a rough guess was forming in their minds, pushing for them to start searching for the place where Lang Ying had buried the corpse that day. Yet, it had been months, and with so many trees in the Buyou Forest, how could they possibly remember exactly which tree the child was buried under?

Just then, an indescribably foul stench wafted in the air.

That disgusting stink was somewhat like that of a rotten corpse, but was even more suffocating. Just one breath, and it could knock a man out. Others smelt it too and started backing away, covering their noses and fanning.

“What’s over there?”

“What’s going on?! It’s worse than a ten-year old pickle jar!”

Xie Lian rushed forward and followed that terrifying smell, and sure enough, he came to a familiar-looking crooked tree. The earth under the tree was slightly raised, forming a benign mound. The soldiers raised their swords and gathered to protect Xie Lian, but he raised his hand to stop them.

He said gravely, “Be careful. Normal people shouldn’t come close.”

The not-normal person Feng Xin grabbed a shovel offhandedly and approached. After a few shovels, that mud mound became a ditch, the foul stench grew heavier, and Feng Xin dug more mindfully. After another few shovels, a small black thing was dug out, and it seemed to be squirming.

Feng Xin slowed his movement, and the soldiers reacted like they were facing a great enemy. Suddenly, the earth arched up, and a swollen, bloated giant body broke out from the soil, exposing itself before the torch-holding crowd.

That rotten foul stench surged instantly, and most of the people onsite threw up on the spot. Xie Lian's pupils shrank.

That thing couldn't be described as "human" anymore. Anything would be more human than it. No one would be able to tell that this gigantic corpse was once a small, emaciated child!

The urge to vomit rolled up to his throat, and Xie Lian looked away. Feng Xin and Mu Qing were dumbfounded too, blurting:

"WHAT'S THIS?!"

"Is that a curse or a simple rotten corpse??"

No matter what that thing was, Xie Lian knew what they needed to do.

"Stand back! The further the better! I'm going to burn that thing!"

He raised his hand and a large stream of flames blew out. Just as the fire was ablaze and the smoke was thick, the sharp sound of a battle horn from the distant royal capital came; loud and shrill, calling all to order.

The three looked up at the same time; that was the signal of an enemy attack. Feng Xin cursed.

"Fuck, of all times they had to come now!"

Mu Qing's face was dark, looking gloomy even under firelight. "Maybe this was intentional?"

Xie Lian made the call. "Mu Qing, you stay here and take care of this. Feng Xin, you come with me. We'll repel them first. Remember, don't let them notice any weak points!"

That night, the two hurriedly rushed out of the city fortress, and hurriedly fought a battle.

Although that battle came out of the blue, they still won. Even if they won, however, none of the Xianle soldiers, Xie Lian included, felt the joy of victory.

The "strange disease" that appeared so randomly came to be called the "Human Face Disease" by the people. Words of it passed through the royal capital like lightning, causing uproar and great unease.

The king had considered blacking out the news, but the first victim had rampaged the streets; there were countless witnesses, so this was something that couldn't be hidden from the start. Besides, the Human Face Disease was spreading rapidly: in just six days, over fifty people found similar afflictions appearing on their bodies.

All at the same time, the sieges from Yong'an were increasing. Attacked from both sides, Xie Lian could barely find the time to go to Yong'an and create rain. All the spiritual power and energy for it was all spent at the quarantine in the outskirts instead.

Within the chilly Buyou Forest, large fields of temporary tents and huts were built. Xie Lian crossed through a ground full of patients. This quarantine started with twenty-some people, but soon it turned into hundreds, and was growing ever bigger. Every day, Xie Lian would come if there was time, and use his power to relieve the horrifying symptoms of those affected. However, he still couldn't cure the root cause, and what the people had hoped was to have him heal them completely.

As Xie Lian walked, a young man lying on the ground suddenly raised his hand and tugged the hem of his robe.

"Your Highness, I won't die, will I?"

Xie Lian was about to respond and noticed that this man looked familiar. Upon a closer look, wasn't he the passerby who gave him an umbrella on that rainy day he learned Xianle was short on water?

Recalling that day, that rain, that umbrella, warmth filled Xie Lian's heart, and he knelt down, gently patting that young man's arm.

He told him in a serious tone, "I will do my best."

That man seemed to have received the hope to survive; his eyes twinkled with joy, repeating "good, good", and laid down again. From those fervent eyes, Xie Lian could tell they truly believed he could do it. Thus, every time he met those eyes, a sense of self-blame would grow deep in his heart, and the need to find a cure grew more desperate.

After making a round through the quarantine, Xie Lian found a place to sit. Mu Qing started a campfire, and Xie Lian sat, deep in thought. Some distance away, a few errand boys walked off carrying a stretcher, muttering to each other, yet somehow their words had reached Xie Lian's ears:

"How many is this now?"

"The fourth or fifth, I think."

On the stretcher was a patient who died in Buyou Forest. In truth, it was hard to die from the Human Face Disease. Yet, that was even more frightening. Without death, it meant that for the rest of the victims' lives, those things would stay on their bodies. Just thinking about it would make one lose the will to live. Especially young women; they care for their faces, so if something like that were to grow on somewhere important like their face, most would choose to end their lives.

Another sighed. "Sigh! When will this end!"

Another said, "We have His Highness the crown prince, we won't lose. Just relax."

The one who complained said, "I'm not afraid of losing battles. But with the situation like this, does it matter if we don't lose battles? It's not easy for us civilians to live on like this, sigh...nevermind, nevermind. I'm not complaining. Just pretend I said nothing. I said nothing."

If Feng Xin was there, he would've immediately rushed up to cuss them out. Mu Qing, however, only gave Xie Lian a look, and continued to build the fire, not saying anything. Only when those two were completely gone did he say flatly, "Ignorant commoners only know how to blame others and the heavens. Did they think a martial god has control over everything?"

Xie Lian shook his head. What those men said had logic. He was a martial god; when he was part of the army, there would be no battles unwon. Yet, at times like these, what use was it to win battles? Forming an army was to protect the civilians, yet if the civilians were all suffering from the attack of a plague, then wouldn't their advantage turn into a joke?

Just then, the campfires wavered, and another sat down next to Xie Lian. It was Feng Xin, who had returned.

Xie Lian asked immediately, "How is it?"

Feng Xin shook his head. "It was exactly the same as when you searched. There's no traces of Lang Ying on Beizi Hill, and nothing of that white-clothed character. Who knows where they're hiding, and there's no way of confirming whether they're the ones behind this. Also, the Yong'an people were all fine, like we suspected; not a single case of the Human Face Disease."

Mu Qing poked at the fire. "The royal capital and Beizi Hill are so close, there's no way no one was infected. It's easy to see that they must be the ones behind all this."

Many believed this secretly, and thinking this way made sense. However, even if they accused Lang Ying secretly or openly, the man was well hidden away and they couldn't find any proof, so they could do nothing.

They suspected the Human Face Disease was started by a curse, and the source of that curse was the corpse of Lang Ying's son. Yet, if it was a curse, then it was a good one. It didn't leave any traces for them to investigate, so there was no evidence to confirm their suspicions. And who knew, maybe this Human Face Disease was nothing more than a new, naturally-formed plague? There was no way Xie Lian could draw any conclusions on what the disease actually was unless they apprehended the suspect.

He had given the Heavenly Court a rough report of his assumptions, too. Yet, as aforementioned, Xie Lian's descent was a transgression. Unlike the past, where if he wanted to report something he could very well just barge into the Great Martial Hall and scream in Jun Wu's ear, now he had to do it by the books. It must be known that "by the books" meant: if lucky, just throwing out hefty amounts of merits would pass word through to the heavenly officials; if unlucky, he might be forced to go through complicated red tape roped in endless delays. Afterwards, it'd still only be some other heavenly officials who'd be sent forth. Xie Lian himself was a heavenly official, and other than Jun Wu, there were very few who could match him in power, so the heavenly officials sent forth might not even be effective. Jun Wu carried a heavy burden; by mortal words, he was a "machine" with a host of problems to deal with every day, so there was no way he could come to Xie Lian's aid in person. Thus, his reporting was only for show, and Xie Lian didn't expect anything to come of it.

Moreover, none of that was what's on Xie Lian's mind, it was another problem.

He spoke: "If we assume that Yong'an used a curse for the sake of defeating the royal capital, then the most effective attack would be to the army. Once the army falls, wouldn't that be the same as opening the gates?"

It wasn't that there were no victims of the Human Face Disease in the army, but in comparison, they were few in number; only three or four affected. And once they were sent to quarantine, the situation was immediately under control and nothing spread.

Feng Xin seemed to have thought of something, and said, "Maybe they think even if they defeat the army, with you around they'd still lose, so they gave up on the army and targeted civilians directly?"

Hearing this, Mu Qing chuckled dryly. Feng Xin immediately reacted.

"What are you laughing about?"

"Nothing. You always manage to bring up good points. I have nothing to say," Mu Qing replied.

People who bore the intent to snipe at others but still pretended to sound courteous annoyed Feng Xin the most, so he ignored him completely.

"If it was them, then they're despicable. Fight honestly on the battlefield if they've the guts, but don't use shady tricks to harm innocent civilians!"

Xie Lian wholeheartedly agreed, and sighed. "I've been thinking these past few days just what causes the infection. We have to know the causes before we can control the disease."

“Isn’t it obvious?” Feng Xin said. “Infection comes from getting too close, touching, drinking the same water, eating together, sleeping together or whatever.”

Xie Lian rubbed his forehead. “On the surface, that’s not wrong. But, take the army for example: the soldiers in the army all drink, eat, and sleep together, and are in closer quarters than any other households, so why aren’t there more soldiers infected?”

Mu Qing furrowed his brows. “So what you mean is, even under the same circumstances, with different body types, some will be infected and others not. You want to find out just what kind of people are immune to the Human Face Disease, right?”

Xie Lian raised his head. “Mu Qing, you understand me. That’s exactly it. If we can find that out, then there might be a way to stop the Human Face Disease from spreading.”

Mu Qing nodded. “Good. Then let’s look at it this way: what kind of people are more likely to get infected? What type of patients dominate the quarantine of Buyou Forest?”

Xie Lian had walked through the camps endlessly the past few days, and could answer even with his eyes closed. He said immediately, “Women, children, teens, seniors, and young men who are smaller in build.”

Feng Xin wondered, “So only the weak get infected? Should we have the king order for everyone in the royal capital to work out and strengthen their bodies?”

“ ... ”

“ ... ”

Xie Lian and Mu Qing both gave him a look, not wanting to respond.

After a pause, Feng Xin himself added, “Wait, that’s not right.”

Ch.85: From the Earth of Buyou Forest, Human Face Disease Emerges 2

Obviously it wasn't right, because the first victim that rampaged the Martial Deity Avenue was a healthy and strong burly man, so the theory didn't hold up.

Just how were the soldiers infected with the Human Face Disease different from other soldiers? Xie Lian thought of many possibilities and tried testing his guesses. But no matter from which angle, there wasn't anything overly obvious that differentiated them from the others. Every infected victim, no matter their looks, their body type, their status, their temperament, everything was all over the place, impossible to draw a conclusion on the defining criteria. Could it be that whoever got infected really was a matter of chance?

Xie Lian mumbled to himself, "Just what did those soldiers do in order to stop the spreading of the Human Face Disease? In other words, just what did they do that was more often done than civilians..."

When he came to this thought, his eyes suddenly widened, and his face paled. Hearing that his voice stopped abruptly.

Feng Xin asked, "What's wrong, Your Highness? Have you thought of something?"

Xie Lian had indeed thought of something. He thought of a logical theory, but at the same time, it was a terrifying one.

He stood up in a flash and blurted, "No way! No, no, it shouldn't be like this. It can't be."

Feng Xin and Mu Qing immediately rose too. "What is it?"

Xie Lian held his forehead and paced back and forth, raising his hand. "Hold on. I...have an absurd guess. It shouldn't be true, but I need to test this out."

"What guess?" Mu Qing asked. "How will you test it? Do you need me to find you someone?"

Xie Lian immediately rejected the idea. "No. We can't use a live person for testing. What if I'm wrong?"

It was more like he hoped he was wrong; even better if he was way off the mark. Mu Qing frowned.

"Your Highness, if you need to ascertain whether you're right or wrong, you'll need a live person for testing. That's the best way. Just standing here brooding won't do any good."

Feng Xin frowned, too. "Can't you see he's troubled? Stop saying things that annoy people."

Mu Qing turned to him. “Weird. And what exactly did I say? Didn’t I speak the truth? At this point, what’s the use in being all indecisive and hesitant?”

Feng Xin was disgusted. “Do you have to judge everything based on how useful something is? We’re talking about a live person here. Not even a bit of hesitation; aren’t you a little too collected?”

“Collected?” Mu Qing countered. “You actually want to say ‘cold-blooded’, right?”

Xie Lian hadn’t the patience to ease up the fight between the two like he usually did, and said, “The two of you can start arguing over a single word, what a disgrace! Stand here for an incense time. No one’s allowed to move within that time. Same old rules.”

“...”

“...”

Hearing the words “same old rules”, both Feng Xin and Mu Qing’s faces changed colours.

Xie Lian waved. “Heaven Official’s Blessings. Start.”

A moment later, Feng Xin said, gritting his teeth: “...Blessings Shine From Up High.”

Mu Qing gritted his teeth, too. “...High Imitation No Thought.”

Feng Xin was in trouble. “Thought...Thought...”

He was deep in strenuous thought trying to think of a way to continue, and Xie Lian turned to enter Buyou Forest to find those three infected soldiers for questioning.

By “same old rules”, it was an idea Xie Lian had come up with to distract the other two. Feng Xin and Mu Qing would snipe at each other at every chance, starting disputes from nothing. At first, Xie Lian would make them stand in silence for an incense time without speaking to one another until they calmed down, but it wasn’t very effective. Afterwards, Xie Lian decided to change it to Idiom Trains; once there was an established winner and loser, they’d have no time to worry about their original conflict and would instead do their best to crush the other in training idioms. After discovering this effective method, Xie Lian felt the world became more peaceful, and was quite satisfied. Forcing them to train idioms now was also something of a way to have everyone ease up a little.

Yet, this ease didn’t last for long. After an incense time, Xie Lian returned.

His face was grim, and he instructed, “Bring me all the soldiers who lived in the same quarters as those infected soldiers, I need to question them.”

Those two were already stumped many times, and seized their own proper little victories, so when they didn't need to train idioms anymore, they both sighed in relief.

"That's fine, too. But using such a roundabout way to find proof, it might not guarantee the accuracy of your findings," Mu Qing said.

Feng Xin had already turned to heed his orders. Xie Lian called him back.

"Wait! It's already deep into the night. Questioning them now would be too much of a stir, and we can't call forth too many at a time either, it'd be too conspicuous. The things I want to ask must not be known or leaked. If you go now, we won't be able to hide anything."

Feng Xin turned his head. "Then what should I do? Bring them over to you one by one to have you interrogate them privately?"

"There's no other way," Xie Lian said. "Tomorrow, bring the soldiers who are close to the victims to me one by one to my chambers, and don't let them know that others have been questioned. Remember to order them not to tell anyone, otherwise..."

He breathed in deeply and sighed. "Nevermind, just threaten them. Just say if word got out they shall be executed without mercy. The more savage the better."

"Questioning them one by one, how long would that even take?" Mu Qing commented.

"It doesn't matter how long it takes," Xie Lian said. "The more I ask, the more I can be sure. I...absolutely need to get to the bottom of this and there mustn't be any mistakes."

Thus, the next day, Xie Lian sat in the chamber that had been temporarily assigned to him atop the towers, and personally interrogated over three hundred soldiers.

As for the questions he posed, all three hundred of them all gave the same answers. After questioning each one, Xie Lian's face would grow a shade darker. After it was done, when Feng Xin and Mu Qing entered the room, they saw Xie Lian sitting by the table, a hand holding up his forehead, unspeaking. It was a while before he slowly spoke up.

"You two stay and guard the city gates. I'm going to make a trip to Mount Taicang."

Feng Xin hesitantly asked, "Your Highness, did you find something out from all the questioning? Is it a curse, or...?"

Xie Lian nodded. "It's come to light. It's a curse."

Mu Qing was solemn. "For real?"

“Without a doubt,” Xie Lian said. “And I also found out just what type of person gets infected, and what type doesn’t.”

Even if those were the words spoken, on his face there was not a trace of joy from solving the mystery, and so Feng Xin and Mu Qing felt things might not be that simple. However, if Xie Lian didn’t take the initiative to tell them, then as his subordinates it wasn’t their place to ask, and so their hearts sank silently.

Mount Taicang, the Royal Holy Pavilion, the highest peak, the Great Martial Hall. Guoshi was paying his respects within clouds of incense smoke. Xie Lian crossed the threshold of the hall and immediately went straight to the point.

“Guoshi, I need to see the Heavenly Emperor.”

Guoshi finished paying his respects and turned his head. “Your Highness, the gates of the heavenly realm no longer open to you.”

“I know,” Xie Lian said. “But right now, I’ve ascertained that the Kingdom of Xianle is currently under the attack of a malicious wave of curses that have never been seen before. This isn’t a natural disaster, it’s the working of inhuman creatures. Please give me a hand and request the Heavenly Emperor to descend and possess your spirit so I can report this information to him directly. Maybe he’d know what the source of all this was, and perhaps find a turning point.”

Ever since he’d returned to the mortal realm, he had reported to the Great Martial Hall thrice. Yet the first two times weren’t sincere, and were only done out of habitual courtesy. This time, he really wanted to seek help.

Guoshi sat down on a chair and said, “It’s not that I don’t want to help you, Your Highness, but there’s no longer a need for it. Even if I give you a hand now, and the Heavenly Emperor descends and possesses my body, the answer you will receive from him will only disappoint you.”

Xie Lian’s face dropped slightly. “Do you know something? Do you know just what that cry-smile mask-wearing white-clothed being is?”

“Your Highness, do you still remember what I told you?” Guoshi said. “That in this world, fortune, good or bad, is predetermined.”

Xie Lian was startled and didn’t speak.

The Guoshi added, “Originally, many of those from Yong’an were destined to die, but you transferred water and created rain, and gave them a breath of relief. Yet, you cannot save them completely from the drought, cannot settle their future; so now, they are in the Yong'an army upon Beizi Hill, fighting for their futures.

“Originally, the royal capital was destined to be in a state of decline. But then you personally descended, and used your own powers to turn things around, and gave the royal capital a breath of relief. Yet, you didn’t steel your heart to annihilate the Yong'an rebel army and root them out. Instead, you allowed them to survive until now. Like cockroaches, they only get stronger with each battle.”

Guoshi asked him in wonder, “Your Highness, may I ask what you are doing? Are you perhaps waiting for both sides to realize their mistakes? To repent and renew? To reunite as one country once more?”

An odd sense of shame budded within Xie Lian’s heart, yet, it soon turned into confusion as he thought to himself, “That’s strange. Whether I saved or protected people, it was all because they were innocent and didn’t deserve death. Everything I’ve done was done after serious consideration, and every choice was made after much struggle. Yet, why does it sound so laughable coming from another’s mouth? Why does it sound like I’ve achieved nothing, that everything is such a...failure?”

That word appeared in his mind and he immediately blocked it out.

Guoshi added, “You used your divinity to interfere in mortal matters. The predetermined fate of the Kingdom of Xianle has been turned completely upside-down by you; a complete and utter mess. For the sake of balance, nature will breed other things to bring everything you’ve derailed back on track. I don’t know what that creature was, but, I am certain, it was born because of you.”

“...”

Xie Lian’s form faltered.

Guoshi continued, “I am also certain that, should the Heavenly Martial Emperor see you, he will also tell you the same thing, because this was the reason why he didn’t want you to descend in the first place. But I feel that even if he told you then, you would’ve more than likely come down anyway. Young people are like this, unheeding of advice. They won’t believe they can’t walk until they’ve fallen.”

Xie Lian was in disbelief. “So you mean to say that the cause of this Human Face Disease was me?! So by that so-called predetermined fate logic, everything that uncrying, unlaughing creature does is my fault? So, the Heavenly Court wouldn’t even bother with this whole thing?”

“You can think of it that way,” Guoshi said. “But that’s not altogether right either. After all, if you must read fortune all the way, you can also blame your father and your mother, because if they didn't give birth to you, then you wouldn't have ascended, and thus you wouldn't have descended. Reading like this, you can blame your entire Xianle ancestry. So, discussing who is at fault for the cause is meaningless.

"As for your last question, that's right, they won't. Because the Kingdom of Xianle was destined to fall. Since you've extended your hand and messed up this game of chess, then, there will for sure be another hand that returns all the messed-up pieces back in place."

Xie Lian took a deep breath, not wanting to discuss whether the Kingdom of Xianle was destined to fall. He closed his eyes for a minute, then said, "Then answer me, Guoshi. If I disappear now, will that creature also disappear?"

"I'm afraid not," Guoshi replied. "Easy come, hard to leave. That's the same for gods, and ghosts and demons are no different."

Xie Lian knew any more talk would be pointless. The only one who could keep fighting was only himself. He bowed to Guoshi, bidding farewell, and prepared to leave.

Behind him, the Guoshi called, "Your Highness! How do you plan on walking your path from now on?"

Xie Lian had his head down. "If nothing changes even if I disappear, then I will fight it to the end. This is my only path."

After a pause, he raised his head high and enunciated every word: "I don't care if there's a hand or what, but the people I protect will never become its pawn."

Half a month later, Lang Ying led the Yong'an army and attacked once again.

After months of countless battles big and small, the Yong'an troops could now finally be called an army. They were no longer those forlorn refugees, but a proper army with considerable strength!

It was like Lang Ying had evaporated from the mortal realm for a long time; this time, when Xie Lian saw this man again on the battlefield, having waited for so long he didn't waste his breath.

He dashed straight past the troops, facing him, and struck with his sword, shouting, "WHERE'S THAT WHITE-CLOTHED MAN?"

Lang Ying blocked his sword and didn't answer, fighting back with vigour. Xie Lian pressed onto him with each step.

"You know who I'm talking about. My patience is limited!"

Unexpectedly, Lang Ying stared at him, and asked, “Your Highness, didn't you say that Yong'an would continue to rain?”

Xie Lian hadn't expected for him to ask that question. Startled, words got stuck in his throat. “I...”

He did indeed promise Lang Ying that Yong'an would rain. However, in the past many days, the number of infected by the Human Face Disease within the royal capital had been increasing exponentially, and they were reaching almost five hundred at this point. Those five hundred victims couldn't all be settled in Buyou Forest, and that quarantine camp was running out of space. The government officials were debating over moving to a farther, bigger place. Most of Xie Lian's powers had been used to relieve the symptoms of those five hundred people, and he had none left to create rain in Yong'an. Since he couldn't make use of the Rain Master Hat, he felt bad keeping someone else's spiritual device in hand; so with no other way, he sent Feng Xin to the Kingdom of Yushi to return the Rain Master Hat to the Rain Master and gave thanks.

Xie Lian struck again, yelling angrily, “I created that rain! Don't you have any clue why it's stopped?!”

The angrier he became, the more calm Lang Ying was. “That has nothing to do with me. I only know that, even without the Human Face Disease, your powers won't last for long; just like how even with your rain, not many will survive in Yong'an. It's all pointless. Your Highness, why do you think you can achieve anything you want to do? Rather than putting my fate in your hands, I choose to put it in my own.”

Something from that speech had provoked Xie Lian, and the intent to kill flared.

His blade turned slightly, and his left hand raised. A voice screamed inside his head: kill this man, and the remnant Yong'an army will be nothing to be afraid of!

Since the first time they met, this was the very first time Xie Lian had steeled his heart to kill Lang Ying. However, unexpectedly, when he sent a blow from his palm and blasted Lang Ying's heart, he spewed blood from the blow but the blast did not penetrate his heart; instead, it was repelled.

Astonished, Xie Lan couldn't believe it, and backed away a few steps. “YOU?!”

Xie Lian knew very well what it was that repelled his attack.

Those who were destined for greatness in the mortal realm—like kings, geniuses, and vigilantes—whenever they come to a dire situation, their bodies would naturally radiate a protective aura, shielding them against harm. Most of them had the potential for ascension. Lang Ying was no more than a boor, yet he radiated that very protective spiritual aura, and it was even one that was exceedingly rare—the aura of a king!

Xie Lian didn't dare to think what it meant, and suddenly he felt his heart go cold. It was Lang Ying's sword that thrust and impaled his chest.

In that battle, there was no victory or defeat on either side.

There were still many who perished from Yong'an's side, but this time Xianle wasn't any better. If it was anyone else, they could say it was a hard-won battle, but to Xie Lian, this was definitely defeat.

This was the first time he was at a disadvantage, moreover, although Lang Ying was still no match for Xie Lian and retreated with injuries in the end, many saw the scene where Lang Ying had stabbed him. Xie Lian could probably guess that there were many soldiers talking behind his back: His Highness is a martial god, how could he be stabbed? Aren't we the army of god? How come we didn't achieve an overwhelming victory like before? However, Xie Lian had absolutely no time for such noise, because Mu Qing had informed him that today another hundred-some Human Face Disease patients had been sent to Buyou Forest.

One short day, and over a hundred!

Now, the first group of Human Face Disease victims had worsened severely. Not a single spot on their bodies could be seen; they had to be covered in thick covers, lest they scare people. However, even through the covers those bumps could still be seen on the body's contours.

Xie Lian walked around to alleviate the symptoms, and when he finally finished a round, Feng Xin pulled him aside and asked him in a low voice, "Your Highness, what happened on the battlefield today? How could you get stabbed by that boor? You also struck him so many times, why didn't you just kill him?"

Xie Lian didn't want to tell him that there was now a layer of a king's aura on Lang Ying that not even heavenly officials could touch, and could only grimace. It wasn't that he didn't want to kill him, it was that he could no longer kill him. All the spiritual powers in his attacks were dissolved by that king's aura, and nothing worked against Lang Ying. When he realized this, he instantly changed to fistfighting, but that Lang Ying was thick-skinned and could withstand quite the beating!

Just then, a distance away there was suddenly a loud wail.

"YOUR HIGHNESS, SAVE ME!"

Xie Lian was just accepting a bowl of water that Feng Xin passed to him, and that wail came just as he was taking his first sip. Xie Lian choked, and didn't have the time to stop before he rushed over. The one who wailed was that young man who gave him that umbrella, and because Xie Lian was extra warm towards him, his screaming for help was also extra frequent. At first the part of this man that grew a face was his knee; Xie Lian had cast his power to stop the disease from spreading, and so only his left leg had the face and nowhere else. Right then, he was kicking that leg madly, going hysterical.

Xie Lian held him down and comforted, "Don't move. I'm here!"

That young man was frightened to the core and grabbed onto him. "YOUR HIGHNESS! YOUR HIGHNESS, SAVE ME! I felt an itch on my leg just now, like some weed was scratching me, but when I, when I looked down, I saw those things...their mouths were opening and closing, moving, they're moving! THEY'RE EATING GRASS!!! THEY'RE ALIVE!!!"

Hair on Xie Lian's back raised instantly. He looked down and sure enough, on that young man's left leg, there were over ten faces tightly pressed together; many of their mouths were stuffed with grass, some were even chewing like they were starving!

Many of the patients started screaming, the crowd blew up in uproar, and Feng Xin and the soldiers had to use force to subjugate them to prevent a riot.

Xie Lian used a hand to hold that young man down, and turned to another beside him to ask, "Can this leg still work?"

All the nursing staff at Buyou Forest had to be in full gear, and were dressed in bandages and capes, wrapping themselves tight, their faces unrecognizable. One of the workers on the side answered; his voice sounded like a boy's:

"No, Your Highness! His leg is already forfeit. We don't know what else is festering, the leg is heavy like a block of lead, and we could hardly move it. The infection is also climbing, soon it'll grow beyond the leg and reach the waist."

Xie Lian had done his utmost to use his powers for healing, yet, that young man's leg could be said to be beyond saving, having lost almost all normal functions.

Just then, one of the doctors whispered, "Your Highness, in my opinion, the only thing we haven't tried is cutting off the part with the faces, and see if that'd slow down the fester..."

The only way Xie Lian could think of was also this. "Then cut it off!"

That young man immediately cried, "NO!" He was terrified of having his limbs cut off, but at the same time he didn't dare to hug his deformed leg, and cried in pain. "MY LEG IS NOT FORFEIT! Maybe it'll get better...YOUR HIGHNESS! Don't...don't you have any other way to save me?"

Xie Lian didn't want to answer with "I'll do my best", or "I'll try" anymore.

His sight was going dark, and he replied, "Sorry, I don't."

That His Highness the Crown Prince would say such a thing, it was the first time, shocking everyone present. There were some who lost it right then and there, and screamed.

"NO? YOU'RE HIS HIGHNESS, YOU'RE A GOD, HOW DO YOU HAVE NO WAY? WE'VE BEEN WAITING FOR YOU TO COME UP WITH SOMETHING FOR DAYS, HOW CAN YOU HAVE NOTHING?!!!"

The one who spoke was immediately held down by someone, yet it wasn't Feng Xin or Mu Qing. Mu Qing was silent and frowning, seeming to have thought Xie Lian's answer was too blunt, and couldn't comfort the masses. Feng Xin, on the other hand, was further away, yelling at the particularly rowdy patients. Xie Lian was battered and exhausted recently, his sword never sheathed and hung on his waist. When the blade came close to that leg, one of the "faces" felt the chill of the blade's aura, and suddenly stopped chewing. It opened its mouth and let out a shrill scream.

That thing actually screamed!!!

Although the sound was soft, it most definitely came from that leg. That young man screamed, almost fainting from fright, and he clung onto Xie Lian, crying.

"YOUR HIGHNESS SAVE ME! SAVE ME!"

At the same time, on his waist close to his thigh, three shallow sores appeared.

That doctor shouted in alarm, "Your Highness, it's spreading! It's spreading! The infection is spreading out of the leg!"

No matter how much spiritual power was spent, Xie Lian still could not control that young man's condition in the end. Seeing that those horrifying things were about to spread over his entire body—once that happened there would be no going back. Could they really do naught but sit back and watch?

Xie Lian gritted his teeth. "Let me ask you one thing. Do you or do you not want this leg? I can't guarantee what would happen once it's gone. If you don't want it, just nod and we'll operate immediately; if you want it, then don't nod, and we'll figure it out!"

That young man was breathing heavily, his eyes blank from terror, his mind lost; it was like he was nodding but also shaking his head. Those faces on his left leg started screaming one by one, as if welcoming their new "companions". In between all the "YEEEE"s and "AAAAHHH"s, the delight on their faces was apparent, and their little red tongues were quivering. It was hard to imagine just what the insides of that young man's left leg looked like, just what it harboured.

This couldn't be delayed any further. Xie Lian instructed that doctor:

"Cut it off."

That doctor, however, waved his hand rapidly. "Your Highness, forgive me! I'm not very sure either, and I don't dare operate in a place like this. If cutting doesn't do anything, then we shouldn't take this risk!"

He cursed himself for speaking up; the nail that stuck out got hammered down, what was he doing fighting for such a terrifying job? He escaped back to the crowd and stopped talking.

That young man was mumbling repeatedly, "Your Highness save me, Your Highness save me!"

Yet Xie Lian's mind was completely blank, a voice full of hopelessness also rumbling inside him: "—who can come and save me...?!"

It was noisy and rowdy all around, screaming and crying everywhere. Those twisted little human faces squished below were also wailing, and in that moment, Xie Lian thought he saw hell.

It was like he was peering at this hell but at the same time unseeing, and with cold sweat rolling, he widened his eyes, raised his arm——

The sword slashed down, and blood splattered.

Ch.86: From the Earth of Buyou Forest, Human Face Disease Emerges 3

“AAAAAHHHHHH——”

That young man was only half-conscious at first, but after Xie Lian cut off his left leg, he snapped awake and screamed madly.

“MY LEG! MY LEG!”

Xie Lian knelt in that pool of blood, his white robes stained and spotted, doing his best to hold him down.

“It’s over! Doctors, stop his bleeding!”

The doctors present were flustered, forgetting themselves, and Mu Qing couldn’t watch any longer. He stepped forward.

“Don’t trouble yourselves.”

He took out a small medicine bottle, a faint smoke flowing out, slowly stopping the bleeding. Xie Lian also wrapped the wound with a spiritual aura. As for that cut-off leg, it laid on the ground all by its lonesome. Suddenly, it quivered; like a live creature, it continued to squirm even having been parted from the body. Xie Lian raised his hand and a fire roared, torching that leg into nothing but black ashes.

That young man wailed, “MY LEG!”

Xie Lian checked his waist and saw that Human Face Disease didn’t continue to fester; his eyes brightened and he said delightedly, “It’s good, it’s stopped. It’s not festering!”

That young man finally stopped his tears and opened his eyes. “Really? Is it really better?”

The crowd all sucked in their breaths, unmoving and hesitant, but after a moment, someone shouted.

“Your Highness, help treat me too!”

Another boy’s voice rang out from not far away, “Don’t be ridiculous! We can’t be sure, what if it relapses after a while?”

Thanks to that voice’s reminder, Xie Lian calmed down too. “That’s right, we can’t be sure right now. We need some time to observe.”

Another piped up, voice trembling in fear, "How long do we need to observe...? I can't wait any longer. If we wait...if we keep waiting, this thing will spread to my face!"

Another just gave up altogether, "I'M WILLING TO TAKE THE CHANCE!"

Soon, hundreds within the Buyou Forest became unruly and noisy, all begging: "Your Highness, please we beg you, relieve us of this suffering!"

The masses started prostrating towards him, with Xie Lian worshipped in the centre; although an awkward situation, Xie Lian didn't dare to be careless.

"Everyone, please get up first. After some time, if this man doesn't relapse, then I will do my utmost to treat everyone..."

It was some time before the people were comforted. Having made many more promises and settled that young man with the amputated leg elsewhere, Xie Lian sat down under a tree. Mu Qing looked around before speaking in a low voice.

"How could you just chop off his leg directly? If the man in question didn't beg you to do it himself, don't just take the reins. What if it didn't work even after you amputated that leg? The one he'd hate would become you."

Xie Lian's heart was still racing, a hand covering his face, he croaked, "...the situation at the time couldn't wait. He won't answer me, and the doctor didn't dare to operate, I couldn't just stand by and watch the infection fester. Someone had to make a decision on what to do. I really..."

For once, Feng Xin looked worried. "Your Highness, I think you better take a rest. You really don't look that good. We'll take over for you for the time being."

Xie Lian also felt he couldn't hang on anymore, and nodded slowly. "Alright. I'll rest here for a bit. We'll be heading back soon, so don't go too far."

Just then, there was another wail from within the forest, and Feng Xin and Mu Qing left to go check it out. Xie Lian sat and zoned out for a bit before lying down on the ground right there.

In the past, if no one would build him a perfumed tent and a tusk bed, he would never have just laid on muddy ground out in the wild. Under the current circumstances, however, he really didn't have the energy to trouble any errand runners. Even the grime and blood on his robes were uncleansed before he dropped his head and passed out, still dirty and unkempt.

An unknown amount of time passed. After cloudily hearing Feng Xin calling him, Xie Lian jerked awake; sitting up immediately, he felt something on him slip off. When he looked down, it was a patched, worn quilt that someone must've used to cover him when he was resting. Xie Lian rubbed his forehead and spoke to Feng Xin as he approached.

"I don't need this, you can give it to the patients instead."

Feng Xin was slightly taken aback. "Huh? What do you mean? This quilt? That wasn't from me. I only just got back."

Xie Lian turned his head. "Was it you, Mu Qing?"

"It wasn't me either," Mu Qing said. "Maybe it was one of the devotees living in camp who brought it for you."

Xie Lian looked around, but didn't see anyone worth noting and shook his head, thinking, "I actually didn't sense anyone get close, what a shameful state."

He folded the quilt and laid it on the ground before rising to his feet. "Let's go."

Xie Lian left with a heavy heart, and very soon, the thing he feared happened.

It was only two days later when Xie Lian visited Buyou Forest again, and some of the doctors informed him: at night, some ten Human Face Disease patients ignored the warnings and snuck out. Some used fire to burn their sores, some used knives to slice away their flesh, and there were many that, due to mishandling, lost too much blood and didn't dare tell anyone; hiding under their blankets quietly, and dying equally silently.

Xie Lian had only just left the battlefield and he received such news. Standing before hundreds and watching those bloody, crying patients, he finally lost his temper.

"WHY WON'T YOU ALL LISTEN TO REASON? DIDN'T I SAY THAT WE HAVEN'T CONFIRMED THIS METHOD COULD CURE THE ROOT CAUSE OF INFECTION? HOW COULD YOU ALL BE SO FOOLISH!"

It was the first time he had gotten so mad in front of so many devotees, and the masses bowed their heads silently, afraid to speak. Xie Lian was really quite furious and couldn't help but lecture a bit more, and as he berated, someone spoke up unexpectedly.

"Your Highness is invincible, so of course you'd call us foolish, but aren't we all just overly concerned with our conditions that we had no choice but try foolish methods!?"

Although this individual didn't oppose him openly, still he was dripping with sarcasm.

Hearing him, blood rushed to Xie Lian's head and he snapped, "What did you say?"

That person immediately shrank back into the crowd and disappeared. Feng Xin was further away and didn't hear, otherwise he would've cursed them out already. Mu Qing noticed that the mood of the crowd was going in the wrong direction, and cautiously chose not to provoke any more outrages. Seeing that Xie Lian didn't actually respond, another piped up.

"Your Highness, if you can't save us, then we gotta save ourselves. Don't worry, we won't waste your holy medicine or spiritual power."

It was hot blood that rushed up at first, but now Xie Lian felt immense cold as he thought, "...What the heck? And did I ever concern myself with holy medicine and spiritual power? Clearly I only stopped them because amputation might not work, so why did they have to say it like I'm haughty and only speaking empty words? I can't feel their pain, but if my desire to help them wasn't sincere, why in the world would I give up being a heavenly official and find trouble for myself down here???"

Never in his life had he ever been stabbed by another's words, and never had he been wronged like this. Thousands of thoughts filled his mind but none of them could be formed into words, because he knew this was all because he couldn't find the cure for the Human Face Disease, and his devoted followers were finally losing their patience. The suffering of those citizens was a hundred times more difficult to live with than his own hardships. He could only clench his fists, cracking his knuckles. A moment later, a sudden punch landed on a tree next to him.

That tree cracked and snapped, making the people jump, ending their whispers. Only then did Feng Xin, who was further away, notice something wrong and rush over.

"Your Highness!"

After landing that punch, Xie Lian was able to relieve that breath of anger, and calmed down somewhat. Yet, in that dead silence, another spoke up.

"Your Highness, there's no need for you to be so angry. Everyone here is a patient, and we're all your followers. No one owes you anything."

Once the words were spoken, many nodded secretly. Although the voices were quiet, still Xie Lian's senses were sharp and could hear every sound clearly; the crowd were grumbling:

"Finally someone who dared speak the truth. I've been holding it in, afraid to say anything..."

"Didn't they used to say His Highness the Crown Prince was a gentle soul?...So he's actually like this in person..."

In that endless tide of talk, Xie Lian unconsciously took a step back. In his twenty years, he had never been terrified before any enemies, he had never been afraid. Yet at that very moment, an emotion akin to terror was rolling through his heart. Just then, he heard another person whisper:

“With such impressive might, why not go set fire to the enemy camps, instead of having us suffer battles like this!”

Hearing those words, he couldn't stand there any longer.

Of course he knew that the him now was nothing like that sword- and flower-holding, smiling and kind martial god on the altar!

Xie Lian turned and dashed, running out of Buyou Forest like he was escaping. Behind him, Feng Xin and Mu Qing yelled.

“YOUR HIGHNESS! WHERE ARE YOU GOING!”

There was suddenly an upheaval in the crowd; it seemed a young nursing staff-person suddenly started beating some of the patients out of the blue, causing others to join in the brawl. Yet, Feng Xin and Mu Qing had no time to worry about them anymore. They called forth troops to take care of the situation and immediately ran after Xie Lian.

The direction of his flight was Beizi Hill; even one of his steps carried him a few meters, and soon he came to the top of that densely wooded mountain-top. Xie Lian's eyes were going red, and he shouted into the forest.

“COME OUT!!!”

Feng Xin cried after him, “Your Highness! What are you doing coming here?!”

Xie Lian yelled to the sky, “I KNOW YOU'RE HERE, COME OUT!!!”

Mu Qing called out, “If he'd come just by your call, then we wouldn't need to...”

He trailed off and fell silent. Behind the three of them came a series of crunching sounds. Whipping their heads around, the one sitting upon a vine watching them was none other than that white-clothed creature with his left face crying and the right smiling.

It actually heeded the call!

Xie Lian immediately lost it at the sight of him. He charged at him, crying sharply, “I'M GOING TO KILL YOU!!!”

That white-clothed being lightly evaded him. His large white sleeves looked like the wings of a butterfly dancing; elegant and beautiful. Feng Xin and Mu Qing let out an “eh?” and were about to aid him, but they abruptly noticed something extremely alarming; they stopped their movements, their faces aghast. Xie Lian, on the other hand, was filled with rage and noticed nothing.

He unsheathed his sword as Feng Xin shouted, “YOUR HIGHNESS! DIDN'T YOU SEE, HE...”

Xie Lian's hand was already choking the neck of that white-clothed being, the other holding his sword, pointing it at his heart. That white-clothed being was clearly under constraint, but suddenly he burst out laughing.

That laugh was sonorous and gentle like that of a young man; Xie Lian thought it was familiar, like someone he knew. But in his rage he couldn't think of who that voice belonged to, and that moment of confusion didn't last. Soon enough, that white-clothed being sighed.

“Xie Lian, Xie Lian. It doesn't matter how much you struggle. You're going to lose. The Kingdom of Xianle is doomed!”

Xie Lian was raging, and slapped him without pause. “WHAT DO YOU THINK YOU ARE? NO ONE GAVE YOU THE RIGHT TO TALK, SO SHUT UP!”

For him, it was an exceedingly rude gesture. The head of that white-clothed being was turned from the slap but he righted it again.

“Do you really want me to shut up? Alright, alright. But, actually, there is a way that can turn your defeat into victory. It would only depend on your willingness to do it.”

If he hadn't added the last line, Xie Lian would've ignored him. But in that last line, Xie Lian thought just maybe there could be some truth in his words. There was a way, but there was a heavy price he needed to pay.

He blew out a breath and said gravely, “What way? If you want me to do something then just say it, and stop wasting my time!”

“Come closer, and I'll tell you.” That white-clothed being beckoned him.

“Fine,” Xie Lian acquiesced.

Feng Xin was alarmed. “Your Highness! You're not actually...”

But then, he saw Xie Lian penetrating the heart of that white-clothed being with his sword. He leaned down, “Speak.”

With an exceedingly soft voice, that white-clothed being whispered in his ears, and no one else heard exactly what he said. Yet the more Xie Lian listened, the wider his eyes became. After a while, he slapped the creature again, unable to hold back.

He yelled, "I DIDN'T SAY TO TELL ME THIS! WHAT I WANT IS A SOLUTION! A CURE!"

"I did tell you; that was the way," that white-clothed being said. "It all depends on whether you're willing to do it."

Xie Lian's face twisted. "...just what do you want? Who are you?"

That white-clothed being chuckled. "Who am I? Can't you take off my mask and see for yourself?"

Xie Lian already had that very intent, and pulled off that half-crying half-smiling mask in a fit. The next second, his entire person froze.

Behind that mask, the one smiling at him was a pale and handsome face of a young man; his eyes twinkling with life, his lips curled into a smile, his expression endlessly gentle and modest.

It was his own face.

Ch.87: Gilded Figure; Exertion to Block Celestial Ruin

Xie Lian was beyond outraged. He pulled out the sword impaled through that chest and was about to thrust again when he realized there wasn't a trace of blood on the blade. Instantly, he understood, and changed the course of the blade, slashing off the head of that white-clothed youth. The decapitation was swift, and when that head and its body were separated, both shriveled up and became a heap of skin bags.

That body was an empty shell!

Twice he had met that creature, and twice he had used a fake body; not once did he show himself in his true form. Although not surprised, Xie Lian was still filled with angry resentment; his sword venting his anger on that soft and limp body, the sharp aura of the blade slashing the skin bag into shreds, and still he wasn't relieved. Feng Xin couldn't watch any more, and tried to stop him.

"Your Highness! It's only a shell."

Still, that shell looked exactly like Xie Lian's younger self, so it looked like Xie Lian was cruelly mutilating himself, painting a distressing picture. Xie Lian heaved a few long breaths, threw the sword away to the side, and sat on the ground.

"I KNOW! BUT I CAN'T BELIEVE HE DARED USE MY FACE!"

He was furious to the core, and the other two knelt down next to him, silent. A moment later, Feng Xin spoke up.

"Your Highness, do you feel better? Don't take his bullshit to heart, he's only playing with you."

However, Xie Lian said, "No, he said some things that weren't a joke, just..."

Feng Xin was shocked. "He actually told you the way to lift the curse?"

Xie Lian's right hand grabbed at his own hair. "He didn't tell me how to cure the Human Face Disease, what he told me was...the way to inflict the Human Face Disease!"

The other two were aghast. "Inflict?"

Xie Lian nodded, looked around, and felt it was still best not to stick around at Beizi Hill, and decided to leave first. He didn't want to see the soldiers' averting gazes nor hear the cries and whines of patients, so he returned to his crown prince bedchambers in the palace that had been left empty for many years.

It was only after closing the door that Xie Lian somewhat calmed down. He sat down, speaking in a grave voice.

“Those ‘faces’ growing on those people are all the dead souls of Yong'an. Some are those who died on the battlefield, but the majority are those who died in the drought.”

Mu Qing wasn't surprised. “No wonder none from Yong'an were infected with the Human Face Disease; of course they wouldn't attack their own people.”

Feng Xin frowned. “Those who died in the drought weren't killed by those in the royal capital, so even if there's a grudge, there was no reason to strike here?”

Xie Lian breathed a sigh. “Even if that's the case, you both know that when a person dies, there's a period of confusion.”

When a person had passed away, there was a time when their souls were like a newborn; barely conscient, half-cognizant, unknowing of who they were, where they were, what they were doing, and that period could be long or short depending on their own affinity. That period was called the “Period of Confusion”.

Under those circumstances, the family or lovers of those spirits could guide them or influence them. The common custom of “Calling Spirits on the Seventh Day”⁶⁴ was based on this rationale.

Xie Lian continued, “He...told me that the soldiers of Yong'an harboured an intense animosity and hostility towards the royal capital, and their parents, spouses, children, many of them all died in the drought.

“Those souls of the dead would unconsciously be affected by their family's emotions, and so he used the strong wills of those soldiers to instill enmity within the spirits. He urged them to take on living flesh as a host and fight for nutrients within their host's body.

“And this worked because those spirits, in their period of confusion, were repeatedly indoctrinated by one thought: that if not for them, you could've survived.”

“What kind of bullshit belief is that, who deserves to live and who deserves to die??” Feng Xin commented.

Xie Lian covered his forehead. “Before, Lang Ying had unintentionally buried the body of his son here at the royal capital, and that became a fuse for his curse. I told him to give me a cure, but ⁶⁴ [頭七叫魂/ 頭七] “Calling the Spirit on the Seventh Day”: It's a common belief that souls of the dead return home on the night of the sixth day to the morning of the seventh. There are many different rituals depending on the region on what is done when the spirit returns.

with so much talk, all he told me was the entire process of how to cast this curse. What the heck?"

A curse couldn't be lifted just by knowing how it had been cast.

Feng Xin cursed. "He's playing with you. What the hell. What the fuck!"

Mu Qing, however, piped up, "He wasn't playing with you. He did tell you the way."

Between Xie Lian and Feng Xin, one looked up and the other turned his head.

"What way?"

"The way to lift the curse!" Mu Qing replied.

His eyes brightened as if he discovered a secret. "Yong'an's curse works because they harbour hatred towards Xianle. As for Xianle, there isn't any less hatred harboured for Yong'an!"

Xie Lian's eyes widened slightly, his breathing hitched.

Mu Qing added, "Since he told you how to cast the curse, then, an eye for an eye, you can cast the same curse and inflict the Human Face Disease upon those in Yong'an! Just think, the curse can only work if there are live people working it. Once they're infected by the disease, they'd be too busy dealing with it, and maybe in the long run there wouldn't be any of them left, so the curse would break itself!"

Xie Lian had never thought of it that way. Listening to him explain, Xie Lian was temporarily dumbfounded. A moment later, he blurted, "Definitely not!"

"Why not?" Mu Qing pushed. "Don't forget, the ones who cast the curse first were them."

Xie Lian instantly rose to his feet. "No means no. Also, you're wrong. And it must also be difficult for the Yong'an soldiers to get infected, just like the soldiers of Xianle. Don't ask me why, I—"

Mu Qing immediately cut in, "Then just infecting civilians is fine too! They don't have a complete set of first aid resources and hands like the royal capital; the moment the Human Face Disease erupts, it'd spread much faster, and they'd have no way to fight back! Threatening the safety of the civilians behind their backs to stop their curses and force them to surrender is the same thing, they can't compete with the royal capital in exhausting resources!"

Xie Lian instantly rejected the idea. "Absolutely not! Don't forget what we called them when they attacked the innocent civilians of the royal capital: despicable. If we do the same thing, then won't we become the same despicable people? How is that different from them?"

Mu Qing schooled his excitement. “Your Highness, don’t forget just what kind of people died to lure you into the Land of the Tender. They’re what you called ‘innocent’ civilians.”

Once that was said, Xie Lian fell into hesitation.

To be truthful, there was no way for him not to take that to heart. However, he still replied, “That’s right, there were certainly those kinds of people. But that was because those who charge at the forefront are the most passionate, so you only saw those types of people in your eyes. But in reality, the majority of the civilians know nothing. Go to Beizi Hill and you’ll see. A lot of them don’t even know why they’re fighting. They’ll go where there’s food; they just want to survive. Mu Qing, what you’re advising me to do right now is to save a group of innocent people by killing another group of innocent people. I...”

He sighed. “Let me try and think of another way.”

Mu Qing’s tone was growing impertinent and somewhat mocking. “Why would I want to go to Beizi Hill to care how enemy civilians get on? Please. Your Highness, you’re so considerate of others, but they have never been considerate of you, doesn’t that suck?”

Xie Lian was despondent, and lowered his head, yet the image of that leg packed with those faces that continued to squirm even after having been cut off floated in his mind. After hesitating for a long while, in the end he still shook his head.

“At the end of the day, this isn’t in consideration of others. Even in consideration of ourselves, a curse is a double-edged sword in itself; it hurts others and ourselves. In order to curse others, the living caster must have a heart filled with poison, and those who died also cannot rest in peace. They already suffered enough whilst alive, and even in death they must live on in another’s flesh, turning into monsters. You saw those things on that man’s leg that day. How were those ‘faces’ that were desperately trying to live any better than those infected by the disease? A curse will always rebound one day, and no one will receive a good end.”

Having been spurned repeatedly, Mu Qing was losing his patience.

“BEFORE THEY REACHED THEIR BAD END, WE’LL ALREADY HAVE PERISHED! YOU DON’T HAVE A THIRD PATH AND THERE IS NO SECOND CUP OF WATER. WAKE UP, YOUR HIGHNESS! YOU’RE RUNNING OUT OF TIME.”

Xie Lian could feel his head burning and closed his eyes. “...don’t say any more. Let me think some more.”

“...”

Finally, Mu Qing couldn’t hold back anymore and started cursing under his breath. “You really are...the one suffering indecision is you, now with a cure in hand, the one refusing it is also you.

You're really...really annoying. Look at the state of you, just looking at you is a pain. Your worshippers must've collected bloody misfortune for eight lifetimes!"

At first, Feng Xin was listening to their argument glumly, but because he couldn't contribute any better ideas he didn't join in. Right then he suddenly raised his hand and shoved, yelling.

"ARE YOU DONE?!"

Mu Qing was shoved back a few steps, and Xie Lian looked up. "Feng Xin?"

"YOUR HIGHNESS, DON'T MIND ME!" Feng Xin shouted, then turned to Mu Qing. "WHY ARE YOU SO IRRITATED? TELL US, JUST WHAT EXACTLY IRRITATES YOU? I'VE TOLERATED YOU FOR A LONG TIME, BUT I WON'T HOLD BACK TODAY. I CAN'T FUCKING STAND YOU. YOU'RE NOTHING BUT A DEPUTY GENERAL; WITHOUT HIS HIGHNESS' APPOINTMENT WHO KNOWS WHERE YOU'D BE, SO WHY DO YOU ALWAYS ACT LIKE YOU'RE SMARTER, SHARPER, AND STRONGER THAN HIM? IF YOU'RE REALLY THAT AMAZING, WHY DID HIS HIGHNESS ASCEND AND NOT YOU?"

"I—!" Mu Qing cried

Xie Lian pulled at him. "Let it go Feng Xin, Mu Qing is just anxious over the current situation—"

Feng Xin cut in, "ANXIOUS MY ASS! YOUR HIGHNESS, I'M TELLING YOU, HE ONLY WANTS TO FIND A REASON TO LECTURE YOU; HE WON'T LET GO OF ANY CHANCE HE GETS TO SHOW HOW HE'S BETTER BECAUSE HE BELIEVES HE'S BETTER! A COLD PERSON LIKE HIM, YOU DON'T USUALLY SEE HOW MUCH HE ACTUALLY CARES FOR THE KINGDOM OF XIANLE, SO NOW HE KNOWS TO BE ANXIOUS?"

He turned to Mu Qing again. "YOU DON'T THINK I CAN'T TELL YOU THINK HIS HIGHNESS IS A FOOL? I CAN TOLERATE YOUR SARCASM AND ROLLED EYES, I CAN ALSO TOLERATE YOU STANDING WHERE YOU SHOULDN'T. YOU LIKE TO SHOW OFF, IT'S NOT THE FIRST TIME, SO FINE, GO SHOW OFF, YOU'RE NOT GOOD ENOUGH TO WOW THE HEAVENS ANYWAY. HIS HIGHNESS DOESN'T MIND SO I DON'T GIVE A SHIT EITHER. BUT SINCE YOU'RE GONNA CROSS THE LINE, I'M NOT GONNA STAND BACK. LISTEN UP: I'M NOT SURPRISED YOU LIKE USING DESPICABLE TRICKS, BUT HIS HIGHNESS IS HIS HIGHNESS; NO MATTER WHAT HE DECIDES, YOU BETTER RESPECT IT. DON'T YOU BE POINTING FINGERS AND FORGET WHO THE FUCK YOU ARE!"

While Feng Xin yelled, Xie Lian tried stopping him multiple times, but it might be because he'd been holding back for too long and so couldn't be stopped at all, spilling everything in one go. With every word, Mu Qing's face paled a shade. At first he jerked as if wanting to fight back, but in the end, he stopped, unspeaking, and glared at Feng Xin gravely.

Xie Lian was furious. "ARE YOU DONE? DO YOU WANT ME TO KICK BOTH OF YOU OUT?!"

Feng Xin's face was completely red, blood obviously rushed to his head, and he stiffened his neck to counter. "Kick me out, for all I care. I don't give a shit about being a heavenly official! If it wasn't for Your Highness' appointment, I really don't care for it. But even if you boot me back to the mortal realm and I become human again, I will still be loyal to you, Your Highness. At your command, I will be the first to charge forward, but I will not stand for a traitor! This guy, if he can't use you to become a heavenly official, he might not even follow you. I bet he doesn't even have anything good to say about you. THERE! I'm done!"

At first, Mu Qing was silent, his hand covering his mouth, but having held back for so long too, he couldn't put up with it anymore either and yelled back.

"FUCKING USE HIM? WHAT A BEAUTIFUL SPEECH, WHAT DO YOU KNOW!"

Xie Lian was going mad. "BOTH OF YOU SHUT UP!!! SHUT UP!!!"

The two bit back their retorts with immense difficulty. The dispute this time was too big, and even idiom trains couldn't save them. It was a while before Xie Lian could push down his fury. He scowled.

"...in any case, cursing is a no-go."

Mu Qing sneered, but still he acknowledged, "Hm. You're the boss."

Feng Xin was more succinct: "Yes sir."

Mu Qing cleared his expression and said, "If there were any consequences, Your Highness would take on the burden himself anyway."

Feng Xin scoffed but didn't say another word.

Xie Lian acquiesced immediately, "Of course. I've already decided—"

Just then, the three of them all felt violent quaking, their bodies swaying, and Xie Lian was bewildered.

"What's going on?"

Feng Xin was the first to react. "Earthquake!"

With earthquakes come casualties. Xie Lian shouted, "SAVE THE PEOPLE!"

Just as they were about to rush out, a person rolled out from under the bed and he extended his arm.

“Cousin! Cousin, don’t forget about me!!! Take me along too!!”

Seeing him, Xie Lian was even more perplexed. “Qi Rong, why are you in my chambers?!”

He couldn’t possibly fathom the bizarre life Qi Rong led, having nothing better to do than to gather and collect anything related to Xie Lian all day. He also didn’t know how long Qi Rong’s been listening in on them in secret, but with such a dire situation at hand, he didn’t have the time to question him. He grabbed Qi Rong’s arm and ran, and disposed of him in an open area. It was chaos within the palace, and countless attendants screamed as they rushed out from that extravagant building.

He cried loudly, “IS ANYONE HURT? IS THERE ANYONE STUCK?”

Fortunately, it didn’t take long before the earthquake stopped, and after inquiring, it seemed there were no wounded or dead. Still, his heart was tight. Suddenly, there was another scream, and many were pointing at the sky behind him. Xie Lian whipped around and his pupils shrank. At the centre of the palace was a gigantic, glamorous pagoda, and it was slowly leaning.

The Celestial Pagoda was going to collapse!

This Celestial Pagoda, its full name “The Pagoda of Celestial Being”, possessed centuries of history, and was one of the symbols of the Xianle Palace. It was also the tallest building in all of the royal capital; sitting in its heart, between the palace and the fortress city. It was a renowned landmark. If this pagoda fell, there would be innumerable casualties. The palace attendants and the pedestrians on the streets outside the palace all started fleeing with even more madness.

Seeing this, Xie Lian’s right hand immediately moved to cast spells, and he yelled in the direction of Mount Taicang:

“COME!”

That pagoda continued to lean slowly, and just as it had bent to one-third of the way down, the masses suddenly felt another wave of quaking.

This tremor also came from the ground, yet, it was different from that of an earthquake. The tremors came one at a time, having its own regular rhythm, and it became faster and faster, closer and closer. When that pagoda seemed to have leaned some more, the people finally realized that tremor was the footsteps of something.

A giant golden statue of over five meters tall, a sword in one hand, flower in the other, its body glowing, and it was walking towards the palace in large strides!

Someone immediately shouted in amazement, "ISN'T THAT THE CROWN PRINCE STATUE FROM THE XIANLE PAVILION AT THE ROYAL HOLY PAVILION?"

Soon, many more recognized it. "IT'S TRUE! IT'S THAT GOLDEN STATUE! LOOK, IT'S COMING FROM MOUNT TAICANG!"

Every step that golden statue took was a number of miles, but it didn't step on anyone. Thump-thump, thump-thump, it stepped into the palace like it was flying, and caught the Celestial Pagoda that was falling, stopping the ruinous situation.

Under the setting sun, that golden light shone, that glowing gilded figure raised both hands, and with its might, it exerted all its strength to hold up the gigantic pagoda that had almost collapsed. It was the very picture of a miracle, shocking countless witnesses into awed silence. Xie Lian slowly dropped his hand and looked to that divine statue. Seeing that handsome, calm gilded expression, a flicker of bewilderment flashed in his mind.

Ch.88: Vow to Never Forget, Never!

It was the very first divine statue the people built for him, and it was also the most magnificent and stately.

In the past, seeing that version of “himself”, Xie Lian had always simply accepted it without thinking there was any problem. Yet at this very moment, he felt that golden, scintillating giant figure endlessly foreign, and couldn't help but think:

“Is that really me?”

On the side, Feng Xin and Mu Qing went about separately to check to see if there were any trapped victims that weren't yet found. That flicker of bewilderment flashed by quickly, and seeing the crowds settling, Xie Lian breathed a sigh of relief.

But before that breath was completely exhaled, he suddenly felt a heavy weight on his body, and his heart tightened.

That Celestial Pagoda was too tall and too heavy after all.

That divine statue also seemed to think its burden strenuous. Its hands slightly trembling, its feet sinking into the ground, that gigantic golden body was also slightly bent from the pressure; only that smile remained unchanging. Seeing this, Xie Lian immediately cast another spell. However, when the spell was cast, his heart dropped. Not only did the golden statue not straighten up, it was pressed down even further, looking like it might not hold on any longer.

Xie Lian's hands, too, started trembling. He had never felt like this before. As far as he knew, whatever mountain he punched, that mountain must fall; should he stomp, the earth would quake. He had never felt so deeply this concept called “strength falling short of desire”.

With no other choice, Xie Lian gritted his teeth and leapt into the air, landing and seating himself on the foot of that gigantic golden statue before he raised his hands to cast spells once more with force. This time he entered the frontline himself, and sure enough, that golden statue rose again, its head shot up, raising that leaning Celestial Pagoda up once more.

Although he managed to bear its weight, both Xie Lian's back and his mind were already rolling with cold sweat. However, the countless people outside the palace were ignorant of his unspeakable hardship and were already approaching to prostrate at the miraculous golden statue wave by wave, hollering.

“His Highness the Crown Prince has shown his divine spirit before us in the kingdom's time of need!”

“YOUR HIGHNESS YOU MUST SAVE US!”

“SAVE THE PEOPLE! PROTECT THE WORLD!”

Xie Lian was gritting his teeth, and it was a while before he spoke with difficulty: “Everyone, please stand up and back away. Go further, don’t stand around here, I...”

He trailed off, suddenly realizing he was actually running out of breath. His voice was drowned in tide-like cheers, and the more he wanted to amplify it, the smaller he found himself to be. Xie Lian took a deep breath and was about to shout when a hand suddenly grabbed his ankle. He looked down, and it was Qi Rong.

He immediately said, “Qi Rong, hurry and go tell everyone not to hang around here, the pagoda might collapse!”

Those words were blurted out unintentionally, and when Xie Lian realized what he had said, his blood ran cold.

The him in the past, nevermind speaking those kinds of words, even the thought of them would never have entered his mind. Even if the sky was going to fall, he’d believe he could support it. But the him now, he realized something alarming: he no longer believed.

Not only did the people stop believing in him, even he could no longer believe in himself.

Qi Rong responded instantly, “How can it collapse? Aren’t you holding it up?!”

Hearing him, Xie Lian felt his heart drop again. Qi Rong didn’t notice his darkening expression, nor his eyes going wild at all.

“Cousin, let me help you.”

Xie Lian was taken aback. “Help me? How?”

Qi Rong immediately said without thinking, “Didn’t you say you know how to inflict the Human Face Disease? Tell me how to do it, and I’ll help you curse Yong’an. I’ll help you kill them!”

...So, he did hear everything they discussed when he was hiding under the bed!

Xie Lian was growing weak from rage. “You—you fool! Do you know what a curse is?”

Qi Rong replied, looking nonchalant, “I do. Isn’t it just a curse? Cousin, let me tell you, I have quite the talent in this area. I curse my dad often, maybe he even died from my curses, you...”

“...” Xie Lian couldn’t listen anymore, and said, “Just go.”

“No! NO!” Qi Rong exclaimed. “Fine, don’t tell me how to cast the curse. Then tell me...how can I avoid getting infected by the Human Face Disease?”

Xie Lian’s heart continued to drop, and Qi Rong added, “You know how, right? You knew why the soldiers weren’t getting infected, no? Cousin, tell me why. Please?”

There were still many palace attendants gathered nearby, and who knew just how many ears were listening. Xie Lian was afraid leaking that information might start something, so he remained silent. However, sure enough some people couldn’t hold it back any longer and raised their heads to ask:

“Your Highness! Is that true?”

“You really know how to cure the Human Face Disease?!”

“Why didn’t you say anything?”

The eyes of those people along with Qi Rong were all going wild, and Xie Lian kept his mouth shut tightly, squeezing out but a few words, “NO! I DON’T KNOW ANYTHING!”

There was a small disturbance in the crowd, but it didn’t escalate. Just then, Feng Xin returned. He saw from afar Qi Rong leaning near Xie Lian and shouted, “WHAT THE HELL ARE YOU DOING?!”

Xie Lian immediately ordered, “Feng Xin, come take him away!”

Feng Xin acknowledged and came forward, but Qi Rong latched on to Xie Lian and cried impassionedly, “Cousin, you’re going to defeat Yong’an and chase them all away for sure, right?! YOU’LL PROTECT US FOR SURE, RIGHT?! RIGHT?!”

If this was a few months ago, maybe Xie Lian would have still emphatically answered with fervor: “I will protect you all!” But now, he didn’t dare. Qi Rong’s expression was exceedingly agitated, and Xie Lian was slightly puzzled watching him, because he knew very well that Qi Rong was not the type to be concerned with the kingdom nor its people. Even if the kingdom was doomed, he should be more scared than anything, so why was he so agitated? A moment later he suddenly remembered something: that father of Qi Rong’s had also been from Yong’an.

Hearing no response from him, Qi Rong’s voice suddenly grew cold. “COUSIN! YOU WON’T REALLY LEAVE IT BE, RIGHT? ARE YOU JUST GOING TO LET US BE TRAMPLED AND RIDICULED BY OTHERS LIKE THIS? DO WE REALLY HAVE NO OTHER WAY?!”

At his demand, Xie Lian could feel his heart breaking. Because, he realized, Qi Rong wasn’t wrong. In the face of everything, he really...really didn’t know what to do!

“Let me go request the king to detain him again,” Feng Xin said.

Even whilst being taken away Qi Rong was still struggling, and he roared, “YOU HAVE TO HOLD ON! YOU CAN’T FALL!”

He couldn’t fall!

Xie Lian himself knew that he couldn’t afford to fall. Even if the nearby civilians escaped, this Celestial Pagoda must not fall. If it collapsed, not only would the centuries-old royal monument be destroyed, the main part of the Martial Deity Avenue, along with many residences, would all be demolished. Moreover, within the pagoda were countless rare treasures, centuries-old scrolls passed down from countless ancestors of generations past. They couldn’t be moved in time, and if the pagoda collapsed, they would all be gone. If it collapsed, it would also bring down with it the eminence of royalty in the Kingdom of Xianle.

However, his spiritual power, like the water source of Yong’an, seemed to be draining by the day. In order to support that gigantic golden statue, he couldn’t leave for a single moment, and could only pass on the duty of guarding the fortress city to Feng Xin and Mu Qing, while he himself staunchly remained where he was, and meditated in forced calm. Because that five-meters-tall golden statue was the divine statue worshipped on Mount Taicang within the Royal Holy Pavilion, after Xie Lian summoned it over, the devotees had no idol to worship, and the swarm of them came over to pray to it under the open skies. Although this was the palace and outsiders shouldn’t have been able to enter, first, the earthquake had collapsed a section of the palace walls; second, it was chaos within the royal capital and there wasn’t enough authority to go around; and third, any more oppressive authority might cause another riot, so the people had to be let through.

Xie Lian chose to settle where he was, and the king and the queen would visit him every day. Days passed in a blur as he spent all of his power holding that Celestial Pagoda up on one hand, and on the other trying to restore energy, waiting for the day he would be released. The king didn’t have it any easier than him; his hair was now more white than not, and even though he was obviously in his prime, he looked to be over fifty. When the father and son saw each other, although unspeaking, yet they were more at peace with each other than ever before.

The queen had watched Xie Lian grow up, and had only ever seen her beloved son in a state of elegance and divinity; now, watching him miserably guarding the palace, exposed to the harsh elements and still refusing to let anyone close to help cover him, she was filled with sorrow and grief, standing under the scorching sun herself to shield him from the rays with an umbrella. After a while, Xie Lian was afraid she’d be tired, and spoke up.

“Mother, go back, I don’t need this. Don’t come near here, and don’t let anyone else come close, I’m scared that...”

But what he was scared of in the end never left his lips. The queen's back was facing the devotees gathered there, and having held back for some time, at last tears still streamed down.

"My child, you've suffered. Why...why would such punishment befall you?!"

In order to hide her sallow and pale face, the queen's makeup was heavy; yet with her tears, the foundation still melted, revealing a woman who was no longer youthful. She grieved for her son, cried for her son, but she didn't dare cry out loud, scared that the people would notice. The king held her shoulders, and Xie Lian watched her in a daze.

The first thing people think of when they are in a state of suffering is their loved ones, and to Xie Lian, that person was no doubt his mother. Maybe saying it out loud would be pointless, but after days of exhausting strain, having been cut down again and again by knives, at that moment, he really wanted to turn into a ten-year-old child and run into his mother's embrace to bawl.

Yet, every road walked that led to this day was chosen by himself. His parents were already in a difficult situation, and with so many citizens watching, he could not show a trace of weakness. If even he couldn't hold on, who could?

Thus, Xie Lian spoke against his heart: "Mother, don't worry. I'm alright. I'm not suffering."

Suffering or not, only he knew in his heart.

A few palace attendants came to assist the king and the queen, and after they reluctantly left, Xie Lian passed out for a short while, exposed under the scorching sun. An unknown amount of time passed, and when he opened his eyes again, dusk was settling in the skies, the setting sun shone its last rays, and below him there weren't many devotees left.

However, when he looked down, he saw that, not far from his person, was a small, lonesome flower.

Xie Lian wasn't very sure just when such a flower was placed, and he extended a hand to pick it up.

It was a tiny flower. A flower that was snow-white, its stem lush green, its stalk thin and weak, carrying tear-like dew, looking pitiful. The faint fragrance was familiar, and although ordinary, it was touching.

He held the flower tight in spite of himself, and pressed it near his heart.

Just then, the sudden stench of blood overtook that faint fragrance. Xie Lian looked up, and his sight was muddled as a shadow came at him screaming.

“WHY! WHY?!!”

Startled, Xie Lian pushed that person away and tried to bring forth strength. “WHO?!”

That push made that person tumble and roll on the ground. Xie Lian still had to support that five-meters-tall golden statue and didn't dare to rise, and didn't dare to go close, but it only took a second for him to recognize who it was. That individual only had one leg—it was the young man who once gave him an umbrella, and the one he'd personally amputated!

That young man was covered in blood, his palms bloody. He had actually come crawling using both hands and his remaining foot, and there was a horrifying trail of blood behind him.

He sat up with difficulty and Xie Lian asked, dumbfounded, “Why, why are you here? Weren't you recuperating at Buyou Forest?”

That young man didn't answer him, and crawled closer using his limbs. Because he only had one leg, it was a horrifying sight.

Xie Lian exclaimed, “You—!”

That young man lifted the pant leg of his remaining right leg up in a fit, demanding, “WHY?!”

Upon a closer look, on his right leg was a twisted human face!

This was one of the things Xie Lian worried about the most, and sure enough, it happened. If he wasn't already seated, he might have fallen over. That young man slapped at the ground and roared.

“WHY DID YOU CUT MY LEG OFF?! IT STILL RELAPSED! MY LEG IS ALSO GONE! WHY?! GIVE ME BACK MY LEG! GIVE ME BACK MY LEG!”

That rainy day, that young man's face had been full of smiles when stuffing that umbrella into Xie Lian's hands. Yet before him now he was in a state of madness, and the difference was too striking. Xie Lian's mind was in chaos, a complete mess, and his voice trembled.

“I...”

It took him moments before he snapped out of it and said, “Let...let me help you!”

Immediately he cast a spell to suppress the evil poison on that young man's leg. Yet unexpectedly the sound of wailing came from all around, and several people also came at him, crying:

“Your Highness, save me!”

“Your Highness, SAVE ME!”

“YOUR HIGHNESS, LOOK AT MY FACE, I’VE CUT HALF MY FACE SO WHY IS IT STILL NOT HEALED, WHY? JUST WHAT DO WE HAVE TO DO TO CURE IT?”

“YOUR HIGHNESS, LOOK AT ME, LOOK WHAT I’VE BECOME!”

Scene after scene of bloodiness was endlessly shoved before him. Xie Lian’s eyes were wide with shock, waving his hands in who knows what direction, mumbling, “No, I don’t want to look, I DON’T WANT TO LOOK!”

Turns out, once all the Human Face Disease patients from Buyou Forest relapsed, a riot erupted. They actually fought through the soldiers and doctors guarding and nursing them, escaping the camps to come look for him!

Since they had all escaped, if he didn’t immediately suppress their infection, the disease might spread faster. Xie Lian closed his eyes and tried to transfer power, wanting to help alleviate their symptoms and relieve their pain for the time being. However, just when that group was taken care of, immediately more poured in to surround him:

“YOUR HIGHNESS, ME! HELP ME TOO!”

Surrounded by over ten people, Xie Lian faintly felt the golden statue above seemed to be swaying, and fear filled him.

“Wait, wait! I—”

Someone couldn’t hold back, and cried, “NO, I DON’T WANT TO WAIT, I’VE ALREADY WAITED FOR TOO LONG!”

“YOUR HIGHNESS, WHY WOULD YOU TREAT HIM BUT NOT ME?”

Soon, the voices around him changed:

“HOW COME WHEN YOU TREAT HIM HE WAS GOOD AS NEW, BUT I’M NOT ANY BETTER? AREN’T YOU A GOD? WHY ARE YOU SO UNFAIR! I DEMAND JUSTICE!”

Xie Lian argued back, “No, I’m not being unfair! This isn’t on me, your symptoms are different—”

“IF YOU’RE GOING TO HELP, HELP ALL THE WAY. NOW YOU WANNA DROP EVERYTHING, WHAT EXACTLY ARE YOU PLAYING AT? IS IT UP TO YOU?”

Xie Lian was having trouble catching his breath. “I’m not dropping anything, I’m just—just wait—”

“DON’T YOU KNOW HOW TO CURE THIS DISEASE?”

Xie Lian opened his mouth. “I—”

“IF YOU KNOW, WHY WON’T YOU TELL US???”

Xie Lian grabbed his own head. “I DON’T KNOW ANYTHING!”

“YOU’RE LYING! I ALREADY HEARD SOMEONE TALKING, YOU KNEW! I’VE SEEN THROUGH YOU! YOU WON’T TELL US BECAUSE YOU JUST WANT US TO KEEP BEGGING YOU LIKE THIS SO YOU CAN STEAL OUR DONATION MONEY! LIAR! YOU’RE A LIAR!”

“WHAT’S THE CURE, JUST TELL US! TELL US NOW!!!!”

Xie Lian’s face was white as a sheet, his eyes blank; countless hands were shoving him around, and there was even a pair maliciously strangling him. Finally, something hilarious happened. He was clearly a god of heaven, but at that moment, there was a tiny voice crying at the bottom of his heart:

“...save me—”

There seemed to be someone pulling those hands away, but at the same time not, he wasn’t very sure; only that those faces full of bloody scars, those people missing limbs, looked as if they were going to shred him to pieces and devour him. Who knew how long it’d been when, in the far distance, came the demon-like wails of a horn. The masses only cared for their own cries and tearing, ignoring that horn completely, but Xie Lian snapped out of it instantly. That was the sound of Yong’an’s victory horn!

He couldn’t sit there, nor hang on any longer. His body bent and he keeled over. At the same time, that five-meters-tall gilded figure he worked so hard to uphold mimicked his movement. As if it suddenly lost life, it collapsed booming.

Soon, along with it, was another loud, rumbling sound. That gigantic and heavy Celestial Pagoda came crashing down, crumbling like that golden statue.

The gilded figure shouldn’t have broken; yet because Xie Lian had injected too much spiritual power into it, hoping it’d hold up that Celestial Pagoda, it had long since become fragile. The patients that escaped Buyou Forest were fleeing, dying, getting hurt. Within the palace and upon the streets, the people ran madly, some dodging the fragments of that Celestial Pagoda, some dodging those horrifying disease victims. With both hands grabbing his own head, Xie Lian ran and stumbled out of the gates of the city fortress.

The fortress towers were ablaze, the smoke black and heavy, and Xie Lian rushed up to the terrace, passing by numerous distraught soldiers fleeing. Once at the terrace he didn't know what to do either, and could only look down below at a loss. Without knowing when or how, tears had streamed down his ashen face. In that blurry field of vision, corpses filled the fields, and only the silhouette of a white-clothed individual was distinct, his large sleeves fluttering. That figure wasn't a youth, but a man, and when he turned his head, he saw Xie Lian from afar. He waved at him in a carefree manner, and looked as if it was about to disappear.

Seeing this, Xie Lian cried sharply, "DON'T GO!!!"

The first two times he saw him, he used his fake skin. This time, Xie Lian's gut told him, this must be his true form! Thus, he crossed over the fortress wall without hesitation and leapt, jumping off the walls.

In his life, Xie Lian had jumped from an extreme height countless times. Relying on his strong spiritual power and his martial might, he could land safely every time. Every time he was pleased and full of pride. Every time, it was the very picture of a celestial descent they spoke of in the legends. This time, however, he was no longer a legend.

When he landed, it wasn't steady, and his foot twisted. A needle-sharp pain instantly shot from his leg through his entire body.

He had broken his leg.

Breaking a leg wasn't really anything, and it soon healed. Only, ever since that day, it was like Xie Lian had become an entirely different person.

It was like he had lost his spirit and was no longer divinely invincible. After the first defeat, there would be a second, and then a third...he didn't want to unsheathe his sword nor enter the battlefield anymore, but because there was no one who could shield and replace him, he could only bold-headedly go forth. Once on the battlefield, he didn't slack off, either; he really did his utmost, but for some reason, even though he was clearly a young man barely past twenty, the hand holding the sword was already shaking like that of an aged elder.

Shuddering with a heart filled with fear, yet he couldn't explain who or what exactly he was afraid of. In the end, the soldiers who used to revere him gradually lost patience.

Xie Lian knew that a rumour had started going around among them: how is he a martial god? More like a god of misfortune!

However, he couldn't rebut, only because he himself started wondering: had he really, maybe, turned into a god of misfortune?

It would've been good if that was the only issue, but to the Kingdom of Xianle, the real dooming catastrophe was the Human Face Disease, and finally, it had completely lost control.

Five hundred, one thousand, two thousand, three thousand...in the end, Xie Lian no longer dared to ask just how many people were affected today.

As if like his final sentence, that day, the heavenly realm finally opened its gates to him and sent a message: Your Highness, it's time to return to the Heavenly Court.

What would be waiting for him when he returned, he couldn't say. For once, Feng Xin and Mu Qing looked agitated. Xie Lian, however, had his mind on something else.

He said to the two, "Before we leave, I want to go somewhere to have a look."

"Where?" Feng Xin asked.

"The Royal Holy Pavilion," Xie Lian said.

After a moment of silence, Feng Xin said, "Don't."

But Xie Lian had already walked away by himself.

"Your Highness!" Feng Xin cried, but seeing that he couldn't be stopped, he and Mu Qing could only run to follow.

The three of them hiked up the mountain on foot.

The Royal Holy Pavilion was where Xie Lian's first holy temple was erected, and it was also there where his first divine statue was built. However, under the instructions of Guoshi, those three thousand disciples had already been sent away, and the Royal Holy Pavilion now was only an empty establishment.

When they reached halfway up the mountain, Xie Lian looked down. He could see fire ablaze everywhere in the royal capital, the flames reflecting a sky full of stars, a beautiful sight to behold.

Feng Xin, however, yelled angrily, "Those mad men!"

Xie Lian only watched the flames, his eyes unmoving, and Feng Xin shouted again,

“Stop looking! There’s nothing good to see!”

In the past few days, Feng Xin had yelled at Xie Lian countless times: do you enjoy straining yourself, or what? But truthfully, Xie Lian didn’t know what he wanted to do. He only knew that whenever another one of his temples got burnt down or desecrated, he couldn’t help but want to go take a look. Yet once he’d seen, he couldn’t speak nor stop anyone, and could only stand there and watch. What was there to see? He didn’t know either.

Just then, the light of fire blazed up on the Crown Prince Summit. Feng Xin was aghast.

“They couldn’t even let the Royal Holy Pavilion go?! Did someone dig their ancestors’ graves or…”

He trailed off and shut up. This was because he realized, before them, the suffering of many of those from Xianle were worse than the joke of “digging ancestors’ graves”.

However, that fire wasn’t great, and it soon died down, seeming to have been extinguished by someone. Now, Feng Xin was surprised. These days, there were only people who dared to set fire, not extinguish fire. If there was anyone who would step in and talk down or stop those angry mobs from setting fires and destroying temples, then they would be treated like the very “God of Misfortune” Xie Lian himself, and get beaten to death. Because of this, the three of them no longer dared to reveal their spirits before mortals, and had long hidden away their forms.

All along the way up the mountain, the three could hear the sounds of a brawl; once they reached the Crown Prince Summit, sure enough, that Xianle Pavilion had already been mostly torn down, leaving only the frame and walls of the great hall. That giant divine altar no longer had a divine statue, and there was a gang of hoodlums fist-fighting in front of that decrepit hall entrance, screaming as they fought:

“YOU FUCKING MUTT! SHITTY BRAT! DID YOUR WIFE LOSE HER FUCKING VIRGINITY HERE OR WHAT, IS THIS BROKEN SHRINE YOUR PRECIOUS DICK OR SOMETHING?!”

Just one look and Xie Lian knew that those people didn’t come to destroy his temple out of anger. They were only a group of gangsters, who dreamed of chaos and were either taking advantage of it, or who were simply playing around and came to burn the temple down for fun. However, at this point he didn’t really care what kind of people were tearing his temples down. Just then, in that crazed brawl, the exceedingly vicious voice of a boy broke through and rang to the night sky:

“SCRAM!!!”

Listening closely, it was actually one person fighting many. Moreover, that one person was only ten-something years old; still very much a child, but even then he was relentless and didn't seem to be losing ground. However, it was still one against many after all. That boy's face was already covered in blood and grime, littered with blue and purple, with cuts all over; so much so his actual appearance was no longer recognizable.

"That brat will definitely grow up to be a good man!" Feng Xin commented.

Just then, there was a malicious glint in one of the men's eyes. He lifted a giant rock from the ground, and was about to bash it on the back of that boy's head. Xie Lian saw and waved his hand once. The rock in that man's hands instantly rebounded, smashing into his own face, and he screamed as blood splattered out of his nose. That boy was stunned, but immediately whipped around and raised his fist for another bout of berserk beating. His fighting stance was too terrifyingly overbearing, scaring away that gang of young men.

They pointed at him as they fled, shouting empty threats. "FUCK! JUST YOU WAIT! WE'VE GOT MORE GUYS AND WE'LL GET YOU!"

That boy sneered. "YOU DARE COME BACK AND I'LL FUCKING KILL YOU!!!"

Those guys were terrified and ran faster. With the brawl over, that boy rushed to a small mound with a fire that was already extinguished; he vigorously stomped on it, killing the last bit of sparks, before entering the great hall. He picked up a piece of paper from the ground, carefully flattening it, and hung it in mid-air before finally, he sat down and leaned against the altar, zoning out.

Xie Lian walked over, lightly sweeping past. He leapt onto the altar, and discovered what that boy hung in the air was a painting. The brushwork was rough, obviously done by someone who had never learned how to paint. Yet every stroke was serious and sincere, depicting the solemn figure of the God-Pleasing Crown Prince. It seemed this was used to replace that divine statue he had summoned away.

"It's pretty well-painted!" Feng Xin remarked.

After the past many days, Feng Xin finally saw someone who would still defend Xie Lian. He was already so excited he had almost joined the fight earlier to help the boy out, so obviously he harboured good feelings for the kid. Mu Qing, however, only looked down, his eyes shimmering as if recalling something, but didn't say a word. Xie Lian raised his hand and gently flicked that painting.

It wasn't particularly obvious; it only looked like a breeze blowing by. Yet, that boy shot up the head that was laid on his hugged knees, that tired injured face instantly lighting up.

He called out, "Is that you?"

“That brat’s pretty sharp?!” Feng Xin was amazed.

“Let’s go,” Mu Qing said.

Xie Lian nodded lightly, and was about to turn around to leave when that boy pounced on the edge of that altar, his breathing slightly accelerated.

“I know it’s you! Your Highness, don’t go! I have something to say to you!”

Hearing him, the three of them were taken aback. That boy seemed to be quite nervous, his fists clenched.

“Even though your pavilions and temples are burnt down...don’t be sad. I will build you many more temples in the future; bigger, more elegant, better than anyone else’s. No one will be able to compete with you. I’ll do it!”

“...”

The three were speechless.

That boy’s attire was dirty and unkempt, his face muddy and grimy, covered in bruises and cuts, looking sad and pathetic. Yet he spoke such ambitious, bold words, sounding truly laughable, making one feel rather complicated. Seeming to be afraid his voice might not reach Xie Lian’s ears, he circled his hands around his mouth, cupping them, and shouted towards the painting hung above the altar:

“YOUR HIGHNESS! DID YOU HEAR ME? IN MY HEART, YOU ARE GOD! YOU ARE THE ONLY GOD, THE ONE TRUE GOD! DID YOU HEAR ME?!”

He screamed himself hoarse to the point where the entirety of Mount Taicang seemed to be echoing his voice: ——DID YOU HEAR ME!

Xie Lian suddenly burst out laughing. This laugh came too abruptly, making both Feng Xin and Mu Qing jump. Xie Lian shook his head as he laughed. That boy obviously couldn’t hear him, yet he seemed to have sensed something; his eye bright, looking around. Suddenly, a drop of ice-cold water fell on his cheek. That boy’s eye bulged, and in that instant, in his eye was the reflection of a snow-white figure. He blinked, and when he opened his eye again, that reflection was gone.

Seeing that Xie Lian actually showed himself for a second, Feng Xin spoke up.

“Your Highness, just now, did you...”

Xie Lian looked dazed. “Just now? Oh, my power’s drained, and it slipped just now.”

That boy straightened up, rubbed hard at his eye, as if trying desperately to retain that ephemeral shadow. Xie Lian, however, closed his.

A moment later, he spoke: “Forget it.”

There was finally a response, yet it was those words. That boy’s eye first lit up, his lips curling, but soon after it became shock, and the curve of his lips fell.

“...What? Forget what?”

Xie Lian breathed a sigh, and said to him in a soft voice, “Forget me.”

That boy was stunned and silent.

Xie Lian continued to talk to himself, “Let it go. Soon, no one will remember anyway.”

Hearing this, that boy’s eye widened, and silently, a stream of tears rolled down and washed a trail of pale white on his grimy face.

He swallowed hard and gasped, “I...”

Feng Xin seemed to not be able to bear the sight anymore, and spoke up. “Your Highness, don’t say anymore. You’re breaking the rules again.”

“Hm, I’m done. But, I’ve already broken so many rules, just a few words won’t hurt,” Xie Lian said.

He didn’t let that boy hear the last line. The three descended from the altar and walked towards the entrance of that broken great hall. The winds of the night blew, and Xie Lian shook his head.

He was still a heavenly official for the time being, and technically he couldn’t feel “cold”. Yet, at that very moment, he really felt a bone-biting chill.

Just then, unexpectedly, that boy they left behind in the great hall suddenly muttered, “I won’t.”

He clearly couldn’t see Xie Lian and company, but he somehow accurately grasped the right direction and charged out, shouting to their retreating backs: “I WON’T!”

The three of them turned their heads, and saw the single eye of that boy, so bright it pierced the soul; that battered face was both furious and sad, both joyous and wild.

In the midst of pouring tears, he cried: “I WON’T FORGET.”

“I WILL NEVER FORGET YOU!!!”

MXTX Author’s Note:

We’ve finally reached this point...in a broken and defeated temple with a soon-to-be forgotten god and a young devout follower was the first image that floated in my mind for this novel, and was also what first gave me the impulse to write it. I’m the kind that would write up an entire book just for a scene...all this plot-planning exhausted me...

To be able to follow the journey to this point is not easy, so thank you, thank you, I love you all. But...writing this is even harder [covers face] this book is killing me.

Alright, the second book is done. The third book will return to the normal, present timeline.

BOOK 3: NO PATHS ARE BOUND

Ch.89: The Mid-Autumn Festival; Battling Lanterns on Moon Watch Eve

CLANG.

Sparks flew.

The blade penetrated deep into the stone floor, and Xie Lian, both his hands gripping the sword, bowed his head and rested his forehead on the hilt, his teeth gritted so hard they might grind to powder in his mouth.

“USELESS TRASH!” Qi Rong laughed out loud. “WHAT USELESS TRASH! I knew you wouldn’t dare to kill me! No matter how much I ridicule you, no matter how I drag you through the mud, as long as I have a knife on someone else’s throat, you can’t do anything to me. You useless coward, for what do you need to live for, a god like you?”

However, Xie Lian had already completely calmed down. He looked up, his eyes cold.

“Don’t be too happy too soon. I can’t do anything to you, but there will naturally be someone who can.”

Qi Rong hmphed. “Are you thinking of hugging Jun Wu’s legs to beg him to help you out again? Dream on. Did he care back then? Hm?? And you still shamelessly follow his lead, are you really that stupid?”

Xie Lian peeled that stately and glamorous God-Pleasing costume set off of Qi Rong. He called forth Ruoye, bound him, and threw him aside.

“You better keep your mouth shut.”

“I’m not afraid of you, you’ve got nothing on me!” Qi Rong retorted.

“Then, are you afraid of Hua Cheng?” Xie Lian said.

Qi Rong’s smile froze for an instant, and in that instant, Xie Lian said lightly,

“Just to give you a heads-up, if one of these days I get into a bad mood, maybe I just might hand you over to Hua Cheng, and have him think of a way to deal with you. So you watch yourself, hear me?”

Hearing this, Qi Rong couldn't laugh anymore. He said, terrified, "What the fuck, you're vicious! I can't believe you'd come up with something like that! Why not just hand me over to Lang Qianqiu?!"

Xie Lian knelt on the ground and used his hands to pick up small, coarse granules from the ground and from under the coffin, one by one. Truthfully, he wouldn't be handing Qi Rong to the Heavenly Court for the time being; the reason being Lang Qianqiu. If he handed Qi Rong over and Lang Qianqiu learned of Qi Rong's whereabouts, he would charge immediately with his sword to kill him. Should he be killed? A headache; if he was killed, then what's next? Another headache. Thus, it wasn't wise to hand Qi Rong over to the Heavenly Court at the moment.

All things considered, requesting Hua Cheng's help seemed like a pretty good idea. But really, he was only using Hua Cheng's name to scare Qi Rong a little bit. After all, he had already troubled Hua Cheng too many times, and every time something happened he'd think of Hua Cheng first; it'd almost feel like he was being overly familiar. Just using his name to scare Qi Rong made Xie Lian feel rather embarrassed.

Qi Rong turned his head and spat some blood-laced spit in a different direction, and that child reached out pathetically to pat his forehead.

"Dad, are you okay? Does it hurt?"

Qi Rong seemed to really enjoy this game of father and son, and responded derisively, "My good son~ Daddy is okay~~ Hahaha."

The rims around Xie Lian's eyes were red as he picked up those granules, and he placed them with the utmost care onto the God-Pleasing costume. That child quietly crawled over and helped Xie Lian pick them up, too.

Xie Lian saw those little hands and looked up at him, and that child said in a small voice, "Gege, won't you stop beating my dad up? Let us go. I won't steal from you again."

Xie Lian's heart tightened; he forced the feeling away. "What's your name, little one?"

"My name is Guzi," that child replied.

Xie Lian had finished collecting all the ashes and wrapped them in layers of that costume, tying it up neatly before placing the bundle within the coffin anew, closing the cover.

He then slowly replied, "Guzi, the one over there is not your dad, but someone else. He's been possessed. He's currently a bad guy."

The child couldn't comprehend what he said, and looked confused. "Someone else? No? I recognize him, he's my dad."

Qi Rong commended, "Not bad, not bad, I've picked up a cheap son, what a great value! Hahaha...oof!"

Xie Lian kicked him.

Guzi was still young and had always lived dependent on his father, so he was quite attached to the body Qi Rong had possessed, refusing to leave it alone. Xie Lian couldn't think of a way to take care of him for the moment. With the sword Fangxin on his back, he kowtowed solemnly towards the two coffins thrice. Then, with Qi Rong hanging from his left hand and Guzi under his right arm, he left Mount Taicang, returning speedily back to Puqi Village.

Having left for many days, by the time they made it back, it was deep into the night. The doors to the Puqi Shrine were wide open, clouds of incense rolling out; upon the altar the incense burner was filled to the brim with sticks of incense, and the table itself was covered with offerings. Xie Lian entered, swept a look, and grabbed two meat buns from the altar. He passed one to Guzi, and rudely stuffed the other into Qi Rong's mouth. That body was alive, after all, and until Xie Lian figured out how to pull Qi Rong from that man, he still needed sustenance.

Qi Rong spat out that meat bun and cursed at how bad it tasted, then yelled, as if a little worried, "I say! You won't actually hand me over to Hua Cheng, will you??"

Xie Lian sneered. "Are you scared?"

He didn't have time for his nonsense, and turned around to rummage through his pickle jars on the ground.

Qi Rong was petulant. "Me? Scared? You should be the one scared. As a heavenly official, you'd dare get so chummy with a Supreme. You..."

As he talked, his eyes suddenly focused and locked on to something. Turns out, when Xie Lian bent down, something slipped out of the front of his robes.

It was a crystal-clear ring. That was what Qi Rong was staring at.

Xie Lian didn't notice his gaze, but Qi Rong's face grew suspicious behind him. After a while, he spoke up.

"Cousin crown prince, what's that thing on your chest??"

Xie Lian was going to keep ignoring him, but what Qi Rong brought up was something he himself was curious about. He turned around, his finger hooking onto the thin silver chain.

"This? Do you know what it is?"

“Bring it here, let me see and I’ll tell you,” Qi Rong beckoned.

But Xie Lian said, “If you know, then say it. If you don’t, then shut up.”

Qi Rong grumbled bitterly, “You’re always so nasty to people who are close to you; if you’re so amazing, why don’t you show off how cool you are to outsiders?”

Xie Lian stuffed the silver chain back into the inner layers of his robe, pressing it against his skin and straightening it.

“If you’re so amazing, keep talking. Every word you say I will keep count, and with every count, you’ll be one step closer to Hua Cheng’s blade.”

Somehow without him realizing, he’d gotten used to using Hua Cheng’s name.

Qi Rong sneered. “Don’t you use him to scare me, maybe one of these days you’ll be the one dead under someone’s blade! Don’t you wanna know what that is? I, who make part of the Four Supremes, shall tell you: that’s a cursed accessory, an object of misfortune! Hurry and throw it out. I can’t believe you’d keep it on you; think you’ve been living for too long?”

Hearing this, Xie Lian straightened up instantly. “Is that true?”

“Duh!” Qi Rong said. “I’m telling you, whoever gave that to you, man or ghost, must not have good intentions.”

“Oh.” Xie Lian squatted down again.

“WHAT DO YOU MEAN, ‘OH’?!” Qi Rong cried.

Xie Lian didn’t bother turning to face him, and said flatly, “‘Oh’ just means it must be a miracle for anyone to believe you. I choose to believe in the person who gave this to me. I’ve decided to keep wearing it on my person.”

Xie Lian had always been gentle and courteous to others, but to Qi Rong, he was exceptionally cold. Qi Rong was madly furious, cussing nonstop, and Xie Lian only pretended to have heard nothing. He realized that he couldn’t find the pot that contained Banyue no matter how much he looked, and thought, “Perhaps the Wind Master already came by and took her away?”

As he listened to Qi Rong, he suddenly felt something was off.

Strange. Qi Rong was so obviously terrified of Hua Cheng, so why was he trying to provoke him nonstop, as if...as if he was intentionally trying to distract him!

Realizing this, Xie Lian suddenly attacked. He whipped around to glare at Qi Rong, and sure enough, he saw his eyes avert for an instant, looking mighty suspicious. Xie Lian's gut instinct made him look up. He raised his head, and on the beams that weren't very high overhead, he saw a black-clothed man. He had his back pressed against the ceiling, adhered above, just like a giant bat.

Xie Lian immediately pulled out Fangxin and hurled the sword up. That man was pressed onto the beam, and to dodge the attack, he flipped around and fell down.

Guzi was so terrified his meat bun fell to the ground, and he wailed. Just before Qi Rong could scream too, Ruoye sealed his mouth, dragged him to a corner and bound him. Xie Lian had thought it was one of Qi Rong's planted lackeys at first, yet after a few quick parries, he noticed this man was fast and aggressive, oddly familiar. He could say with absolute certainty that with Qi Rong's competence, he wouldn't have the power to subdue such a subject. Then he saw there was something held in that man's other arm. Upon a closer look, it was a black pot, and that pot was the very one that contained Banyue!

The Wind Master hadn't taken Banyue away? Xie Lian instantly remembered who this was, and blurted out, "Little Pei!"

Turns out Little Pei had come to steal Banyue away, but he unexpectedly bumped into the Xie Lian who'd just returned, and could only hide above on the wooden beam. Because Qi Rong was bound by Ruoye, lying on the ground, he immediately saw Pei Su hiding above. He didn't know who that was, and had only thought that if it was something harmful to Xie Lian, it must be beneficial to him. He was afraid Xie Lian would notice someone was lurking above, and purposely kept trying to distract him with noise, but who knew Xie Lian would still notice.

Xie Lian carried two cursed shackles, and Pei Su was in exile; neither of the two had spiritual power, so they could only fight barehanded. Xie Lian had fought through his eight hundred years with nothing but his fists, so how could Pei Su possibly compete? It didn't take many rounds before Xie Lian subdued him.

"Give back the pot!"

Xie Lian only shouted that randomly, yet unexpectedly, Pei Su actually tossed the pickle pot back to him. Startled, Xie Lian thought, was this General Pei Junior really that easy? He'd return the pot just by having asked? Usually wouldn't they have to push each other around for a bit longer?

Yet at the same time as Pei Su tossed him the pot, he also warned in a low voice, "Hurry and go!"

By that tone, it sounded like he was quite anxious. That pot was still in mid-air and Xie Lian was reaching out to catch it when suddenly, it changed course and flew out the window. The next second, they heard another man's voice coming from some distance away.

"You've really disappointed me."

Pei Su's face dropped. "...General!"

He and Xie Lian rushed out of Puqi Shrine. Sure enough, standing far away on the roof of a house was Pei Ming.

He wasn't wearing his armour; his robes were casual, tall and slender, bright like the sun, he was the very image of carefree. That pot leisurely flew next to Pei Ming then stopped, floating. With a hand relaxed on the hilt of his sword, he spoke to Pei Su, who was standing below.

"A man looks at the big picture and puts his career first. You're meant for great things, but what's going on? You'd mess yourself up for a little girl? Do you take yourself for an immature brat?"

Pei Su hung his head low and didn't speak.

Pei Ming added, "Did you think it was easy to obtain that position in just two hundred years? I even paved the road for you. It's easy to go down, but it ain't easy coming back up!"

They say it's lonely at the top. However, whenever a god of heaven descended, they usually preferred finding high places to stand; the higher it was, the easier it would be to watch all that was below. Xie Lian used to have that bad habit; of course, after he fell that one time, now whenever he stood high up he could feel his leg aching, and that bad habit went away. Yet, the tallest building within Puqi Village was the village head's house, and that house was a simple tile-roofed building; having General Pei stand upon it really was doing him an injustice.

However, that wasn't the point. The point was, with just at a glance, Xie Lian knew what was going on. Last time, Pei Ming had the intent to push all the blame onto Banyue to clear Pei Su's name, and Xie Lian stopped it. Although in front of Jun Wu, Pei Ming appeared to have given up, but obviously he hadn't abandoned the idea.

This time, after Xie Lian's crummy business with the Gilded Banquet got out, he could barely take care of himself and his reputation no doubt crashed; General Pei probably thought it was an opportune time to bring up old affairs, find Pei Su, and bring both him and Banyue back up to the Heavenly Court to appeal for a new trial. Truly relentless.

However, Pei Su didn't seem overly thrilled at the prospect, and breathed a sigh. "General, let's...just forget about this whole affair."

“YOU—!”

Pei Ming looked speechless and exasperated. He must've been too frustrated to lecture Pei Su in front of Xie Lian. A moment later, he suddenly said, “Well, now I have to see just what kind of amazing girl could make all my hard work go down the drain.”

He reached out, seeming to plan on shattering the pot. Such a way to open it shouldn't have been a problem, but the real problem was Xie Lian didn't know whether Banyue's wounds were healed. If not, and the pot shattered, it would be bad. Xie Lian's face dropped and he leapt to charge.

“DON'T BREAK IT!”

Unexpectedly, before Pei Ming's hand even touched the thing, the pot went BANG and exploded by itself.

In that instant, the air was filled with the smell of pickles, strong enough to make a man suffer a mental breakdown.

Pei Ming, who stood closest to the pot, was unfortunately covered with pickles all over; entirely flabbergasted by that pickle shower. Immediately after, the clear, sonorous voice of a woman rang in mid-air.

“General Pei is such an honourable man!”

A white-robed individual flipped out of that small pot; at first, she was only the size of a fist, but the more she flipped the bigger she became.

Xie Lian looked closer, and cried, “Lord Wind Master!”

The one hidden in the pickle pot wasn't Banyue, but Shi Qingxuan! She hid in that pot and blew a barrage of pickles at Pei Ming, but she herself was still all fluttering white robes, not a spot of stain.

She landed steadily, swung her whisk, and proclaimed, “Thank goodness, thank goodness. Good thing I already sent the little lady to someone else beforehand, otherwise, she wouldn't have escaped the long reach of General Pei.”

Pei Ming prided himself on his charm, and no matter what, he had to keep his composure; yet now, he stank of pickles, and even in the face of Shi Qingxuan in female form, he couldn't help but feel a little woeful.

“Qingxuan, why do you have to fight against me like this?”

If it was anyone else, he probably would've beaten them to a pulp already. But just thinking of who Shi Qingxuan's older brother was, he could only pick off the pickles, brush back his hair, and grit his teeth. He shook his head.

"...You, you. You better not let me find out just where you sent the little girl, otherwise I will certainly pay a personal visit."

The tone of his voice was clear. Whoever dared take Banyue in was opposing him, and he would go seek trouble. However, Shi Qingxuan clapped.

"That's easy! It doesn't matter if I tell you where I sent her, I'd love to see you go visit. Listen well: that little girl is currently staying on Mount Yulong, in the cave right next to the Rain Master's residence! You dare go?"

At her words, Pei Ming's face dropped, and actually didn't look as confident as he did before. He schooled his expression and suddenly became serious.

He said to the Wind Master, "Qingxuan, you're still young, that's why you like to fight for justice over every little thing. Hopefully when you get older, you won't regret the things you're doing now!"

Done, he leapt off the roof, and his figure disappeared. He actually left in quite a hurry.

Xie Lian was feeling a little bewildered, and thought his words contained hidden meaning, so he asked, "Lord Wind Master, what did he mean...?"

Shi Qingxuan, however, replied nonchalantly, "Nothing but empty threats."

Pei Su watched Pei Ming's silhouette disappear before coming over to greet the other two.

"Lord Wind Master, Your Highness."

Shi Qingxuan patted his shoulders. "Little Pei, you knew to come and stop your general this time, very generous of you. Take good care of yourself down here and reflect properly. If there's a chance, I'll speak well of you in the Heavenly Court, don't you worry!"

Pei Su was speechless for a moment, but still replied, "Then, thank you, my lord. However, I still think you might've misunderstood something. General Pei isn't usually like this, and it was only because of what's happened previously that he's overly worried about me. Besides, you know too that the Rain Master..."

In the end, Pei Su still felt he spoke too much, shook his head and courted his hands.
"Farewell."

The two of them watched him leave, and Xie Lian spoke up again.

“Lord Wind Master, the Lord Rain Master you spoke of earlier, was it Rain Master Huang?”

Shi Qingxuan turned back around and replied, “That’s right. The Rain Master hasn’t changed in centuries. What, someone you know? An acquaintance?”

Xie Lian shook his head and said softly, “Although I haven’t had the honour to meet the Rain Master, I owe a debt and I am profoundly grateful.”

Shi Qingxuan smiled. “That’s true. Although there aren’t many who are acquainted with the Rain Master, those who are have never spoken a bad word. Oh, except Pei Ming.”

“Is there a dispute between them?” Xie Lian asked.

“Naturally. Those who have hung around the Upper Court for so long all have some sort of dispute or deceit. Let me tell you, that Rain Master is a shadow in Pei Ming’s heart.”

“...Shadow?” Xie Lian wondered. In his mind, he always thought the Lord Rain Master was just someone who ploughed fields.

“You know Pei Ming,” Shi Qingxuan said. “He’s got plenty of descendants, his grand-however-many-sons are everywhere. Before Little Pei, there used to be another Deputy General at the Palace of Ming Guang, and it was also a descendant who was first appointed and then ascended.”

Xie Lian was amazed. “That General Pei sure has many talented descendants.”

Not just anyone could turn ascension into a simple homeschool lesson. Shi Qingxuan flashed her fan open and said,

“He was indeed a talent, but was more or less the same as Pei Ming. Powerful, but also full of bad habits. That deputy official would often stir up trouble in other people’s domains, but he had Pei Ming behind him so no one dared say much. Until one day, he messed around at the old residence in the Kingdom of Yushi.

“The Lord Rain Master rarely comes out, and only plants fields deep in the mountains, so there’s a nickname ‘Old Farmer of the Deep Mountains, Rain Master Huang’. But, who knew the moment the Rain Master emerged, that descendant of Pei Ming was beaten to a pulp. He got dragged back to the heavens, thrown in front of the Heavenly Emperor, and got sentenced to exile.”

“Why does this sound so familiar?” Xie Lian thought.

Shi Qingxuan continued, "At first Pei Ming thought, exile? Whatever. He could very well fish him back up in a hundred years. But, how much can happen in the mortal realm in a century? Every year, every day even, new and impressive talents appear like flashes of light, wave after wave, you can barely keep count. It only took ten years before all the devotees changed their idol; after fifty years, that heavenly official was completely forgotten; and after a hundred years, he could no longer be recalled. The young heavenly official with a once-boundless future was thus wasted, no more. It wasn't until Little Pei came around that Pei Ming found another right hand he liked."

No wonder General Pei would do everything in his power to fish Little Pei back up; so there was a precedent, and he was afraid Little Pei would go to waste too. Although, his methods weren't quite right.

Xie Lian mused, then sighed. "The human world."

Shi Qingxuan agreed. "Yeah, staying too long in the mortal realm will always wear down one's spirit and will."

The two nodded to themselves. The difference, however, was Xie Lian only nodded subconsciously, whereas Shi Qingxuan was intentionally nodding in an exaggerated manner. After nodding for a while, Xie Lian suddenly remembered an incredibly important individual.

He called out, "...Lang Ying! That child!"

Too many things had happened all at once; the excitement was too great, and he had forgotten about that child.

Shi Qingxuan piped up: "Are you talking about the child you brought back from Paradise Manor? The Heavenly Emperor has seen him, and he's currently at my place. I'll bring him down for you when I get the chance."

Xie Lian mentally noted, "There's still Qi Rong and another child locked up inside Puqi Shrine, I can't have anyone see them."

So he replied, "That'd be too much trouble, how about I go up instead?"

Shi Qingxuan nodded in delight. "Same difference. Coincidentally, it'll be the Mid-Autumn Festival Banquet soon. It's a once-a-year event, you shouldn't miss it! This year my brother will come back too, I'll introduce you then."

Her tone was full of pride for her own elder brother, and Xie Lian couldn't help but smile, thinking, "Mid-Autumn Festival Banquet, huh..."

Every year for the Mid-Autumn Festival, all of heaven would hold a Mid-Autumn Festival Banquet to celebrate and watch the people of the mortal realm as entertainment. Other than that, there was also a very important “game” during the banquet, a sort of grand finale to the feast: “The Battle of the Lanterns”.

One “Blessings Lantern” couldn’t be offered by just anyone. What the gods battled over during the Mid-Autumn Festival Banquet was the number of those Blessings Lanterns offered by their devotees that each heavenly official would receive from their main temple.

Although all you would hear on everyone’s lips was “it’s only a game”, “no need to take it seriously”, “we’re just playing around, no need to mind”, in reality, just how many really didn’t care? The majority all secretly held their breath, hoping this year their devotees would fight for them. If there really was one who didn’t fight, it’d only be Jun Wu; because, obviously, every year the Great Martial Palace stood victorious, and the lanterns even increased year after year. Thus, he was the only heavenly official who truly took this game for a game. As for the other heavenly officials, they didn’t fight for first place, only for second; even then, the competition was fierce.

At the peak of the Palace of Xianle’s prominence, it was also incomparably impressive; standing far ahead of the herd alongside the Great Martial Palace, leaving all the other heavenly officials in the dust. Now, it’d probably look quite sad. Xie Lian didn’t even need to guess to know how many of those Blessings Lanterns he’d get—definitely not a single one!

Ch.90: The Mid-Autumn Festival; Battling Lanterns on Moon Watch Eve 2

However, even if it'd look bad, it'd still be better if he went.

He wasn't like the Rain Master, who had been living a reclusive life for centuries; he wasn't like the Earth Master, who had a secret mission on hand; and he definitely wasn't like the Water Master, who could do whatever he wanted. If he wasn't anyone, but still insisted on standing out, refusing to attend just because he didn't feel like it, then after a while it'd create resentment and there'd be talk. Even if he wouldn't think anything of it, it'd make things difficult for Jun Wu. Thus, he accepted Shi Qingxuan's invite on the spot.

"Alright. I will definitely be there when the time comes."

In the following days, Xie Lian tried all sorts of ways, but still couldn't succeed in separating Qi Rong from that man's body, and Qi Rong was growing quite pleased with himself. Thank goodness for Guzi who didn't mind feeding his "dad", as Xie Lian really didn't feel like stuffing anything into his mouth. On the day of the Mid-Autumn Festival, Xie Lian drew an array outside Puqi Shrine, locked the door from the outside, left Ruoye behind to keep Qi Rong bound, and reported to the Heavenly Court.

In verse they say: "White jaded capital of the heavens, twelve towers five cities. The immortal strokes my head, hair bound to receive immortality⁶⁵." The "white jaded capital" here was, of course, talking about the Heavenly Court. During the Mid-Autumn Festival, everything was renewed and refreshed at the Heavenly Court, and other than that, Xie Lian could see the streets, corridors, and terraces were filled with increased security guards; they were probably appointed after Hua Cheng's intrusion last time. The banquet was set under the moon, in open air, surrounded by elegant fragrances; an air of propitiousness, clouds of prosperity, and blossoms flurried in the air like snow, giving way to both the space for entertainment and moon-watching. For moon-watching from the mortal realm, if one were to create a circle by touching one's thumb to the index finger, the moon could fit right in that frame. However, for moon-watching in the heavens, that moon would be bright and immaculate like a giant jaded screen that stood but a close distance away, as if with only a few steps it could be caught; truly an ethereal sight that could not be seen in the mortal realm.

Seated at the head of the banquet, needless to say, was of course Jun Wu. However, there was a hidden, intricate machination to how the rest should be seated, a method to order and position; seated too up-front was naturally a no-no, but seated too far away, the heavenly officials themselves wouldn't want to. Xie Lian didn't really care for these etiquettes, however, one must be formally-dressed for the Mid-Autumn Banquet, meaning one better wear what one's divine statue looked like in the mortal realm. Xie Lian didn't have a single divine statue, so he still wore that white cultivation robe with a bamboo hat tied on his back; although a little shabby, he really didn't have anything better. Dressing this way was kind of conspicuous, so he felt it'd be better if he sat somewhere more hidden away.

Just as he had already found a random corner to sit, when he looked up, he saw Feng Xin walk his way. Both of them stopped for a moment, nodded slightly to each other, and considered it a greeting.

Feng Xin walked on for a few steps, but turned back around and asked, "What are you doing sitting here?"

Xie Lian thought he sat down in the wrong spot, and stood up. "I thought I could sit anywhere?"

Feng Xin was about to speak when Xie Lian saw, far in the distance, Shi Qingxuan waving at him from the front. Shi Qingxuan was in her female form at the moment, and when Feng Xin turned and saw, it was like he saw something foreboding. Looking aghast, he left Xie Lian to his own devices and hurried away.

Shi Qingxuan shouted, "YOUR HIGHNESS, OVER HERE!"

The Wind Master was someone prominently popular in the Heavenly Court, and her seat was naturally one of the best, close to Jun Wu. This wave and call made many of the heavenly officials look over, and Jun Wu who was at first sitting silently with his hand supporting his cheek, also noticed Xie Lian, and inclined his head towards him, so Xie Lian had no choice but to go over. On the way, there was expectedly no sight of Lang Qianqiu; it seemed he had long since declined his invitation to the Mid-Autumn Banquet in favor of searching for Qi Rong's whereabouts. Shi Qingxuan found Xie Lian a seat right next to her, a spot with the best fengshui. Xie Lian didn't think it appropriate, but since the Wind Master was so fervently gracious, she was already pushing him down to sit.

She said, "I'll take you to the kid later, after the banquet is over. He's a little ugly, but pretty obedient."

At this point, he could only say his thanks. Turning his head, the one seated near the two was Ming Yi, playing with a jade cup sullenly; the hand playing with that small vessel was actually whiter than the jade cup. The colour of his face was normal enough, so it seemed the injuries he received whilst at the Ghost City were healed.

Xie Lian greeted, "Lord Earth Master, you seem well."

Ming Yi nodded once, looking like he didn't want to talk. Shi Qingxuan, however, was the complete opposite. She knew everyone, and could say a few words to anyone sitting front, back, left, right, even those much further away. Xie Lian was quite in awe of how she could remember all the names of those heavenly officials, no matter their rank. Seated next to him was a young man of eighteen, nineteen; his nose tall, his brows deep, and his raven hair slightly curly. Xie Lian didn't know him, and he didn't know Xie Lian either. The two looked at each other for a bit, feeling a little lost, and ended the awkward stare after Xie Lian made up a random greeting. Looking around some more, Feng Xin and Mu Qing both sat as far from each other as they could, and the ones seated right in front of him, chatting with each other with familiarity, were three heavenly officials.

On the left was a black-clad civil official, his brows respectable, his appearance generous. Between words, five fingers gently tapped a regular rhythm on the table, his expression steady and calm, looking somehow familiar. The middle was, of course, the very-acquainted Pei Ming. On the right was a white-robed gentleman, a fan gently fanning in his hand; on the front side of that fan was the word "shui" for water, the backside drawn with three wavy lines. His brows and eyes looked quite similar to Shi Qingxuan's; seemingly kind, but his expression very clearly indicated he didn't care for anyone. Who else could it be but that "Water Tyrant"?

Xie Lian got it: they were the "Three Tumours".

That black-clad civil official must be Ling Wen's most powerful form, and it sure was impressively proper. The three of them greeted each other, and used all manner of ways, from all ends of the earth and heavens, to praise and compliment each other, to the point where Shi Qingxuan grumbled under her breath.

"Fake. SO fake."

Xie Lian found it rather amusing, however. Just then, he noticed at the front of the banquet tables was a small, beautiful pavilion with red stage curtains covering all four of its sides.

He asked, "What's that?"

Shi Qingxuan smiled. "Oh, you don't know? This is also a really popular game in the Upper Court. Come, come, just watch, it's starting now!"

She trailed off as a few rumbling sounds of thunder came rolling beyond the skies. Jun Wu glanced at the sky, poured a glass of wine, and passed it down. Then, in the midst of rumbling thunder, the seated heavenly officials started laughing and hollering as they passed around that glass of wine, shouting:

"Don't give it to me! Don't give it to me!"

"Pass it to him!"

Just watching others play, Xie Lian somewhat figured out the rules and thought, “so it’s Drummed Flower Passing”⁶⁶. The crowd passed around the glass of wine passed down from Jun Wu to each other, without spilling it; the wine could be passed to anyone, but it must not be passed back to the same person. When the thunder stopped, whoever the wine cup ended up with would be picked upon for fun; only, he didn’t know what kind of “fun” it would be. To Xie Lian, this game wasn’t a friendly one. The one you passed the wine cup to would be the one who got ridiculed, so most would pass it to ones they’re closer with. Yet, he wasn’t close with most of the heavenly officials present, so how could he dare to so nonchalantly ridicule the others? At best, he could only pass it to the Wind Master, but what if the Wind Master happened to be the one who passed him the wine?

“Best if no one passes it to me,” Xie Lian thought. “But, I might be thinking too highly of myself.”

Before he even had the thought, the first round was over. Under the intense watch of everyone, that glass of wine stopped in Pei Ming’s hand. It seemed Pei Ming was used to this, and downed that glass in one gulp amidst the roaring cheers. The officials clapped and hollered.

“RAISE IT! RAISE IT!”

In the thick of cheers, that glamorous pavilion slowly raised the curtains of its four sides. Upon that platform stood a tall general, head raised, steps wide, imposingly impressive. It didn’t look like he noticed any of the heavenly officials from below, nor the strangely beautiful scenery of the heavens. He walked for a few steps and started singing verses, sonorous and enthusiastic.

Turns out, whoever the wine cup ended up with, that pavilion would bring forth the plays written about that particular heavenly official from the mortal realm and perform it for all to see. Due to humans’ deep love for making things up, who knew just what kind of shocking play they would see, and one wouldn’t know when they’d be picked, so this game was very much both thrilling and embarrassing.

However, this was also how entertainment was derived. It must be said that each of General Pei’s plays were all exhilarating, simply because the female counterpart was different every time. Sometimes it was a celestial being, sometimes a ghost, sometimes an unmarried lady; each female counterpart was more beautiful than the next, and the stories were each more shameless than the next. The heavenly officials watched with deep interest, waiting for the woman to enter the scene. Sure enough, it didn’t take long before a black-clad lady entered the stage, her voice like a golden oriole. The two actors sang to each other, the lyrics brazenly flirtatious. The more the crowd watched, the more something didn’t feel right, and they started asking around:

“What’s the name of this play?”

⁶⁶ “Drummed Flower Passing” is just hot potato.

“Who’s the woman the general is seducing this time?”

Just then, the “General Pei” on the stage called out: “Noble Jie—”⁶⁷

Below the stage, both Pei Ming and Ling Wen spat out their mouthfuls of wine.

Who else could that “Noble Jie” be? Ling Wen’s full name was Nangong Jie. The heavenly officials were shocked: did the two actually have a past together?!

Ling Wen used a napkin and wiped the corners of his lips, then said flatly,

“There’s no need to think on it. It’s made up.”

Although the two in question were both a little woeful, still, they were both thick-skinned enough. The play continued to “yeee aaahhh yeee aaaahhh” on stage, and the two below pretended not to see. Shi Wudu wouldn’t let them off the hook so easily, however. He smiled, fanning his fan.

“What an exciting play. Any thoughts, you two?”

“Not really,” Ling Wen replied. “This play is old. My divine statues back then weren’t like the ones now. It’s only a folktale. Think about it, in folktales, as long as they’re women, who hasn’t O’ Pei tried to seduce?”

Everyone agreed wholeheartedly.

Pei Ming spoke up, “Hey, you can’t say that. It’s true that I’ve seduced pretty much everyone in folktales, but this one, I really haven’t. Don’t wrong the innocent.”

“By your logic, since the mortals all say I’ve seduced even more male officials whilst I’ve done nothing, wouldn’t I be sitting on pins and needles?” Ling Wen quipped.

Ever since Ling Wen was brought to the heavens via appointment, the folktales all told she did it through seducing another heavenly official; which was also why at the beginning, the Palace of Ling Wen was cold and quiet with very few worshippers. Apparently during a period of intense objection, she was cursed and cursed to the ends of the earth, and there were even those who’d throw menstrual linens and bralettes into her donation boxes. However, if male officials had similar rumours, they’d gain the title “charming” instead, and could take full pleasure in it. Clearly, although the situations were similar, a difference between male and female existed, and the consequences were different.

⁶⁷ “Noble Jie”: the “noble” here doesn’t refer to Ling Wen’s status, but is rather an expression of endearment.

Just as Xie Lian was thinking this, the next round had begun. Shi Wudu was laughing earlier, but this round came to him. The two Tumours next to him raised and courted their hands in a congratulatory gesture in unison.

“Instant karma. Take it graciously.”

Shi Wudu furrowed his brows for an instant, then drank the wine, and those curtains were raised once more. Before the curtains had even reached the very top, two long trills came from within:

“My wiiiiife—”

“Hubbyyyyy—”

Boundlessly affectionate, the tender voices twisted and turned, filled with lingering yearning.

Thus, from below, Xie Lian saw with his own eyes, goosebumps popping up on over half of Shi Wudu and Shi Qingxuan's bodies.

Shi Qingxuan jumped to her feet. “GE—!! HURRY AND CUT IT OFF!”

Shi Wudu immediately shouted, “DROP IT! DROP IT RIGHT NOW!”

Even without seeing, one could easily guess the play picked must be from the folklore of husband and wife between Lord Water Master and Lady Wind Master. Tales of love and hatred would always be fan-favourites when people told stories. If either was already there, good. If not, even better, because then anything could be made up. Technically, whatever the gods had actually done themselves were the conventional legends, but sometimes when they saw what the mortals came up with for them, they couldn't help but be amazed by what was truly legendary.

The moment Shi Wudu spoke up, the curtains really did drop down. The heavenly officials in the audience all wanted to laugh but didn't dare to, suffering from holding in their mirth.

Xie Lian however, smiled and asked, “Lord Wind Master, I didn't know you can call for the curtains to drop?”

Shi Qingxuan was still shaking and replied, “Yeah, it's no big deal. Just donate a hundred thousand merits!”

“...”

Xie Lian sat, speechless, and the third round began. This time, the thunder didn't rumble for very long, and that wine cup was passed to the young man sitting next to Xie Lian.

Seeing this, the reaction from the crowd of heavenly officials was odd. It wasn't fervent, but it wasn't cold; more like they were very interested in seeing the play, but didn't want to be so obvious about it. That young man didn't seem to be too interested in the game, but still drank the wine. He put down the cup and the curtains were raised once more.

Two stood upon that stage. One was a young general with curly hair like that of a stone lion's mane, and although exceedingly exaggerated, he still looked heroically sprightly; so he must be portraying that young heavenly official. The other one had pointy lips and monkey cheeks; the very portrayal of a wretched clown, jumping all over the stage. When the young man faced him, he'd act serious, but greasy and loathsome; when that young man turned around, he'd make faces and take a sword to backstab; no doubt the role of a two-faced, cunning villain.

That clown performed with vigour and over-embellishment, like it was a silly, comedic play, but the reactions from the heavenly officials in the audience were vastly different. Xie Lian noticed that the officials in the lower ranks all laughed uproariously, while the higher-ranking officials like Shi Qingxuan and Shi Wudu all frowned wordlessly, not thinking it amusing whatsoever. At the same time, he also noticed veins popping suddenly on the fists of that young man beside him, and Xie Lian became alarmed. Although he couldn't understand what was going on onstage, he could still guess it was ridiculing another. Besides, even if he didn't know who was who, just the way the play was enacted made one feel extremely uncomfortable. That young man seemed ready to throw a fit, so Xie Lian took a chopstick from the table and hurled it towards the rope controlling the curtains.

The not-so-sharp chopstick brushed by the rope and actually snapped it. The curtains dropped noisily, and the officials all cried in shock.

"How can this be?!"

"What's going on!"

They all looked to Xie Lian, some even rising to their feet. Xie Lian was about to open his mouth when the next second, something exploded next to his ear. It seemed that the young man had shattered that white jaded wine cup in his fist.

It appeared that play had provoked his outrage, and he threw away the shards of that jaded cup in a fit. He jumped to his feet, sprang onto the table, pushed off with his feet and leapt onto that pavilion, barging through the curtains. A number of heavenly officials rushed to lift the curtains, but there was already no one inside. The crowd was in an uproar.

"OH NO OH NO, HIS HIGHNESS QI YING WENT DOWN TO BEAT PEOPLE UP AGAIN!"

Xie Lian wondered, "Qi Ying? The Palace of Qi Ying? The Martial God of the West Quan Yizhen?"

He hurriedly asked Shi Qingxuan, "Lord Wind Master, what's going on? What's with His Highness Qi Ying going down to beat people up again?"

Shi Qingxuan snapped out of it and replied, "Beating people up is just...beating people up. Ahem. You might not believe it, but, Qi Ying frequently beats up his own worshippers."

"..."

That really was the first time he'd ever heard of a heavenly official who dared assault their own followers, since that was something that could destroy their image in a believer's mind. He wanted to inquire some more, but heard a lower heavenly official further away speak up in displeasure:

"Lord Quan really is too immature. Everyone was just having fun, doesn't he know to cooperate a little? Who hasn't been picked on? Did General Pei and Ling Wen Zhen Jun not get laughed at? Besides, it wasn't even him who was being made fun of, so why so angry?"

"Yeah, he really thinks too much of himself. Even if he's mad, there's no need to throw a fit right this second? The banquet is a fun occasion, no one's here to watch his temper! Really..."

"Alright, alright, a kid is a kid. He's not even here anymore, and it'll be more fun without him anyway."

Xie Lian mused while listening to them talk. The feast was only temporarily disrupted, and Ling Wen seemed to have already sent someone to take care of Quan Yizhen's affair. After some officials came out and assuaged the others, the banquet and games continued. Thus, the thunder rumbled and the fourth round of Drummed Flower Passing began.

At first, Xie Lian was only watching other people play; he couldn't blend in and was happy others didn't bother him. He was just about to chat with Shi Qingxuan when unexpectedly, just then, a hand was suddenly extended to him, and passed him that white jaded wine cup.

Ch.91: Temple of a Thousand Lights Endlessly Illuminating the Lingering Night

Xie Lian really didn't think anyone would actually pass the wine cup to him.

Unfortunately for him, he reacted too fast and took the cup without thinking, but the moment he did, he froze. However, when he looked at who it was that passed him the cup, the other party was also dumbfounded—it was Ming Yi.

Turns out, earlier when the wine cup made it into Shi Qingxuan's hand, Shi Qingxuan thought it'd be funny and purposely passed it on to Ming Yi. However, Ming Yi was busy stuffing his face and drinking his wine, and didn't even bother to look up before he passed on the wine cup randomly. Only after the cup was passed did he realize what had happened, and also became speechless. Right at the same time, the thunder stopped rumbling, leaving only the two staring at each other blankly.

Although the one who received the wine cup was Xie Lian, everyone's eyes moved to Feng Xin and Mu Qing instead. It wasn't hard to understand why; Xie Lian had not been heard of for eight hundred years. If this was eight hundred years ago, there'd naturally be plenty of plays depicting his heroism, but they were long lost to time. Besides, no one would pick such a day to set up a stage especially just to put up a play for him. Thus, if they had to find something with the character "Crown Prince of Xianle" in it, then it'd have to be plays with Feng Xin or Mu Qing starring as the protagonist.

This was because, in the plays written for the two heavenly officials in the mortal realm, there were times they'd bring out Xie Lian; usually as a foil, a minor character, or for the sake of making the play even more exciting. Some would write Xie Lian as the villain, arranging for plots like how the lonely, abandoned Mu Qing would be bullied, or how Xie Lian would rob Feng Xin of his beloved, and so on. If such plays were really performed at the Mid-Autumn Banquet, it wouldn't matter if the characters in question would be pleased, the rest of the audience would definitely enjoy it. Xie Lian held that small jaded cup in his hand, and some heavenly officials were already urging him:

"Your Highness, come come come, down the cup!"

A few joined in on the urging, and Feng Xin spoke up from far away.

"His highness can't drink."

The crowd was growing restless.

"Just one cup! It won't do anything."

Jun Wu had been sitting with his hand supporting his temple without a word, but now he too slowly straightened, as if to speak.

Beside Xie Lian, Shi Qingxuan was also asking, "Can you do it or not? If not then whatever, I'll help you throw the hundred thousand merits to drop the curtains."

"..."

Xie Lian was afraid she really would just throw out a hundred thousand merits impulsively. No matter how generous she was, that wasn't the way to do it. Besides, he'd seen pretty much every play there was, anyway, and there wasn't anything worth paying attention to.

So he hastily replied, "No, no, a cup shouldn't be a problem."

Then, he emptied the cup.

Fine brew entered his throat; the area the liquid slid past was first cool, then hot. Xie Lian was feeling a little dizzy, but the taste of that refined drink pushed that dizziness down in an instant. The curtains all around the small pavilion slowly lifted, and the crowd moved their gaze, ready to focus on the play.

They were amazed by what they saw. Two figures stood on stage. One was in white, face covered in foundation, looking windswept and dusty, a bamboo hat on his back; no doubt he must be Xie Lian. The other was a figure in red robes; hair black like raven, handsome and brilliant, eyes bright and lively. The snake wrapped around his arm was stripped away by "Xie Lian". Instantly, that red-robed man snatched that snake back, ditched it aside, then held "Xie Lian" hand without any intent of letting go. Watching that scene play out, it was like a knife violently stabbed his heart.

That scene astonished all the heavenly officials waiting to watch a good show, and of course, Xie Lian himself, too, was astonished. Just then, Jun Wu, who was seated at the head of the feast, chuckled.

"What play is this? Seems it's never been seen before?"

Ling Wen immediately sent for someone to investigate, then replied, "It seems this play is called 'Adventures in the Kingdom of Banyue'. It's newly-written, so it's never been shown before. Tonight is the first time it's been performed in the mortal realm."

Shi Qingxuan turned to Xie Lian. "It's probably written by those merchants after they returned from the Kingdom of Banyue that last time. The merits are saved, there won't be a need to pull the curtains."

Xie Lian didn't comment. For mortals to know about the affairs of the Kingdom of Banyue, the source could only come from those merchants. He recalled that there was a boy named Tian Sheng in that caravan who did indeed say something along the lines of worshipping him as thanks, so perhaps this play was commissioned by him? However, he didn't tell Tian Sheng his name, and a young boy shouldn't have the ability to do something like this.

On the other side of the stage, although the heavenly officials didn't see the play they expected, the performance before them was even more exciting. After all, if the rumours were true, then the role that red-robed man played was none other than Hua Cheng!

There were plenty of plays about Crimson Rain Sought Flower in the mortal realm. However, it was usually something like "The Red Demon Burnt the Temples of Thirty-Three Gods and Not Even The Heavens Could Do Shit", "Crimson Rain Sought Flower Hung the Martial and Civil Gods and Slapped Them Around with But One Hand", and so on; the kind of stories that would make those in the heavens cry silent tears, not wanting to find out just how those plays ended. In any case the protagonist this time was Xie Lian, and for everyone, it never felt like he blended in to be counted as "one of us", so just watching the play did no harm. Besides, the stage of the play was intricate, the production exquisite, the actors extremely well-made-up; truly a great work of benevolence. Thus, there were many who inwardly enjoyed the show, commenting as they watched:

"Is that true? It must be made up. Hua Cheng would never talk like that to anyone!"

"Nonsense! Pure nonsense!"

"Who do they take Hua Cheng for in this play?! Wake up! This isn't a romantic play, goodness, how daring!"

This was a play written especially for him after all, so Xie Lian watched it attentively. If he must say so earnestly, it wasn't a bad play. The actors looked good, the story was good; just, as one of the ones portrayed, he had a very very small criticism: the two protagonists seemed to be overly close.

The one who played him was a really good actor, but every time he opened his mouth to call "San Lang", while the tone wasn't up and down and full of yearning, Xie Lian thought it was even more unsettling than when "Lady Wind Master" called "Lord Water Master" "hubbyyyyy" earlier. Also, there seemed to be too many little gestures: hooking arms, hugging shoulders, carrying him; somehow, there was something that was not right.

However, if he really thought about it, when he called San Lang, that was indeed the way he'd call him; those intimate gestures really did seem to have been done too. He didn't think there was anything wrong with it at the time, and watching it now, technically there wasn't anything wrong still. Looking at the other heavenly officials, although they condemned it as nonsense on their lips, they seemed to be fully enjoying the show; watching with their eyes unmoving, their interest enthusiastic, so Xie Lian kept his mouth shut.

As they watched, Shi Wudu suddenly spoke up, "Who are those two little squires in the back?"

Hearing the word “squire”, both Feng Xin and Mu Qing inconspicuously froze.

“They’re not squires,” Ling Wen replied. “They should be two junior martial officials from the Middle Court. They were appointed by the Palaces of Nan Yang and Xuan Zhen to help His Highness out at the time.”

That the Palaces of Nan Yang and Xuan Zhen would actually send people to assist Xie Lian was truly extraordinary news, as impossible as Pei Ming courteously rejecting the advances of a rare beauty, and all the heavenly officials turned to look.

Ling Wen added, “They went willingly.”

Xie Lian smiled. “I forgot to ask, how are Nan Feng and Fu Yao? How come I didn’t see them come out to play today?”

“Nan Feng...is...” Feng Xin said.

Mu Qing said flatly, “Fu Yao is in detention.”

Feng Xin immediately said, “Nan Feng is also in detention.”

Xie Lian “oh”-ed and commented, “Both of them are locked up? What a shame.”

While they conversed, the curtains dropped on that exhilarating play. Although it was determined by everyone that it was written by an ignorant believer with obscene intentions, watching an obscene Hua Cheng was still fully entertaining, and the crowd applauded in cheer. However, Pei Su was exiled because of what happened at the Banyue Pass, so after the entertainment was over, everyone still had to mind Pei Ming.

“How’s your Little Pei doing, General Pei?” Shi Wudu inquired.

Pei Ming poured himself a glass and drank, shaking his head. “How well can he do? His heart isn’t in the right place, I don’t care anymore.”

Shi Qingxuan couldn’t listen anymore, and jeered, “So, in General Pei’s eyes, where’s the right place for his heart? Your Little Pei’s future is a future, but the little lady’s future is nothing?”

Her tone was rude, and Shi Wudu’s eyes swept over.

“Qingxuan, mind your manners!”

The moment he reprimanded, Shi Qingxuan lowered her head demurely. Seeing this, Pei Ming laughed.

“Water Master-xiong⁶⁸, your little brother is quite impressive; only you can keep him in line. Him messing with me isn’t really anything, but if in the future he messed with the wrong people, they won’t let it go so easily for your sake.”

Shi Wudu opened his fan and continued to lecture his little brother. “Did you hear what General Pei said? Also, how many times do I have to tell you not to walk around outside in that form all the time, what a disgrace. I don’t care what appearance you like, you must use your true form when you’re out!”

Although Shi Qingxuan loved her lady form passionately and wouldn’t stand for his reprimand, still, she didn’t dare oppose her brother.

Xie Lian thought, “The Wind Master says she’s not afraid of her older brother, but that doesn’t seem to be entirely true.”

Yet unexpectedly, Shi Wudu ended the lecture with: “What if you bump into someone strong in both spiritual power and ill intent, like General Pei?!”

Ling Wen laughed unkindly, and Pei Ming almost spat out his wine again.

“Water Master-xiong! If you keep that up, we can’t be pals anymore.”

After the round of feasting was past, in the midst of all the socializing and networking came the final act of the night, the Battle of the Lanterns.

Within the Heavenly Court, all the candlelight and lamps were extinguished; except for the moonlight, all was dim. The Banquet sat near the lake, and when the clouds and mists on the surface were waved away, through the clear moving waters the deep, dark mortal realm could be seen.

The Battle of the Lanterns was a competition to see which heavenly official had the most number of Blessings Lanterns offered from their largest, most renowned temple. One Blessings Lantern of Everlasting Light was hard to buy with a thousand gold, and would not easily be extinguished. The order of the Battle of the Lanterns was formed from the lowest count to the highest, and when it was an official’s turn, the lanterns offered by their worshippers would float to the heavens, brightening the long, dark night, beautiful and glorious.

The Great Martial Palace had nine-hundred and sixty-one this year; a count close to a thousand, and also a number never reached before in history. All the heavenly officials felt that next year, the count would surely break a thousand, but that wasn’t the point. If first place would always be first place, then first place would lose its meaning, so when it came to the Battle of the Lanterns, the Great Martial Palace was automatically removed from the competition.

What was dumbfounding was, the moment the Battle of the Lanterns began, the first one up was the Rain Master. When Xie Lian saw that one little Blessings Lantern leisurely and errantly float up in the sky and heard “The Palace of the Rain Master, one lantern!”, he almost suspected maybe he did get drunk and hadn’t sobered up. There was no way there was only one lantern.

To make sure he wasn’t drunk, he asked Shi Qingxuan, “Is that right?”

“It is,” Shi Qingxuan replied. “It really is just the one. And that one was lit by the bull from the Rain Master’s own house for the sake of showing face at the feast.”

Self-offering. What a familiar sentiment. Xie Lian pondered, the Rain Master controlled rain, and was thus the god of agriculture.

He guessed, “Is it because the worshippers of the Rain Master are mostly farmers, so they don’t have the funds for offerings?”

“Your Highness, do you have some kind of misunderstanding of farmers?” Shi Qingxuan said. “A lot of farmers are wealthy, okay? This was only because the Lord Rain Master had said it was better to farm than to use the money for offerings, so the followers had always offered fresh fruits and vegetables instead.”

Hearing this, Xie Lian was extremely envious. “What a marvelous thing,” he thought.

However, Shi Qingxuan added, “And then later the Lord Rain Master also said not to waste anything, so usually after a couple days the worshippers would take home the offerings and eat them themselves.”

“...”

At the beginning of the battle, the numbers were all scattered and sparse, the lights belonging to the lower-ranking officials, the count never reaching over ten, and no one paid it any mind. However, as the battle continued, as the light of the lanterns grew brighter, everyone paid more attention. If it wasn’t for the designated heavenly official who announced the count, it’d be impossible to count the lanterns floating up so tightly-knit. Xie Lian didn’t know at all what was going on, so he didn’t comment on anything; only focusing on appreciating the beautiful scene of lanterns brightening the black, long night while listening to everyone else’s analysis of how the battle was going. Although personally, he didn’t think there was really anything to analyze. After about two incense time, it was finally time for the grand finale. The fight for top ten of the Battle of the Lanterns at the Mid-Autumn Festival had begun.

The bottom of the top ten, Xie Lian heard the announcer official shouting:

“THE PALACE OF QI YING, FOUR HUNDRED AND TWENTY-ONE LANTERNS!”

Quan Yizhen had long since left the feast, so when the other officials heard the count, they didn't bother to hide the clicking of their tongues anymore. That Martial God of the West was young, but his headwind was strong. To other officials of around the same years of experience, just two hundred Blessings Lanterns was already plenty; yet he more than doubled that count. Even Lang Qianqiu who ascended earlier didn't have as many lanterns, so he was definitely someone impressive. However, Xie Lian felt that the young man really wasn't that well-received in the heavens, because other than himself and Shi Qingxuan, there was practically no one else who was sincerely awed by that number.

The next one, Palace of the Earth Master, four hundred and forty-four lanterns. Other than sipping two more mouthfuls of soup, Ming Yi didn't express anything else; Shi Qingxuan was more excited than he was, repeatedly claiming “too few, too few”. Because no one else was very close with the lord Earth Master, they only clapped politely to congratulate. Soon after, it was Shi Qingxuan herself; the Palace of the Wind Master, five hundred and twenty-three lanterns.

How popular someone was, was something easily seen. Once the lantern count for the Palace of the Wind Master was announced, Shi Qingxuan hadn't even said anything and the applause from the banquet roared; hollers and cheers of “CONGRATULATIONS!” and “AS EXPECTED!” everywhere.

Shi Qingxuan was quite proud, standing up to wave at the crowd, and gleefully shouted at Shi Wudu, “Ge! I'm eighth this year!”

She was acting like a child begging her parents for rewards after having been praised by her teacher, and Xie Lian couldn't help but smile.

Shi Wudu however, berated: “Only the eighth, what's there to be happy about?!”

His words were truly wildly arrogant. In the entire Heavenly Court, there was no one who was a nobody. Yet, five hundred Blessings Lanterns, ranking high as the eighth, became nothing more than “only eighth” from his lips, so then the ones who ranked lower than eighth, wouldn't they be worth less than that? It wasn't like he didn't know what he said was arrogant, but he had to say it anyway, because he wasn't afraid. Shi Qingxuan's face dropped.

Shi Wudu fanned his fan and added, with difficulty, “But, there are more lanterns than last year. Next year must be better.”

Hearing this, Shi Qingxuan smiled and laughed again. At the banquet, it was only Ming Yi who was stuffing his face without a care and not cheering for her, so Shi Qingxuan smacked him twice, asking for some congratulations. Ming Yi ignored her completely and continued to devour the food. Shi Qingxuan was outraged, demanding for him to applaud her, and next to them Xie Lian was going to suffocate from laughing.

The next up, the Palace of Ling Wen, five hundred and thirty-six lanterns.

Amongst all the civil gods, Ling Wen was considered number one. However, not too many civil gods congratulated him, and instead it was the martial gods who sent their regards. Xie Lian congratulated him from afar, and on this end, Shi Wudu and Pei Ming demanded he hold a celebratory feast. On the other end, grumbles from other heavenly officials could be heard; complaining that Ling Wen only had so many worshippers because she used a male form, that Ling Wen kissed the asses of martial gods seeing how they were more popular at the moment and had no time for other civil gods, that Ling Wen held the most feasts, that there'd be escorts at those feasts, etcetera, etcetera. Xie Lian shook his head and had only one thought in mind: it wasn't easy being a woman official.

Following Ling Wen were the Palaces of Nan Yang and Xuan Zheng, each counted at five hundred and seventy-two and five hundred and seventy-three. Mu Qing looked pleased, while Feng Xin didn't appear happy nor angry, seemingly uncaring. Xie Lian was mystified; how did the count come so close? That was too much of a coincidence? He asked Shi Qingxuan in a low voice; turns out, because the two of them had a similar background, similar might, and territories right next to each other, plus their unfriendly relationship with one another, the worshippers on both sides both fought each other to win, vowing that however many lanterns the other offered, they must offer just one more. They didn't ask to be number one, only just better than the other. They'd use their everything, and every year there'd be victory and defeat. This year, at the very last second, the Palace of Xuan Zhen finally squeezed out one more lantern, winning over the Palace of Nan Yang. The worshippers looked like they had won a battle, and were crazily celebrating.

Hearing this, Xie Lian couldn't help but think: *"Rather than fighting each other to death outside, shouldn't those people go home to celebrate the holiday? It's the Mid-Autumn Festival!"*⁶⁹

The next one, the Palace of Ming Guang, five hundred and eighty lanterns.

This number was quite impressive. Yet, Pei Ming didn't look pleased, because compared to the year before, the number of Blessings Lanterns the Palace of Ming Guang received was actually less. It was a shock to have something happen to the Deputy General Pei Su, and this year they lost close to a hundred lanterns. If it wasn't for Pei Ming's strong foundation, he just might have lost more. Neither Shi Wudu nor Ling Wen congratulated him, and only patted his shoulders.

⁶⁹ The Mid-Autumn Festival, like Lunar New Year, is a time for family reunions. Xie Lian was amazed that Mu Qing and Feng Xin's followers would rather fight over offering lanterns than go home and be with family.

Up until now, Xie Lian discovered, the count for the Blessings Lanterns of those heavenly officials were all very close together; only tens and twenties apart, no one really standing out. Which meant everyone was pretty much the same, and no one was really winning. He was just thinking this when that announcer official shouted.

“THE PALACE OF THE WATER MASTER, SEVEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTEEN LANTERNS!”

The banquet was in an uproar, and the sound of amazement was everywhere.

Once the heavenly officials all came to, they fought each other to send forth their congratulations. Shi Wudu only sat there and didn't rise; not looking like he was particularly impressed, and that all this was perfectly natural. This was probably the second heavenly official who came close to the count of the Great Martial Palace in the past several centuries. The first time Xie Lian ascended was too far in the past, and Blessings Lanterns back then were even harder to come by, so it couldn't be compared. However, they say “Man Dies for Wealth, Birds Die for Food”: the people's passionate love for money would never decrease, as expected of the God of Wealth!

Shi Qingxuan was even more excited than as if she were to receive seven hundred lanterns, and applauded with force, shouting to Xie Lian, “IT'S MY BROTHER! IT'S MY BROTHER!”

Xie Lian laughed. “I know, it's your brother!”

At the banquet, it was still only Ming Yi who was working hard at eating, all by his lonesome. Truthfully, Xie Lian thought out of everyone present, only he took the “feast” literally and seriously, attending specifically for the food part; as if having played the part of a spy at the Ghost City starved him, and he was working to refill his stomach to the brim tonight. When Xie Lian thought back to the street food sold at the Ghost City stalls, he could understand wholeheartedly. He couldn't help but wonder, would Hua Cheng ever stroll through the Ghost City streets every now and then?

The most thrilling mystery had now been revealed, and tonight, each heavenly official had watched plays to their hearts' content, socialized, and were now satisfied; they rose to their feet ready to take their leave.

Unexpectedly, Shi Wudu suddenly frowned, snapped his fan shut, and spoke: “Wait.”

If anyone else were to say “wait”, they probably wouldn't be as effective. However, someone like Shi Wudu was known as the “Water Tyrant” for a reason. Like he was born to give command, the moment he opened his mouth, others couldn't help but obey. Everyone sat back down in their seats, confused.

“The top ten are out, does the Lord Water Master have anything else to add?”

“Was he going to give out merits, too?” Xie Lian wondered.

“The top ten are out?” Shi Wudu fanned his fan.

No one knew what he had meant, only Shi Qingxuan, who suddenly cried out.

“...No. NO NO NO. THE TOP TEN AREN'T ALL OUT! Even if we count the Great Martial Palace, only nine have been announced so far!”

Everyone was stunned, and soon they started muttering:

“Only nine?”

“Really, I counted, there really were only nine!”

“Someone else is ranked higher than Lord Water Master???”

“What?! Who can it be? I don't know anyone like that?!”

Just then, a bright light white as day exploded into the blackened night.

That light was lanterns.

Like thousands upon millions of fish swimming through gorges to the sea, countless lanterns slowly floated up.

They shimmered and gleamed in the dark night, radiant and brilliant; like floating souls of a magnificent dream, exceedingly beautiful, brightening the blackened mortal realm. In the face of such a striking sight, none could speak. All held their breaths, their words broken.

Xie Lian watched that sky full of lanterns in dumbfounded awe. It was like his breathing had stopped and nothing could be heard, and he remained dazed for a good while. It was only after some time before he realized something wrong.

The eyes of every heavenly official at the banquet were on him. Turns out, that announcer official had raised his trembling hand and pointed at him.

Bewildered, Xie Lian asked, “...What is it?”

No one answered, and Xie Lian pointed to himself.

“...Me?”

Next to him, Shi Qingxuan patted his shoulder once. “...Yes. You.”

“...”

Xie Lian was still in shock. “Me what? What about me?”

That announcer official swallowed a couple times with difficulty, and finally spoke again.

Thus, the hundreds of heavenly officials present heard a voice trembling with disbelief:

“Qiandeng Temple⁷⁰, the Palace of the Crown Prince, three...three...

“Three thousand lanterns!”

⁷⁰ “Qiandeng” translates to “A Thousand Lights”.

Ch.92: Temple of a Thousand Lights Endlessly Illuminating the Lingering Night 2

Three thousand lanterns!

All was silent when suddenly, there was a tidal wave-like uproar.

Never—not even the Great Martial Palace that always sat at the head, solid as the mountains—had anyone won three thousand lanterns in one night at the Mid-Autumn Festival Banquet. In fact, no one had ever imagined such a number. Even just one thousand was already difficult to pass. Three thousand. That was truly unheard of, not a precedent in history, and it was even more than the count of all the other top ten heavenly officials added together!

One can imagine, at that moment, just how incredulous every official was, and some even blurted out:

“That must be a mistake!”

“It must’ve been counted wrong...”

Yet, nevermind thinking that the announcer official, who had been counting for the Mid-Autumn Festival’s Battle of the Lanterns for years, could just happen to be wrong this one time. Just by looking at that massive band of flowing lights, even if they were to backtrack a million steps, that number count couldn’t be wrong; even if it was wrong the miscount could only be less, not more.

Thus, another heavenly official said, “Could it be that those lanterns aren’t real Blessings Lanterns? Maybe they’re just ordinary lanterns?”

That basically meant “it’s fraud!”, and there were a few who agreed. However, Shi Qingxuan spoke up:

“How can they be ordinary lanterns? Ordinary lanterns and Blessings Lanterns have completely different makes, and they can’t fly up to the heavens, so how could these be fake?”

If it was Xie Lian who argued, then the rest would probably continue to doubt. Yet because it was Shi Qingxuan who spoke up, and Shi Wudu was also present, no one dared say much else. Hitting a dead end, they changed track:

“Everyone, where is this ‘Qiandeng Temple’? When was it built? Who built it? Does any heavenly colleague know?”

The announcer official replied, “No...but ‘Qiandeng Temple’ was clearly written on the lanterns that floated up.”

“But I’ve never heard of any ‘Qiandeng Temple’?!”

“Yeah, me neither!”

Xie Lian finally snapped out of his shocked reverie, and when he heard the complaints, he said quite earnestly, “Everyone, truth to be told, not only have you all never heard of it, I haven’t ever heard of it either.”

There was no way this came about naturally?!

All of the officials lost their minds; destroyed by this unexpected thunder, incredulous and disbelieving, their tongues spitting with talk.

Xie Lian really wanted to tell them: “It’s only a game, why is everyone taking it so seriously?”

However, first, very few took this “game” as a game, and second, he ranked first place in this “game”, so if he said anything he’d be asking for it. The other heavenly officials couldn’t say it either because they didn’t place first, so if they said anything it’d be downplaying their not getting number one, making it sound exceedingly awkward.

Just then, Pei Ming chuckled. “I did say that Crimson Rain Sought Flower didn’t kidnap His Highness out of ill intent but no one believed me. Now will you all believe me?”

With his reminder, everyone was enlightened in an instant.

If it really was Hua Cheng, then it wasn’t impossible for him to simply light up three thousand Blessings Lanterns like it was nothing!

Was there anything going on between Xie Lian and Hua Cheng? Just what kind of relationship they had was truly a mystery. At the moment, the majority still thought it was more believable to say Hua Cheng did this out of ill intent. There was no reason why Hua Cheng, who had always been unfriendly towards the heavens, would suddenly change his attitude in the face of Xie Lian. Yet, based on Hua Cheng’s inconceivable lawlessness, he could very well become nice towards someone out of the blue without reason. After this Mid-Autumn Festival Banquet, one would be hard-pressed to say Hua Cheng had ill intent. After all, it was three thousand Blessings Lanterns! Even for the Water Master who controlled wealth, this wasn’t something he could do just because he wanted to. Amidst all the chaos, suddenly, the sound of steady clapping came from the head of the feast.

The officials looked to the sound, and saw Jun Wu clapping slowly as he smiled at Xie Lian.

“Congratulations, Xianle.”

Xie Lian knew Jun Wu intended to help take the heat off of him, and was grateful, bowing his head.

Jun Wu sighed in awe. "You always manage to create miracles."

Seeing that exchange, the feast quieted down. After some hesitation, all finally took Jun Wu's lead and applauded, sending their congratulations.

With this, no matter how shocked, all the heavenly gods had to admit that this Highness the Crown Prince had always produced phenomena. It was like this back then, and it was most certainly the case now!

The Mid-Autumn Festival Banquet had ended, and the relentlessly-rumbling Thunder Master also packed up. The one who cheered the hardest throughout it all was of course Shi Qingxuan; no matter whose ranking rolled out, she would be the first to applaud. Except Pei Ming's. At first, Xie Lian wondered if his stealing the Water Master's thunder, bumping him from second place to third place, would cause his ire, but looking at Shi Wudu, it didn't seem he was displeased. Pei Ming and Ling Wen both congratulated him, and afterwards the three started planning to whose little mountain hot springs they would go for tuina massage.

Hearing them, Shi Qingxuan asked, "Ge, you're all going out to play again?"

Shi Wudu folded his fan and answered, "En."

Ling Wen crossed his arms and chuckled. "Lord Wind Master, want to come and play too?"

"No, I've already got plans with people," Shi Qingxuan said.

Shi Wudu frowned. "I hope it's not with anyone unsavoury."

"Is there anyone more unsavoury than General Pei?" Ling Wen quipped.

"Noble Jie, shut up now," Pei Ming warned.

Xie Lian waited until after the two brothers spoke a few words to each other, then prepared to leave the banquet with Shi Qingxuan. On the way out, they bumped into Mu Qing; who knew if he had been watching Xie Lian, but he didn't look so pleased anymore. Feng Xin, however, was the exact opposite. When he rose to his feet to leave the feast, he called to Xie Lian.

"Congratulations."

Xie Lian nodded to him too. "Thanks."

Lang Ying was settled in the Palace of the Wind Master at the Heavenly Court. That child looked to be clean and tidy, but still rather shy. When Xie Lian picked him up and descended, he didn't talk much on the road. Xie Lian first went into town to buy some fresh fruits for him to eat, and didn't go immediately straight back to Puqi Village. He first went into a piece of nearby woods.

Sure enough, that piece of woods was quite lively; a bare-chested young man was yelling and cussing, hung upside-down by a white silk band. Profanities and vulgarities spilled from his mouth and a little child squatted under him, slapping away mosquitos. Xie Lian made Lang Ying stand outside, and he himself strolled over leisurely. When that young man saw him, he raged.

"XIE LIAN YOU PIECE OF SHIT, FUCKING LET ME DOWN THIS INSTANT! I'M GONNA DIE I'M GONNA DIE I'M GONNA DIE!"

Xie Lian however, said warmly, "It must be years since you last got bitten by mosquitos. Is it so bad to give you a taste of being alive again?"

That young man was indeed Qi Rong. Xie Lian had expected him to be troublesome, that for sure he'd instigate Guzi to help him cut Ruoye, so Xie Lian had already instructed Ruoye that should Qi Rong try to escape, to drag him to the woods and take care of him. Qi Rong was using the flesh of another against Xie Lian, and Xie Lian couldn't beat him to a pulp; however, he could still make him suffer some little pains of the flesh. Xie Lian had chopped lumber and scavenged before in this area, and suffered getting bitten all over by mosquitos. Currently, it seemed, Qi Rong was also bitten all over, looking more miserable than dying, and cussed loudly.

"WHERE'S YOUR SNOW-WHITE LOTUS HEART! WHY CAN'T YOU PRETEND TO BE A SICKENINGLY SWEET GOOD PERSON NOW!"

Guzi hugged Xie Lian's leg and wailed. "GEGE, PLEASE LET MY DAD DOWN! HE'S BEEN HANGING FOR SO LONG!"

Xie Lian ruffled his hair and immediately, Qi Rong yelped as he fell to the ground in a heap.

To return to Puqi Village, they had to traverse through that maple grove. Xie Lian gripped in his hand a bare-chested, cussing young man, and behind him followed two little kids, one crying and sobbing, the other sullen and quiet.

"What a freakish group," Xie Lian thought.

As they hiked up the hills, he cautioned the two little ones behind him, "Watch your step. It's easy to trip here."

That was the truth. Sometimes when Xie Lian was late in returning from town after collecting scraps and walked this path at night, maybe it was because of his luck, but he'd always trip or fall.

Hearing this, Qi Rong immediately cried, "DEAR GOD! PLEASE MAKE THIS PERSON FALL TO HIS DEATH RIGHT HERE RIGHT NOW!"

Xie Lian found that hilarious. "You're a ghost, what are you doing begging the heavens?"

Just then, he suddenly felt like there was a warm glow faintly emerging from the far distance; the dark, obscure path on the ground seemed to be illuminated, the road brightening. When he looked up, sure enough, it wasn't just his imagination. There really was light on the horizon.

It was light from those three thousand Blessings Lanterns of Everlasting Light.

The floating lanterns flowed in the night sky, imposing and invigorating; even the shine of the stars and the moon was overcome. Xie Lian watched, dazed, and after a moment, he sighed a whisper:

"...Thank you."

Qi Rong didn't know what that was about and snickered. "Why the fucking thanks? Other people are just playing around; they're not lit for you, stop thinking so highly of yourself."

Xie Lian grinned, but didn't say anything, and didn't rebuke either. He only said, "To have beauty exist in this world is already in itself something to be grateful for."

There was beauty in his heart, and he wasn't afraid of any killjoys. Borrowing the light of those lanterns in the distance, he continued forward.

Ch.93: Pregnant with Evil; A New Wave Disturbs Peace

It didn't take more than two days before Xie Lian came to face a major crisis:

There was nothing to eat in the shrine.

If he was by himself, in a day, he'd only need just a couple steamed buns with a small plate of pickled veggies. Maybe pick some cucumbers from the fields to munch, and he'd take care of himself perfectly; the offerings of daily needs from the Puqi villagers were more than sufficient. Yet now, there were three more mouths to feed in the shrine. Two live humans and a half-dead ghost; it didn't take long before they cleaned him out of his rations.

The two children were alright, at least. Qi Rong the half-dead ghost, possessing a full-grown man refusing to come out, cursed Xie Lian out on one hand for feeding him shitty food, but ate more than anyone else on the other. Xie Lian really wanted to stuff a blackened pan into his mouth.

After making sure the pan couldn't be easily pulled out, Xie Lian decided to take the two little ones out to walk around the markets; see if they could collect some junk, then find them a good meal.

If it was said that Xie Lian's luck was usually bad, then the Xie Lian today had especially bad luck. After walking around town, there was actually not a single scrap to be collected. Finally, he stood at a crowded intersection and made a decision: he would pick up his old line of work.

Thus, he settled the two kids aside before he stood in the middle of the intersection and called out in a loud and clear voice:

“DEAR FOLKS AND NEIGHBOURS! TODAY IS THE FIRST TIME THIS SERVANT HAS COME TO THIS TREASURED PLACE. I WILL PERFORM A FEW SHAMEFUL TRICKS. THEY ARE EMBARRASSING, BUT I HOPE EVERYONE WILL CUT ME SOME SLACK AND GIVE THIS POOR MAN A HAND, DONATE A BITE TO EAT, GRANT SOME COINS FOR THE ROAD...”

Xie Lian had the air of a saint, the appearance of a cultivator; his sleeves clean and fluttering, his voice clear and sonorous, energetic and invigourating. Many on the streets who were idle soon came and surrounded him.

“What can you do? Show us something neat.”

“How about plate spinning?” Xie Lian said cheerfully.

The crowd waved their hands. “That's not hard at all, it's child's play! What else can you do?”

Xie Lian then said, "How's shattering boulders on my chest?"

The crowd groused, "That's too old-school, too old! Anything else?"

Only then did Xie Lian come to realize, even street performances needed to keep up with the times. All of his best tricks were now nothing more than yesterday's news, and there were none left who'd appreciate his craft. The crowd was going to break up, and without any other choice, he brought out his ultimate technique; he took out from his sleeves a set of protection charms he made with his own hands, and called out again.

"Free protection charms for watching the performance! They're handmade, don't walk on by and miss out on this chance!"

Hearing that there were freebies, the dispersed crowd soon came back.

"What kind of protection charms? Which temple blessed them? Is it the Heavenly Martial Emperor?"

"Do you have any for wealth? Give me a wealth charm please, thanks!"

"I want one from Ju Yang, please save one for me!"

"No, no," Xie Lian explained. "The one I'm giving away is from the Crown Prince of Xianle, blessed by Puqi Shrine, for sure effective."

Of course it'd be effective. Other heavenly officials had at least thousands of people praying to them daily; their ears rang with white noise, and with even just a little too much work, they'd pass it down to the junior officials under them. As for Xie Lian, at most he'd only have a few praying to him at once, so who was more likely to actually hear prayers?

The crowd scoffed. "What the hell, we've never heard of him before!"

Xie Lian added, "It's okay if you've never heard of him. Puqi Shrine is located just seven miles out at Puqi Village. Everyone's welcome to pay a visit, and there's no need to bring offerings..."

Before he even finished, the crowd had already broken up. Every single one of the spectators littered the charms away soon after, and Xie Lian trotted over to pick them up, patting them clean before stuffing them back into his sleeves, not looking the least bit bothered. As he picked, a pair of cloth shoes stopped before him. Xie Lian looked up and saw Lang Ying's raven-black eyes peeking out from under the bandages, watching him intently.

"What's wrong?" Xie Lian asked gently. "Go over there and sit with Guzi. Just wait for me for a bit."

Lang Ying was quiet. Just then, the two doors to a mansion at the end of the large street suddenly burst open, and a man was thrown out, angry shouts following behind him.

“QUACK DOCTOR!”

The pedestrians on the streets immediately rushed over to watch the show. The thundering footsteps trampled by, and those protection charms that weren't yet picked up were instantly crushed, dirtied, and ripped. Xie Lian watched speechlessly, and gave up on saving them. He made Lang Ying go back to watch over Guzi, then he himself went to check things out. As he approached the entrance to that mansion, a man looking to be a wealthy merchant was arguing with an old man who looked like a doctor.

That wealthy merchant raged, “WHAT DID YOU TELL ME WHEN YOU CAME YESTERDAY? DIDN'T YOU SAY THERE WAS NOTHING TO WORRY ABOUT? HOW DO YOU EXPLAIN TODAY? MY WIFE DIDN'T FALL OR EAT ANYTHING BAD, SO HOW DID THINGS BECOME LIKE THIS?!”

That doctor, however, cried injustice: “When I came to diagnose your wife yesterday, she was perfectly fine! I think in regards to this, you need to find a cultivator, not a doctor!”

That wealthy merchant was outraged; he stood with a hand on his hip and the other pointing accusingly. “MY SON ISN'T LOST YET, SO WHY ARE YOU CURSING HIM, YOU FAKE DOCTOR?! WATCH YOURSELF, I JUST MIGHT SUE FOR ALL OF YOUR ASSETS!”

The doctor picked up and held his medical case. “Even if you sue me, there's nothing to be done. I really can't read that pulse! I've never seen anything like it before in my life!!”

The crowd jeered: “Find yourself a new doctor!” “Maybe go find a cultivator!”

Xie Lian instinctively felt there was something off about this affair, and raised his hand in the sea of people.

“Please look here! There's a cultivator here! I'm a cultivator!”

Everyone turned to look at him, puzzled. “WEREN'T YOU A STREET PERFORMER???”

Xie Lian explained politely, “That was only a side-gig. Thank you.” He walked up to the merchant. “Will you bring me to see the esteemed madame?”

Within the mansion came shrill screaming, no doubt all the ladies-in-waiting were panicking. The new doctor called by the wealthy merchant wasn't going to arrive just yet, and men in desperate plight will do anything, so he really dragged Xie Lian in the door to see his wife, and Xie Lian grabbed that doctor on the way in too.

When the men entered the bedchamber, there was blood all over the floor, and upon the large flower-curtained bed laid a young woman, her face white as a sheet from severe pain. Her agony was so acute she'd likely be hugging her belly and rolling about, had the ladies-in-waiting not held her down. The moment Xie Lian walked through the door, he could feel all the hairs on his neck stand.

That chamber was heavy with the essence of evil, and that essence came from one place.

That woman's belly!

Xie Lian immediately blocked everyone behind him and shouted, "DON'T MOVE! THERE'S SOMETHING IN HER BELLY THAT'S NOT RIGHT!"

That wealthy merchant was terrified. "Is my wife about to give birth?!"

That doctor and the older ladies-in-waiting couldn't stand for that ignorance, and said, "It's only been five months, how can she give birth now?!"

That wealthy merchant raged at the doctor. "If she wasn't going to give birth, and you have no clue what's wrong, then you're a quack!! YOU CAN'T EVEN READ A PULSE!"

That woman was going to faint, and Xie Lian shouted again, "EVERYONE, BE QUIET!"

Then he flipped out Fangxin. Seeing that he suddenly unsheathed a long, black weapon, everyone jumped in surprise.

"WHAT ARE YOU PLANNING?!"

Then they saw Xie Lian drop his hand, and that sword actually floated in mid-air!

Now everyone was astonished.

Fangxin hung from above, the tip of the blade facing down, pointing at the swollen belly of that woman. The killing aura of the sword was intense, and the crowd saw that woman's belly suddenly move; a lump of flesh raised up, jerking left, then right. It thrashed about until finally, that woman hacked and coughed violently, a stream of black smoke emerging from her mouth!

Fangxin had been waiting, and that sword immediately struck that black smoke. That woman let out a long wail of, "MY SON!", and instantly passed out on the spot. Xie Lian called back the sword and sheathed it anew on his back, then turned to the doctor.

"It's fine now."

The doctor was eyes wide, mouth open, and Xie Lian waved in front of him a couple times before he hesitantly approached. That wealthy merchant looked joyous.

“Is my son safe?”

However, after the doctor felt the woman’s pulse, he said, his voice trembling with trepidation, “It’s gone...”

That wealthy merchant was dumbfounded, and after a moment of shock, he roared, “GONE? HOW DID SHE JUST MISCARRY?!”

Xie Lian, however, turned to face him. “The madame didn’t miscarry, the baby is gone. Gone, do you understand?”

“What’s the difference?” that wealthy merchant demanded.

“Quite different,” Xie Lian said. “Miscarriage is miscarriage. ‘Gone’ means this: there was indeed a child in madame’s belly at first, but now, that child has disappeared.”

Sure enough, the abdomen of that woman was swollen at first, but now, there was no sign of external injury, yet it had shrivelled down, looking exceedingly unnatural. That wealthy merchant was shocked.

“...wasn’t my son just there in her belly?!”

“The one inside earlier wasn’t your child,” Xie Lian explained. “The one blowing up madame’s belly was that cloud of black smoke!”

After the doctor made sure the woman was only passed out and there weren’t any life-threatening signs, they left the chamber.

That wealthy merchant asked, “Sir Cultivator, how should I address you? Which temple did you come from? Which deity do you worship?”

“No need for the ‘sir’, and the name is Xie,” Xie Lian responded.

At first he wanted to say he was from “Puqi Shrine”, but when the words came to his lips, for some reason it turned into “Qiandeng Temple”. When those three words left his lips, his face was oddly hot.

That wealthy merchant “oh”-ed and said, “I’ve never heard of it before. It must be far?”

Xie Lian didn’t know how far it was, either. He answered softly, “En...”

After a few courtesy greetings, that wealthy merchant finally came to the point, his voice full of horror.

“Daozhang⁷¹! What was that monster earlier? What my wife nurtured in her belly, had it always been...that thing? That cloud of black smoke?!”

With the subject change, Xie Lian also turned serious. “It might not have always been that way. Didn’t you say when the doctor came yesterday, madame was still perfectly fine? Her pulse was alright then, but messed up today; I’m afraid it was only last night that something happened to the baby. Please think, last night, did the madame do anything? Or did anything strange happen?”

“Nothing happened at all last night,” that wealthy merchant said. “My wife never left the house! Ever since she paid her respects at the Palace of Ju Yang and received this child, we built a small Ju Yang shrine at home, and she’d chant and burn incense without ever leaving the front or back doors. She’s extremely devout!”

“...” Xie Lian thought if Feng Xin knew someone worshipped him like this, then it’d really be a riot. After some thought, he asked, “Then, did she have any strange dreams?”

That wealthy merchant blinked, and said, “Yes!”

Xie Lian was re-energized, and that wealthy merchant continued.

“Daozhang, you have such godly premonitions! My wife really did have a strange dream last night. She dreamt of a small child playing with her, calling her ‘mom’. Halfway through the dream, she felt something kicking her belly, then she woke up. Afterwards, she came to me happily to tell me that the child in her belly couldn’t wait to see mom and dad’s faces, so the child came to greet her first. I was humouring her at the time too!”

In an instant Xie Lian figured it out, and said firmly, “It’s that child that’s problematic!”

After a pause, he asked, “Around how old was that child? What did it look like? Did the madame say anything?”

⁷¹ “Daozhang” is the polite address for cultivators. Since cultivators cultivate spiritual power, they were also considered exorcists, which was why the doctor told the merchant to look for a cultivator instead of a doctor.

That wealthy merchant was covered in cold sweat from shock. "I'm afraid she won't remember. At the time she already told me she wasn't sure how old the child was, only that it was fairly young, begging her to hold it; when she held it, it was light."

Xie Lian hummed, then said, "I'm going to ask a few more questions; please answer them honestly, otherwise I won't be able to find truth in all this. First, are there any conflicts between wives fighting for favour? Second, had this madame ever aborted a child?"

Asking about conflicts between wives fighting over favours was to see whether this was a curse that came from mad jealousy. When women who had been locked in a deep harem got jealous, they could do anything; asking about abortion was because, if the child was aborted for questionable reasons, then there may be grudges left behind in the mother's body, making the new baby suffer.

Under Xie Lian's questioning, that wealthy merchant admitted to everything truthfully. Unbelievably, everything was spot on. Not only did he have a number of wives in his household, bickering nonstop every day, he also had a lover waiting for him to bring her in. Afterwards, the madame's servant girl also reported that her mistress was originally only a mistress, and had once been pregnant. She listened to the flawed diagnosis of street homeopaths that declared her baby a girl, and since she wanted a boy to strengthen her foothold, she aborted the child. After listening to all this, Xie Lian could feel a headache coming on.

That wealthy merchant was anxious. "Daozhang, could this be the revenge of that unborn baby girl?"

"That's a possibility," Xie Lian said. "But not entirely. After all, madame couldn't tell how old that child was in her dream, and whether it was a boy or a girl."

"Then...then, Daozhang," that wealthy merchant asked frightfully. "Since that cloud of black smoke only just filled my wife's belly last night, then...where did my own son go?"

Ch.94: Pregnant with Evil; A New Wave Disturbs Peace 2

“He was probably devoured,” Xie Lian answered.

That wealthy merchant shuddered. “D-Devoured?!”

Xie Lian nodded. That wealthy merchant was panicking.

“Then, Daozhang, what should I do now? I’ve got another mistress who’s pregnant, what if that monster comes again?!”

There was another pregnant woman in this household?!

Xie Lian raised his hand. “Calm down. Let me ask another question: does the madame remember where she met the child in her dream?”

That wealthy merchant said, “She said it was hazy, but it seemed to be a large mansion; she doesn’t remember much else. It was only a dream, who could remember anything so clearly?” Then he gritted his teeth. “I...after over forty years, I’m finally expecting a son, what misery! DAOZHANG! YOU WILL CATCH AND KILL THAT MONSTER, RIGHT? I CAN’T LET IT HARM ANY MORE OF MY FAMILY!”

“Don’t panic, don’t panic,” Xie Lian comforted. “I will do my best.”

That wealthy merchant was joyous, and he rubbed his hands together. “Good good good, does Daozhang need anything? Any sort of compensation won’t be a problem!”

Xie Lian declined, however. “I don’t need any compensation, but I do have a few things I’d like to request your help with. First, please find me a set of casual women’s clothing; it has to be loose enough that men can wear it; also, I’m afraid I will need a lock of hair from the expecting mistress for drawing spells.”

That wealthy merchant gestured to the servants. “You taking this down?”

Xie Lian continued, “Second, please advise your expecting mistress to sleep in a different chamber, but no matter where or when, if she should hear the voice of a strange child calling her ‘mom’, do not answer. Absolutely do not answer; best if she doesn’t even open her mouth. Even though, when people dream, they often don’t realize they’re dreaming, their senses and awareness dulled, if you repeatedly remind her next to her ear, have it deeply ingrained in her mind, maybe it will work.”

That wealthy merchant acknowledged the instruction.

Xie Lian then said, "Third, I have two little ones out with me today, please take care of them and give them something to eat."

"Small things like that, nevermind two requests, even one hundred of them and I'll do it for you!" that wealthy merchant exclaimed.

Finally, it had come to the most important item. Xie Lian said, "Four."

He took out from his sleeves a protection charm blessed by Puqi Shrine, and passed it up with both hands, speaking in a solemn tone.

"Please take this protection charm, and yell 'Your Highness the Crown Prince, please protect me!'—that way, this whole affair will be marked under the title of my shrine."

"..."

That night, Xie Lian once again changed into women's clothes.

Although he was no stranger to crossdressing by now, it was still his first time pretending to be a pregnant woman. It didn't take him half an incense time before he put makeup on. He stuffed a pillow into his belly, then took that lock of hair from that expecting mistress and hid it in the pillow, then laid on the bed. He was calm and composed, slowing his breathing; it didn't take long before he fell deeply asleep.

An unknown amount of time passed before Xie Lian slowly opened his eyes. Before his vision was no longer the bedchamber of that wealthy merchant's mistress, but an exquisite pavilion.

Xie Lian's first reaction was to feel whether Fangxin was still next to him, and when he felt it, he relaxed. Fangxin was a sacred sword, after all, so it was tied tightly onto his person. After, he slowly sat up, but felt the bottom of his palms to be sticky. When he raised his hands to look, he found himself lying on a bed that was covered by terrifyingly large pools of blood; not yet dried, dying half of his body red, shockingly alarming.

Xie Lian was used to seeing strange sights, so he got off the bed, walked a couple steps, and suddenly felt something fell off of his person. He looked down and it was that pillow, and he hastily picked it up and stuffed it back into his belly anew. When he took another couple steps, his belly fell again, so Xie Lian had to keep holding onto it with both hands as he looked around.

Having grown up in a palace, he was influenced by the things he saw and heard, unconsciously absorbing his surroundings. When it came to beauty, Xie Lian had his own set of judgments. This little establishment, to him, might be exquisite, but it was filled with an air of fragrant enticement, so if he had to guess, this might be a restaurant or a place of entertainment. Also, in comparison to the style of architecture of the day, this style was really quite old; very much like a building from hundreds of years ago, but he couldn't tell where.

Thus, this wasn't likely to be the haunting of the fetus spirit aborted by that wealthy merchant. This was because when evil spirits create illusions, they could only use what they know. It was obvious that a centuries-old establishment could only come from evil spirits equally as old. After having walked around once, he found no one, and Xie Lian returned to the chamber where he had first laid down.

It was a woman's bedchamber. There was a chiffonier; the drawers could be pulled out, and inside were baby clothes, and such toys like dolls and rattling drums. Xie Lian checked each item carefully and found they were all brand-new, indicating the lady of this room loved and cared for those objects. Meaning, to this "child", this woman was full of love and affection.

He rummaged around some more, and suddenly, Xie Lian was taken aback. In those baby clothes was a protection charm, and that protection charm was his!

Flabbergasted, Xie Lian had to verify it thrice. It wasn't a mistake. It was very much his protection charm. And it wasn't the same simple protection charm he went up the mountains to pick herbs for, sewed, drew, then tied with a red thread by his own hands. This was the protection charm that, eight hundred years ago, at the peak of the prominence of the Crown Prince of Xianle, almost everyone in the country owned. The material and designs were all intricately elegant; where it had come from, whether it had been blessed, were all written on it.

Could it be, the lady owner of this establishment was once his worshipper?

Just then, in the dead silence, Xie Lian suddenly heard a series of teehee sniggles.

It was the sniggles of that baby; extremely abrupt, and it echoed everywhere, its whereabouts obscure. Xie Lian didn't move or react, but his mind was racing: that voice sounded familiar, where had he heard it before? Just where?

Then it hit him, and in his mind rang the voice of a small child:

"New bride. New bride, new bride in the red bridal sedan.

"Brimming tears, past the hills, smile not under the bridal veil..."

It was the voice of that child spirit he heard at Mount Yujun when he was in the marriage sedan!

When Xie Lian snapped out of it, the laughter of that child spirit also came to an abrupt stop. He turned around swiftly, but saw no shadows.

After the affair of Mount Yujun had passed, he'd also asked after the child spirit in the spiritual communication array. But back then, everyone told him there was no child spirit or anything of the sort to be found on the mountain, and it was only he who heard that child spirit's voice. Yet now, this was the second time this child spirit had appeared before him, so was this a coincidence? Or was it intentional?

That child spirit stopped laughing, and called out, “Mom.”

This “mom” came from somewhere close, but Xie Lian couldn’t figure out where. He stood there unspeaking, holding his breath, his ears intent.

After some silence, the voice of that child called out again. “Mom. Hug me.”

This time, Xie Lian finally figured it out—that voice came from his belly!

Xie Lian had both his hands holding up the fake belly, and it was only now that he astonishingly realized that, without knowing when, the pillow in his hands had become heavier. He smacked it once soundly, and a lump of something came tumbling out of his clothes. It was seemingly a palish-white little child, spewing something out of its mouth before scrambling away into the darkness and disappearing. Xie Lian rushed up to see, and the things it had spewed out were some lumps of thread and a lock of black hair. It seemed his illusionment spell worked. That little ghost had wanted to devour Xie Lian’s “child” the way it did that pregnant woman’s, but instead, it devoured the cotton stuffed into Xie Lian’s robes. Soon after, Xie Lian heard that thing cry sharply again.

“MOM!”

No matter how it called, how pointedly it cried, Xie Lian still held back, never opening his mouth. He determined that the child spirit was a fetus spirit, and this chamber was it or its mother’s room, where they once lived. Evil spirits took the form and age of when they died, yet it had mostly shown itself as a cloud of black smoke or a blurry white shadow; which meant the spirit itself didn’t know what it should look like, so it had no proper form. Also, the baby clothes in those drawers clearly hadn’t been worn yet, plus that terrifyingly large pool of blood on the bed—Xie Lian deduced that the lady of this chamber must’ve miscarried, but her unborn child already had shape, and retained a little bit of its own conscious. After becoming a fetus spirit, it wanted to return to its mother’s belly, but ended up knocking on the door of the madame of that wealthy merchant.

When it called out “mom” in that woman’s dream, it was the wrong move for her to open her mouth to acknowledge it. It must be said that the bond between “mother” and “child” was special, and the acknowledgement was a form of “permission”. When she opened her mouth, she gave that evil thing the chance to enter; the little ghost snuck in, slid into her belly, and devoured the fetus that was originally there, a cuckoo in the nest. Xie Lian might be a man, but he wasn’t very sure whether he opened his mouth, the child spirit would also take the chance to sneak into his belly. Just in case, he’d best keep his mouth shut.

Thus, keeping his lips tightly sealed and gripping Fangxin in hand, Xie Lian searched for traces of that child. Xie Lian possessed an exceedingly strong instinct when it came to danger, something that was refined through thousands of battles. Without needing to look clearly, as long as he had a hunch where it was, he'd thrust his sword, and he'd hit the mark nine times out of ten. Although in the illusion created by that child spirit Xie Lian's strikes were weakened, after getting struck multiple times, it was probably feeling rather choked-up too. After a while, Xie Lian suddenly felt a sharp pain on the bottom of his foot. It seemed he had stepped on something extremely sharp, and he paused slightly.

That child spirit saw him falling for its trap, and let out short spurts of sly cackles. The voice was tender, but it shouldn't have come from a small child; more like a malicious grown man, the contrast sharply distinct, making one's blood run cold. However, Xie Lian's face never even twitched, and he didn't stop in his step; he flicked his hand and struck out the sword again, jabbing right on target!

That child spirit yelped in pain, having burned itself, and hid far, far away. Only then did Xie Lian take a look down to glance under his boot; it turned out he stepped on a small, thin needle that stood straight up. It was obviously placed by that child spirit on purpose, and it seemed it was hoping for Xie Lian to cry out in pain. However, it miscalculated. Xie Lian was very good at tolerating pain; nevermind stepping on a needle, if his leg was clamped by a large snare, he wouldn't utter a sound if the situation called for it.

That tiny little needle was deeply ingrained, and Xie Lian had wanted to pull it out at first. But since that child spirit ran away after having devoured nothing, he was afraid it'd take this chance to escape and go harm others, so he chased after it out of the chamber with that needle still stuck in his foot. After a while he stopped feeling the pain, and ran like the wind. There was no sight of that child spirit anywhere in that building, and Xie Lian felt baffled.

"Did it actually become scared of my attacks?"

Just then, a window not far away opened by itself, without a breeze.

Xie Lian immediately rushed over and approached, but then was shocked by what he saw. Outside the window, there was no sight of streets, no mountains, no pedestrians; only a deep, bottomless lake.

On the other side of this lake was a house, and in that house sat two small children. It was Lang Ying and Guzi, who were sitting at a table eating. Yet, they didn't notice at all that, just above their heads, was a thick, black swirl of smoke, teehee-ing and cackling, crying crisply.

"MOM! MOM!"

Xie Lian's heart instantly dropped. His hands gripped the windowsill, about to call and warn them, but then he remembered not to open his mouth and he forced his voice back down.

Although this was nothing more than that child spirit's illusion, he didn't know whether Lang Ying and Guzi were really pulled in. If so, then any harm that happened to them here would affect their real bodies. He wanted to find a vase or something to throw over as a warning, but he couldn't even find anything. Tables and chairs wouldn't fit through the window, and then there was that lake between the two buildings; did this mean he had to swim over?

Just then, Guzi, looking tired, yawned. That cloud of black smoke gathered and looked as if it was about to sneak into his mouth.

The defenses of children's bodies were very weak, even without permission maybe that thing could intrude. Xie Lian had no time to think about swimming.

In a split second decision, he shouted, "CLOSE YOUR MOUTH! RUN!"

The moment the words came out, Lang Ying and Guzi jolted and closed their mouths in surprise, leaping to their feet. That child spirit, however, had suddenly disappeared, and the next second, a cloud of black smoke exploded in Xie Lian's face.

Even though Xie Lian closed his mouth the moment he shouted, he could already feel a stream of cold air going down his throat; that black smoke entering his stomach, his innards numb as if everything would be frozen in a second. Xie Lian gritted his teeth, and hastily tore apart a few protection charms. He took out the herbs and charmed papers within and chewed them with force, swallowing them. It didn't take long before his throat itched, and that cloud of black smoke was retched out!

Xie Lian covered his mouth with his sleeve, coughing nonstop, choking with tears. His mind was rapidly trying to think of a way to counter it. After that cloud of black smoke was puked out, it still swirled and clung on to him relentlessly; thus Xie Lian pressed onto the windowsill, raised himself up, and leapt, jumping into the lake outside.

SPLASH, and Xie Lian plunged deep into the heart of the lake. He held his breath, crossed his legs and arms, and assumed a meditating position; letting his body slowly sink into the bottom of that freezing lake. Once his heartbeat returned to normal, he looked up and could somewhat make out that black fog swirling above, sealing the entire surface of the water. Once he emerged he must take in a deep breath, and should he inhale, he'd for sure suck that child spirit into his stomach. If a full-grown man was to have a giant, swollen belly, it definitely wouldn't be very funny.

However, jumping into the water was only to give himself some time to think. It didn't take long before Xie Lian came up with an idea.

He thought, "So what if I swallow it? I'll just swallow Fangxin too, after."

He had also learned that trick when he performed on the streets. Although it might hurt, whatever, as long as the child spirit could be captured.

His mind made up, Xie Lian released his arms and started swimming to the side. However, a muffled, deep sound of sloshing water came from above, and suddenly, a vast, burning, vivid crimson-red appeared before his eyes.

Thick, winding raven-black locks filled his vision, splashes and air bubbles bubbled furiously, and nothing could be seen. Xie Lian blinked, trying desperately to strip away the thousands upon millions of crystal-like bubbles. But then, he felt a pair of strong arms. One hand circled around his waist, and the other grasped his chin.

In the next second, something cold and soft covered his lips.

Ch.95: Mind in Disarray but Say Not the Tender Heart Is Too

In that instant, Xie Lian's eyes bulged.

Never in his life had anyone treated him this way before.

First, no one dared; second, no one could. However, this person was swift like the devil, and appeared so suddenly that before he even had the chance to defend himself, he'd fallen into such a state. Freaking out, he was flustered and his limbs were thrashing, desperately trying to push the other away; instead, he choked on large mouthfuls of water, gurgling out strings of bubbles like crystal water beads from his mouth. This was a big no-no underwater. Thus, the hand around his waist held him tighter, their bodies pressed closer together, and Xie Lian's struggling hands were firmly folded and crushed against his own chest; unable to move. His lips were still securely sealed, the kiss deepening, and a stream of gentle, chilled air slowly passed through. Dumbfounded and helpless, as he began to accept his fate, Xie Lian finally saw clearly the face of this person. It was Hua Cheng.

The moment he realized it was Hua Cheng, he stopped struggling, and innumerable random thoughts popped into his mind, all inappropriate for the time and place. Such as: So it was Hua Cheng! No wonder he's cold. Ghosts don't need to breathe, but he can still deliver air to me?! Don't ghosts sink in the water?

Just then, Hua Cheng suddenly opened his eyes.

To be staring into those dark eyes at such a close distance, Xie Lian instantly froze, and soon after he started struggling again, his arms flailing; like a duck so dumb and awkward it was drowning itself. The flailing arms were easily stopped by Hua Cheng, and with his arm still firmly around Xie Lian's waist, he took him and swam towards the surface speedily. It didn't take long before the two broke through the surface.

The waters were freezing and the air was cold, too; yet, Xie Lian's whole body was burning up. The moment they floated to the top, Xie Lian wanted to turn away, but that cloud of black smoke was still swarming above the waters, watching with predatory eyes. When it saw someone emerge, it immediately locked onto them and flashed forward. Xie Lian only turned his head a little bit before Hua Cheng pulled him back with a hand behind his head. Their lips hadn't separated for even a second before they were pressed tightly against each other once more. Xie Lian's lips were aching and numb from the kiss, feeling as if he was going to lose his senses. If this was anyone else, he would've long since stabbed with his sword, but this just had to be Hua Cheng. He was completely at a loss on what to do, his tears ready to fall from distress. Just then, beyond Hua Cheng's face, he saw thousands upon millions of silver butterflies break through the water next to them.

Accompanied by a sharp trill, that thick rain of butterflies shot out from the surface like bullets; their wings reflecting a cold glare, sharp like blades. Within moments, that child spirit screamed from the slashing; the black smoke dispersed, and it tried to flee in all directions. However, the web of those butterflies enveloped from the earth to the heavens, sealing it within; no matter how much it rammed and pounded it couldn't break through. Hua Cheng's eyes had never lifted even once, and with Xie Lian in his embrace they once again dove into the waters. After a while, the two lips finally parted.

Once separated, another stream of air bubbles spewed from Xie Lian's mouth, and Hua Cheng freed a hand, tossing out dice. The dice actually spun in the water, rapidly too; they spun out a strong, whirling current before finally stalling. Afterwards, the two once again broke through the water surface.

This time, the shore was not far away, and only then did Hua Cheng bring Xie Lian to swim over. Who knows what shore it was, either; there were lights and voices of crowds, seemingly close, yet far away. Behind them, over the waters, that troop of butterflies shot into the sky with that cloud of black smoke in their captivity. They flew towards the faint lights in the distance, leaving behind a trail of long wails from the child spirit.

“MOOoom——!!!...”

The two of them climbed ashore, sitting heavily onto the ground. Looking at each other thus, Xie Lian was finally able to take a good look at Hua Cheng.

In reality, the two of them had only parted ways for just a few days, but Xie Lian felt like it had been a long time since they last met. Every time they met, Hua Cheng looked good in different ways. The Hua Cheng this time seemed to be older by a couple years compared to the last time. His face had always been handsome; shimmering brighter than the waters. His locks were exceedingly black, his skin extremely white, and on the right side of his cheek was a very thin, small braid, a red string threading through it intricately. This was the first time Xie Lian realized that above Hua Cheng's forehead was a widow's peak, and it made his face look even more shapely and alluring. The black eyepatch that covered an eye emitted traces of killing aura, softening that refined charm, making his good looks reach an almost perfect balance.

Hua Cheng's brows were knitted, as if trying to hold back; after panting softly a few times, he opened his mouth to speak, his voice distinctly lower than before.

“Your Highness, I...”

From the hair on his head to all over his body, Xie Lian's entire person was dripping with water. His lips were swollen, his eyes blank; it was only after a good moment of disoriented daze before he mumbled, “I...I...I...”

His stammering “I”s continued, before suddenly, he randomly blurted out, “I'm a little hungry.”

Hearing this, Hua Cheng was taken aback.

Xie Lian hadn't yet recovered from the shock, and said in a state of jumbled mess, "No. I...I...I'm a little sleepy..."

He flipped around, his back facing Hua Cheng, and bent down to his knees, his hands touching the ground, fumbling as if looking for something.

Behind him, Hua Cheng asked, "What are you looking for?"

Xie Lian didn't dare look at him, and said incoherently, "I'm looking for a thing. I'm looking for my bamboo hat. Where's my bamboo hat?"

If it was anyone else watching this scene play out, they would certainly yell, "he's done for! He's gone stupid!" But in reality, it was only because Xie Lian had never experienced something like this before, and the shock was too great, making him lose it a little.

Xie Lian crawled on his hands and knees, shuffling away with his back still facing Hua Cheng, mumbling, "...I, I can't find it. I'm leaving now. I'm going home to eat...I need to go collect some scraps now..."

"..."

"I'm sorry," Hua Cheng said.

Feeling that the voice behind him was coming closer, Xie Lian jumped to his feet and cried, "I'M LEAVING NOW!"

This cry was like a cry for help. Hua Cheng hastily said, "No!"

Xie Lian hurriedly tried to run away, but within a few steps out, his foot twisted, and he fell back onto the ground. Looking back, there was a trail of blood behind him; that needle deeply embedded in the bottom of his foot was completely stuck in.

Hua Cheng immediately seized his ankle, his voice alarmed. "What's wrong?"

Xie Lian immediately tried to pull his leg back. "Nothingnothingnothing, it doesn't hurt at all, it's fine!"

Hua Cheng was slightly angered. "How can it not hurt?!"

Then his hands moved—he was actually going to remove his boot!

Terrified, Xie Lian crawled forward again, exclaiming as he crawled, "NO, NONONO, THERE'S NO NEED!"

He kept crawling, trying to scamper; Hua Cheng held on to him, stopping him from doing so. It was complete pandemonium, and it finally alerted everyone else on shore. A roaring crowd, chattering and blabbering, a large group of who-knows-what kind of weirdos all came to surround them, clamouring.

“WHO GOES THERE! HOW DARE! DON’T YA KNOW WHAT THIS PLACE IS? ARE YA DONE WITH LIFE OR DID YA WANNA DIE AGAIN? I...BLIMEY, AIN’T THIS MY LORD?!”

The crowd of ghosts immediately hollered in unison, “GOOD DAY, YER OL’ LORDSHIP!”

Xie Lian let out a wail in his head, wishing desperately he could cover his face with his hands. This was the Ghost City!

There were quite a number of ghosts in the crowd he remembered seeing roughly from the last time he came by; Xie Lian even saw a familiar hog head. The two of them were drenched from head to toe, surrounded by countless humans and ghosts alike watching them, and Hua Cheng still had his hand on his ankle, not letting go. This was such a shocking scene that it finally snapped Xie Lian out of it. But who knew that once the crowd of ghosts recognized Hua Cheng, they became even more excited, shouting.

“MY LORD! ARE YOU TRYING TO RAPE SOMEONE?! DO YOU NEED HELP?! WE’LL HELP YOU HOLD THEM DOWN!”

“SCRAM!” Hua Cheng ordered.

That crowd of ghosts hastily scrambled. But even if they watched from afar, not daring to come close, Xie Lian still wanted to just pass out and end everything, because Hua Cheng had risen to his feet, then bent down and gently swept him up into his carry. He walked with heavy steps to leave the shore.

Xie Lian was still dressed in women’s clothing, and could only be grateful that the pillow was no longer stuffed in his belly, otherwise it’d paint an even more terrifying picture. However, the frightful thought finally brought him completely back to the present. He struggled a bit in Hua Cheng’s arms but didn’t succeed, so he cleared his throat softly.

“...San Lang, I’m sorry. I sort of lost it just now, how embarrassing.”

What had happened just then was really too great of a shocking blow for him. The word “blow” was harsh, but this was his first time after all. However, it wasn’t only just because it was his first time. In the many centuries past, it wasn’t like there weren’t any seductive women ghosts who tried to tempt him with their naked bodies, but Xie Lian had never reacted this embarrassingly before. So why did he descend into such a state now? He could only guess that it must be because Guoshi had only ever taught him how to defend against women, but not against men; he had no experience, which was why he hadn't known how to react.

Thinking back on the way he'd conducted himself, Xie Lian was slightly ashamed, and felt maybe he overreacted. He thought San Lang had meant well, but Xie Lian had ended up scaring him to this point; truly, he was being too impolite.

Hua Cheng, however, replied, "Nothing of the sort. I was the one who crossed the line and offended gege. San Lang is in the wrong and apologizes."

Seeing that he didn't take anything to heart, Xie Lian secretly let out a breath of relief.

"I was in dire straits and you were only trying to help; it wasn't really a big deal anyway. Oh, that's right." He suddenly remembered what he was doing. "San Lang, why have you suddenly appeared again? Where's that child spirit?"

Hua Cheng, however, replied in an authoritative tone: "Treating your wounds comes first."

During their exchange, the two had already arrived before a magnificent building. When Xie Lian looked up, upon the entrance hung the title "Paradise Manor".

He was astonished. Had that burnt Paradise Manor really been rebuilt that fast? And it looked exactly the same as the old one. Yet, with a guilty conscience, Xie Lian was too embarrassed to ask about it. Hua Cheng entered, carrying him in his arms, and mounted that black jaded divan. Xie Lian sat on the divan, and Hua Cheng himself half-knelt below; holding Xie Lian's injured foot, checking the tiny puncture dyed by blood underneath.

The position made Xie Lian feel uncomfortable. He cried, "no!", and made a move to get down, but Hua Cheng pushed him back, swiftly removing his boot and sock with a steady hand.

This foot also happened to be the one with the cursed shackle. A deep black chain locked around that clean white ankle, a powerful contrast. Hua Cheng's eyes only lingered for a moment on that soft ankle before his palm pressed against Xie Lian's injury.

"This might hurt a bit," Hua Cheng said. "Don't hold back, gege. Cry out if it hurts."

Ch.96: Mind in Disarray but Say Not the Tender Heart Is Too 2

"I..." Xie Lian said.

Before he finished his sentence, he felt Hua Cheng squeeze with a bit of force. Pain crawled up his leg, and he couldn't help but shrink back.

Although Hua Cheng's strength was already extremely controlled and this little bit of pain was nothing to Xie Lian, for some reason, in front of him, Xie Lian seemed to be unable to hide away his pain. Maybe it was because of what Hua Cheng told him beforehand, maybe he tried too hard to hold back and it backfired on him.

Sensing Xie Lian shrinking back, Hua Cheng instantly held his ankle tighter and reassured with a soft voice, "Don't worry. It'll be over soon. Don't be scared."

Xie Lian shook his head, but Hua Cheng's hands had become even gentler, his hand operating speedily, and when he raised it again, that tiny little needle was already extracted.

"Alright, it's done."

Xie Lian focused his eyes and saw the tip of that needle was glistening with vicious poison. Hua Cheng closed his five fingers and crushed it easily into a small waft of black gas, dissipating into the air.

Seeing this, Xie Lian put aside all his discomfort and commented soberly, "What heavy air of grudge. A typical fetus spirit shouldn't have spiritual power this strong."

Hua Cheng stood up. "You're right. So, this fetus spirit must not be from a normal miscarriage."

Just then, a masked man entered with his head down; he presented a clay pot with both his hands, and handed it to Hua Cheng. Xie Lian unconsciously checked to see if that man's wrist still carried that cursed shackle, but this time the man's sleeves were tied down fully and completely. Hua Cheng took the pot with one hand and glanced at it, then turned around to pass it to Xie Lian, who was sitting on the black jaded divan. Xie Lian hadn't yet reached over and the muffled sound of a child crying could be heard from within. It seemed something was madly knocking about, making the clay pot shake, unable to remain standing up, so he became more cautious.

When he took that clay pot, he peeled up a small corner of the seal and peeked in; he could feel a sense of dreadful cold rush up his spine.

Inside the pot laid a puddle of something like a fetus. Although both the arms and legs were grown out, they were weak and powerless, and the head remained obscured in the shadows. All in all, it was no more than a lump of twisted organs.

This was its true form!

Xie Lian immediately resealed the pot and said, "I see."

He once heard that there were those who would search for pregnant women who hadn't yet reached term. They would cruelly cut out the children from the women's wombs, transforming the fetuses into little demons to perform spells, urging them to do harm; either to protect the caster, or for the protection of a dwelling and luck. By the sight of this, that fetus spirit was no doubt the product of such an evil spell. Its mother might very well have been Xie Lian's worshipper once, otherwise there wouldn't be his protection charm tucked in the clothes of that child yet born.

Xie Lian hummed, then said, "This fetus spirit was captured by you, but would San Lang mind if I take it back with me to investigate? Because I've already bumped into it once before at Mount Yujun, this was the second time it's appeared before me. I don't know if it's mere coincidence or if there's some kind of a connection."

"If you want to take it, then just take it," Hua Cheng said. "Even if I didn't appear you would've still captured it."

Xie Lian chuckled. "Be that as it may, San Lang still caught it so effortlessly, much more so than if I was to try."

It was an offhand comment, but Hua Cheng remarked, "Is that right? And if I didn't appear, how did you plan on capturing it? Eat it into your stomach, then swallow the sword too?"

"..."

He had actually hit it right on the mark.

There wasn't any trace of displeasure on Hua Cheng's face, but Xie Lian somehow felt maybe Hua Cheng was a little mad.

Instincts told him that if he didn't answer right, Hua Cheng would become angrier. Just as he was thinking of a response, he suddenly felt his stomach shrink slightly, and without thinking, Xie Lian said, "...I'm a little hungry."

"..."

It was only after the words had left his lips that Xie Lian realized what he had said. Too embarrassed to see the reaction on Hua Cheng's face, Xie Lian explained himself honestly:

"This time it's true..."

A moment later, Hua Cheng finally “pfft”-ed and laughed out loud.

Once he laughed, it was as if all of Xie Lian’s gloomy clouds dispersed, and he sighed a breath of relief. Hua Cheng, on the other hand, was half-laughing, half-sighing, and nodded his head.

“Alright.”

Hua Cheng had wanted to keep him and set out a feast at Paradise Manor, but when Xie Lian heard “set out a feast” he knew it’d be too big of a deal, and suggested instead that the two go out for a stroll and find something to eat at the same time. Hua Cheng agreed to it.

It was quite warm within Paradise Manor, and while the two entered dripping wet, they were both dried soon after. However, Xie Lian’s dress of women’s attire was awfully conspicuous, so he still borrowed a set of clothes from Hua Cheng; changing back into clean, white robes. Afterwards, the two set out. Even after having walked for quite a distance, the wailing of that fetus spirit could still be heard, the cries of “mom” ringing in the air; demonstrating its dogged tenacity. However, there were already howls and wails of demons and ghosts all over the Ghost City, and so its cries were drowned within, not the least bit noticeable.

The main street of the Ghost City was bustling as always, and on either side of the street were stalls selling exotic foods. Although the demons and ghosts remained the same ones, their attitudes towards Xie Lian were completely different from the last time he wandered. Hua Cheng walked next to him, shoulder to shoulder, and the bizarre-looking stall owners all came out to greet them with smiles, fighting each other to welcome them into their abode, bowing almost halfway. It reminded Xie Lian of a random idiom: the fox assuming the power of the tiger⁷².

Other than paying respects to Hua Cheng, there were hundreds and thousands of eyes watching Xie Lian with heat, as if judging and conjecturing. Just who was he, to be able to walk shoulder to shoulder with the Lord of the Ghost City? This made Xie Lian wonder if maybe he had made another wrong decision.

To be positioned in the flowing current of monsters and demons, before the eyes of millions, Hua Cheng seemed to be quite at home, and he asked, “What do you want to eat?”

Finally seeing a stall that was selling something that wasn’t that weird, Xie Lian wanted to end things quickly.

He said, “This one’s fine.”

However, Hua Cheng said, “Not this one.”

⁷² [狐假虎威] “The Fox Assuming the Power of the Tiger”: one who is weak appearing to be strong only because they’re next to someone powerful.

“Why?” Xie Lian was curious.

Hua Cheng didn't say a word, but gestured for him to look inside. Xie Lian took a look, and when the stall owner saw them stopping before him, he rubbed his hands in excitement as if waiting to welcome them in, nervously wiping the tables, chairs, and benches vigorously. However, what he was using to clean the furniture was his tongue.

“...”

Although the bowls and cutleries were dripping with shimmering beads of water after having been licked by that wide and long tongue, reflecting a shine that made them look brand new, still Xie Lian decided to abandon that stall resolutely, and hurried away. After a few steps, he saw another stall; a chicken soup shop that appeared cleanly put-together. The sign in front of the door said: “home-raised chicken, slow-cooked broth. Made fresh, guaranteed clean”.

Xie Lian stopped. “Oh, chicken soup. How about a bowl?”

Hua Cheng, however, said again, “Not this one either.”

Xie Lian blinked. “Is it a problem with the plates, or is it with the chicken?”

Hua Cheng brought him into the shop, pulled aside a set of curtains, and gestured for Xie Lian to look. Curious, Xie Lian poked his head in, and immediately became speechless. Inside the kitchen was an enormous pot, a roaring fire beneath it, and steam rolled out of it. Inside the pot was a large man with a bright red cockscomb on his head, and he was simmering in the boiling waters, happily taking a bath. Next to the pot were many buckets; they contained salt, pepper, herbs, and other such seasonings.

In the shop's front, a customer yelled, “BOSS, ADD MORE SALT TO THE SOUP! IT'S TOO PLAIN!”

As he bathed, that man grabbed a large handful of seasoning and smeared it on himself, rubbing it hard into his body with a towel, increasing the flavour.

Then, he let out a long crow: “COCK-A-DOODLE-DOO!”

Xie Lian dropped the curtains and silently walked out.

After making a large round, the two finally found a shop, its specialty being “Authentic Delicacies of the Mortal Realm”. Although, Xie Lian was suspicious of just how “authentic” it was. For example, as far as he knew, mortal chefs wouldn't use the meat of large, hard-to-hunt monsters to make skewers. Nonetheless, in comparison, this shop was the most normal.

The moment the two sat down, the crowd of ghosts who had been following behind immediately approached and surrounded them, attentively soliciting to add more dishes to their meal. That hog butcher carried with him a thick, white human leg, slapping at it soundly, and cried with a rough voice.

“MY LORD! DO YOU WANT FRESH THIGHS?! THIS JUST CAME IN!”

The crowd yelled at him, “GET OUTTA HERE! D’YA THINK THE LORD’S FRIEND WOULD EAT THAT SHIT? YA TAKIN’ HIM FOR THE GREEN GHOST? MAYBE YER OWN THIGHS WOULD BE MORE EDIBLE!”

“WHAT A STRONG STENCH OF BLOOD! YER DISGUSTING PEOPLE!”

That hog actually raised one of his pig legs and shouted, “IF MY LORD AND MY LORD’S FRIEND LIKE IT, MY OL’ LEG IS NOTHING, I’LL BUTCHER IT! LEMME TELL YOU, MEAT ON MY OL’ FLESH IS DEFINITELY FULL OF FLAVOUR!”

Xie Lian couldn’t help but smile, and ate his porridge with his head down. Hua Cheng ignored them pointedly, so that crowd of ghosts and demons fervently tried to push their goods unto Xie Lian, blabbering:

“Street food specialty: brain juice! Brains of monsters specially picked, each one with cultivation of over fifty years! Smell this delicious fragrance, my good sir!”

“This duck blood pudding is really good, quack! Look, quack! It’s freshly cut from me own flesh, quack! Won’t you give it a try, quack!”

“Our fruits are authentic fresh fruits from graveyards, if it ain’t grown on dead bodies, we won’t even pick it; it’s true, not a word of lie...”

Mountains and mountains of food were given, so much that Xie Lian was having trouble seeing all of it, and he thanked them endlessly. He didn’t want to put down this wave of fervent affection, but at the same time, so many of those exotic street foods were really hard to accept. In the mess of things, he saw Hua Cheng sitting there, his hand supporting his cheek, watching him with a big smile.

Xie Lian looked around him, cleared his throat, then whispered in a small voice, “...San Lang...”

Only then did Hua Cheng speak up. “There’s no need to mind them, gege. They’re only overly excited because there’s a guest.”

A ghost immediately said, "MY LORD, DON'T SAY THAT! IT AIN'T LIKE WE GET EXCITED OVER JUST ANYONE! IF THE LORD IS OUR GRAND-DADDY, THEN THE LORD'S GEGE IS OUR GRAND-UNCLE⁷³..."

"YEAH! OF COURSE WE GOTTA GET EXCITED WHEN GRAND-UNCLE COMES AROUND!"

Xie Lian didn't know whether to laugh or cry, wondering whatever the heck were they even saying.

Hua Cheng shouted, "Stop that nonsense! Shut up!"

The crowd of ghosts hurriedly acquiesced. "YES SIR! MY LORD IS ABSOLUTELY CORRECT. WE'RE SHUTTING UP. IT'S NOT GRAND-UNCLE!"

Just then, unexpectedly, a few of the female ghosts who had been giggling on the side finally couldn't hold back anymore, and called out.

"Hey! You...weren't you that Daozhang-gege who told Lan Chang you couldn't get it up?"

"..."

Xie Lian almost spat out his mouthful of porridge on the spot.

It was like that crowd of ghosts had discovered a major secret, and they exploded.

"HOLY SHIT! YOU'RE RIGHT!"

"IT'S HIM IT'S HIM IT'S HIM! LAN CHANG WAS GOING AROUND TELLING EVERYONE!"

The smarter ghosts were hastily smothering the mouths of those chattering ghosts; however, Hua Cheng had no doubt heard. Xie Lian peeked up and saw Hua Cheng cocking an eyebrow, watching him with an unreadable eye, as if trying to make sense of what "get it up" had to do with Xie Lian. Originally, that was the excuse Xie Lian had used when that female ghost had been clinging onto him, and even though he was made fun of by the crowd at the time, he could face it like it was nothing. Yet now that it had been thrust in front of Hua Cheng, Xie Lian couldn't endure it, wishing desperately he could just choke himself to death with a mouthful of porridge.

"I..." Xie Lian started.

Hua Cheng seemed to be waiting patiently for him to continue, but how could something like this possibly be explained? Was he really going to argue with a straight face that he was not, in fact, impotent?

Xie Lian finished lamely, "...I'm full."

That wasn't a lie, he really was full, so he stood up immediately and hurried out of the stall. Behind him, that crowd of ghosts carried their mountains of delicacies and exotic dishes, howling nonstop.

"MY, MY LORD! YER NOT GONNA EAT ANYMORE?!"

Hua Cheng ran after him too, but took a spare moment to look back. He ordered again, "Scram!"

That crowd of ghosts hastily scrambled again. Ahead, Xie Lian walked randomly, but seeing that those ghosts and demons didn't follow, he slowed his pace to wait for Hua Cheng. It didn't take long before Hua Cheng came forward with his hands clasped behind him, speaking in a serious voice:

"I hadn't known gege has such an unspeakable affliction?"

Xie Lian immediately cried, "I DON'T!" Then he lamented woefully, "...San Lang."

Hua Cheng nodded. "Very well. San Lang understands. I won't speak another word on the subject."

He put on the face of one extremely good and obedient, but was very obviously faking it.

Xie Lian remarked, "You're so insincere."

Hua Cheng laughed. "I promise, you will not find another person who is more sincere than me in this world."

Hearing that familiar response, Xie Lian laughed too.

A moment later, he asked in a sobering voice, "San Lang, do you know where Qiandeng Temple is?"

Ch.97: To Compose in Nuit Blanche; Fragrance Added by Red Sleeves⁷⁴

Xie Lian actually already kind of knew the answer to this question. However, Hua Cheng's reaction was largely different from what he expected.

After a moment of silence, Hua Cheng suddenly blurted, "I'm sorry."

"What?" Xie Lian was confused.

At first he had thought, if "Qiandeng Temple" wasn't some kind of a joke, then the one who would have the most connection to it could only be Hua Cheng. But no matter how off he might be with his guess, there was no reason for Hua Cheng to apologize. Hua Cheng didn't respond, and only gestured for him to keep walking onwards with him, and so Xie Lian followed his lead. The two walked for a while, and after making a turn, the sight before him opened to a broad horizon; a bedazzling, transcendent temple quietly appeared before Xie Lian's eyes.

In an instant, his breathing stopped.

All around was the smoky dark and vivid crimson scenery of the ghost realm, yet surrounded by such an ominous backdrop stood that temple; beautiful beyond words, its thousands of lights enchanting, like that of paradise.

That a temple with brilliance and enlightenment as its core would sit within the rowdy, chaotic pandemonium the likes of Ghost City, it was opposingly conspicuous, yet awe-inspiring. The moment it had been seen, it would leave an unerasable deep impression.

It took a while before Xie Lian could speak. "...This..."

The two stood before the temple, and Xie Lian raised his head to look. Hua Cheng also lifted his head slightly, and explained.

"It was the Mid-Autumn Festival a few days ago, and I figured gege would probably join them in their annual boring games. So I set this place up to give gege some amusement while attending the banquet; make things interesting and relieve your boredom."

"..."

His way of "make things interesting" was rather too shocking. For the sake of Xie Lian's "amusement", he built a temple and raised three thousand Blessings Lanterns of Everlasting Light!

⁷⁴ [紅袖添香] "Fragrance Added by Red Sleeves" is a verse that described the luxury of a happy marriage, as "red sleeves" symbolized a bride, and "adding fragrance" depicted a scholar studying with the accompaniment of a beautiful woman. MXTX was using the verse as a pun.

Hua Cheng lowered his head, fixed his sleeves, then added, "I hadn't wanted you to know, because I set this up on a whim. I built Gege's temple in such a chaotic place, pray Gege isn't offended."

Xie Lian immediately shook his head. Hua Cheng actually thought he was giving Xie Lian trouble, so he didn't want him to know. Xie Lian really didn't know what to say. At this point, to say his thanks again would fall flat; thus, Xie Lian steadied himself, sucked in a deep breath, and proceeded to admire this "Qiandeng Temple" attentively.

A moment later, he inclined his head and asked, "This temple is gloriously magnificent, the artistry and craftsmanship in its build is divine; it couldn't have been constructed in mere days. San Lang, you didn't just build this recently, did you?"

Hua Cheng smiled. "Of course not. Gege has a good eye, this was built a long time ago. I never found a use for it, so I had it hidden, and there's been no one who has been allowed in before. I'll have to thank Gege for finally giving it a purpose, and have it see the light of day."

Hearing this, Xie Lian let out a breath of relief.

If it was built a long time ago but never had a use, and had other intent at the beginning, then it was only adopted out of convenience. If Hua Cheng really had constructed a temple just for him, he would feel even more uncomfortable. Of course, with Hua Cheng's personality, it could very well have been built out of pure entertainment. Although Xie Lian was really curious as to why Hua Cheng would construct a building that was so completely different from the rest of the Ghost City, still, Xie Lian held back the impulse to ask. It wasn't a good habit to pry too much; who knows if one was to step on a mine?

"Want to go in and take a look?" Hua Cheng asked.

"Of course," Xie Lian answered cheerfully.

Side by side, the two entered the temple leisurely, strolling through the path paved by jaded stones. Looking around, the interior of the temple was wide and open, but it didn't have a divine statue, nor cushions used for worshippers to kneel.

Hua Cheng spoke up, "This was built in a hurry, so if there's anything amiss, pray Gege won't mind."

Xie Lian grinned. "Not at all. I think this is very nice. Very, very nice. It's good that there isn't an idol or any cushions, best if there won't ever be any. But, how come there's no establishment plaque either?"

This wasn't a criticizing question; only, within the temple even the jaded stones that paved the paths had been delicately engraved with the words "Qiandeng Temple", and only the establishment plaque above the entrance was missing. So naturally it couldn't just be a simple oversight, which was why Xie Lian was curious.

Hua Cheng chuckled. "It can't be helped. There's not really anyone here who can write. Look at the crowd earlier; it'd already be impressive if they could recognize letters. Does gege like any particular calligraphy professors? I'll invite them over to help compose for the plaque. Or, the best solution, in my opinion, is if gege himself should draw up a sign, and hang it here at the Qiandeng Temple. That'd be more than amazing."

As he spoke, he pointed to the altar in the great hall. That jaded bureau was exceedingly long and wide; orderly decorated upon it were various offerings and an incense burner, and there were even brushes, inkwells, and paper; a refreshing flavour of scholarship.

The two approached, and Xie Lian said, "Then how about San Lang compose one for me?"

Hearing this, Hua Cheng's eyes slightly widened, as if not expecting him to say that. "Me?"

"Yeah," Xie Lian replied.

Hua Cheng pointed at himself. "You really want me to write?"

Xie Lian noticed his discomfort, and asked, "San Lang, is there something wrong?"

Hua Cheng cocked an eyebrow and replied, "Nothing's wrong, it's just..."

Seeing that Xie Lian was waiting for him to answer, he clenched his fists and replied, somewhat helplessly, "Alright. It's just, I don't write well."

Now, this was something new. Xie Lian really couldn't imagine there was anything Hua Cheng couldn't do well. He smiled. "Oh? Really? Write something and show me?"

Hua Cheng asked again, "You really want me to write?"

Xie Lian took out a few sheets of blank paper, laid them out neatly upon the jaded bureau and attentively flattened them, then he picked out a fine-looking purple brush and put it into his hand. "Come."

Seeing that he had everything prepared, Hua Cheng said, "Alright, fine. But don't laugh."

Xie Lian nodded. "But of course."

Thus, Hua Cheng took the brush and started writing, assuming an air of seriousness. Xie Lian watched, standing next to him, but the more he watched, the more his face changed colours.

He really wanted to hold it in, but he couldn't do it. Hua Cheng, while drawing madness, writing recklessly on that paper, chided half-warningly half-jokingly, "Gege."

Xie Lian immediately schooled his expression. "My bad."

He didn't want to, but what could he do? Hua Cheng's writing was just too funny!!!

In all the history of crazed writing Xie Lian had ever seen, none even held a torch halfway to Hua Cheng's wild brushwork; within the wildness carried a malevolent whirlwind and the air of evil. If any calligraphy professors were to see this, they'd probably roll their eyes back and perish on the spot. It took a long time, and it was with immense difficulty, before Xie Lian could make out "the sea", "waters", "the peak", "clouds" and other such devilish characters, and guessed Hua Cheng must be writing:

*"No water is enough when you have crossed the sea;
No cloud is beautiful but that which crowns the peak"⁷⁵*

Thinking of how Hua Cheng dominated the ghost realm, feared by all of heavens and hell, finally showed such an expression on something, and when he wrote it was such verses, Xie Lian was going to burst his gut holding in his laughter. He picked up with both hands the end product Hua Cheng completed with but one swing of his hand, and forcibly pretended to be calm.

"Good. It's got such personality, a great sense of unity. It's got 'style'."

Ache of Separation (From my Wife)

No water is enough when you have crossed the sea ;
No cloud is beautiful but that which crowns the peak.
I pass by flowers that fail to attract poor me
Half for your sake and half for Taoism I seek.

(Translation from <http://www.chinesetimeschool.com/en-us/articles/chinese-poem-think-of-my-dear-wife/>)

This was a poem written by the Tang poet Yuan Zhen, expressing his undying love and devotion to his dead wife. After seeing the vast sea (his wife), other bodies of water could no longer compare; after removing the clouds and mists of Mount Wu (his wife), no other landscapes could compare. Walking through bushes of flowers (other women), his mind is only focused on his cultivation and his wife.

The first two verses are currently used to express the nostalgia of having had something good and beautiful, and the loneliness of having nothing else that can compare thereafter.

Hua Cheng placed the brush back, looking poised and proper, and squinted with a smile. "Madness, you mean."

Xie Lian pretended not to hear, and started commenting with an air of seriousness. "In truth, it's not hard to write well, it's writing with 'style' that's difficult. If it was only to look good, but looked exactly the same as thousands of others, then it'd still be nothing more than common. San Lang has a good foundation, the talent of profession, the force to swallow mountains..."

There were two other idioms that followed: broken landscapes, ruined armies. It couldn't be helped; making up praise was also quite hard. Hua Cheng stood there, and the more he listened, the higher his brows raised.

He asked doubtfully, "Really?"

"When have I ever lied to San Lang?" Xie Lian said.

Hua Cheng calmly and lazily added a few incense blocks into the small golden vessel on the side, and in the midst of fresh, faint fragrance, he conversed with an air of nonchalance.

"I do want to write well, but there's no one to teach me, and I don't know if there are any tricks to it."

He certainly asked the right person. Xie Lian hummed, and replied, "There's really no trick to it, just..."

Xie Lian contemplated, but felt that in the end, he couldn't just tell and not show. So, he shuffled closer, picking up the brush himself, and wrote down the last two verses to the poem Hua Cheng had written. It was done all in one breath, and after staring at it for a moment, he laughed with a sigh.

"Much ashamed, I haven't had much chance to write in many years, so it's not as good anymore."

Hua Cheng stared at the four verses that looked as different as heaven and hell, the characters with styles foreign to each other, especially the last two verses Xie Lian added—

"Crossing through blossoms the eye is lazy; Half fate in cultivation, half fate in the one."

He put the verses together and read them over a few times, his eye twinkling and unmoving. It was a moment before he looked up.

"Teach me?"

“Well, I daren’t lecture,” Xie Lian said.

Thus, he began to tell Hua Cheng all about the introductions to calligraphy without holding back, providing insights and personal reflections of when he practiced calligraphy in his younger years.

The perfumed air wafted gently, the bright lights shimmering. Xie Lian lectured earnestly and Hua Cheng listened intently. Within the great hall, they chattered lightly and leisurely, their voices low, painting a picture of softness.

After a while, Xie Lian prompted, “Why don’t you try again?”

Hua Cheng “oh”-ed and took the brush from his hand, and composed himself solemnly before writing down another few characters. Xie Lian stood next to him and watched, crossing his arms, and inclined his head.

“Interesting. But...”

But, he still felt there was something wrong with the way Hua Cheng wrote. He observed with a frown for a bit, and suddenly realized just where it went wrong—Hua Cheng wasn’t holding the brush right in the first place!

Even the way he held the brush was all over the place, of course it’d go wrong!

Xie Lian didn’t know whether to laugh or cry, and stood closer, extending his hand to correct him without thinking. “You’re holding it wrong, it’s like this...”

It was only when he reached out did he suddenly realize it might be inappropriate. The two weren’t teacher and young disciple, so to instruct with hand over hand might be overly familiar. However, since the hand was already out, there was no reason to pull back; it’d only seem overly self-conscious otherwise. Thus, after some hesitation, Xie Lian didn’t remove his hand. Then he thought, the last time at the Gambler’s Den, didn’t Hua Cheng teach him how to roll dice with hands over hands like this too? Although Xie Lian felt he learned absolutely nothing last time, and there was even a slight sense he’d been deceived somehow, this time he was sincere in wanting to teach Hua Cheng something.

Thus, Xie Lian’s warm palm was at ease, pressing close against Hua Cheng’s cold hand, gently holding it, and carried it to guide the brush across the paper, whispering, “Like this...”

He could feel under his hand Hua Cheng’s brush growing wilder, so he exerted some force to control it, correcting its path. However, it didn’t take long before it went even more off-course, resisting the control, so he could only grasp it tighter. The characters drawn through the power of the two combined were crooked and twisted, unseemly and ugly, and the more Xie Lian guided the more he felt something was off. Finally, he couldn’t help but gape.

“Wha...”

As if his silly prank was a success, Hua Cheng snickered softly. The ink on the paper was chaotically tyrannical, and Xie Lian was exasperated.

“San Lang...don’t be like this. Learn properly. Write properly.”

“Oh,” Hua Cheng acquiesced.

Just one look and it was obvious he was only pretending to be serious. Xie Lian shook his head, feeling ridiculous.

Hua Cheng’s hand might have been cold, but in his grasp, for some reason, it felt like a lump of hot coal, and Xie Lian didn’t dare to hold on any tighter. Just then, Xie Lian’s eyes suddenly swept to the edge of the altar, and he stopped.

When he looked over, at the corner of the jade bureau, there was a tiny, lonesome flower.

Ch.98: Bizarre Game Plan; Doors Open to the Fetus Ghost Thief

Xie Lian was momentarily stunned. A fargone memory was like a dust-covered picture, and when he tried to wipe it clean, it was still blurry. He loosened his hand and picked up that flower, solemn and wordless. Hua Cheng put down the brush too, and quietly grinded the ink.

“What is it?”

“...” Xie Lian smiled. “Nothing. Just, this flower is refreshing, I’ve always liked it.”

It wasn’t rare to see offerings of flowers in temples and palaces. Only, most would use bright reds or purples, large bouquets of fresh flowers or handmade fake ones that would never wilt.

After a pause, Xie Lian said, “Could it be that ‘Crimson Rain Sought Flower’ sought for this kind of flower?”

Hua Cheng smiled. “Gege has the premonition of gods.”

In between laughter, the two finally completed a set of compositions together, and the subject was still those four verses. Hua Cheng picked it up to admire it, looking very pleased.

“En. Pretty good. Frame it.”

Hearing him say “pretty good”, Xie Lian “eh”-ed. When he heard “frame it”, Xie Lian “eh”-ed again.

“You’re not thinking of hanging it on the wall, are you?”

If his deceased teachers were to see Xie Lian’s involvement in such a set of compositions, they’d probably rise from the dead to haunt him as zombies. However, Hua Cheng only laughed.

“No. I’m keeping it for myself. I’m not showing this to anyone.”

Just then, the two suddenly heard faint series of screaming from the outside:

“FIRE!”

“FIRE!”

“PARADISE MANOR IS ON FIRE!”

It was exceedingly quiet inside the main hall of Qiandeng Temple, and since the two both possessed stronger-than-normal senses, the moment they heard they instantly looked at each other.

Xie Lian blurted, "Paradise Manor again?"

The words already left his lips before he realized it was silly to say "again". Hua Cheng didn't seem worried, and unhurriedly put away the compositions.

"No need to worry. Gege, just sit here and relax. I'll be back shortly."

As if Xie Lian could sit back and relax.

"I'll come with you!" he said, and hastily followed, feeling a little bummed.

He thought, "How come every time I come, Paradise Manor gets set on fire?"

His title of God of Misfortune was about to be ratified again. Although this time it had nothing to do with him, being sorry was practically a habit by now. The two of them rushed back to Paradise Manor, and on the way the entire main street was heavy with smoke; little ghosts and monsters screaming and howling as they ran back and forth with buckets of water. When they saw Hua Cheng and Xie Lian arriving, they all called out.

"MY LORD! DON'CHA WORRY YER OL' LORDSHIP, THE FIRE AIN'T BIG, IT'S ALREADY PUT OUT!"

Hua Cheng didn't show any response, but Xie Lian, however, let out a breath of relief, and said gently, "Thank goodness! Thanks for everyone's hard work."

The little ghosts hadn't expected any kind of gratitude, and the "thanks for your hard work" came from the lord's friend no less, so they all became excited with delight.

"NOT HARD! IT'S NOTHIN' MAJOR!"

"IT'S OUR DUTY!"

Only then did Xie Lian realize, for him to show gratitude was rather inappropriate because he wasn't the master of this establishment. However, since Hua Cheng himself hadn't said anything, if Xie Lian said something, it shouldn't be too horrible. He reprimanded himself mentally, and stopped worrying. The two entered Paradise Manor and looked at where the arson started, and sure enough it was only a small area; nothing more than the corner of an insignificant small house. No wonder the fire was extinguished so fast.

Yet, after this was confirmed, Xie Lian became alarmed. He turned to Hua Cheng.

“The arsonist wasn’t trying to play an ignorant, gutsy prank, and this wasn’t just for torching something either; more like a red herring, attracting everyone’s attention away.”

But, if that was the case, what was the distraction for?

In a flash, Xie Lian figured it out. “THAT FETUS SPIRIT!”

Before, when they left Paradise Manor, even having walked a long way, that fetus spirit continued to wail and cry; the sound of its sobbing sharp to the ears, even calling for mom at times. Yet now, that voice was gone!

The two then rushed to a side chamber outside the main hall of Paradise Manor to check. When the two had left, Hua Cheng had casually placed the clay pot that contained the fetus spirit on a desk; before them, that clay pot was still there, but when Xie Lian reached out and grabbed it, he immediately felt the weight was different. It was too light. When he opened it, sure enough, there was nothing inside.

There was no way whatever was locked up within the clay pot could break that seal. Xie Lian immediately said, “Someone let the fetus spirit loose.”

Hua Cheng, however, didn’t look fussed at all. “It was stolen. That thing was injured in the troop of butterflies and badly wounded. It couldn’t get far on its own.”

“Then that’s easy to take care of,” Xie Lian said. “San Lang, does your Paradise Manor have guards that patrol the premises? See if they saw anyone suspicious.”

“There are none,” Hua Cheng said.

“...” Xie Lian blinked. “None?”

“Yeah. There’s never been any,” Hua Cheng replied.

No wonder when he snuck around Paradise Manor last time, there were no guards to be seen. Xie Lian had once thought it was because they were hidden so well he didn’t notice, but he didn’t realize there actually weren’t any at all.

Slightly stunned, he said, “You’re that lax about Paradise Manor?”

“Gege, have you ever paid attention to the doors in Paradise Manor?” Hua Cheng asked.

Xie Lian thought about it and replied, “No, I haven’t. Could it be there’s something extraordinary about them?”

“Correct,” Hua Cheng said.

He pointed at the set of the doors to the side chamber, and said, “If one is not the master of this establishment, then those who take without permission what was originally inside that didn’t belong to them—even just one item—they will not be able to open the doors, and they will be trapped inside the room.”

Xie Lian recalled the last time he came to Paradise Manor. At the time he had always opened doors with dice, and when he finally left, it was through the whirlwind created by the Wind Master, raising the roof; avoiding leaving through the doors. Those were all images of violence, and the more Xie Lian remembered, the more he thought he should stop thinking, feeling slightly ashamed.

After a pause, he then asked, “Then say if San Lang were to steal a spiritual device from me and kept it within Paradise Manor. Since I was the original owner of the device, can I not take it away?”

Hua Cheng raised his brows. “Of course not. Once it’s in my hands, it’s mine. But don’t wrong me, gege, I would never steal any of your spiritual devices.”

Xie Lian cleared his throat. “Of course. I knew that. That’s why I said ‘if’. Besides...I don’t really have any spiritual devices worth stealing, anyway...”

Hua Cheng’s jokes ended there. He smiled, then continued, “So, to steal something from me without notice is impossible. Naturally, there’s no need for guards.”

Xie Lian’s first reaction was, the one who stole the fetus spirit didn’t leave through the doors and employed a different method. But looking around, this side chamber’s roof showed no damage, the floors looked pristine, and the walls were fine too; not a trace of any break-ins. He couldn’t help but come up with a more skin-crawling thought:

Could it be the one who stole the fetus spirit hadn’t left, and was still in this side chamber?

Although there was nowhere in the side chamber to hide, still, there were plenty of ways in the world to go invisible. Maybe that thief was near them this very moment, watching their every action quietly. Xie Lian looked around intently, vigilant of any odd movement in the air. Yet whether it was his eyes or his instincts, both told him that there was no third person or ghosts. He might have to pursue a different train of thought. Just then, Hua Cheng chuckled.

“There’s no need for gege to be concerned. I have my own way of finding the fetus spirit thief.”

He actually looked mighty confident. Xie Lian turned to him, and after musing for a moment, Xie Lian became pleasantly optimistic too.

The two waited in silence. After a while, the sound of commotion came closer, and a large group of ghosts, demons, and monsters all came pouring in, gathering outside the side chamber like a flock of flappy birds.

“My lord! What does your ol’ lordship desire, calling us over?”

At minimum this crowd was close to a thousand in number; had it not been for the large courtyard and chambers of Paradise Manor, they might have not all fit. The one who brought them was that masked man, and he reported to Hua Cheng.

“My lord, everyone who appeared on the streets today should all be here. The Ghost City is also locked down, no one can leave.”

It was the same voice of that young man from the last time, and Xie Lian couldn’t help but steal a glance at him.

The ghosts cried, “My lord! Did ya catch the one who set the fire?”

“They sayin’ somethin’ was stolen, even! They tired o’ livin’ or wanna die again or what!”

“SO INSOLENT! SETTIN’ FIRES AN’ STEALIN’ SHIT, THEY’D DARE MESS WIT’ THE GREAT ANCESTOR! THERE’S NO WAY MY LORD WILL LET ’EM GO?!”

“...”

Although that crowd of ghosts wasn’t talking about him, as the one who set the building on fire the last time, kidnapped someone, and was let go by Hua Cheng, Xie Lian felt like he was pierced by countless arrows. He softly cleared his throat, feeling more and more guilty. He peeked a look at Hua Cheng, but coincidentally met eyes with him as he also swept an unreadable look over, and Xie Lian immediately dropped his gaze.

Then, he could hear Hua Cheng say flatly, “The one who stole the fetus spirit can come forward themselves, don’t waste my time.”

The crowd was shaken.

“Among us?”

“I thought it was something from the outside...”

“Who the hell is it, just go forward already!”

A moment later, the wave had calmed, but no one came forward.

Hua Cheng said, "Very good. Brave as expected. Men on the left, women on the right, divide and line up."

Although the demons and ghosts were puzzled, they didn't dare to disobey Hua Cheng's word. They immediately did as they were told, forming two large groups. The male ghosts squished on the left, their voices rough; the female ghosts were thus on the right, each seductive and flirtatious. Hua Cheng and Xie Lian shared a look, then went directly to the right side, walking through the female ghosts, tossing them looks, going through ten with each sweep of their eyes. After many steps, when Xie Lian walked past a female ghost, he paused slightly. This female ghost wore a long dress, her face heavy with layers of white powder, terrifyingly pale, her real face indiscernible. However, that exaggerated pretty face was somewhat familiar.

Xie Lian called out, "My lady Lan Chang?"

That female ghost was taken aback, as if she was the one who just saw a ghost. Sure enough, it was that female ghost Lan Chang; who clung onto him on the streets of Ghost City, fought with the boar butcher, laughed at his "can't get erect", and spread that around.

After shaking off her shock, she put her hands on her hips and raised her head. "What? Yer the one who said ya can't get it up! I didn't wrong you! Ya gonna seek revenge an' tell on me to my lord?"

Although the female ghosts were all a little nervous, hearing her, they still giggled softly. Hua Cheng walked over too, and even though his expression wasn't readable, that female ghost Lan Chang was still a little afraid, becoming demure and no longer stirring anything up.

Xie Lian said gently, "My lady can talk however she wants about a joke like that. However, that fetus spirit has harmed many, its blood heavy, and it shouldn't be let loose, so please return it."

Even with the heavy foundation on Lan Chang's face, it was still obvious her face became paler. She backed up in a hurry, but since she was in a crowd of other female ghosts, she didn't get very far before she was caught, sealing her chance of escape.

And so she could only cry, "I DUNNO WHAT YER SAYIN'! WHAT FETUS SPIRIT?"

"Please return it," Xie Lian beckoned.

"RETURN WHAT? I DUN HAVE IT! You accusin' me of stealin' from my lord's house, but everyone knows there's no way anythin' can be taken from my lord's house. Whatever we take we can't take it out!"

The crowd of ghosts all agreed, yeah, that's right, they all knew, and even the boar butcher was grumbling.

Lan Chang added, "Paradise Manor on fire only jus' happened. I've been on the street and I never left. If I stole anything, I wouldn't have the time to hide it?"

As she spoke, she opened her arms, showing off her empty hands, and even lifted her dress to prove she wasn't hiding anything.

However, Xie Lian pointed out, "My lady, the last time I met you, it was freezing cold, but you still dressed so lightly. Today, the day is beautiful, and yet you're wearing a long dress? Why the sudden change? Or are you hiding something?"

It was only after he brought it up did the ghosts realize: Lan Chang usually dressed revealingly, and to have Xie Lian say "lightly" was already very polite. On the streets, she'd almost be exposing her cleavage. However, today she was wearing a long dress, covering her legs and waist completely, exceedingly strange. Besides, earlier when Hua Cheng was taking Xie Lian around to stroll the Ghost City streets and the crowd of ghosts were hollering, stuffing them with dishes, they didn't see Lan Chang, who loved to show off and cuss the streets, passionately proclaiming "IT'S NOT ME, HE'S THE ONE WHO CAN'T GET IT UP!", and so they became agitated.

Xie Lian explained slowly, "You didn't take what didn't belong to you; you only took away what was part of you. That fetus spirit is in your belly right this moment!"

If the fetus spirit thief had no other ways to leave and didn't stick around in the side chamber, then there could only be one explanation: that thief left the front doors openly.

If that fetus spirit was already born, then it would be a child, an independent person. However, that fetus spirit was forcibly removed from its mother's womb before it reached term; therefore, if its mother stuffed it back into her belly, then naturally it'd count as something that belonged to her. No, it should be said, that fetus spirit was no different than a piece of her flesh, a part of her body. After all, the blood bond between a mother and child was thick, and under the circumstances, they were but one body, so that female ghost could naturally leave without harm, and exit Paradise Manor openly.

Therefore, the one who stole the fetus spirit must be a female ghost, as well as the mother to that child. Locking down the Ghost City then bringing forth all the female ghosts who appeared on the street before and after the fire to investigate would surely lead them to the culprit. Thinking back, Hua Cheng must've thought of all this the moment they entered the side chamber.

Suddenly, Lan Chang let out a loud scream, and covered her own belly in a mad fit.

Ch.99: Bizarre Game Plan; Doors Open to the Fetus Ghost Thief 2

"My lady?" Xie Lian exclaimed.

Lan Chang's face was white as a sheet, and she couldn't utter a single word. Suddenly, it was like something in her belly exploded, and the abdomen that was flat before swelled into a large ball, almost ripping that long dress apart; rolls of black smoke leaked out the seams.

The female ghosts were loosening their hold, but Lan Chang held on to her belly with a death grip, yelling in alarm, "STOP MESSIN' AROUND!"

It was that fetus spirit in her womb that was thrashing about.

Hua Cheng said calmly, "Gege, stand back."

"It's fine!" Xie Lian exclaimed.

Lan Chang fell to her knees on the ground, her face twisting with agony. "LISTEN TO ME! BE GOOD! JUST BE GOOD!!! STOP MESSIN' AROUND!!!"

"Lady Lan Chang, just let it out first."

Lan Chang shook her head wildly. "NO! NONONO! I will keep him in my womb and raise him well for sure, he won't go out to harm anyone anymore! My lord, please, I beg you, don't take my son away. I've searched for him for centuries! Don't take my son away! Don't hand him to those scoundrels in the heavens!"

It seemed the ghosts and demons in the Ghost City were aware that Xie Lian was of the heavenly realm, after all. Lan Chang wailed and started rolling on the ground, holding her abdomen, as if her belly no longer made part of her body and was instead its own live creature; shrinking at times, swelling at times, and moving all around at times. The black smoke was growing thicker; it must've regained some strength after having recovered in its mother's womb, and was ready to start trouble again. The crowd of female ghosts had broken up but went back to hold her down, yet they were powerless. All the other ghosts on the left clamoured, "WE GOT THIS!", and rushed forward to push her down. It was pandemonium.

Xie Lian clenched his fists, shouting, "MY LADY LAN CHANG! THE POWER OF THE FETUS IN YOUR BELLY IS MUCH STRONGER THAN YOURS, IT CAN HURT YOU BUT YOU COULDN'T BEAR TO HURT IT, YOU CAN'T DO ANYTHING! IT WILL SUCK YOU DRY SOONER OR LATER AND BREAK OUT OF YOUR BODY, LET IT OUT NOW!"

If Lan Chang refused to let go of the thing hidden in her belly herself, she was going to be sucked dry and ripped apart by that cruel and violent fetus spirit sooner or later, which would leave Xie Lian no choice but to personally cut it out himself. Although it might be better than watching her being ripped apart by her own son, unless there was really no other way, it really wasn't something he wanted to do. He didn't want to do it, and he certainly wouldn't want Hua Cheng to do it for him. However, this female ghost Lan Chang was stubborn as a mule, and even as she wailed in agony she refused to let that fetus spirit out. This couldn't go on for much longer, so Xie Lian would rather do it himself.

He gritted his teeth and cried, "EXCUSE MY IMPOSITION!"

However, when his hand reached for Fangxin's hilt, Hua Cheng immediately held him back, telling him with a serious voice, "No need."

At the same time, a flash of golden light suddenly erupted from the centre of her abdomen, its rays stabbing at that crowd of ghosts and monsters. They all screamed, fleeing to give her room.

"WHAT THE SHIT!?"

Xie Lian fixed his eyes on it, and when that golden light died down, the fetus spirit that was desperate to rush out seemed to be fettered by something, and Lan Chang's abdomen flattened down to its normal form. The thing that fettered it was a belt on her waist.

That belt looked normal and indistinct, but when Xie Lian took a good look, he was astonished.

"...Why would something like this be on you?"

Even if its colour had faded from wash, Xie Lian could tell that that belt was something that belonged to the heavens.

There were many objects in heaven that were artful spiritual devices. Thus, only in dire circumstances would they show themselves to protect their masters in a moment of urgency. Also, even if the embroidered patterns on it were heavily rubbed off and damaged, Xie Lian could still determine that it must be the Golden Belt that only heavenly officials could possess.

Looking at its make, it was also from one of the Upper Court!

In the heavenly realm, to gift a Golden Belt was a trendy act of elegance, and it possessed a special meaning. If a male official was to gift his belt to another, it was a gesture of affection, and there was no need to further explain what the "special meaning" would be. Thus, something like a belt would of course not be easily given away, and not so easily lost either.

Xie Lian gaped. "My lady, could it be, your child..."

He trailed off as he suddenly remembered: no matter if this was the lair of evil, to inquire such personal details of a woman in public wasn't a courteous thing to do. He immediately cut himself off.

Lan Chang instantly cried, "NO!"

"I haven't even said anything, what are you saying 'no' to?" Xie Lian wondered mentally.

He asked instead, "Did you depend on this Golden Belt to support yourself throughout the past seven, eight hundred years?"

Hearing this, all the female ghosts were stunned.

"...HOLY SHIT LAN CHANG, YER THAT OLD?!"

"DIDN'CHA ALWAYS SAY YER ONLY THREE HUNDRED SUMTHIN'?"

"NO, SHE'S EVEN SAID SHE WAS TWO HUNDRED BEFORE!! YA FALSIFYIN' YER AGE!!!"

That fetus spirit had about seven to eight hundred years of cultivation, so its mother would naturally be around that age too. However, that female ghost Lan Chang didn't possess that heavy of a grudge, so to be able to stay in the corporeal world for so long as a normal ghost, the Golden Belt with such immense spiritual powers must've helped her out a great deal. If the father of that fetus spirit was a heavenly official, then it made sense for it to be so vicious.

A heavenly official having had an affair with a mortal woman; who knows if he ended up abandoning or neglecting her, but that woman met a violent end, her baby forcibly removed from her womb. Now both mother and son had become of the ghost realm, and that fetus could very well have murdered countless others. No matter what, this affair was no less serious than the affair with Xuan Ji, and it even seemed rather similar.

As for how to deal with this, Xie Lian had already decided. He immediately turned to Hua Cheng and said, "San Lang, this lady..."

No need for him to say more. Hua Cheng said, "Do what you must. No need to ask me."

"Hn," Xie Lian acquiesced softly.

Once receiving permission, he turned to Lan Chang. Just then, all the ghosts were demanding:

"LAN CHANG LAN CHANG, WHO'S THE DAD TO YER BABY???"

"WHAT AN OUTRAGE! DID HE ONLY CARE FOR KILLING BUT NOT BURIAL? HE ONLY CARED TO KNOCK YA UP BUT NOT RAISE THE KID?"

“JUST WHO IS IT? YA GOTTA AVENGE YASELF!”

Lan Chang gritted her teeth and glared at Xie Lian. “...Who else can it be?”

She hadn't said the name, but Xie Lian understood.

“Come to the Heavenly Court with me.”

“NO!!!” Lan Chang immediately shouted.

Of course, it was useless for her to say no; willing or not, Xie Lian must take her away.

Xie Lian hardened his expression, and said solemnly, “This fetus spirit is exceedingly violent; who knows how much blood is on its hands. The case has become too convoluted, you can't protect it. This must be confronted and reported to the Heavenly Court. If that heavenly official is an honest one, or if there was some kind of misunderstanding between you, then we can have you and your child be recognized, and have the matter with the child dealt with. If that heavenly official has wronged you or did something even worse, then there's even more reason for you to demand justice. No matter what, this fetus spirit is your son, but also his son. How can anyone else interfere if the father is ignorant of this affair?”

The ghosts all thought his speech made sense. Also, if they let Lan Chang take her son to cause a riot in the heavens, then how exciting would that be? The bigger the chaos the better, even! So they all urged:

“Yeah, Lan Chang, what are you afraid of?! Go settle yer score with that guy!”

“If he won't recognize you, we'll burn down his temples!”

Xie Lian turned to Hua Cheng. “I will make a trip up to the Heavenly Court this instant and report this affair at once.”

Lan Chang, however, was still objecting, but knew she couldn't stop him. After snapping back from her shock, she suddenly bowed down to Hua Cheng and said, “My lord, thank you for your kindness and grace in sheltering me!”

Xie Lian was taken aback.

She continued, “Lan Chang setting fires to Paradise Manor was out of desperation, and broke the rules of Ghost City; I am ever so sorry! Pray my lord won't hold it against me.”

She had always been a sauntering shrew, but when she opened her mouth now, it was as if she was a different person, making many of the demons and monsters who were familiar with her watch in shock. Hua Cheng, however, still appeared indifferent. He turned to Xie Lian.

“Gege came by in too much of a hurry this time. I’ll wait for you to come down again and host you properly next time.”

Xie Lian nodded, then took Lan Chang and rushed straight to the heavens.

As he walked down the main streets of the Heavenly Court, he announced in the spiritual communication array, “Everyone! Everyone please do make their way to the Great Martial Hall. There’s something that needs to be discussed.”

He exited the array the moment he was done, and didn’t waste any time, bringing Lan Chang to the Great Martial Hall. Due to the fact that Lan Chang was a female ghost and couldn’t enter the golden pavilion, Xie Lian waited outside with her for a moment until Jun Wu himself arrived and gave permission before Lan Chang was allowed in.

It didn’t take long before all the heavenly officials present in the Heavenly Court made their way to the hall, and when they saw that crude female ghost in heavy makeup who stood clashingly next to Xie Lian, they were all bewildered. A black-clad heavenly official strolled into the hall, and when he saw what was in the centre of the hall, he paused for a moment. It was Mu Qing. Lan Chang also glanced at him and immediately lowered her head, her lips quivering.

Mu Qing, however, didn’t show any reaction, and only asked plainly, “Your Highness, who is that woman?”

Hearing the word “Your Highness”, Lan Chang’s face changed and looked at Xie Lian; as if she was remembering something, but wasn’t too sure. Just then, both the Wind and Water Masters arrived too; a pair of brothers who looked quite similar to each other, each with their own fans fanning gently, their white robes fluttering, painting a beautiful picture.

Shi Qingxuan fanned as he spoke. “Yeah, Temple Master. Why did you bring up a female ghost today?”

Xie Lian was puzzled. “‘Temple Master’? What Temple Master? Of Puqi Shrine? Why the sudden address?”

Then he realized, Shi Qingxuan probably meant “Temple Master of Qiandeng Temple”!

He didn’t know how to acknowledge the title, and could only pretend he didn’t hear. Shi Qingxuan, however, was cheerfully pleased; he greeted around, then turned to the ghost.

“Eh? This female ghost jiejie has something in her belly??? Why do I feel it’s...” he said as he approached, looking like he wanted to touch.

Shi Wudu snapped his fan shut and shouted, “Qingxuan!”

Shi Qingxuan’s hand instantly shrank back, and he tried to justify himself. “I just thought there was an aura of evil, and wanted to see if there’s something dangerous...”

Shi Wudu admonished, “You’re a man, and a heavenly official. This is the Great Martial Hall, how can you do something so disgraceful? Don’t turn into a woman, either! Even in a woman’s form it’s equally disgraceful; change back right this instant!”

Ling Wen shook his head, folded a stack of documents and reports under his arm, and approached to place his hand on Lan Chang’s belly. After a moment of pause, he dropped his hand and hummed.

“What a vicious fetus spirit. How many hundreds of years old?”

“About seven to eight hundred years,” Xie Lian answered.

He gave an account of the two times he met the fetus spirit, and how the fetus spirit led to finding the female ghost after having harmed pregnant women. He didn’t bring up the details of Hua Cheng and the Ghost City, and Lan Chang would naturally remain quiet on the subject.

After he finished, Xie Lian said, “And that was how it came to be. I don’t know if that heavenly official is still in this world or still working, or if there’s some misunderstanding in all this, or whether he knew? That’s why I brought this lady up here.”

Feng Xin frowned. “If there wasn’t any misunderstanding, and he knew about the mother and child, to let them be without any communication is too irresponsible.”

Pei Ming crossed his arms and commented leisurely, “I completely agree with General Nan Yang. This is too irresponsible. Don’t know which heavenly colleague this discarded baggage belongs to, but if he’s on duty, he best come forward himself.”

Just as he finished, he felt countless eyes on him, and it was a blanket of silence inside the Great Martial Hall.

After a moment, Pei Ming said, “...Do you all have some sort of misunderstanding of me?”

“...” Shi Qingxuan stopped fanning his fan, too, and commented, “I don’t think it’s a misunderstanding, more like we know you too well.”

Pei Ming immediately countered, “It’s not me!”

Everyone laughed dryly, and even Shi Wudu and Ling Wen didn't look like they were convinced.

Pei Ming was growing frustrated, and supported his temple, explaining with an earnest voice, "Um...I did have some flings with women of the ghost realm before, but I really don't recognize this woman."

If those words were taken seriously, it was believable. How could the man himself not know who he had a past with? Pei Ming's promiscuity might have been criticized by many, but he had never denied any affairs, and never denounced anything he'd done; it wasn't like he couldn't afford it. The women who had an affair with him, unless they were like Xuan Ji who no longer wanted to follow him, they were all at least guaranteed a life of riches and care, soaking in wealth and sweetness. If this female ghost truly had a fleeting affair with Pei Ming whilst alive, she shouldn't have suffered having her womb ripped open, her son robbed, and becoming a vicious ghost.

Besides, Pei Ming had high standards when it came to women. Those who he flirted with were extraordinary in appearance, and he also preferred beauties with a natural look. As everyone could see in the hall, Lan Chang had such a heavy layer of makeup on, her real face was indiscernible; her general looks, class, and behaviour were all far different than the chosen lovers Pei Ming usually had, so when he claimed it wasn't him, everyone silently believed somewhat. Only, it was still just "silently" and "somewhat". With such an occasion to see General Pei get checkmated, how fun was that? And so, they stood by and watched him argue with a smile, amused and entertained.

At first, Xie Lian also thought the father was more than likely to be Pei Ming; he had a track record, after all. But watching Pei Ming's expression, it didn't seem like he was lying, so Xie Lian wasn't so certain anymore.

He recalled Hua Cheng saying that Pei Ming wasn't a shady man, that there wasn't anything to be afraid of, so after some contemplation, he added, "Before, the lady Lan Chang did reply ambiguously, 'who else can it be', so I had also assumed. But, since General Pei denies such claims, maybe there's some misunderstanding. It can't be the same person every time, after all, so why don't we ask around..."

Unexpectedly, Lan Chang suddenly spoke up, "It's not him."

Xie Lian was taken aback and turned to her.

Lan Chang repeated, "It's not him."

Ling Wen commented coolly, "What, so it's not?"

Shi Wudu also politely commented, "So it actually isn't."

“...” Pei Ming turned to Shi Wudu and Ling Wen. “I already said it wasn’t. The two of you are adding insult to injury. Just you wait.”

The heavenly officials were all disappointed, but then became even more excited. After all, Pei Ming had always produced wanton scandals, so even if it was him, it wasn’t anything new. If it wasn’t him, however, it meant quite likely, there was another male official, present or not, who might be creating a “new wave”; how could they not be thrilled?

Earlier at the Ghost City, Lan Chang had hinted clearly that it was Pei Ming, but now she was denying it. Xie Lian could feel something amiss, but didn’t make a show of it.

He inquired, “Hm. Then who is it?”

Lan Chang stared at him, her eyes unmoving. “You.”

Xie Lian thought she wasn’t finished, and asked, “What about me?”

“I said, that man, is you!” Lan Chang proclaimed.

Ch.100: Mad Confrontation; Laughter of Ridicule Without Closure

If Lan Chang had said something like, “the one who killed me was you”, it still wouldn’t be as startling, a bolt from the blue, as this proclamation.

Xie Lian was practically knocked out by her thunderbolt. “ME?!”

Upon the throne, even Jun Wu’s hand that was supporting his temple seemed to have slipped. The heavenly officials were all shocked into silence, then immediately turned towards the emperor. Jun Wu’s hand righted itself, continuing to appear sombre with his hand on his head. The officials then looked to Xie Lian in unison.

Was this it? The third banishment to come before the eyes of all?!

Xie Lian felt his entire mind was numb and shaking, and forced himself to swallow back that habitually-used “I can’t get erect” that almost escaped through his teeth.

That was only a casual excuse, not appropriate to be used in circumstances like these. Besides, there were already vulgar commentary that passed around in private in the Upper Court in regards to various martial gods and their attitudes towards women: when Feng Xin saw women, he’d stay respectfully far away; Lang Qianqiu blushed the moment he saw women; Mu Qing refused to see ugly women; when Pei Su saw women, he’d be expressionless, but who knew what he was actually thinking; Quan Yizhen didn’t even have women on his mind; and Pei Ming’s mind was all women. If Xie Lian made his excuses now, no doubt his name would be added to the list.

Xie Lian said earnestly, “My lady Lan Chang, please calm down. There’s definitely no such possibility.”

Lan Chang’s eyes bulged bigger than bells. “Yes, there is. It’s you, the Crown Prince of Xianle!”

“...”

Even though the timing of when this woman died was after his ascension and could maybe match up, wouldn’t he know better than anyone whether he’d met her before?

In between all the whispering going around, Xie Lian became solemn and said sternly, “My lady, I may not be a saint, but I still know of a faithful heart. If I don’t love someone, I would never cross any lines with that person. If I did, then even if I must beg and collect junk, busk and perform on the streets to feed my family, I would still never allow that person to suffer any bit of grievance. You are in the Great Martial Palace, do not speak falsehoods.”

Shi Qingxuan piped up too, "If it really was his highness who committed such a deed, why would he bring this female ghost jiejie up to the heavens to confront anyone? And why is it only now that this lady Lan Chang recognized him? Just thinking about it makes no sense."

It was easy to see it didn't make sense. Yet, with such a show, no one cared if it made no sense. The crowd maintained a reserved attitude, and there was even an official who blindly guessed, "Maybe it was like this: perhaps His Highness lost his memory so he doesn't remember the things he's done?"

"Honestly, I think it's more believable that he's bold enough to think maybe after eight hundred years no one would recognize him."

Xie Lian was speechless, and cautioned the crowd, "To prove something impossible by fabricating something even more inconceivable is a dangerous path to go down, my lords."

On the side, Feng Xin looked like he wanted to say something; but looking like he couldn't make up his mind, he paused, and in the end, remained silent.

Jun Wu cleared his throat and questioned, "Xianle, how many Golden Belts did you have in your possession in the past?"

Xie Lian covered his forehead with his hand. "...Too many. At least ten..."

Mu Qing answered flatly, "Over forty, each with different embroidery and patterns."

It was only after the words left his lips that he realized it was improper, and shut up. There were already people who instantly remembered that Mu Qing used to be Xie Lian's personal attendant, and took care of his daily living, which was how he had known such details. Many of the officials couldn't help but think: just Golden Belts alone, and there were over forty, this Highness the Crown Prince really lived an extraordinarily luxurious life. Not just the others, even Xie Lian himself when thinking back felt rather embarrassed. Back then, he'd change into a different extravagant ensemble every day, and his belts changed each time, matching with whatever outfit he had on; unlike now, where in an entire year he'd only have the three sets of clothing to wear over and over again. Those three sets all looked exactly the same, too, and with just one look people must think him so poor he only had one set of clothes to wear.

Jun Wu asked, "And where are they now, do you remember?"

Xie Lian and Feng Xin both "eh"-ed silently.

Xie Lian rubbed his forehead. "Ahem, not really. They're things from eight hundred years ago, after all. I've long forgotten where they've gone."

Not just because they were tossed out, but the main reason was because he and Feng Xin often pawned items off whenever things got tight. Too many were pawned away, and whether there were any belts left, he really couldn't remember.

Feng Xin didn't have the heart to discuss this subject, but still said, "To be able to obtain that Golden Belt, it must've been given by someone else, or maybe picked up somewhere."

Jun Wu hadn't actually expected Xie Lian to remember, either, and said, "Xianle, I remember that your cultivation method demands a body of purity, lest your spiritual power be greatly damaged."

"Yes," Xie Lian said.

Shi Qingxuan piped up again, "Well. Just by looking at His Highness I can tell he must've cultivated such a path, so I was right. If that's the case, nevermind knocking anyone up, I bet he's never even held anyone's hand."

Xie Lian was about to say "that's right", but in his mind, suddenly, there was a pale white, slender hand, cool as jade, reflected upon a bright red wedding veil, its third finger knotted with a thin red thread. The "that's right" got stuck in his throat, no longer able to roll out. Everyone in the hall was staring at him intently, and with just one look it was obvious that this stump meant "that's not true"!

However, "never held hands" was too low of a standard, and even if hands were held it wasn't a big deal.

Shi Qingxuan immediately added, "Even if he's held hands, he must've never kissed anyone before."

Xie Lian wanted to say "that's right" again, but this time, before his eyes suddenly floated stream after stream of crystal-like air bubbles, the translucent beads dispersing. Then, there was an exceptionally handsome face with eyes closed; a small widow's peak on top of that shapely forehead, beautiful to behold.

This time, not only did not a single word get squeezed out, his entire face flushed a bright red.

"..."

"..."

"..."

Instantly, every heavenly official in the hall understood, and dry coughs sounded all around. Shi Qingxuan was starting to regret saying anything, knocking his fan over his own head once, and secretly passed a message to Xie Lian through their private communication array:

“Sorry about that, Your Highness. I only wanted to convince everyone that you’re really of the innocent sort, but I hadn’t realized you weren’t. So you’ve had such experiences, I really couldn’t tell!”

That “I really couldn’t tell” shattered Xie Lian’s will. He choked out with difficulty, “Don’t say any more. That was, an accident...”

Jun Wu’s hand folded into a fist and he pressed it against his lips, clearing his throat loudly. “Very good. You haven’t violated your vows in these years, correct?”

Xie Lian finally let out a breath of relief. “Yes.”

“Then that’ll be easy,” Jun Wu said. “I have a sword here named ‘Yanzhen’⁷⁶, and it possesses a particular ability. Should the blood of a virgin flow upon it, it shall not be stained, but become brighter as it is washed. Take a drop of your blood and drip upon it, and we shall see the truth.”

Although everyone had known for years that Jun Wu had the hobby of collecting rare and strange swords, still, all the heavenly officials thought in their minds, “Why does my lord have all these messed-up swords? What’s even the use in collecting those...”

Xie Lian himself was feeling more and more confused by the situation, and only wanted to end it as soon as possible. Ling Wen brought forth that sensual Yanzhen sword, and immediately slid the blade across his hand. Countless eyes watched intently, and Shi Qingxuan clapped.

“GOOD. CASE CLOSED!”

Drops of blood slid past the blade, leaving not a trace, as expected. The proof was as solid as the mountains, and the crowd could only break up.

“Ah, I see.”

“Then who can it be?”

Their voices were lacklustre, dripping with disappointment.

Ling Wen turned to Lan Chang politely. “My lady, please tell us honestly just who this heavenly official is. The fetus spirit in your womb is unruly, and your powers aren’t strong, so only its blood-bound father can calm and discipline it. I...”

⁷⁶ [豔貞] “Yanzhen” translates to “Glamorous Virtue”.

Unexpectedly, before he finished, Lan Chang pointed at Ling Wen and cried, "YOU! THAT MAN IS YOU!"

"..."

Ling Wen: "???"

Ling Wen had probably only just come from his temple to attend this meeting and was in the form of a man. To suddenly be pointed as the child's father by Lan Chang, he was in baffled shock.

All the heavenly officials spat out and Pei Ming chortled, "Noble Jie, did you go find a nice girl to knock up after finishing administrating your reports? HAHAhahahahaha..."

This was probably what they called instant karma. Ling Wen shook his head and gratefully declined Shi Wudu's compassionate gesture of wanting to give his "good nephew" a red packet.

His expression calmed and he said, "I didn't finish, and I've no time."

After such riotous back and forth, and accusing a number of officials, naturally no one would believe Lan Chang anymore.

Feng Xin couldn't watch any longer, and said grumpily, "I get it. This female ghost was completely crazy from the start, and is only here to throw around blame. She's here to stir up trouble."

Lan Chang cackled, sounding more and more like a crazy hag. If this should continue, who knows who she'd accuse next.

The heavenly officials all changed their tune:

"Yeah, who knows, maybe that Golden Belt was stolen..."

"To be fair, I have more than one Golden Belt. I can't even be sure how many I have exactly, and I don't remember if I have kept away all of them properly."

However, Lan Chang wouldn't let anything go. Putting her hands on her hips, she screamed, "WHAT, TRY'NA GET AWAY? TOO LATE! NO WAY! IS IT YOU, IS IT YOU, OR IS IT YOU!"

At this point, it was obvious she was pointing fingers randomly; even Ming Yi, who was standing in a corner silently, focusing on chewing whatever his cheeks were stuffed with, was forcibly recognized as the father once. It was chaos in the great hall, and everyone was fleeing.

“TAKE HER AWAY, TAKE HER AWAY!”

“DON’T LET HER SPOUT ANYMORE NONSENSE!”

“THIS JIEJIE ISN’T MY TYPE DON’T YOU SLANDER ME!”

“SO DISGRACEFUL!”

Jun Wu waved his hand and a junior official came in to take Lan Chang down. Even as she was dragged out of the Great Martial Hall, she continued to scream and laugh shrilly. The officials within the hall could finally calm their hearts and stand back in position, their heads throbbing. At first everyone had thought the matter didn’t involve them, and were only there for a good show. But now they weren’t so sure whether a bucket of shit was going to get thrown over their heads; maybe even landing themselves a new play in the mortal realm, of a female ghost lover with gaudy makeup and a ghost son who had murdered thousands. Feeling the danger, they all threw their hands up with abandon.

“THERE’S NO WAY TO INVESTIGATE THIS MATTER!”

“I think she’s simply mad in the head. No need to investigate, it’d be a waste of time. Just lock her up.”

“This can very well be the ghost realm causing trouble on purpose.”

Xie Lian didn’t agree, however. “Earlier, on the way here, lady Lan Chang was quite conscient, so why did she become this way the moment she entered the Great Martial Hall? I’m afraid it’s not something that can be explained away with a simple ‘mad in the head’.”

Thus, the crowd broke down to two sides, debating and arguing; in the end, the conclusion was still that never-changing “we’ll see, we’ll see”. After the meeting was dismissed, he bid farewell to Shi Qingxuan, who promised he’d descend in a few days to visit and play, and Xie Lian walked out of the Great Martial Hall, sighing mentally.

“They all say the Palace of Ling Wen isn’t efficient, but it can’t be helped. Every time we gather to discuss anything, there’s so much noise and vaguity, and in the end the conclusions are mostly nothing concrete, so how can the Palace of Ling Wen conduct anything?”

Just then, he sensed someone from behind coming close, and he turned around to see it was Feng Xin. Slightly taken aback, he hadn’t even greeted Feng Xin before Feng Xin hastily said under his breath, “Watch out for Mu Qing.”

Xie Lian lowered his voice too. “Mu Qing?”

“When he entered the hall, that female ghost reacted oddly, like she was afraid of him,” Feng Xin said. “I don’t care for other people’s personal affairs, but in any case, you watch yourself.”

He hurried away after having his say. Xie Lian stood where he was and waited ‘til Feng Xin was far gone before he started again.

Even though it wasn’t noticeable in his expression, Xie Lian had actually been paying close attention to every heavenly official’s minute expressions, as well as Lan Chang’s reaction; naturally, he didn’t miss Mu Qing.

However, he didn’t think the father of that fetus spirit was likely to be Mu Qing. Xie Lian couldn’t even imagine Mu Qing doing such a thing. Undeniably, Mu Qing was someone who focused heart and mind on cultivation, improving his martial arts, and expanding his territory, growing believers. Besides, they practiced the same cultivation method, and would never ruin his cultivation by touching women. However, Mu Qing knew Lan Chang; that was definitely not wrong. But with so few clues, Xie Lian shook his head and descended from the Heavenly Court.

With the fetus spirit subdued, and Lang Ying and Guzi settled in that wealthy merchant’s abode with food and drink, there was nothing to worry about. Still, it wasn’t good for him to be away for too long. If he took his time, without even a shadow of him, that wealthy merchant would probably start grousing. Thus, the moment Xie Lian descended, he went straight for the town of Puqi. When that wealthy merchant saw him, he immediately clutched his hands and cried excitedly.

“DAOZHANG! VENERABLE, A VENERABLE! You slept in my mistress’ chambers last night and the doors were all locked, yet this morning when we opened up, I couldn’t believe my eyes! You’d disappeared into thin air! Strong! TOO STRONG! SO?! DID YOU CATCH THE MONSTER?”

“It’s caught, don’t worry. Everything’s fine now,” Xie Lian replied. “How are the two children I brought with me?”

It was like that wealthy merchant received absolution, and he cried joyously, “Good, they’re very good! They didn’t eat much at all! Daozhang, where’s your Qiandeng Temple? I’m gonna go donate and return my gratitude! From today onwards, I will hang my title as one of the worshippers in your temple, and let none fight me!”

Xie Lian didn’t know whether to laugh or cry, but no matter what, he had expanded his numbers of new worshippers, and one that was rich, too; so he was feeling rather glad. He lectured and nagged to that wealthy merchant the ways of virtue, advising him not to be so promiscuous in the future, to be more devoted and loving to his wife and family, then finally, told him to visit Puqi Shrine on another day. Then, Xie Lian left with Lang Ying and Guzi in tow.

The three returned to Puqi Village and came before Puqi Shrine. Xie Lian took that please-donate-and-help-with-renovations sign and placed it in a more conspicuous spot, secretly hoping that when that wealthy merchant came he could see it immediately, then he pushed the doors in to enter the shrine. However, the moment he opened the door, he sensed something different with the place.

Walking into the shrine, sure enough, it was very different. The floors of the place had been swept, the altar table and chairs had been wiped, dust had been cleared, and even the trash in the corner had been cleaned out. It was like the Lady River Snail⁷⁷ had paid a visit; everything was too clean.

Even Qi Rong was gone!

With his disappearance, it was like the entire place was spacious and bright, and even the air had cleared somewhat. However, Guzi had carried in his arms the meat pies he especially brought from town, and when he peeked in and didn't see anyone, he was anxious.

"Big brother, where's dad?"

Xie Lian immediately turned around. He hadn't even left the doors before sensing a dangerous, chilling light attacking; instantly he pulled out Fangxin to strike back. CLANG! That chilling shine was struck out high into the air, falling miles out away.

He unsheathed as fast as lightning, and sheathed just as fast, returning Fangxin to its place. He let out a puff of breath, but immediately became puzzled.

"That's it? How come after that flash, there's no more follow-up moves?"

He turned to look at that chilling light; after he had struck, it landed on the ground far away, crookedly embedded into the earth. Looking at it from a far distance, that curved silver arch was appearing more and more familiar. Xie Lian brought the two children over, and when he saw clearly what it was, he immediately knelt down.

He exclaimed, "It...isn't this E'ming? What's wrong?"

Asking "what's wrong" to a scimitar was an extremely odd sight. A few farmers who walked past watched Xie Lian strangely, and elbowed each other secretly.

"Look, that man, he's talking to a knife..."

"Yeah, I see it. That's freaky, let's get outta here..."

⁷⁷ The Lady River Snail is a character from a folklore who once was saved by a fisherman, and was kept in his house. When he was gone during the day, she'd transform into a girl and perform domestic duties. Once he found out, they lived happily ever after.

However, Xie Lian had to ask, because E'ming's entire blade body, including the silver contoured eye on the hilt, was shaking violently. It was as if it had contracted a disease; it was shaking harder by the minute.

Xie Lian reached out in spite of himself, and asked worriedly, "Did I hurt you just now?"

Ch.101: Fight for Commendation; E'ming Battles Ruoye

That scimitar was shaking more and more uncontrollably. Xie Lian was at a loss on what to do, and gently stroked down along the spine of the blade.

"I'm sorry, I'm sorry, I didn't see it was you, I won't do it again."

After stroking it a few times, E'ming squinted its eye, and the trembling finally stopped.

Xie Lian then asked, "Where's your master?"

Suddenly, a voice came from behind. "Pay it no mind."

Xie Lian looked back and immediately rose to his feet, surprised and delighted. "San Lang? Why have you come?"

Behind him was a youth who approached easily, with an air of playful arrogance. It was Hua Cheng. He had tied his black hair up into a crooked ponytail again. He was dressed in a white tunic, with his red outer robe tied around his waist; his sleeves were rolled up, revealing those pale-white but firm arms, as well as the tattoo on one of them. As he walked, the little silver bells on his boots chimed, sounding quite mellow. He looked very much like a strapping young lad of the village, but exceedingly carefree. A piece of weed-grass hung from his lips, and he smiled at Xie Lian.

"Gege."

Xie Lian had originally planned on visiting Hua Cheng to give his proper thanks after settling the two children, but Hua Cheng himself showed up instead. Lazily, Hua Cheng came up next to him and pulled out that silver scimitar from the ground with just one hand. He looked it over, then lifted it to rest on his shoulder.

"Gege is busy here, there's no need to trouble you to make a trip over there, so I came over myself. You also forgot this."

There was actually a bamboo hat carried on his back, and he removed it to give it to Xie Lian. This was forgotten at the mansion of that wealthy merchant, and Xie Lian was slightly taken aback.

He then immediately said, "I completely forgot about it, thanks for going through the trouble."

Just as the words left his mouth, he suddenly remembered what he told Hua Cheng after that something that had happened the night before: "I'm looking for my bamboo hat, my bamboo hat is missing." It was nonsense uttered out of confusion, but Hua Cheng actually went and found the bamboo hat for him. Xie Lian felt a wave of embarrassment, afraid that Hua Cheng was going to tease him for it. Fortunately, Hua Cheng didn't even mention the incident, and changed the subject with a smile.

"Gege picked up two more kids?" he said as he patted Guzi's head, ruffling his hair into a mess.

Guzi seemed to be scared of him, rushing to hide behind Xie Lian.

Xie Lian chided, "Don't worry, this gege is a good person."

However, Hua Cheng said, "Nah, I'm a very bad person."

Although that was what he said, still he flicked his hand, and a tiny silver butterfly was flipped out of his sleeve; fluttering its little wings, flying errantly towards Guzi. Guzi's inky little eyes bulged. He stared at the tiny silver butterfly with an unmoving gaze, and finally, he reached out to try to catch it in spite of himself.

With that, his guard against Hua Cheng was greatly dropped. Then, Hua Cheng nonchalantly swept his eyes over Lang Ying, but his gaze was significantly different. When he looked at Lang Ying, his eyes were cold and sharp, unkind and unfriendly. Lang Ying lowered his head and also shrank back behind Xie Lian anxiously.

Xie Lian held the bamboo hat in hand, and said, "If you're gonna come, just come. What are you doing cleaning Puqi Shrine?"

"It's nothing more than some house-cleaning; don't you think everything feels so much more refreshing, now that all the trash is cleared out?"

"..."

Xie Lian remembered the missing Qi Rong, and wondered: did Hua Cheng actually throw him out like he's garbage?

Just then, there was a sudden wail from behind Puqi Shrine: "HUA CHENG YOU FUCKER GO TO HELL AND GET BOILED IN A POT OF FRYING OIL! MURDER! HUA CHENG IS COMMITTING GHOST MURDER!!!"

Guzi cried, "Dad!"

His two little legs ran, rushing on over, and Xie Lian hastily followed too. There was a small creek behind Puqi Shrine; it was where he usually did laundry and washed rice. At that moment, Qi Rong was also being dunked in the water, his body bound tightly by Ruoye. He was desperately keeping his head above water, and roaring with all of his might.

"I WON'T GET OUT, I REFUSE TO GET OUT! I WILL STAY IN THIS BODY UNTIL IT DIES! I WON'T SURRENDER!!!"

Hua Cheng spat out that piece of weed-grass. "You take yourself for some kind of a hero? Useless trash."

Xie Lian explained woefully, "...I captured him a few days ago on some mountain. He's possessing someone else and won't come out. The man is still alive, so if we forcibly rip out the soul, the flesh won't survive. Honestly...does San Lang have any idea on what we can do?"

Hua Cheng replied, "Hm? You want ideas on how to make him suffer a fate worse than death? There's plenty."

That was obviously a threat. Qi Rong cursed.

"THE TWO OF YOU! BROKEN POT MATCHING A ROTTEN COVER! HEARTS OF SNAKES AND SCORPIONS! GUrglegurglegurgle..."

He hadn't finished before he was submerged in the creek again. Although whenever Xie Lian saw him, he'd remember how his mother's corpse was dissolved into ashes and would be filled with anguish; still, that body belonged to another, and so it must be conserved. Thus, he fished Qi Rong up from the creek and dragged him to the front door of Puqi Shrine.

Qi Rong hadn't eaten for a full day and night, so his stomach was shriveled from hunger. After having been bullied by Hua Cheng, he was full of rage but no energy. He wolfed down the meat pies Guzi snuck back from that wealthy merchant's house, leaving not a single crumb, appearing truly wretched and pathetic. Xie Lian shook his head. He noticed that Qi Rong's limbs were stiff, probably from some petrification spell cast by Hua Cheng.

He called out, "Ruoye, return."

Ruoye had spent days binding Qi Rong. and was already feeling extremely aggrieved; with the call, it immediately whooshed over and wrapped itself in loops around Xie Lian's whole body like a white snake. Xie Lian pushed open the door and comforted it as he did so, untying it from his person.

"Alright, alright. I'll give you a bath in a bit, don't feel bad. Go play on the side."

Thus, Ruoye dragged its bandages and dejectedly floated to the side. Hua Cheng also casually tossed E'ming, and E'ming itself assumed a dignified pose on landing. On the wall, Ruoye suddenly discovered a silver, shimmering scimitar leaning next to it, and very carefully approached. That eye on the hilt of the scimitar E'ming also twirled and looked over; its gaze calculating. Fangxin somberly did not move, making no show of acknowledging anything.

Xie Lian had been spending these past days studying up on cooking and felt he might have gained quite the insight, his heart full of confidence. Wanting to show off his skills and host Hua Cheng properly, Xie Lian kept him for a meal; naturally, Hua Cheng agreed to it cheerfully. When they returned from town, Xie Lian had bought a bunch of groceries, and he piled them all on the altar. Picking up the butcher knife, he chopped and sliced, clinking and clanking the pots. That altar table could be used as a desk, a kitchen island, and also a dining table; cutlery could be set, kids could all sit around, truly a table of a hundred uses.

Hua Cheng leaned against the wall and watched for a bit. Finally, he couldn't watch anymore, and spoke up. "Do you need help?"

Xie Lian was at the height of his fervor, and dismissed him. "No need. Just Ruoye's help is plenty."

Then, he threw out a few bundles of firewood that hadn't yet been chopped. PA! Like an attacking viper, that white silk bandage whipped the logs, and the chunks of wood that were thick as thighs were instantly chopped into thin sticks of kindling.

Having shown off its skills, Ruoye arched into an exaggerated, odd form in front of E'ming and Fangxin; as if demonstrating its strength and beauty. The demonstration of beauty didn't last long; Xie Lian moved again, and placed a plate on the ground before throwing over a big cabbage. Ruoye was just about to strike when suddenly, E'ming's eye flashed. It flew off the ground; whirling out shimmers of silver light. Leaves of cabbage filled the air, and as they landed on the plate, they had already been thinly and cleanly chopped. Xie Lian squatted down to pick up the plate, and praised when he saw the cabbage.

"Amazing. You cut better than Ruoye!"

Instantly Ruoye pressed itself against the wall; looking like someone backing away, and having nowhere left to run. E'ming, however, started twirling its eye crazily; appearing fully cocky and content, like it had reached a state of sainthood. Between the sabre and the bandage, Fangxin still remained unmoved.

Xie Lian hadn't noticed the little battle between the spiritual devices at all, and was focused on throwing all sorts of different veggies and seasonings into the pot.

He turned to ask, "By the way, how long are you staying for this time, San Lang?"

Hua Cheng had been watching his actions the entire time; he had looked like he wanted to advise him of something at first, but in the end said nothing. He smiled.

"Depends. If there's nothing going on over there, I'll stick around here and play for a few days. If I hang around, pray gege won't mind."

Xie Lian hastily said, "Why would I? As long as you don't mind my place being a bit cramped."

Chattering and blabbering, Xie Lian told Hua Cheng all about how the female ghost was throwing blame, causing trouble the moment she arrived at the Great Martial Hall. Of course, he refrained from mentioning how he himself was accused, and the whole business with dripping blood on Yanzhen. Then again, he remembered Jun Wu saying Hua Cheng had planted a spy in the heavenly realm, so maybe Hua Cheng already knew everything? Fortunately, whether or not he knew, he made no show of it, and only looked contemplative.

Xie Lian asked idly, "San Lang, who do you think the father of that fetus spirit is?"

Hua Cheng looked up and smiled faintly. "Hard to say. Maybe that Golden Belt really was just something she picked up off the ground."

A vague response like this wasn't at all like Hua Cheng's usual style, and Xie Lian was puzzled. But soon, a bubbling pot robbed away his focus.

After two incense time, he opened the cover to the pot.

Usually, all Qi Rong ate were offerings to Xie Lian from the village people. Although it was nothing more than steamed buns and pickles, noodles and eggs, wild fruits, or such other things, at least it was food fit for humans. The moment the pot cover opened and the smell of its contents wafted outside Puqi Shrine, he started cussing deafeningly.

"GOD FUCKING XIE LIAN! BLACK-HEARTED SNOW LOTUS! YOU MIGHT AS WELL JUST KILL ME WITH THE BLADE RIGHT NOW! SO ACTING ALL GOOD FISHING ME OUT WAS TO MAKE ME SUFFER THIS TORTURE?! I'VE SEEN THROUGH YOU!!!"

Before opening the pot cover, Xie Lian was full of confidence. Now, he started doubting himself again. He had tried his best and exerted so much effort, but it had resulted in such an entree. Hua Cheng was still watching, whatever should he do? Was he really going to make Hua Cheng eat something like this??? Listening to Qi Rong screaming bloody murder, Xie Lian was becoming even more demoralized. Sensing Hua Cheng had crossed his arms and was about to go out, Xie Lian raised his hand to stop him.

"Nevermind him."

He sighed, filling a bowl with the substance from the pot, and said to Hua Cheng, "Don't eat anything from this pot. Just wait for me for a second."

Then he went out. He ushered Guzi and Lang Ying to go get a bucket of water, sending them away from the premises. He squatted down with that bowl, looking pleasant and airy.

"Little cousin, it's time to eat."

Qi Rong was both shocked and terrified. “WHAT. WHAT ARE YOU DOING? WHAT ARE YOU PLANNING?! XIE LIAN I’M WARNING YOU, I’VE A LIFE IN MY HANDS, YOU BETTER THINK THIS THROUGH! WHOEVER THE HELL CAN EAT THAT SHIT WILL BREAK FREE FROM THE BONDAGE OF THE THREE REALMS, FLEE THE DHARMA WHEEL⁷⁸, NO ONE...”

He trailed off when he saw Hua Cheng, who was inside the shrine, ladle himself a full bowl. He sat down next to the altar table, and took a bite; his face unchanging, steady like the mountains. Qi Rong was shaken to the core. A thought he had never had before flashed through his mind—

As expected of a Supreme!

Xie Lian pressed the bowl against his face, and said calmly, “It’s fine too if you don’t want to eat it. If you come out.”

That was never going to happen. Qi Rong clamped his teeth tightly. However, Xie Lian squeezed his cheeks and forced open his mouth, dumping the contents of the bowl straight down his throat.

The next second, a sharp scream shot through to the skies above Puqi Shrine.

The bowl in Xie Lian’s hand sat empty. Qi Rong, who was on the ground, bore a twisted, scrunched-up face; even his voice was hoarse, like an old man wasted away. He groaned, “...I...hate...”

Seeing that even with a full bowl forced down his throat, Qi Rong still refused to come out, Xie Lian didn’t know whether he should be glad or anguished. Although he really wanted to force Qi Rong out as soon as possible, since he didn’t succeed, it almost seemed like it proved what he cooked with all his heart wasn’t that bad after all. Perhaps, it was even something worth being happy about. Turning around, he saw Hua Cheng also had a bowl in his hand. He was eating leisurely, looking his way as he ate; that bowl was almost empty. Xie Lian’s eyes lit up, and he rose to his feet.

“San Lang, you finished?”

He thought he flopped the meal at first, and was too embarrassed to offer it to Hua Cheng; but who knew Hua Cheng himself went and started eating? Hua Cheng chuckled.

“Yeah.”

⁷⁸ [六道輪回] The Six Samsara Realms: Buddhist beliefs in the six realms of existence: Heaven, Asura, Human, Animal, Hungry Ghost, Hell. Accumulated Karma of previous lifetimes determine which realm the individual is born in.

“...” Xie Lian prodded very carefully. “What did you think?”

Hua Cheng slurped up the soup, too, and smiled. “Not bad. A little thick. Try making it a little lighter next time.”

Xie Lian sighed a breath of relief, and nodded. “Alright, I’ll remember that. Thanks for your feedback.”

Qi Rong: “UUUUGGGGGHHHHHHHHH—!!!”

Ch.102: Sage Stew of the Crown Prince to Welcome Unexpected Guests

At first, Xie Lian had planned to show off his culinary skills; however, after tonight, his confidence plunged by a million-fold.

Hua Cheng had suggested that he could make dinner instead. But how could Xie Lian have the face to ask him to cook, after Hua Cheng fixed his door and cleaned his shrine too? Who in their right mind would treat their guests this way? Besides, who did he take an esteemed Supreme Ghost King for?

Fortunately, he brought plenty of supplies back from town. Although a large portion of it went into Xie Lian's pot, there were still some buns and pies, and veggies and fruits left; so they munched on what they had. But after munching, what then?

The next day, the problem was solved on its own. Bright and early in the morning, the door of Puqi Shrine opened to the knocking of a bunch of village girls, who had come to offer large pots of porridge and a roasted chicken. The village girls were shy and anxious, so who they came for was quite obvious. Xie Lian couldn't help but sigh in awe to himself, thinking beauty really could fill a stomach.

That roasted chicken was divided between the two children; Xie Lian only had some porridge and Hua Cheng didn't touch anything. He smiled.

"Gege is really popular in this area."

Xie Lian laughed. "Don't tease me, San Lang. They were obviously drunk, but not on wine."

After that bowl went down, Qi Rong was bound outside the shrine for an entire night, howling and screeching; yelling things along the lines of:

"I'd rather be captured by Lang Qianqiu, be butchered to a million pieces, than to be stuck here and fed poison by you!"

"Cousin Crown Prince, I'm wrong, please I beg you, give me the antidote!"

He even seemed to start hallucinating, and became delusional. Little Guzi was horrified. By early morning, Qi Rong was shrivelled up and sucked dry; his face completely green. He lapped at the porridge Guzi held in his hand before finally regaining some strength. He croaked with a broken voice:

"Bullshit! Popular? Who the hell would come for him?? Look at that shabby appearance! Also, don't you be so full of yourself, Hua Cheng you fucker. You can only attract some country chicks from remote places like these, at most. They only came clinging because you're dressed so extravagantly. If you dressed the part of a beggar, I doubt they'd even look at you!"

Xie Lian thought that wasn't right at all. Even if Hua Cheng dressed like a beggar, Xie Lian believed, should he go begging, he would collect a mountain of gold. Still, he said nothing, and started doing chores leisurely. After a while, another wave of smells wafted outside, and Qi Rong roared again.

"WHAT ARE YOU DOING NOW?! WHAT THE HELL!"

Xie Lian replied warmly, "That pot of 'Love for All Seasons' stew. I'm heating it up."

Hearing this, Hua Cheng applauded softly. "What a good name."

"YOU GAVE THAT FUCKING THING A NAME?!?! STOP!!!"

Just the smell from heating it up reminded Qi Rong of his terrifying memories. Afraid that Xie Lian would really feed that to him again, he didn't dare speak more. After finishing the meal, Lang Ying silently collected the cutlery as if going to do the dishes.

Xie Lian chided, "Let it be. Just go play. I can take care of this."

Maybe he wasn't allowed to cook, but he could still do dishes. Hua Cheng watched Lang Ying take Guzi out to play, and said, "Let me do them."

Xie Lian declined the offer. "There's even less reason for you to do them. Just sit."

Before he finished speaking, they heard Qi Rong, who had been bored with nothing to do after having filled his stomach, make catcalls.

He spoke with a greasy tone: "Hey chickee, what're you doin' checking me out? Did I make your little tender heart quiver?"

That ghost had just been griping about how he didn't care for country girls, but then turned around and started flirting, and so tastelessly too! Xie Lian shook his head, thinking he'd best drag Qi Rong in after all, lest he scare people while stuck outside. Unexpectedly, before he even opened the door, voices of awe from the villagers rang out.

"Whoa, legendary beauty!"

"Why would such beautiful ladies come to our village..."

"I've never seen such pretty ladies in my life! And there's two of them!"

Soon after, there was a series of knocks on the door of Puqi Shrine. Xie Lian was puzzled.

“‘Legendary Beauty’? Two of them? Why would two legendary beauties come knocking on my door? Ah, could it be? Did that wealthy merchant bring his new wives to come return their gratitude?”

Thinking that this could very well be the case, Xie Lian hurriedly grabbed for the “please donate to help with renovations of this shrine” sign, ready to set it outside. But then, he heard the frosty voice of one of the women.

“What’s this thing at the door? Burns the eyes.”

Immediately, the voice of another woman came, sounding puzzled. “Maybe it’s for guarding the door? No way. There’s no reason to sink so low as to use such a vulgar spiritual beast?”

Although they were female voices, Xie Lian had certainly heard them before. It was Wind Master Qingxuan and Earth Master Yi!

At first, he had wanted to open the door immediately. But then, he whipped his head around; he looked at the Hua Cheng behind him, who was lazily cleaning up the altar table. Xie Lian stopped his hands, cautiously peeking out the door through the crack instead.

Outside the door stood two slender and delicate women. One was dressed in white cultivation robes; her lips rosy, her form charming and sensual, with a whisk in her hand and her eyes bright. The other was a black-clad woman, with skin white as snow, brows beautiful and sharp; yet her expression was dark, looking away into the distance, with her hands clenched in fists. That white-robed woman cultivator had a face full of smiles, waving her hands all around.

“Haha, thanks everyone, thank you! No need to compliment so much, no need to make such a show. I’m very troubled with you all like this. That’s enough now, thank you. Haha.”

Xie Lian: “...”

All around was a large, tightly-knit crowd of beauty-watching villagers. After having seen the beauties, they started pointing and bashing Qi Rong. Qi Rong was displeased, and yelled madly.

“WHAT ARE YOU ALL LOOKIN’ AT! SO WHAT IF THIS ANCESTOR LIKES LYING ON THE GROUND! FUCK OFF! THERE’S NOTHIN’ HERE TO SEE!”

The villagers saw how freakily that man behaved, looking maliciously violent with a green face, and dispersed in fright. Shi Qingxuan turned to Qi Rong.

“This...green young master, pray tell: is His Highness the Crown Prince inside the shrine?”

Hearing that woman address Xie Lian as “His Highness the Crown Prince”, Qi Rong immediately lost interest in the two beautiful women before him. He clicked his tongue.

“TSK! So you’re shitty officials from the Upper Heavens! As if this ancestor is a dog guarding his door. Listen here, I am...”

He hadn’t finished before Ming Yi glumly approached, and then there was a wail followed by sounds of smacking. From Xie Lian’s position, he couldn’t quite see just what Ming Yi was doing. He could only see Shi Qingxuan sweep her whisk, chiding.

“Ming-xiong, it’s not good to use violence!”

Ming Yi said coolly, “What’s there to be afraid of? Didn’t he say he’s not a domesticated spiritual beast.”

“...”

To prevent Qi Rong from getting beaten to death, Xie Lian had no choice but to open the door. He raised his hands to stop her.

“My lord! Have mercy! Don’t hit him, he’s a person!”

Seeing that Xie Lian had opened the door, Ming Yi flipped away her black hem and removed her boot from Qi Rong’s back. Shi Qingxuan rushed up and clutched her hands in a curtsy gesture.

“Your Highness, I’ve come a few days early! What’s with that person? He’s so full of demonic essence you can’t hide it; do you take us for blind? Well, let’s talk inside. This time, I’ve something really important I need your help with...”

As she spoke, she walked around Qi Rong, who was lying on the ground, and crossed over the threshold. Hua Cheng was still inside, so how could Xie Lian dare to let them in?

He cried hastily, “Wait!”

However, it was too late. Puqi Shrine was only so big, and had no places to hide. Immediately, the two saw that, behind Xie Lian’s person, there stood a Supreme Ghost King who was in the middle of doing dishes. Four pairs of eyes met; sparks flew. Hua Cheng smiled a smile that showed his teeth. The smile was ominous, and his eyes had no trace of mirth.

In an instant, Ming Yi’s pupils shrank, and she backed three feet away. Shi Qingxuan flung out her Wind Master fan, striking an attacking stance, exceedingly alarmed.

“CRIMSON RAIN SOUGHT FLOWER!”

Outside the door, the ashen-faced Qi Rong roared with rage. "AND I'M THE NIGHT-TOURING GREEN LANTERN! HOW COME NONE OF YOU RECOGNIZED ME WHEN BEATING ME, BUT KNEW IT WAS HIM WITH JUST ONE LOOK?!"

Ming Yi had once infiltrated the Ghost City, and spent many years as a spy under Hua Cheng. It was only recently that she had been discovered and captured by Hua Cheng, then locked in a maze dungeon and beaten. To have enemies face each other, their eyes bloodshot, tiny little Puqi Shrine was filled with the scent of venom inside and out. Hua Cheng tossed the rag in his hand, and smirked.

"Lord Earth Master looks lively."

Ming Yi also replied, coldly, "Lord Ghost King also looks leisurely as always."

After having made false perfunctory greetings, the next words that came out of Hua Cheng's mouth were even colder; his expression icy.

"Leave," he warned. "I don't care what important business you have. Do not come anywhere near here again."

Although she feared Hua Cheng, still she refused to back down meekly. Ming Yi responded with a solemn voice, "To come here was not my will!"

The venom was going to turn explosive. Next to them, Xie Lian was growing nervous.

"W-w-what, Lord Wind Master, what should we do?"

Shi Qingxuan knocked her fan on her head a few times and said, "I didn't expect Crimson Rain Sought Flower would be here! Didn't you guys just meet recently? How come you're together again so fast? Anyway, if this can be solved without fists, that'd be good. Violence is bad. If they start fighting, we'll have to hold them back."

"I agree, mostly." Qi Rong was hoping the two would start brawling, and had been listening intently. Just then, he suddenly spoke up: "OHhh—so you're that slutty woman Wind Master???"

Both Xie Lian and Shi Qingxuan turned to look at him. That was exactly how Qi Rong had called Shi Qingxuan when he was in his own cave, but even before the person herself he'd dare curse her like this. Xie Lian couldn't tell if it was out of bravery, or lack of mental capability. Shi Qingxuan had always been raised in dignified grace, so this was probably the first time hearing someone curse her in this way. She blinked, looking confused, then turned to Xie Lian.

"Your Highness. Please wait."

Then, she exited the shrine and closed the door. Outside, there was another desperate wail from Qi Rong, and another bout of smacking noises. A moment later, Shi Qingxuan opened the door to come back in; he had returned to his male form.

“Alright, where were we? I'm feeling kind of hungry, too, so how about we all sit down and eat something? There's nothing that can't be negotiated, and nothing that can't be solved, at the dinner table.”

“...”

Xie Lian didn't want them to start fighting inside Puqi Shrine, but Hua Cheng seemed to be extremely angry over the whole affair of Ming Yi's infiltration. Without knowing the inside story, it seemed rather impossible to have them sit down and eat agreeably. However, Hua Cheng actually didn't seem to object to the idea. After a frosty moment, the ice on his face cleared away, and he turned back to continue doing dishes. After he was done, he walked to the pot and ladled a full bowl of that Love for All Seasons stew.

Seeing that he backed down first and ceased the battle, the others all sighed a breath of relief. The next step was to change the subject, and liven up the atmosphere.

So, Shi Qingxuan asked, “Your Highness, what's in that pot? It seems to be still hot?”

“Oh. I made that,” Xie Lian said.

That pot had been stewing for a long time; the flavours were completely soaked in, and most of the smell had already dissipated. Although the colour was still questionable, the shapes had all but melted away from the stewing, and it looked much better than it had the night before. Hearing his response, Shi Qingxuan was vibrating with excitement.

“Really? I've never eaten anything made by the hands of heavenly officials! Come come come, let's have a taste.”

He grabbed for two sets of cutlery and filled two bowls. To be honest, Xie Lian had wanted to stop him at first. However, Hua Cheng had been so firmly encouraging, burying seeds of confidence within him; plus, earlier that morning, he had changed up the seasoning according to Hua Cheng's suggestions as he heated the stew. So, the thought “maybe I saved it” surfaced in his mind. After some hesitation, he didn't say anything. He secretly watched with hope as Shi Qingxuan passed one of the bowls to Ming Yi.

“Come, Ming-xiong. This one's yours.”

Ming Yi took a look at the contents in the bowl. She turned her face away, looking unwilling.

It was a rude gesture. Shi Qingxuan was outraged, and forced the bowl to her, unrelenting.

“EAT! Didn’t you say you were hungry earlier on the road?”

Hua Cheng lazily raised a spoonful and blew on it. He brought it to his lips, then swallowed. He smiled at Xie Lian.

Xie Lian smiled too. “Really? I added more water today.”

Hua Cheng took another bite and smiled happily. “Gege did his best.”

With Hua Cheng behaving as though he was tasting some delicious delicacy, it was exceedingly convincing. A moment later, Ming Yi took the bowl after all. Shi Qingxuan smiled.

“That’s better!”

And the two spooned a mouthful at the same time, taking a bite.

Ch.103: Venerable of Empty Words; Mourning at the Feast

“How is it?” Xie Lian asked.

THUD!

Ming Yi collapsed onto the altar table face-down, as if she lost consciousness. Next to her, two lines of tears silently streamed down Shi Qingxuan’s face.

“...”

Xie Lian asked hesitantly, “My lords, how is it exactly? Will you pull yourselves together, and give me some constructive criticism using words?”

Shi Qingxuan snapped out of it. He wiped at his face, soaked with tears, then clutched Xie Lian’s hands, pressing down with force. He said unintelligibly, “...Your Highness.”

Xie Lian reversed the hold and clutched his hands back. “What?”

Shi Qingxuan was tongue-tied, unable to speak. A moment later, he sobbed as he pushed Ming Yi.

“Ming-xiong...Ming-xiong! Ming-xiong, what’s wrong? Pull yourself together, wake up!”

Ming Yi laid on the table, unmoving. Shi Qingxuan could never stand for anyone ignoring him, and push became shove, until finally, he was strangling the other, shaking with force.

Xie Lian couldn’t watch any more, and suggested anxiously, “Lord Wind Master, why don’t you put down the broom, and we can talk things out.”

Shi Qingxuan was strangling that broom; he whipped his head around, shouting: “HAH? YOUR HIGHNESS, WHAT DID YOU SAY? I CAN’T HEAR YOU!”

Feeling a little helpless, Xie Lian yelled into his ear, “LORD WIND MASTER! THE THING IN YOUR HANDS IS NOT LORD EARTH MASTER. LORD EARTH MASTER IS HERE. HERE!”

Just then, Ming Yi sat bolt upright. He returned to his male form in a flash. His face was as dark as steel, and his words bore down on Xie Lian oppressively:

“Evil has overtaken my heart. Please exorcise it for me.”

A spoonful of stew could produce evil in the heart? Xie Lian was shocked to the core. He mumbled, “...That can’t be possible...”

Shi Qingxuan, however, was pointing at Ming Yi; his eyes round and bulging. "HOLD IT! YOU! What manner of evil are you, to dare show your petty tricks before this Wind Master? Where's Ming-xiong? Quick, I'll shield you! Let's take it down together."

With the broom in one hand, the other flung out the Wind Master fan. If that fan was to attack, then the entire rooftop would be blown away for sure! Xie Lian hastily rushed up to hold him down.

"DON'T DON'T DON'T. MY LORDS PLEASE, WILL YOU BOTH SNAP OUT OF IT?!"

"HAHAHAHAhahahahHEHehehehheehheehheehuehuehuehue..." Qi Rong was slamming his fists on the ground laughing outside, yelling, "Y'ALL DESERVED IT! FUCKING OFFICIALS! GO DIE AND ASCEND! THIS IS FUCKING GREAT! I FEEL SO MUCH BETTER!"

The two officials inside were falling all over themselves, groaning nonstop. Hua Cheng leaned against the wall with his arms crossed. Xie Lian looked at him, then looked at the Wind Master and Earth Master clutching their heads on the ground.

He whispered, "Is it maybe because I didn't add enough water after all...why would their reactions be stronger than Qi Rong's?"

Hua Cheng raised his brows. "I think it's fine. It's probably a problem with their tastebuds. It happens."

Xie Lian, however, had never thought about what Qi Rong typically ate and what heavenly officials usually ate. Comparing the two, heavenly officials were much more sensitive and emotionally delicate, so that was probably why their reactions were much stronger. Of course, he also didn't think about whether anything had been added after that pot had passed through Hua Cheng's hands.

Feeling both depressed and guilty, Xie Lian fed seven or eight bowls of water each to Shi Qingxuan and Ming Yi before the two slowly came around. Although their faces were green as Qi Rong and their eyes dead, at least they were conscious, their speech returning. The only lingering problem was the unstoppable tears streaming down Shi Qingxuan's face, and when he spoke he'd accidentally bite his tongue at times. Other than that, there weren't any real issues.

After all that ruckus, two hours later, the four finally sat down orderly around the altar table. Ming Yi still had his face down on the altar, still as a corpse.

Xie Lian righted his expression, and inquired solemnly, "Lord Wind Master, you said there was something important you wanted my help with earlier? What is it exactly?"

Looking wan and sallow, Shi Qingxuan threw a soundproof spell on the door, making sure that no one outside could hear anything.

He croaked with a hoarse voice: "...It's like this. Ahem ahem. Ahem ahem. Your Highness, you've been hiding in the world, cultivating in the mortal realm for eight hundred years. You've walked and seen much, so you must have bumped into plenty of ghosts and monsters, right?"

Xie Lian folded his hands one over the other and replied, "I've met some."

"Then I want to ask," Shi Qingxuan said. "Have...have you ever met a 'Venerable of Empty Words'?"

Xie Lian was taken aback. "A Venerable of Empty Words, who mourn at feasts?"

Shi Qingxuan lowered his voice and replied ominously, "That's right!"

Suddenly, Xie Lian felt a hair-raising cold breeze blow up his spine, swishing his locks.

At the same time, there seemed to be someone next to his ear, giggling coldly, and humming an exceedingly creepy tune.

Somehow, the sunlight that shone through the windows and cracks, warming the little Puqi Shrine, also dimmed; like the whole place was enveloped in a large shadow. Xie Lian's extremities were getting colder, icy like steel.

"..."

"..."

"..."

Xie Lian had to clutch his robes tight. He felt this must be brought up directly, and spoke up:

"I have to ask...who's laughing? Who's singing? Who's blowing cold air behind my back? Who made the shrine this dark?"

Shi Qingxuan wiped away his tears and said, "Oh, that's all me. It's just a little spell, don't mind it. It's just for creating the mood."

The other three at the altar table were speechless. A moment later, Xie Lian supported his temple and said exasperatedly, "...Lord Wind Master, how about we stop this breeze? With this weather, none of us are dressed in layers. Besides, the mood was already there, but it dissipated after you added the cold breeze and music..."

“Huh? Really?” Shi Qingxuan said. With a wave of his hand, the blowing cold air was dispersed. “But I think it’d be good if the shrine remains this dark. Let me light a candle, the ambiance will be even better.”

As he spoke, he really did take out a candle, and lit it. The flickering candlelight illuminated the two snow-white faces and two other pale, greenish faces. The mood was actually quite strong, the haunting atmosphere exceptional, and perhaps even Qi Rong, still outside, would howl and scream in fright of ghosts.

The other three didn’t want to say anything anymore. Hua Cheng leaned back and Ming Yi remained as a corpse.

Xie Lian rubbed his forehead and said, “Let’s continue...where were we? The Venerable of Empty Words? Why didn’t you just say the jinx monster? Calling it the Venerable of Empty Words, it took me a minute to realize what you were talking about.”

The Venerable of Empty Words, although given the title “venerable”, people only addressed it as a venerable for show. It was giving it some face; people were afraid that, if its name was too unseemly and it found out, it’d come after you. In truth, everyone wished they could curse it as the foul-mouthed venerable, the jinx monster; the worse it sounded, the better. It really was abominable to the extreme.

That’s right. Typical demons and monsters were at worst scary, but this one was abominable. This was because, if someone should be happy, in their moment of joy it would appear and dunk a bucket of cold water over their heads; a real killjoy. Consider for a moment: if at the reception of a pair of newlyweds, a creature of this sort appeared, ate up the feast, then suddenly claimed, “It won’t take long for the two of you to break up!” Or in another case, if an old master of a household was promoted in office, it would also suddenly appear and cry in the midst of congratulations: “You’re going to get cuffed and go to jail in a few years!”

If it should attach itself to someone, it would become like a shadow and firmly wrap itself onto that person; endlessly cursing for the opposite whenever a joyous occasion should occur. Truly abominable. Especially for those who feared ominous signs; if they ran into that thing, they’d die from distress. No one wanted a monster like that haunting them, but if they bumped into it, they could only accept their fate. After all, there was still no one who knew just how it selected prey.

It seemed Shi Qingxuan was quite fearful of that creature, but Xie Lian didn’t think it to be a big deal.

“Don’t worry. It’s nothing to be scared of.”

To say it more precisely, that creature was more likely to be scared of him. Shi Qingxuan became energetic.

“So Your Highness has met one? Is there any way to exterminate that thing completely?”

Humming for a moment, Xie Lian replied, “I did bump into two, many years ago, but they’ve never shown themselves again. I don’t know for sure whether they were completely exterminated. But by my experience, it’s not that difficult to deal with them.”

Shi Qingxuan was overjoyed. “TWO? You managed to deal with two?! I’ve really come to the right place! So, what happened?”

Thus Xie Lian began his tale. The first one was like this: many years ago, Xie Lian passed through a small town, and there was a wealthy merchant sending his daughter off to the capital to study. Because of how outstanding his daughter was, he made a big show of publically commending her; a joyous occasion. Who knew that from joy brewed tragedy? At the sendoff feast, there was suddenly a voice that belted:

“Your daughter’s carriage will overturn on the road, and she will die crashing down the valley!”

That wealthy merchant jumped to his feet in rage on the spot, set on catching the one who said those words, but that person ducked under the table right after and disappeared into thin air!

After that, everyone was scared. Fortunately, Xie Lian went to that household that day to collect junk. He managed to obtain some leftovers, and was about to head back when he heard what happened. He knew what that creature was, so he told that wealthy merchant not to worry. He asked the wealthy merchant to hire some twenty guards, and with Xie Lian himself included, they carefully escorted the little lady to the capital safely, and protected her for a while. A month later, that little lady won first place in a beauty contest, and the chance had come.

That night, a feast was held at a restaurant in the capital to celebrate the little lady. Sure enough, there was a voice from the crowd again, belting: “You will be...”

The moment Xie Lian heard its voice, he immediately seized that creature from the crowd; choking its neck, stopping it from uttering another word. Then, he immediately used a charm to seal its body, and beat it to a bloody pulp. He then ordered for a carriage, taking it to the valleys to run wildly astray. At a winding corner of the mountain pass, the reins snapped, and that carriage crashed down the cliffs, fulfilling its own curse to others.

“That’s it?” the other three asked.

“That’s it,” Xie Lian said. “To deal with the jinx...alright, the Venerable of Empty Words. To deal with the Venerable of Empty Words, there are three methods: first, don’t let it open its mouth, and cut it off before it can speak. This can help guard you for the moment, but it won’t protect you for life, so you need to be constantly vigilant.

“Second, if it should speak, don’t let the subject of its curse hear it. Anyone would be scared if they should hear a curse against them whilst at the height of their joy, and that creature feeds on that fear; it revels in it. The more scared you are, the happier it becomes. If you should lose yourself from terror and ruin your own affairs according to its words, its powers will increase significantly. But unless you’re deaf, you’ll definitely hear it speak one day. To be honest, not even the deaf can escape; there have been some who sewed up their own ears in an attempt to escape the thing, but it was still useless in the end.

“On the flip side, if you don’t pay any mind to however it curses or however it pours cold water over you, then it can’t do anything to you. So, the most effective way is the third method: surround yourself with happy thoughts and ignore it completely. Let it speak or not speak, but forget everything it says. Make yourself stronger and continue down your path according to your own will, and not the tragedy it predicted for you. This way, if it can’t draw any despair from you, it will most likely sulk away on its own eventually. Of course, it could still very well just be lying low, waiting for its next chance to ambush.”

Although the third method was the most effective, it was still really difficult to accomplish. After all, who in the world could truly build a heart of stone, and feel not a single ripple? The more Shi Qingxuan listened, the deeper his frown grew.

“Then what about the second time? Did you take care of it the same way the second time?”

“The second time might not be useful as a reference for anyone. After all, it was a unique situation,” Xie Lian said.

“How is it unique?”

“The one it attached itself to was me,” Xie Lian replied.

Ch.104: Venerable of Empty Words; Mourning at the Feast 2

It was many years ago when Xie Lian himself encountered a Venerable of Empty Words.

That time, he had just finished constructing a small hut by his own handiwork. He was just standing there admiring his new abode, when suddenly, a tiny little voice came from one of the corners:

“This dwelling of yours will collapse in two months!”

“So what did you do?” Shi Qingxuan asked.

“Nothing,” Xie Lian replied. “I said, ‘Two months? If it’s still standing in seven days, then it’d be a real miracle’.”

“...”

Hua Cheng’s lips curved slightly, but immediately that smile faded away.

That Venerable of Empty Words hid in the shadows, waiting to suck Xie Lian’s fear, frustration, insecurity, and other such negative emotions. However, it sucked nothing but empty air. Even when Xie Lian had finished cleaning up and fell asleep in his new house, it still hadn’t managed to suck anything.

Although Xie Lian never saw its form, he could still sense that it was probably quite angry.

Not a few days later, lightning struck down, and the entire hut was scorched.

That Venerable of Empty Words was pleased. It was probably thinking that, scorched was no different than collapsed, so its curse was technically fulfilled; Xie Lian must be afraid now. Yet, that didn’t happen. It still didn’t manage to suck anything that could fill its stomach. Disgruntled, it thus followed after Xie Lian, and waited for the next joyous occasion to come.

Who knew that this wait turned into over half a year. In that half a year, Xie Lian had not one joyous occasion!

If this was anyone else, they would’ve given up already. However, creatures known as the Venerable of Empty Words had a unique trait, and that was obstinance. If they should spot prey, they would be relentless in their pursuit, and so it starved pathetically for half a year. Finally, an opportunity came to pass.

One day, Xie Lian managed to collect a large bundle of junk and made a small fortune. The Venerable of Empty Words was overjoyed. Having waited this long, it immediately used all the tricks it had. Stream after stream of curses erupted: after Xie Lian struck it rich he would waste his fortune on drinks and gambling and then fall sick with long strings of debt, and so on. Xie Lian counted his money and listened with indulgent amusement. After, he still only tidied up and went to bed, and that Venerable of Empty Words still sucked nothing.

That night, Xie Lian's pile of junk caught on fire.

After the fire was put out, ashen-faced, Xie Lian sighed. He said to the Venerable of Empty Words, "What a shame. It's all burnt. Not a single scrap left. I hadn't even gotten to experience that lifetime of riches, or any of those other drunken dreams you spoke of. I think the things you say are quite interesting, so how about you tell me some more?"

This happened several times. Towards the end, Xie Lian would actually ask it before it even spoke, "do you have anything to say? Do you want to say something?", until that Venerable of Empty Words couldn't take it anymore and fled.

To Venerables of Empty Words, a God of Misfortune like Xie Lian was extremely unfavourable. Either he'd have no happy occasions and it'd wait for nothing, or he'd already gotten used to all the bad luck and suffered neither fear nor anxiety. His luck was so bad, it was outside the imagination of that Venerable of Empty Words, so Xie Lian felt nothing of its curses, and even treated them like well-wishes or daydreams.

In any case, after that, Xie Lian never ran into any Venerable of Empty Words again. He suspected that maybe after having fled, that Venerable of Empty Words went back to its people and rudely publicized how awful he was.

Listening up to this point, Shi Qingxuan didn't manage to hold it in, and snorted a laugh.

"Is it very funny?" Hua Cheng said quietly.

Shi Qingxuan knew it was inappropriate, too, and instantly schooled his expression. He apologized with a serious tone, "Sorry, Your Highness."

Xie Lian laughed. "Don't worry. I think it's pretty amusing, too."

He concluded, "The Venerable of Empty Words suck power from fear in people's hearts; with this power, it manipulates its predictions to come true, then makes a new prediction. The cycle continues until the person is thoroughly broken, and their heart destroyed. So, the more unsteady the heart, the worse it gets; the more one has, the more one fears loss."

After a pause, he suggested, "Did my Lord Wind Master receive a prayer of this sort from a worshipper who is asking you for help? You're the God of Wind, something like this isn't under your jurisdiction. If you received this prayer, you can very well pass it on to a martial god."

However, Shi Qingxuan replied, "It's not a worshipper who ran into it, it was me."

Now Xie Lian was even more bewildered. “You ran into one yourself? Venerables of Empty Words usually don’t dare to mess with heavenly officials. Even if they messed with you, as an esteemed heavenly official, there’s nothing to be afraid of.”

Shi Qingxuan sighed. “If I had run into it after my ascension, then of course there would be nothing to worry about, but...it’s a long story.”

This was many hundreds of years ago. When the Wind and Water Masters were still mortals, they were born and raised in an affluent and prosperous merchant household.

Shi Qingxuan was the second son, and when he was born, the entire family rejoiced. They gave the second son the baby name⁷⁹ “Xuan”, and they widely distributed porridge and such fare to feed the hungry, in order to build merits through acts of compassion. At the time, there was a fortune-teller who ate the porridge and saw the babe wrapped in swaddling clothes. He asked for the birth details, and said this:

“Since I’ve taken a meal from your household, I will say this. This son of yours might have a good life, but it’s hard to tell you the whole story. Just know, if you want to save him, he must be kept low-profile. Don’t raise him to be the boisterous, flaunting kind; don’t give him the chance to shine. Remember to build fortune in muffled quiet; this will ensure he lives a life of peace. Be sure to never host any feasts for him, or it will bring something bad.”

Those were not pleasant words, and very much like something a Venerable of Empty Words would say. The Shi family was a merchant household, and all of the qualities he described were especially valuable to them. The fortune-teller was shooed away immediately, and his words were not taken seriously. A few days later, a feast was held in Shi Qingxuan’s honour. The lanterns shone and the banners flew, drums roared and gongs sounded.

At the feast, the guests were at the height of hollering their congratulations, singing songs of praise to the second young master of the Shi family wrapped in swaddling clothes. But then, a singsong voice suddenly rang out from the ground:

“WRETCHED BEGINNING, WRETCHED END!”

That voice really did come from the floor, but it overtook the voices of everyone present. All became dumbfounded with shock.

The feast ended with apprehension thick in the air. That very night, the baby Shi Qingxuan became hot with fever, crying nonstop, even dry heaving at times. The heat refused to go down no matter what was done, and the entire family was terrified. The Shi family remembered that, ⁷⁹ Baby names are nicknames given before a formal name is decided.

not long ago, there was that fortune-teller who spoke strange words and was kicked out. They hastily searched all over and invited him back.

That fortune-teller said, "I told you to keep a low profile, but you wouldn't listen. Now that the child has caught the eye of the Reverend, his entire life will be filled with misfortune. This bout of fever is nothing, it will go away on its own. But this, it's nothing more than a greeting gift!"

Of course, he was talking about a Venerable of Empty Words. But this wasn't a typical Venerable of Empty Words that could be chased away so easily; it was one that was extremely old in years, one that was strongest in cultivation. How strong? Even without joyous occasions, it could still mourn. Thus, it was called the Reverend of Empty Words.

This Reverend was the very embodiment of the phrase, "the shop that can close for three years, but eats for three years once it opens." Its eyes were sharp and malicious; the prey it clung to were never any less than characters whose lives were destined for greatness, wavemakers and legends. Some managed to win against it, but they would still have to devote their entire lives to the battle, providing it with significant portions of food as they struggled. Some were defeated thoroughly, and became a source of its powers. Having hoarded power for close to a thousand years, its foundation was deep and thick. After having rested for over a hundred years, it was time to stretch its legs. When it opened its mouth to feed, it was eager to take a large bite.

Coincidentally, Shi Qingxuan had just been born, and was exactly to its taste. Thus, he was "reserved" by this Reverend. Although the tiny baby couldn't understand its predictions even if he heard them, there would come a day when he could understand, and there would come a day he would know fear. Once this fear was planted in the boy's childhood, it would burrow deep, unable to be uprooted.

Fortunately, monsters like these didn't have much in the way of brains, and the way they thought was bizarre, quite abnormal. Thus, the fortune-teller thought of a way to trick it: have the Shi family send Shi Qingxuan away and pretend he was given to another family, then change the appearance of the son to that of a female baby before bringing him back. Have the family claim that the female babe was a kept daughter, and have the whole Shi Family call the little young master "little lady", raise him as a girl. As long as the Reverend of Empty Words could not find the male baby it reserved, after time passed, it surely wouldn't be able to remember who it picked.

Thus, Shi Qingxuan matured to ten years of age in peace.

Within those ten years, the once-wealthy merchant household had gradually declined. The parents of the two masters passed away; internal conflicts raged in the family, fighting over inheritance. Shi Wudu was tired of it all, so the year he turned sixteen, he left home, bringing with him the little Shi Qingxuan, who was younger by many years.

The brothers depended on each other to survive. Shi Wudu was the first to enter the mountains to cultivate under a master, and settled his little brother in a town at the foot of the mountain. Every day he'd cultivate and train 'til late; not descending the mountains until deep into the night. There was nothing to eat in the mountains, and he could only eat at home. One evening, sparring with another, Shi Wudu lost track of time. Shi Qingxuan waited for a long time, and still his brother hadn't come home. Worried that Shi Wudu would be hungry, he decided to deliver the food up the mountain.

Shi Qingxuan was still a child at the time, and didn't know how to hike the mountain paths. The night was dark, and after having walked a long time with the food box, he suddenly needed to relieve himself. Anxiously, he pulled up his skirt at the side of the road.

Just then, a black shadow approached from the far end of the mountain road, asking, "Is it Xuan-er up ahead?"

Hearing someone call his baby name, Shi Qingxuan thought his brother had sent someone to come find him. He hurriedly dropped his skirt again, acknowledging the call.

"IT'S ME!"

That foreign voice asked again, "Is your birth such year such month such day such time?"

Shi Qingxuan was puzzled. First, why the sudden request for his birth information? And second, that person had it all correct. So he acknowledged again:

"That's right! How did you know? Who are you? Do you know my brother?"

That voice didn't answer, but in the end it said, "Come over here and let me see your face properly."

That was the tone of a command. At this point, Shi Qingxuan finally noticed something amiss.

He hugged that food box and dashed away. As he ran, he could hear whirls of wild winds behind him, laughing like crazy. That thing was chasing him, and was close behind!

It shouted, "YOU'RE GOING TO FALL RIGHT NOW!"

Shi Qingxuan was thoroughly horrified, and when it said "fall", he tripped and fell, breaking the food box. Rice spilled all over the ground. Just as that creature was about to pounce, Shi Wudu arrived.

Seeing someone had come, that Reverend of Empty Words disappeared out of sight. Shi Wudu hugged his little brother, whose face was covered in blood and rice from the fall; both of them shocked and terrified.

It still found him!

After having hidden for so many years, the Reverend of Empty Words finally had its first taste of sweetness. From then on, it would appear regularly, each time more mysterious than the last. The cultivation of that creature was too strong; the Shi family fortune was already depleted, and the cultivators that Shi Wudu managed to hire could do nothing to it. He hadn't the power to throw out a million merits to have his voice heard directly by the heavens. Although that creature never demanded Shi Qingxuan's life, still the two brothers knew that it was only biding its time; waiting to butcher only when the prey was fattened. Right now, it was only slapping his face gently, reminding him to fear it, but there would be one day when the slap would hurt. This was like a hunter who wouldn't kill its prey with just one arrow, it had to brush many against it; thoroughly terrifying the target, feeding off its terror.

This was nothing more than death by a thousand cuts⁸⁰.

Fortunately, a turning point finally came. After many years of aggressive training, Shi Wudu ascended.

The moment he ascended, he immediately brought Shi Qingxuan to the Middle Court, aggressively throwing rare treasures and divine riches all over him. A few years later, Shi Qingxuan also successfully ascended. That Reverend of Empty Words thus quieted and disappeared.

Shi Qingxuan naturally believed that it finally gave up and backed off, knowing when it'd been beat. Yet, it seemed he was too optimistic.

A few days ago, he invited a bunch of friends to drink. As he was inebriated, he suddenly heard a malicious voice in his ear:

"You will never be able to see your brother again!"

That voice was exceedingly familiar; between his tenth year and before his ascension, he would hear that voice at least once or twice every year. His fear of it was sunk deeply into his bones, and this was like an explosive had detonated next to his ear. Shi Qingxuan sobered up instantly. He rushed to Pei Ming's domain in terror, only relaxing when he personally saw Shi Wudu well and hanging out with Ling Wen and Pei Ming.

Afterward, he wondered if that voice was simply his own delusion. After all, that creature had planted a deep shadow in his heart when he was young. However, after some thought, he was still worried. So, he dragged Ming Yi over to find Xie Lian to ask for assistance. He hadn't expected to bump into Hua Cheng at Puqi Shrine; truly, the road is narrow for enemies.

After hearing the story, Xie Lian commented, "So, the one Lord Wind Master met and the one I met were on completely different levels."

After some thought, he turned to Hua Cheng.

"San Lang, have you ever seen that Reverend of Empty Words before?"

Hua Cheng was toying with a pair of chopsticks in his hand, and replied, "Hm? I've never seen it personally. But, I know someone who has."

Although Xie Lian was curious who this "someone he knows" was, he didn't ask after it. He only said, "Just how strong is its cultivation? Is it really that powerful?"

Hua Cheng tossed the chopsticks and replied lazily, "Very strong."

Hearing this, both Shi Qingxuan and Ming Yi's expressions grew solemn.

Hua Cheng added, "It's not like a regular little minion. It's definitely hard to deal with."

Although he said "hard to deal with", still his expression remained neutral, like he was only saying it out of courtesy. However, to receive such a comment from Hua Cheng, it was definitely something.

Xie Lian said, "Lord Wind Master, this problem doesn't seem like a trifling matter. Why not tell Lord Water Master?"

Shi Qingxuan waved his hand. "No, no. You have to know, my brother is about to undergo another heavenly calamity. If he should go fight that Reverend of Empty Words during this time, what if he loses focus? I have to keep this a secret, no one must know. I didn't tell a single official who has a good relationship with my brother."

A heavenly official didn't just go through a heavenly calamity once. The more calamities passed, the greater their divine state, the more unshakable their status, and the stronger their spiritual powers. Shi Wudu was a heavenly official who had passed two calamities already, and Xie Lian had heard in the leisurely chats in the spiritual communication array that he was waiting for the third one now. It definitely wouldn't be favourable, should he lose focus. After all, if one failed to pass a calamity, their divinity would be lost.

Ch.105: Three Gods One Ghost; Reverend Nowhere in Sight

Shi Qingxuan continued seriously, "I want to try and see if I can take care of that thing myself. Your Highness has more experience, so are you free? If not, don't force yourself."

Shi Qingxuan had helped Xie Lian out many times in the past. Now that he had an emergency and came to him for assistance, there was no way Xie Lian could decline and say he had the heart but not the power. However, Hua Cheng came from far away as a guest, and hadn't even stayed for more than a few days. If he left, who was going to host Hua Cheng? Although, it wasn't like he was a very good host himself.

Just as he was considering his options, Hua Cheng supported his chin with one hand and smiled.

"Is gege going to try and catch a glimpse of that Reverend of Empty Words? If it wouldn't be a bother, will you bring me along? It's a rare monster, after all, I've never seen it myself either."

Xie Lian thought to himself, "Much ashamed, but San Lang understands me."

Filled with gratitude for his consideration, he nodded. Shi Qingxuan didn't say anything on the subject. Of course he knew Hua Cheng coming along wasn't to help him, but at least he also wouldn't be messing with him, so whether Hua Cheng came meant nothing to him.

Xie Lian then said, "That Reverend of Empty Words is a mysterious creature; who knows when or where it would appear again?"

Shi Qingxuan replied, "I don't know either. If anything, I plan on going to the imperial capital and reserving the best room at the best restaurant to drink for eighty or a hundred days, and put on plays and set off firecrackers every day. It'll come out eventually."

"That's one way to do it," Xie Lian said. "However, even if it comes out, we might not be able to capture it. The best way to win a battle is to know oneself and the enemy inside and out. Has Lord Wind Master investigated what its prey has been in the past? How does it operate? See if there's any pattern."

"Of course my brother had already investigated this," Shi Qingxuan said. He took out a scroll from his sleeve, spreading it open.

Xie Lian scooted closer to take a look, and was in awe in spite of himself. "Amazing. Amazing."

What a guy! That creature really only fished for the big ones. The series of names on that scroll were pretty much all big names in the mortal realm; each of them a character of notoriety, almost all of them having tragic ends. Each one of those tragic ends were suicides after breakdowns.

There were those who slit their own throats after their armies were ruined like fallen mountains, those who cleanly offed themselves with a three-meter-long white bandage after their amassed fortune disappeared overnight, and those who sunk into the depths of despair after having spent their entire lifetimes seeking influence and affluence but achieving nothing. They weren't necessarily defeated by the hand of the Reverend of Empty Words, they were defeated by the fear of loss in their own hearts.

However, there weren't any emperors or kings on that list. As heaven's sons, true kings had a protective aura, and evil could not invade easily. Generally speaking, those who had the potential to ascend would also have a natural spiritual shield covering their bodies that would force demons and monsters to stand down. So, Xie Lian felt whatever it was that attached itself to Shi Qingxuan wasn't something so simple. Perhaps there was someone behind the scenes, purposely coming for him. If that was the case, whoever it was must be quite formidable. However, Shi Qingxuan was marked when he was but a baby; how did he attract such a character?

Just then, Hua Cheng spoke up. "Gege, may I take a look?"

Xie Lian passed the scroll over to him. "Here."

Hua Cheng swept a passing look over it, then questioned, "Who put this scroll together?"

"My brother. What?" Shi Qingxuan replied.

Hua Cheng tossed the scroll back on the table, and said, "Nothing. Just that it's crap, and full of mistakes. I suggest your brother try again."

Hearing him, Shi Qingxuan was going to throw a fit. "CRIMSON RAIN SOUGHT FLOWER!"

Xie Lian immediately held him down, and said apologetically, "Lord Wind Master, please sit down. Sit down. Let it go, San Lang always talks like this. He doesn't mean it."

Shi Qingxuan sat down, sounding doubtful. "Always like this?"

Xie Lian turned to Hua Cheng and asked, "San Lang, you said it's full of mistakes. How so?"

Hua Cheng shuffled over, and the two sat much closer than before. Hua Cheng pointed at a few names and said, "These ones are wrong."

Xie Lian looked at the names closely; they were all vengeful, malevolent tyrants. "How do you know?"

"Because I killed them," Hua Cheng said.

“...”

“Doesn't this say they all died by suicide?” Xie Lian said.

“Before I would make my move, I'd send messengers to greet them first, and they'd end themselves,” Hua Cheng replied. “So, perhaps that doesn't count as my kill?”

Who knows whether that counted as his kill, but at least he was honest. Shi Qingxuan coughed a few times uncomfortably, his lips twitching.

“Can ghosts please not so plainly describe how they kill people in front of heavenly officials? Can ghosts please not discuss these types of questions openly with other heavenly officials in front of other heavenly officials?”

Hua Cheng pointed at a few other names and said, “These ones are wrong, too.”

“And who killed those ones?” Xie Lian asked.

“Black Water killed them,” Hua Cheng said.

Xie Lian was taken aback. “That Black Water Demon Xuan? Doesn't he always lie low?”

“Doesn't mean he doesn't kill,” Hua Cheng said. Then, he turned to Shi Qingxuan. “Your esteemed brother gave you a scroll that's inaccurate and full of mistakes. There's no heart in this investigation at all, and it only looks like a suspicious red herring, nothing but a bunch of rags. So, I suggest, you rip this up and rewrite another one.”

Shi Qingxuan grabbed that scroll back and exclaimed, “My brother isn't like that!”

Although his words were weak, his tone was firm. Shi Wudu wouldn't be so careless when it came to his own younger brother, so there could only be one possibility.

Xie Lian asked, “Every profession has its own niche. Lord Water Master would've borrowed another's expertise in his investigation. May I ask who was the one who actually put the scroll together?”

After some hesitation, Shi Qingxuan replied, “Ling Wen.”

Xie Lian rubbed his forehead and stopped speaking. Although the other heavenly officials all cursed the Palace of Ling Wen for its inefficiency, it still shouldn't have made so many mistakes; it almost looked like this was nothing more than a rough draft. The Tumours looked like they shared a good relationship, at least on the surface. What was underneath, outsiders would probably never know.

Hua Cheng shuffled back and continued, "Let me tell you another way to tell the difference between what's true and fake: once the Reverend of Empty Words sets its sights on a prey, it will pull the weed out by the roots. Not only will its prey suffer breakdowns and die, the families and friends of said prey will all be affected. So, those who only died by themselves on this scroll, whose friends and families are alive and well, those names are all wrong too."

Hearing this, Shi Qingxuan's face paled by another shade. Soon after, he regained his cheer and laughed weakly at Ming Yi.

"Ming-xiong, doesn't that mean you're in danger too? You're my best friend, after all!"

Ming Yi shifted to sit further away from him, his entire face written with the sentiment "can I not have you as a best friend, please". This move brought him closer to Xie Lian, and Hua Cheng's eyes swept over him, sharp as knives. Seeing Shi Qingxuan still hadn't forgotten to joke around even in times like these, Xie Lian couldn't help but smile. Nevertheless, he could faintly tell Shi Qingxuan was anxious. Or rather, it was because he was anxious that he had to use extra cheer to push it down.

Shi Qingxuan flashed his Wind Master fan and fanned five, six times faster than usual, his black hair flying wildly in the wind.

"Then let's go right now! To the fanciest, tallest tower to drink ourselves into oblivion! I gotta see for myself if it'd dare come out with so many of us around. We've got the numbers, HAHAAHahahahaha..."

"...Lord Wind Master, please calm yourself," Xie Lian said. "Wait for me for a moment, I've got some little things to take care of in the shrine still."

Who knows how many days this trip would take? With two children; two mouths plus a godforsaken ghost possessing a man, he couldn't just leave them be. He thought about finding someone reliable in the village to help watch over them, but it seemed Hua Cheng knew his worries and spoke up.

"If gege must go, then go without a worry. I've got hands. While you're gone, there'll naturally be people to watch over the shrine."

Xie Lian let out a breath of relief. "Thank goodness for San Lang. It'd be better if there's someone here to watch over things."

Hua Cheng smiled too. "Yeah. There needs to be someone watching over things."

Their “watch over” obviously meant different things. However, no one pried about it. Ming Yi moved the altar table away, and started drawing the Distance-Shortening array on the ground. Shi Qingxuan’s fan was fanning so rapidly, its form was no longer seen.

“By the way, Your Highness, I forgot to ask earlier. Just who is that outside the door? How did I piss him off, to have such rude words come out of his mouth?”

To be asked about only at the end and in such an offhand manner, if Qi Rong heard, he’d no doubt suffer heartburn again. It really was rude, Xie Lian thought, as he packed up Ruoye and Fangxin leaning against the corner.

“Didn’t he already announce his own title?”

“What, that really was the Green Ghost?” Shi Qingxuan was surprised. “That face with that attitude? You really gotta see things for yourself, indeed!”

Xie Lian rubbed his forehead and briefly gave an account of things; reminding him to keep it a secret, especially to Lang Qianqiu. During their exchange, Ming Yi finished drawing the Distance-Shortening array. The one Nan Feng drew the last time was crude and rough, and it took him a long time. Ming Yi was the complete opposite: his hands were swift and precise, completing the drawing with but one line; the circle he drew was cleaner and more accurate than if one was to use a ruler. The characters were also neat and orderly, as if they were pressed prints. Xie Lian couldn’t help but secretly gape in awe.

With the array finished, Ming Yi said, “Let’s go.”

Shi Qingxuan sucked in a breath and blew gently, extinguishing the candlelight.

Hua Cheng took the lead, and was the first to push the door. The little door creaked open, and it was pitch-black outside. As if the door was connected to an old house that had been abandoned for many years, the air was thick with mold and dust.

Following behind Hua Cheng was Xie Lian, who softly thanked Hua Cheng as he crossed through for taking the initiative to open the door. Then came Shi Qingxuan, and the last one was Ming Yi. Once he crossed over, he closed the door behind him.

The moment that door was shut, within the darkness came a voice from behind the door, gloomy and chilling, “The place you wish to go, will become the nightmare you wish to never remember!”

The instant Xie Lian heard the voice, his foot kicked out.

That door instantly collapsed from his kick. But once that array was used, it would lose its effect; behind the door was no longer Puqi Shrine, but rather a pile of trash. That intense action roused thick clouds of dust. Xie Lian coughed, a little glad that he didn't break the door Hua Cheng made.

He said with his sleeve covering his face, "Was that the Reverend of Empty Words?"

Shi Qingxuan was gripping his whisk and his Wind Master fan tightly, and replied, "That's its voice! Has...has it been following me?"

Xie Lian waved away the dusty air and said, "No. There were three heavenly officials and one ghost king earlier; if something was following you, how would we not know? Clearly it'd only just come."

Ming Yi said too, "Calm down."

Shi Qingxuan exclaimed, "I'm calm. I'm very calm. I've been calming!"

Hua Cheng, however, stood ahead and said leisurely, "Calm is good. But there's definitely something going on. Does anyone know where we are?"

Xie Lian looked around, and wondered too. "Weren't we going to the nicest restaurant in the imperial capital?"

No matter how he looked, this old abandoned house looked nothing like that restaurant Shi Qingxuan spoke of. The four of them explored around and found the entrance, but it was locked by giant locks! Xie Lian kicked again and the locks broke, opening the doors. Once the doors opened, what appeared before the four were neither hellish fires nor mysterious landscapes of evil. It was a perfectly normal, indistinct little town.

Hua Cheng raised his brows. "The imperial capital shouldn't look like this."

Xie Lian agreed wholeheartedly. The aura of an imperial capital could not be compared to such a small town, and he turned around.

"Lord Earth Master, did you make a mistake in your array?"

Ming Yi however, said, "I didn't make any mistakes. The original destination wasn't here."

Xie Lian immediately understood. This meant that the creature had meddled. They were sent by it to this place.

Ch.106: Three Gods One Ghost; Reverend Nowhere in Sight 2

“It dodged in to tamper with the array the moment we left Puqi Shrine?” Shi Qingxuan said, but immediately debunked his own theory. “No! It couldn’t have.”

Xie Lian agreed, “That’s impossible. We had already pushed the door open earlier, so even if it snuck in to meddle with things we should’ve still arrived at our original destination. The array was already activated, so changing it wouldn’t have done anything. So, it only had a split-second to do anything.”

Which meant it was during the brief moment after Ming Yi finished drawing the array, Shi Qingxuan blew out the candles, and Puqi Shrine fell into complete darkness. However, that contradicted Xie Lian’s own theory earlier.

Shi Qingxuan said, “But earlier in the shrine, there were clearly only the four of us.”

In the tiny Puqi Shrine, there were three heavenly officials and one ghost king; if there was anything extra, would they not notice? And if it was someone amongst them meddling in the darkness, who was the one who was more likely to do it?

Shi Qingxuan couldn’t help but steal a glance at Hua Cheng. Although he stopped himself immediately, Hua Cheng didn’t miss that glimpse. He smiled.

“What’s with that look? In my opinion, don’t you think Lord Earth Master is the most suspicious one?”

Ming Yi’s eyes also swept over.

Hua Cheng added, “Instead of focusing on guessing who meddled after, what if the array he drew was wrong from the beginning?”

Ming Yi didn’t rebuke, acknowledging nothing. Shi Qingxuan, however, couldn’t listen anymore.

“Lord Hua, you stop right there, alright. I know the two of you have quarrelled before in the past, but, Ming-xiong really isn’t someone like that. I dragged him out here last-minute, so he has no reason to meddle.”

“You don’t necessarily need a reason to do something,” Hua Cheng said. “Lord Wind Master, you yourself are suspicious too.”

“Huh?” Shi Qingxuan had never thought the tables would turn on him, and pointed at himself. “Who? ME?!”

“Yeah. A thief crying thief is a common thing,” Hua Cheng said. “Just why have you come? If you and your esteemed brother are truly scared of the Reverend of Empty Words, why were those rags cobbled together? It’s not a stretch of the imagination to think that the two of you schemed, and intentionally led us here.”

Just by looking at his expression, one could tell that he was cheekily gabbing nonsense; but he looked so confident that almost anyone would start doubting too. Shi Qingxuan was almost shaken.

“Am...am I that nonsensical?”

Hua Cheng chuckled. “Same logic. I’m not that nonsensical either.”

However anyone hit him, he’d hit right back in the same way. Xie Lian was still musing and waved his hand.

“Alright, everyone stop. Nothing’s been solved yet, and we’ve already started doubting our own people.”

Hua Cheng laughed out loud and stopped talking. However, his attitude was more than clear: he wouldn’t help and he wouldn’t cause trouble; he was purely there for fun. There was no need to expect anything from him, and there also wasn’t any need to guard against him.

After humming for a moment, Xie Lian said, “Actually, there’s another possibility: after Lord Earth Master had drawn the array inside the shrine, there was already someone else outside drawing a stronger array on the door.”

At the time, in order for Qi Rong not to hear, Shi Qingxuan cast a soundproof spell, sealing Puqi Shrine. If anything was tampered with on the outside, it wouldn’t be easily detected from the inside. With two spells of the same calibre colliding, the more powerful one would win. This “power” didn’t just depend on whether the caster was stronger, it also depended on the material. At the time, Ming Yi used the aged cinnabar Xie Lian had picked up while collecting junk that even other scrappers rejected. If someone had used fresh blood to suppress the array, it’d be stronger by a notch.

Shi Qingxuan immediately accepted that possibility. “Outside the shrine? Could it be the Green Ghost? Can he even do anything in that state?”

“I don’t think so...” Xie Lian said.

Hua Cheng said flatly, “He can’t even dream of moving in the next seven days. But, it wasn’t just him outside the shrine.”

He seemed to be implying something.

Xie Lian said, "In any case, let's not panic and hurt our trust in each other."

After walking a few steps, he added, "But that monster's words were really strange. Why did it say that this place will become Lord Wind Master's 'nightmare you wish to never remember'? Are we going to run into anything here?"

Looking around, Shi Qingxuan frowned slightly. "...Wait. Is this..."

He hadn't even finished when suddenly Ming Yi's eyes grew sharp. His hand flashed out and chopped right for the back of Shi Qingxuan's head.

Xie Lian shouted, "LORD WIND MASTER, WATCH YOUR BACK!"

PANG! Ming Yi's hand-chop cracked a large rectangular object in two. That object came plunging down from above, right above Shi Qingxuan's head. He leapt a few feet away, patting his heart.

"That was close!"

He looked down, and his pupils shrank. Xie Lian approached to take a look, and was also stunned. That object was an establishment plaque; colored with blue, with golden characters spelling the words: "Temple of Wind and Water".

To shatter the establishment plaque of a heavenly official's temple was a huge taboo. Ming Yi dropped his hand, his expression icy. Shi Qingxuan was stunned for a moment, but immediately waved his sleeve, sweeping away the broken pieces of that plaque.

He spoke in a small voice, "Keep this a secret. No one say anything! Don't anyone speak of this. If my brother knew his plaque was cracked, he'd get so angry!"

Xie Lian turned around, speaking in disbelief, "This...is a Temple of Wind and Water?"

Indeed, the broken-down house they ended up in was a Temple of Wind and Water.

The Water Master was the God of Wealth; no one detested money, and the temples that worshipped him were always abundant in donations. To see one desecrated was as unimaginable as seeing a bundle of cash thrown out onto the streets, exposed to the elements, without anyone picking it up. Shi Qingxuan rushed back into the hall anew. The interior of the temple was full of cobwebs and layers of dust, desolate from neglect. He rummaged around and finally pulled out two pitiful divine statues from a pile of rubbish.

The divine statue of the Lady Wind Master was missing a leg and an arm, and the divine statue of the Lord Water Master was straight-up decapitated. The damage didn't look like it was from decay over the years, but rather like someone had used something sharp to smash them; as if they were venting infinite hatred onto the statues. Those two divine statues were extremely realistic, too, almost as if alive. In this chilling temple, to see them lie on the ground with curved smiles on their faces in this state of unbearable abuse was exceedingly uncomfortable.

Shi Qingxuan held a divine statue in each of his arms and wondered, "What is this hate? What is this grudge?"

Even if Xie Lian felt this was a sight filled with malevolence, in order to steady Shi Qingxuan's mind, he replied gently, "Lord Wind Master, steady yourself. As long as there are those who worship, there will be those who desecrate. It's a common sight in the world, no need to pay it any mind. This must be intentionally set up by that creature for the very purpose of fanning fear in your heart and absorbing spiritual power from you."

Ming Yi, however, was succinct in his words. "You good or not? If not, leave."

Shi Qingxuan wiped away the grime on the faces of those divine statues, and gritted his teeth. He gripped his Wind Master fan and rose to his feet abruptly.

"I'M GOOD! Now I have to see just what that creature's made out of!"

The four exited the rundown Temple of Wind and Water and walked around that little town. It was a very quiet town, peaceful; not bustling, but not behind the times either. Nothing out of the ordinary. Rather, the most bizarre thing was them. To be thrown into a crowd of mortals, their appearances, looks, and style were all overly conspicuous. Thus, soon after, they ducked into a small alley and changed their attire.

Xie Lian was already dressed plainly so he didn't need to change, but the other three all changed completely from head to toe. On one side, Shi Qingxuan was having opinions on Ming Yi's new get-up. On the other, Hua Cheng had changed into a set of refreshing black robes. His long hair had been neatly tied up with a white jade accessory; it exchanged his languid appearance for an air of youthful energy. He looked like an extraordinarily handsome, talented, and clever young disciple of some renowned house. He was still extremely conspicuous; an emperor really couldn't look like a beggar even if you forced him to dress like one. Looking at him, Xie Lian couldn't help but remember the saying: "for men to look handsome, they must dress in all black". He thought deeply about the truth of this statement.

Coming to, he looked over to the Lord Wind and Earth Masters, and remembered something. He whispered, "San Lang, there's something I've been meaning to ask you."

Hua Cheng fixed his sleeves and said, "What is it?"

Xie Lian clenched a hand into a fist and pressed it against his lips, clearing his throat lightly. He tried to sound extremely casual. "...What's the verbal password to your private communication array?"

In order to communicate and pass on messages directly through a private spiritual array, one must be able to receive the other party's verbal password. For example, to reach Shi Qingxuan, one must loudly recite the four lines of the following verse:

*"Lord Wind Master is boundlessly talented,
Lord Wind Master is funny and carefree,
Lord Wind Master is kind and righteous,
Lord Wind Master is aged sweet sixteen."*

Of course, the majority of heavenly officials wouldn't set up verbal passwords that were so painful to say; most were much simpler.

The verbal passwords of heavenly officials in the Upper Court weren't given away freely; only to those who were close. As a Supreme Ghost King, Hua Cheng was naturally the same. The two might not have known each other for long, but their relationship could be said to be fairly good. That they haven't exchanged passwords yet was a little strange. But looking back, every time there was anything to be done, they'd met directly, so exchanging passwords hadn't seemed to be a big deal.

Xie Lian had never asked for the verbal password of any heavenly official. If anything should happen, he'd just call out within the spiritual communication array, and if he needed to speak to anyone privately, he could still ask for them in the array. This was also the first time he'd asked for someone's private communication first. He didn't have much prior experience; so he was a little worried he might be too forward. Seeing that Hua Cheng's eyes were twinkling but he didn't respond, Xie Lian felt a little awkward.

He hurriedly added, "Is it inconvenient? Don't worry if it is, don't mind me, I was just asking casually. Because I wanted to discuss something privately later, I was being presumptuous. I can also try and talk to you in secret..."

Hua Cheng cut him off. "It's not inconvenient. I'm really happy."

Xie Lian was taken aback. "Huh?"

Hua Cheng sighed and said, "I'm really happy that gege finally asked me. Because you never brought it up, I thought it was inconvenient for you, that you didn't want to exchange passwords with other people, so I never asked. Now that I've finally had gege ask, how can you say it was only a 'casual' request?"

Xie Lian let out a breath of relief and immediately brightened up, grabbing onto Hua Cheng's hand. "So we both had the same concern! It was my bad earlier, those were just casual words, I apologize to San Lang. So, your verbal password is?"

Hua Cheng's eyes shimmered and he leaned over slightly. "This is my verbal password. Gege, listen closely, I'm only going to say it once."

Then he whispered a phrase.

After listening, Xie Lian's eyes widened. "...What? Is that really it? San Lang, you didn't make a mistake?"

Hua Cheng looked at ease and replied, "Yes, that's it. If gege doesn't believe me, why not give it a go?"

Xie Lian didn't dare. "Then...then doesn't that mean every time someone tries to reach you they have to recite that phrase three times mentally? W...wouldn't that be very embarrassing?"

Hua Cheng snickered. "It's because I don't want anyone to reach me that I purposely set the password to that phrase. Lets them know to back off. But, if it's gege who's trying to reach me, I'm always free."

Xie Lian was feeling a little incredulous, and thought, "That's really mean..."

He hesitated, wanting to initiate the private communication array. But he just couldn't recite those words no matter what. Even mentally it was difficult. Seeing Xie Lian fretting, covering half of his face with his hand, turning his head away, Hua Cheng finally had enough fun.

He said, "Alright. Fine. If gege daren't recite it, then I'll be the one to reach you. What's your verbal password?"

Xie Lian turned his head back, and said, "Just recite the Ethics Sutra a thousand times."

"..."

Hua Cheng cocked an eyebrow. A moment later, Xie Lian heard his voice next to his ear:

"It's the phrase 'Just recite the Ethics Sutra a thousand times', right?"

The two were clearly standing facing each other, but their lips were closed, unspeaking. They were communicating with their eyes, whispering secrets to one another using a voice others couldn't hear, having a good time. Xie Lian replied using the private communication array, too.

"That's right. I can't believe you weren't fooled."

Hua Cheng blinked and continued to reply to his messages. “Hahahaha, I was almost fooled. It’s too good.”

Xie Lian blinked too, his delight apparent.

It must be known that this verbal password was something Xie Lian came up with, very seriously, eight hundred years ago. He himself thought it was fun, so he employed it after he ascended. Only, not too many other heavenly officials thought it was amusing; even after they were fooled they were more speechless than entertained. Mu Qing told him directly, “Your Highness, your idea is terrible, forgive me if I can’t laugh.” Although Feng Xin laughed to the point of rolling on the ground screaming himself hoarse, he was a person who laughed at almost any joke for no reason, so him laughing didn’t make Xie Lian feel in the least bit accomplished. Since Hua Cheng laughed, maybe that meant it really was somewhat amusing after all.

The original plan was to go to the best restaurant in the imperial capital to drink, but since they didn’t make it to the imperial capital, it made no difference where they drank. The group went and reserved a room at the biggest restaurant in town, sitting around bored and spiritless.

When the waiter brought their drinks, Xie Lian inquired, “May I ask just where this place is?”

Although it was a blunt and strange question, it was still the most direct and effective way to gather information. That waiter was amazed.

“Did the honoured guests not come because of our reputation? This is the town of Fu Gu.”

“Reputation? What reputation?”

That waiter gave a thumbs-up. “Our town’s Fire Social! It’s really famous around here. Every year around this time, there are quite a number of outsiders who come to watch the spectacle.”

Shi Qingxuan was curious. “What’s a Fire Social?”

Xie Lian answered, “Celebratory festivities during folk holidays. There will be some busking, some local plays, and so on. It’s worth watching.”

It was similar to the Shangyuan Heavenly Ceremonial Procession of Xianle, back in the day. However, the Heavenly Ceremonial Processions were sponsored by the monarch, hosted by the authorities. Fire Socials were festivals for commoners.

Shi Qingxuan commented, “But it’s not a holiday today? At most, it’s only the end of Autumn tomorrow.”

“It doesn’t have to be a holiday,” Xie Lian explained. “Sometimes it’s for remembering someone. The folks pick a special day to celebrate and have some fun.”

Just then, there was a huge commotion down the main streets below the restaurant. Someone was shouting.

“MOVE, MOVE! CHILDREN AND WOMEN, DON’T STAND AROUND! BACK AWAY, THE TROUPE IS COMING!”

The four looked below. And what a sight! Xie Lian’s eyes immediately widened. There was a long procession parading down the main street, and in that procession, everyone was covered in heavy layers of bright, vivid makeup, and dressed in strange and bizarre outfits. Also, there was a weapon embedded in each of their heads.

Those sharp or dull axes, butcher knives, iron tongs, scissors, they were all deeply buried in their skulls, piercing their brains. Some even had eyeballs squeezed out, hanging on the cheek, dripping with blood. Some were stabbed from the forehead and pierced through the back of their heads, exceedingly gorey. All of the people parading had tightly-knitted brows, their expressions full of agony, their faces covered in blood. Yet, they continued to trumpet and play music, marching forward slowly, like a procession of ghostly spirits.

Ch.107: Gods and Ghost Hear the Tale of the Blood-Soaked Fire Social Xie Lian immediately rose to his feet. Shi Qingxuan, too, stomped a foot down on the table, rolling up his sleeves as if ready to charge right down.

Xie Lian hastily held him back and said, "It's nothing, don't worry, Lord Wind Master, please calm down."

"IS IT NOTHING EVEN WITH EYEBALLS SQUEEZED OUT???" Shi Qingxuan was quite alarmed.

"It's nothing," Xie Lian reiterated. "What a rare opportunity, to witness a Bloody Fire Social!"

Shi Qingxuan immediately dropped the leg that was on the table, and asked, "Bloody Fire Social? What's that?"

The two sat down anew, and Xie Lian explained.

"Different regions have different kinds of Fire Socials; the Bloody Fire Social is a special type, extremely rare. I've only heard about it, I've never seen it before. Since their performances are gruesome and freakish, and their makeup artistry is an untold secret that isn't passed down, there are getting to be fewer and fewer of them."

Shi Qingxuan was stunned. "Makeup artistry? That's all fake? Th-th-th...that's just too real. And here I thought they had been transformed by evil!"

His words weren't exaggerated, and Xie Lian sighed in awe.

"There are many extraordinarily talented people in the world."

Watching those performers in the parade, not only did they have weapons "deeply embedded" in their skulls, some also had exposed innards, missing limbs. They were crawling on the ground, crying and howling; there were a few carrying a large wooden stack, with a woman hung on one of the beams, a rope wrapped around her neck as if she was hung to death. Then came two who were dragging the two legs of a woman; that woman herself had her clothes all ripped into rags, her face down dragged along the road the entire way, leaving long trails of blood. This was truly a very real vision of hell. Even though it was clearly a performance done by humans, it was more horrifying than the ghosts of Ghost City. In comparison, Ghost City was almost like a bustling human market. Just how was all that makeup done? Even if Xie Lian had heard of this tradition, at first glance he'd also almost thought it was the coming of ghosts.

There were quite a few women and children who tried to squeeze to the front of the crowd to spectate out of curiosity, but screamed from fright and backed away after having actually seen.

Shi Qingxuan commented, "Your Highness, didn't you say that the point of Fire Socials was to celebrate? Who celebrates like this? People are running scared, and those little girls are going to have nightmares. Do people really feel happy watching these kinds of performances?"

It really was hard to tell whether people would feel happy after watching such performances. However, in truth, slaughter and the sight of blood did create excitement in people. Whether or not there was fear, after the initial shock was over, a rush of adrenaline would be produced in the heart. There was slang for Bloody Fire Socials such as this, called "Stabbing Ecstasy". Xie Lian figured it meant: once a person was stabbed violently to death, the heart would be filled with ecstasy.

There was a thirst for slaughter deep in the hearts of humans.

Of course, Xie Lian didn't say that much on the subject, and only watched intently for a while. In that impressive parading troupe, there was a pale-faced man dressed in black; his form tall, but skinny as a twig. His hand gripped a weapon, and he struck towards the head of one of the lavishly-dressed performers. That knife instantly penetrated through the other's skull, and he took out a long spear right after. He hoisted the other up and hung them in the air, cruel and gruesome, as if it was a real murder happening right there. The crowd screamed in waves of horror, though some also cheered.

"I'm guessing they're enacting a tale," Xie Lian said. "That black-clad man should be the protagonist and the people he killed should be the antagonists, the villains. This entire story is expressing the defeat of evil and the proclamation of good."

Having said that, something clicked in Xie Lian's mind. He said, "Lord Wind Master, watch closely."

"I am watching," Shi Qingxuan said.

"No, I'm telling you to watch for the story," Xie Lian explained. "Watch for the characters they're performing, and the kind of story this is. There must be a reason why that Reverend of Empty Words brought you here, and picked today of all days. Maybe it was so you'd watch this Bloody Fire Social."

That black-clad man had a deep frown, looking to be in severe agony. While "butchering" hundreds of "villains" in the troupe by himself, he himself was also pierced by all sorts of weapons all over his body. At the end, he carried a number of mangled "corpses" with white bandages around their throats and lowered his head, unmoving. It was an ending where all perished together. As one troupe went past, another troupe followed and continued to perform, and the parade cycled around thus.

"Have you all figured out what the story was about?" Xie Lian asked.

Shi Qingxuan knitted his brows and said, "No. I don't think I understand. He's doing nothing but killing people."

Next to Xie Lian, Hua Cheng said lazily, "Seems it's not a widely-known story. Ask a local and see if it's someone of renown from around here."

Coincidentally, that waiter came by again to bring their orders. He inquired, "Honoured guests, how's the show? Is it exciting?"

"It's good. Very exciting," Xie Lian responded. "May I ask, who is the character this town's Bloody Fire Social is enacting?"

Sure enough, that waiter said, "Oh, outsiders usually don't know, and always have to ask. The Fire Social of our town Fu Gu enacts the story of a legendary character. This was passed down through word of mouth, but many centuries ago, there was a scholar here named He.

"Although the family of this Scholar He was very, very poor, he was quite a talented man. He was a scarily intelligent youth, and picked things up quickly and precisely. He was also known everywhere as a good son; there's really nothing bad to say about the guy. Unfortunately for him, he was just very unlucky, and nothing good ever lasts.

"He studied hard and took national state exams. Even though he clearly did well, the best of them all, because he didn't pay up a greeting gift to the examiner, he offended the officials. They hid his test scrolls, exchanging them for blank ones, and for years he couldn't land a rank.

"He got engaged; his fiancée was a childhood friend, beautiful like flowers, kind and compassionate. But both his future wife and little sister were kidnapped by a wealthy household, who turned them into bed attendants. One wouldn't obey and was beaten to death, the other couldn't bear the shame and committed suicide. He went to quarrel, but those criminals turned around and accused him of committing adultery instead. He was locked up in jail, and almost died from starvation.

"His old ma and pa, seventy years old, begged for mercy for him, kowtowed their heads an entire night, but it was no use. He was jailed for two years before he was released. His mom had no one to take care of her and was long dead from illness, and his dad had to labour for the family by himself and had only but a breath left. He couldn't study anymore and got into business, but because he was too good at it, the other merchants ganged up on him to suppress him. All the money he made was cleaned away, and instead he drowned in debt."

"..."

"So what do y'all think?" That waiter sighed aloud. "How can anyone be so unlucky?"

Xie Lian cleared his throat quietly and said earnestly, "Yeah."

How could someone other than him be this unlucky?!

After having lamented, that waiter's face changed, looking cheery and alive. "And then that man went crazy; just completely mad. One night, the day before the last day of Autumn, he took up a bunch of weapons and butchered everyone who had hurt him! It was a bloody sight, flesh and gore flying all over, extremely satisfying! Since all those he killed had bullied all the people in town for ages, everyone cheered for him. So that's why, every year on the day before the last day of Autumn, the town commemorates him with a Bloody Fire Social. Pray Lord Scholar He watch over us and kill all the villains."

Although it was supposed to be the defeat of evil and the triumph of good, it seemed like nothing ended well. That waiter went away, and Xie Lian saw Shi Qingxuan had a face of contemplation.

He asked, "Lord Wind Master, do you have any thoughts?"

Shi Qingxuan snapped out of it and said, "I'm having some baffling thoughts, but...it's too confusing, so I can't put my finger on it. What about you, Your Highness?"

"I'm thinking, could the Reverend of Empty Words be this Scholar He in a past life?"

During their exchange, the next troupe had started performing the same story again. Shi Qingxuan looked over.

"His past life?"

"That's right," Xie Lian said. "Monsters that are similar to humans are usually born from an individual's extreme grudge or obsession. For example, I hear there's a monster in Dongying called 'The Bridge Princess'; it was formed by the grudge of women. Some say it was from the grief of women who waited for husbands that never returned, and others say it was the madness of jealousy. If the Reverend of Empty Words came from the misfortune of someone, it's not impossible to say it was formed by that person's jealousy of another's fortune, or the hatred of his fate."

"Check for landmarks. Match the timeline," Ming Yi said.

"Right. This needs to be verified," Xie Lian said.

To find out if this theory stood, they must investigate how many hundreds of years ago this "Scholar He" character appeared. If his appearance was later than the earliest record of the Reverend of Empty Words, than this theory would not hold.

Shi Qingxuan nodded, pondered, but still said, "And another thing..."

Just then, a booming voice suddenly came from below, laughing heartily.

"JUST WAIT! YOUR CLOSEST FAMILY, YOUR BESTEST FRIEND, THEY WILL ALL DIE TRAGICALLY BECAUSE OF YOU!"

Hearing this, Shi Qingxuan's face immediately changed. He slapped down on the table with his left hand and leapt from the window of the restaurant, light as a feather.

That voice had come from the parading troupes!

Xie Lian yelled from atop the building, "LORD WIND MASTER! COME BACK!"

Shi Qingxuan landed in that crowd of bloody, live dead people. He raged, "COME THE HELL OUT! COME OUT!!!"

However, those performers all bore wooden expressions; no one cared for him, and they continued to march like they were in a dream state. Shi Qingxuan was getting pushed around all over by the flowing crowd, and couldn't figure out just who looked fishy. This one looked suspicious, and he'd whip out his Wind Master fan to knock at them, but then another over there would look more suspicious. If he struck wrong, then it'd be a life on his hands.

Hua Cheng pushed the veggies he hadn't touched on his plate into a smiley face, never having looked up once. "It's useless. It's too easy for a thousand-year old monster to hide its foxtails."

Amidst such a freakish parade, it was too easy for anything unhuman to infiltrate. Besides, the Venerables of Empty Words already took on the forms of humans; nevermind the Reverend, who was the strongest among them all.

A moment later, Ming Yi jumped down too and pulled Shi Qingxuan out. The group of them left the main street, walking towards that Temple of Wind and Water. Shi Qingxuan's hand that gripped his Wind Master fan was still trembling, but rather than fear, it was more from anger. A small pot of wine from the restaurant hung from his hand; after walking for a while, he took a long drink from the pot before the seething redness of his eyes faded away.

"Ming-xiong, maybe you shouldn't be my best friend for the time being. Wait 'til I've killed that thing first!"

Ming Yi, however, instantly said without holding back: "Who's that. I've never been."

"..." Shi Qingxuan was outraged. "MING-XIONG THAT'S TOO MUCH. CAN YOU NOT TURN YOUR BACK ON PEOPLE SO FAST WHEN THINGS GET TOUGH???"

The two of them were bickering and noisy, and Xie Lian shook his head, bringing out two little objects from his sleeve.

“Here, Lord Wind Master. I think you’d best use these after all.”

Shi Qingxuan took the objects. “Ear plugs?”

Xie Lian nodded. “The idea might be a little dumb and it doesn’t help the root problem, but it still works for the time being. As long as you can’t hear, that creature can’t do anything to you. I cast an array, the verbal password is ‘By Heaven Official’s Blessings, No Paths are Bound’. Let’s just talk in the array, if we need to talk to you.”

Shi Qingxuan plugged his ears and sure enough, he could hear nothing after. The four entered the array one after the other. Just then, Xie Lian suddenly heard Hua Cheng’s voice floating next to his ear:

“Gege, gege.”

Xie Lian looked over and saw Hua Cheng was blinking at him. His lips weren’t moving, but his voice was still resounding in his ear.

“Didn’t you say you wanted to talk to me? You won’t come to me, so I’m reaching out to you.”

Xie Lian smiled and replied, “Well, you’re the one who set your password to something like that.”

“Fine, fine. My bad,” Hua Cheng said.

Shi Qingxuan adjusted the ear plugs and saw the two of them were looking at each other, smiling without saying a word.

He asked in the communication array, puzzled, “Your Highness, Crimson Rain Sought Flower, what are the two of you doing? Did you exchange verbal passwords? And now you’re exchanging secrets?”

Xie Lian cleared his throat, and said in the communication array with a serious voice, “Nothing of the sort.”

Hua Cheng raised his brows slightly and passed him another message. “You liar.”

Xie Lian slipped in his step.

Looking only straight ahead as he walked, pretending to be serious, he replied, “San Lang, stop teasing me...I need your help with something.”

The two of them walked side by side, not looking at each other.

Hua Cheng asked, "What is it?"

Xie Lian replied, "Work with me to test and see if someone is the Reverend of Empty Words."

Ch.108: In the Temple of Wind and Water; Night Chatter to Discern Truth

Hearing this, Hua Cheng turned his head, and his eyes fell on Shi Qingxuan and Ming Yi, who were strangling each other behind them. He signaled.

“Him?”

Xie Lian nodded.

“How do you want to test?” Hua Cheng asked.

“Many years ago, I went up against two Venerables of Empty Words, and even had one cling on to me for over half a year,” Xie Lian replied. “During that period, I tried to trap their words, and discovered one of their unique traits. They themselves didn’t realize they had such a trait, so with just a little push, they’ll be easily identified.”

Xie Lian then passed on the secret. Once Hua Cheng heard, he said, “That’s easy. Let’s do it this way.”

The two finished their discussion, and coincidentally they had arrived back at that broken Temple of Wind and Water. It was slightly chilly in the autumn air, and the skies were dim. Shi Qingxuan searched all over for the head of his brother’s divine statue and glued it back on. He righted the two statues, and placed them anew in their proper place on the altar. Xie Lian started a small fire inside the temple using rotten logs he picked up from around them, and the four sat around the fire.

Shi Qingxuan had his ears plugged and petulantly drank a few swigs, but finally couldn’t sit still anymore.

“We can’t possibly just sit around to wait for that thing? Is there anything we can do for entertainment?”

He brought it up first, and it was just as Xie Lian had wanted.

Ming Yi poked at the fire and said, “You can still think of entertainment at a time like this?”

Shi Qingxuan spat, “It’s necessary! That thing wants me scared? This ancestor ain’t scared! This Wind Master will play as happily as he will, happier than ever before. It’ll be like New Year’s! I hope it dies from anger.”

In the communication array, Xie Lian suggested, “How about we roll some dice?”

Shi Qingxuan pulled a long face. "Dice again? Betting over big and small rolls again? Your Highness, are you perhaps addicted?"

"What? No..." Xie Lian said.

"Never mind. There's nothing else around anyway. Dice it is. But there's four of us here, won't things get a little confusing?"

"It won't. Here," Xie Lian said.

He opened his palm and revealed two crafty little dice. Xie Lian explained, "The four of us can form two teams. San Lang and I will be one team, my lords can be another team, and we'll compete to see who has the better luck. Two dice. Each team gets one turn, each person rolls once, and then we add up the rolls of that turn. If the roll is big, that team wins, and they can ask any question that the losing team must answer, or they can have them do something instead."

"I have a question," Shi Qingxuan said.

"Please ask," Xie Lian replied.

Shi Qingxuan tapped his foot. "Why are the two of you so naturally a team? Did you take our feelings into consideration when you divided the teams?"

Xie Lian cleared his throat softly. "Um, well, if you want to switch up the teams, that's fine too. It makes no difference."

Shi Qingxuan stuffed his whisk into the back collar of his outer robe and said, "Whatever. I don't have any complaints about it, but Crimson Rain Sought Flower has such good luck, wouldn't we be at a disadvantage?"

Xie Lian smiled cheerfully at him. "That's not entirely true. Our team's San Lang might be extremely lucky, but my luck is extremely bad. With the two combined, one good one bad, don't we cancel each other out?"

Shi Qingxuan gave it some thought and it did make sense, so he smacked his thigh and shouted, "GOOD! Then let's have at it!" Then he elbowed Ming Yi. "Ming-xiong, did you hear the rules? Don't drag me down, alright?"

Ming Yi gave him a look, and within the spiritual communication array came his cold voice. "Forgive me, but I'm not playing."

Shi Qingxuan hastily dragged him back. "It-It-It's okay if you drag me down too! Nevermind, nevermind, come come come! Just play. Otherwise it's too sad for me to be in a team all by myself!"

Thus, the four swore to a simple oath of following the rules and started playing. The first round, Shi Qingxuan rolled out a five, Ming Yi rolled out a four; Hua Cheng rolled out a six and Xie Lian rolled out a one.

Shi Qingxuan was overjoyed. “HAHAHAHAHAHA! YOUR HIGHNESS YOUR LUCK REALLY IS BAD, SO BAD! HAHAHAHA...”

Xie Lian rubbed his forehead and said gently, “Although what lord Wind Master said is the truth, can you not say it with such glee?”

“Ahem! Fine. Then what, we won. This Wind Master will ask the two of you to do something,” Shi Qingxuan said. “Then, Your Highness, Crimson Rain Sought Flower! I order you to—to immediately strip each other’s clothing!”

Xie Lian: “???”

“Lord Wind Master???” Xie Lian was alarmed.

Ming Yi turned around, looking disgusted and covering his face, as if he didn’t want to see such a repulsive sight. Shi Qingxuan cheered.

“Come come come, don’t be a sore loser. An esteemed heavenly official and an esteemed ghost king, you won’t bail, right? I’m sitting in place, now, please start your show.”

“...”

Xie Lian looked to Hua Cheng, and Hua Cheng flipped open his arms, mouthing the words: “Gege, it’s not my fault.”

Feeling helpless, Xie Lian could only ask, “How much do we strip?”

Shi Qingxuan was only playing around, and would of course not make them look bad; he laughed, his legs shaking.

“Just one layer is fine. Keep a few on for later, hehehehehe.”

He actually wanted to continue...Xie Lian hesitated, and secretly passed his voice.

“San Lang...”

Hua Cheng’s face showed no ripple of reaction, but the voice next to Xie Lian’s ear was comforting him earnestly.

“Don’t worry. Didn’t we agree to let them win a few rounds? They’ll lose eventually.”

That was indeed something they agreed upon. Only, Xie Lian had not expected Shi Qingxuan would play like this, and felt like he was slapping his own face. He reluctantly shuffled over to untie Hua Cheng’s waistband. He painstakingly helped Hua Cheng out of his black outer robe, revealing the snow-white inner tunic underneath. Hua Cheng also helped him out of his outer robe, looking at ease. His hands were slow and gentle, and didn’t touch any part of Xie Lian’s body. The two of them really only removed their outer robes, nothing extraordinary and nothing unseemly, but Xie Lian still felt extremely weirded out.

Assuming a proper sitting position, he stammered, “A...Again.”

The second round, Shi Qingxuan rolled out a three, Ming Yi a six; Hua Cheng rolled out a six once again, and Xie Lian still rolled a one.

Shi Qingxuan slammed his fist on the ground repeatedly, laughing out loud, and Xie Lian looked to Hua Cheng again, the two of them still connected through the private communication array.

“...San Lang!”

This is different from what they agreed on!

Hua Cheng apologized profusely. “Sorry sorry, I forgot just now. Don’t be mad, gege. It’s my fault this time.”

Shi Qingxuan cheered again, rolling up his sleeves. “Alright, this round, I order you to...”

Xie Lian hurriedly cut in. “Stop! Last round we did the request and stripped. This round should be questions.”

Shi Qingxuan laughed heartily. “Ask questions? That’s fine too. Then my first question: Crimson Rain Sought Flower, to you, what’s the worst suffering in the world?”

Hua Cheng’s smile faded away, and a brief silence settled in the Temple of Wind and Water.

Shi Qingxuan added, “Don’t misunderstand, I don’t mean anything by it, I’m just really curious. To make it as a ghost king like Crimson Rain Sought Flower, is there really anything left in this world that can make you suffer? Maybe, nothing of the sort exists?”

“What do you think?” Hua Cheng asked back.

Shi Qingxuan pondered and guessed. “The City of Gu at Mount Tong'lu?”

There were indeed many who'd come up with that answer when they pondered this question. However, Hua Cheng only smiled faintly.

"That's nothing to fear."

Shi Qingxuan was amazed. "That's not it? Then what is it?"

Hua Cheng's lips curled, but that curve soon disappeared.

"I'll tell you what it is," he said softly. "To watch with your own eyes your beloved be trampled and ridiculed, yet be unable to do anything. That's the worst suffering in the world."

Hearing this, Xie Lian's breathing stopped, and his body froze. In that rundown Temple of Wind and Water, not a single soul spoke.

Shi Qingxuan couldn't find anything to say, and only squeezed out after some time, "...Oh."

Ming Yi's face still remained cold as he poked at the fire. "Continue."

Shi Qingxuan scratched his head and waved his hand. "I'm done. Ming-xiong, you ask something."

Thus, Ming Yi looked up slightly, staring at Xie Lian. "Your Highness."

Xie Lian snapped out of it. "Hm?"

Ming Yi asked, "What's the biggest regret of your life?"

Ming Yi was usually quiet, unspeaking, but the moment he opened his mouth it was unexpectedly a question of such weight. Xie Lian was stunned for a moment.

Was it his disregard of advice and warnings, and his selfish descent to the lesser realm? Was it his hubris in thinking himself powerful enough to create rain for Yong'an? Was it his wishful thinking that he could save Xianle? Or was it his reluctance in killing certain people?

He knew it was none of that.

It was a moment before Xie Lian answered.

"My second ascension."

The other three in the temple all looked at him, unspeaking. Xie Lian spaced out for a moment, and it was a while before he snapped out of it and asked, "What is it? Everyone, I've answered the question."

Hua Cheng said quietly, "It's nothing. Let's continue."

The third round, Shi Qingxuan rolled a two, Ming Yi a two; Hua Cheng rolled a six and Xie Lian a one.

Seeing this, Xie Lian let out a big, big sigh of relief.

By heaven official's blessings, they'd finally won!

It was finally Shi Qingxuan's team's turn to be punished, but he was eager and thrilled, as if he was afraid of nothing.

"Come at me! Hit me with your best shot!"

Xie Lian smiled. "Then I will. Lord Earth Master, you first."

He turned to Ming Yi. "My lord, please answer the questions I'm about to ask properly, and please don't lie."

Ming Yi didn't say anything, and Shi Qingxuan waved his hand.

"Don't worry. Ming-xiong is someone who doesn't even know how to lie."

Xie Lian grinned. "Very well. First question: Who am I?"

Shi Qingxuan was taken aback. "Your Highness, what kind of question is that? Aren't you, you? Who else can you be???"

Hearing this, Ming Yi slowly raised his head and looked Xie Lian in the eyes.

He answered, "The Crown Prince of the Kingdom of Xianle, Xie Lian."

Xie Lian nodded, then asked, "The second question, who's the one sitting next to me?"

After a pause, Ming Yi answered, "The Lord of Ghost City, Crimson Rain Sought Flower."

Xie Lian then asked again, "Then, the last question—who's the one sitting next to you?"

Shi Qingxuan was becoming more and more confused. "Your Highness, what are you two playing at? Who am I? I'm the Wind Master???"

"Lord Earth Master, please answer," Xie Lian pressed.

This time, Ming Yi didn't answer as fast.

After having run into Venerables of Empty Words many times, Xie Lian discovered a fascinating trait they possessed. It was this: whenever Venerables of Empty Words spoke, out of three sentences, at least one would be a lie.

This unique trait was akin to how a normal human being, no matter how healthy or strong, would need to drink water in the span of three days, otherwise they'd die from dehydration. This could not be changed no matter how powerful one was.

The Distance-Shortening array was drawn by Ming Yi, the last one out the door was also Ming Yi. If anyone had meddled, he had the most chances. Therefore, of course Xie Lian would suspect him. However, at the time Shi Qingxuan was obviously distraught, so if Xie Lian voiced his suspicion, it would no doubt only make Shi Qingxuan even more distressed; allowing for the Reverend of Empty Words to suck more negative emotions from him, fueling its own power. Thus, at that time, Xie Lian immediately looked for other options. But, in reality, he had never given up on the most straightforward possibility.

Generally speaking, the Wind Master and the Earth Master shared a very good relationship, and it'd be impossible for the Wind Master not to notice if the Reverend of Empty Words was pretending to be the Earth Master. However, what if the Reverend of Empty Words really did surreptitiously possess Ming Yi?

Thus, at the beginning he wanted Hua Cheng to work with him to trap Ming Yi's words. Hua Cheng, however, suggested that since they never really conversed, if he should be the one to trap Ming Yi's words, it'd be unnatural. Why not use the pretense of a game and create opportunities? Let Ming Yi himself speak, then see if they could observe and find anything without the Wind Master and the Earth Master noticing.

Yet, Ming Yi had always been a man of few words, and even in a fervent atmosphere each of his words were precious like gold. Earlier in the game, Xie Lian paid close attention to everything he said, but it was all ambiguous, nothing that could determine truth or falsehood. In the end, he had to use the killing hand; he borrowed Hua Cheng's skill, secretly controlling the roll of dice to make Ming Yi lose intentionally. Then with the three sudden questions, Ming Yi would have no choice but to answer on the spot.

Because it was all a game, Shi Qingxuan hadn't yet realized anything and thought they were still joking around, and thus that Reverend of Empty Words couldn't take the chance to sneak in and suck out power. However, should Ming Yi answer wrong, he'd show himself and Xie Lian would seize him immediately.

A creature like the Venerable of Empty Words would lie within three sentences. Now, Xie Lian had asked two questions, and Ming Yi answered both correctly. Which meant, if Ming Yi was the Reverend of Empty Words, he would no doubt answer the last question with a lie.

Ch.109: In the Temple of Wind and Water; Night Chatter to Discern Truth 2

If Ming Yi really wanted to fudge the test, he could very well answer ambiguously, or pretend to joke. However, he answered the first two questions simply and succinctly without any tricks, so the last answer should also be the same. Otherwise it would be out of character for him, which would also prove that he wasn't normal.

Xie Lian and Ming Yi stared at each other calmly. A moment later, Ming Yi finally spoke.

He used a tone that was no different than the last two times he responded. "One of the five elemental masters, the younger brother of the Water Master Wudu, the Wind Master Qingxuan."

Shi Qingxuan shook his head. "Sigh, why the hell didn't you say 'my best friend'?"

Ming Yi looked at him. "Who's that?"

Hearing this, Xie Lian silently blew out a breath.

As aforementioned, although the Reverend of Empty Words was called "Reverend", it wasn't a real man of cloth with any holy spirituality. As long as it remained classified with ghosts and demons, it would never be able to escape from the unique traits of its kind. Three sentences had been spoken, and all three were undoubtedly true, so it seemed there was nothing amiss with Ming Yi. Except unless Shi Wudu and Shi Qingxuan were not real blood brothers, but such an unbelievably shocking turn of events shouldn't be possible.

Unexpectedly, before he fully exhaled, Ming Yi's hand suddenly shot out, grabbing straight for his throat!

Xie Lian and Hua Cheng both moved to fend off that hand at the same time; three hands fast as lightning, so intense it made Shi Qingxuan leap to his feet.

"MING-XIONG! WHAT ARE YOU DOING?"

Ming Yi glared at Xie Lian intently, speaking with a dark voice. "You asked three questions, but in the last round I only asked one."

Xie Lian smiled. "Lord Earth Master, please think back on the rules carefully. I never said you could only ask one question per round."

"Very well," Ming Yi said. "Then I'll add to my question now. Who are you?"

"Didn't you already answer this question yourself earlier?" Xie Lian asked.

Ming Yi replied, "Perhaps I answered wrong. Otherwise, will His Highness please explain the need to set up this game so suddenly, and his reason for asking those three strange questions? Lord Ghost King is skilled in the art of manipulation, but to use it on petty entertainment seems to be rather unnecessary."

Hua Cheng laughed. "Well, now. As long as I feel like it, I'll use it however I will."

It must be said that while Xie Lian and Hua Cheng saw Ming Yi as suspicious, Ming Yi too thought them equally suspicious. From the moment Ming Yi suddenly struck, they had spoken through their lips, and stopped using the communication array.

Shi Qingxuan didn't know what they were arguing about, but he didn't dare remove his ear plugs rashly either. So, he could only say, "Stop stop stop, I order you all to stop right now and tell me what happened. Otherwise...OTHERWISE I'M GONNA BUTT IN TOO!"

Then he flashed open his Wind Master fan. Ming Yi, however, shoved him aside.

"Move! Stop adding to the trouble!"

Just then, a sudden eerie breeze blew past. The flames of the small campfire the four surrounded quivered with the eerie wind, dancing wildly. Silhouettes and shadows illuminated by the flames flickered madly, such that even the two divine statues on the altar seemed to be smiling but not, crying but not, exceedingly creepy.

Ming Yi then dragged Shi Qingxuan up and said, alarmed, "Something's here."

Shi Qingxuan was first shoved by him head-first to the ground in a heap, and now was dragged up abruptly. He was dizzy and seeing stars. "MING-XIONG! CAN YOU PLEASE BE NICER TO ME?!"

"No time," Ming Yi said.

Xie Lian had been watching the two statues and suddenly said, "Look at their eyes!"

The four looked over, and saw that on the smiling faces of those two divine statues hung four lines of blood. From the eyes of those clay divine statues streamed bloody tears.

Divine statues that had been blessed in ceremonies and worshipped possessed certain repelling powers against evil. Even if there were no other measures to ward off evil, they typically still couldn't be defiled and abused by non-humans. That Reverend of Empty Words was certainly powerful. Shi Qingxuan was still here, and it made the statue of the Wind Master cry blood tears before the Wind Master himself. The tears of blood were growing thicker and heavier, dripping to the ground and gathering into a twisted, complex form.

Shi Qingxuan was bewildered. "What's that thing? Is it...drawing?"

He couldn't make out just what shapes it was forming and he didn't go closer; only looking at it from different angles, trying to figure it out. Soon after, Xie Lian suddenly snapped out of it: it wasn't a drawing, it was an upside-down word!

He immediately shouted, "DON'T LOOK! IT'S WRITTEN FOR YOU!"

Ming Yi struck out a palm and BOOM!, both the traces of blood on the ground and the two divine statues were blasted into pieces. Shi Qingxuan's eyes were wide with shock.

"Ming-xiong! You...you you you, you can't let my brother know about this, otherwise he'll never forgive you!"

To destroy a heavenly official's divine statue was to be extremely disrespectful of said heavenly official. Yet today, Ming Yi first cracked the establishment plaque into two, then blasted the statues into pieces. This was no different than smashing up someone's household, then soundly slapping the face of said household's old master. If this got out and the person in question found out, they wouldn't sit back and do nothing; who knows if a bloody storm would rise from it.

Just then, Xie Lian idly turned his head and suddenly noticed the plaque that they broke earlier and properly set aside had characters that weren't quite right. That establishment plaque had a blue base and golden characters, spelling the words "Temple of Wind and Water". But now the words had turned into twisted, bloody red shapes, seemingly forming the word "death".

In a blink of a second, he covered Shi Qingxuan's eyes and yelled in the communication array, "CLOSE YOUR EYES!"

"WHAT NOW?!" Shi Qingxuan shouted back.

"Nothing. But the words on the establishment plaque of your temple have changed, too. That creature knows you can't hear anymore, so it's changed to writing," Xie Lian explained.

"The hell!" Shi Qingxuan exclaimed. "Now I can't hear anything nor see anything, am I not both deaf and blind?!"

Xie Lian let go of his hands and said, "Don't worry, just calm down. We're here for you."

Ming Yi grabbed hold of Shi Qingxuan's back collar and dragged him aside. Shi Qingxuan still had his eyes closed and he put his palms together as in a prayer.

"So reassuring!"

As the words left his mouth, there was suddenly a huge noisy commotion that came from just outside the rundown temple. Black blurs crossed Xie Lian's eyes and in the next moment, there was a large rowdy crowd of people howling like devils. They poured in like blackened tide.

The crowd was truly full of bizarre strangeness, weird forms and monstrous shapes. Some had decapitated heads, some were hanged, some had large blades piercing their skulls, some had their abdomens cut open...all sorts. Shi Qingxuan couldn't hear and couldn't see, but instinctively sensed the footsteps all around were disorderly and chaotic; in the ruckus he was pushed around.

He asked in the communication array, bewildered, "What's going on? What's come here? Why are there suddenly so many people???"

"It's nothing major," Xie Lian said. "It's the night parade of the Bloody Fire Social. Let's just get out of here."

Regarding Bloody Fire Socials, other than parades in the day, sometimes there would be further entertainment into the night. Not only did the parading performers want to get their fill of scaring people, many common people also had the urge to do the same. Thus, they would imitate the eerie makeup of the Bloody Fire Social and use the dark of night to come out and scare others. Unfortunately, the four of them seemed to have run into such a group of night cruisers.

This rowdy crowd of ordinary common people didn't have the same realistic, intricate makeup as the parading troupes, but they were nevertheless formidable due to sheer numbers, and was quite the sight to behold. Especially with the dimmed skies, their appearances were exceedingly ghastly. Thus, in towns that had such after-hours entertainment on the night of Bloody Fire Social, locals would all lock up tightly, keeping indoors. Those night cruisers had been wandering about for some time, and when they finally saw there were people inside the broken shrine, they were quite excited, as if they spotted prey. In an instant, over fifty of them charged in, overcrowding that small temple.

The four of them were drowned in the pandemonium; Xie Lian kept looking back, but could only see Hua Cheng, who was still next to him, never more than two steps away. The other two were pushed more than seven to eight feet away.

He shouted, "Everyone, let's get out!"

However, among the night cruisers, while some were purely there for fun, there were others who were shrewd small merchants; there specifically to scam some money from tourists who had come from afar to watch the Bloody Fire Social. They blocked them, not letting them leave, clingy and tenacious as they cajoled.

"Young masters, grant us some rewards!"

“We worked so hard to dress up, if you had fun then grant us some rewards!”

“Yeah, it ain’t easy for us either, and this is only a once a year thing!”

“If you don’t reward us, watch out for the Old Ghost Master who’ll come haunt you!”

Since this whole affair had nothing to do with him, Hua Cheng only watched from the side, not in the least bit anxious. When he heard he only laughed out loud.

“Well now, I’d like to see what kind of ghost dares come knocking on my door!”

Just then, as Xie Lian swept a look at the crowd, he suddenly saw at the edge a pale-faced hanged ghost. It was just smiling creepily as it wrapped a rope around someone’s neck.

It was riotous all around. Everyone was covered in blood, their faces askew, endlessly enacting you kill me, I kill you, you’re now dead, I’m now dead, and oftentimes there’d be someone who’d wail and fall. It was hard to differentiate the real from the fake. Still, Xie Lian’s instincts told him that “person” wasn’t right, and he threw out his arm. Ruoye flew out and struck that hanged ghost squarely on the head.

Sure enough, that hanged ghost wailed and turned into a wisp of black smoke, fleeing through a small crack in the ground. No one around noticed, but Xie Lian saw everything clearly.

He warned in the communication array, “Everyone be careful! Something’s here mixed within!”

Compared to earlier, there seemed to be an added cloud of evil within the Temple of Wind and Water; it naturally wouldn’t be the Reverend of Empty Words, but some little minions that came from who knows where. Having played around pretending to be ghosts for so long, there would for sure be a day when real ones would be attracted. To have them show up right now, it really was adding oil to fire. There were too many people, too much chaos in the temple; heads knocking heads, feet stepping on feet, too difficult to determine just who that essence of evil came from. Xie Lian grabbed Hua Cheng and ran out of the Temple of Wind and Water. He was about to ask after the others, but found he couldn’t. His power was almost depleted, and with no power, he couldn’t enter the communication array.

In that moment of urgency, he turned to Hua Cheng. “San Lang, lend me a bit of spiritual power, I’ll pay you back later!”

Of course, his “I’ll pay you back later” was nonsense. He had never been able to pay back any powers he borrowed.

“Alright,” Hua Cheng said, then extended his hand to hold Xie Lian’s.

Xie Lian could faintly feel warmth passing over. It just so happened that a few bloody individuals came running out of the temple, straight for him. The last one behind, who was dropping innards as he ran, his face full of livor mortis, gave off a faint essence of evil. Without thinking, Xie Lian raised his hand to blast a shot from his palm.

A booming sound like that of an explosion was heard, and at the same time, a blinding white light flashed. It was only after a good moment before Xie Lian came to.

The place where that ghost with the cut belly was mixed with the crowd had only a mound of black ash-like residue remaining. As for the Temple of Wind and Water before them, the entire rooftop was blown away. The rioting night cruisers in the temple stilled, frozen in shock from that booming sound and that white light.

“...”

Xie Lian raised his head to look at the Temple of Wind and Water, now with a missing roof, then looked down at his own hand. He slowly turned his head to look at Hua Cheng, standing behind him.

Hua Cheng smiled at him. “Was that enough?”

“...”

“It was,” Xie Lian said. “Actually...really, just a little bit would’ve been fine.”

“That was a little bit,” Hua Cheng said. “Do you want more? You can have as much as you want.”

Xie Lian immediately shook his head. Before, he had also borrowed spiritual power from Shi Qingxuan, Nan Feng, and others, and they lent very generously. However, Xie Lian had never experienced such a feeling; as if all the blood in his veins had turned into electricity and was charging through his body. If it could be said the powers he borrowed before had to be economized and saved, taking one bite at a time, afraid to waste them, then now, he felt like he could eat one full bowl and throw away ten others and it wouldn’t be a problem.

The powers Hua Cheng passed on to him were too great, filling his entire body. It was to the point where Xie Lian was almost afraid to move, scared that with just a wave of his hand, something else next to him was going to explode.

Using the temporary calm of their surroundings, he hurriedly entered the communication array and asked, “Lord Wind Master, where are you? I’ve left the temple but I didn’t see you.”

“Ugh, my god...” Shi Qingxuan groaned inside the communication array. “Your Highness, why did your voice suddenly get so loud? I left the Temple of Wind and Water too.”

Xie Lian lowered the power level, then replied, "Sorry, I'm having some trouble controlling this. How did you leave? Are you alright?"

After all, Shi Qingxuan had his ears plugged and eyes closed right now.

"Pff, how else could I have left? Ming-xiong pulled me out. Thank goodness I wasn't trampled to death by that crowd," Shi Qingxuan said.

Soon after, Ming Yi's voice also sounded in the spiritual communication array. However, his words froze the small smile that had only just surfaced on Xie Lian's face.

"That wasn't me!" he said.

It wasn't?!

Oh no! Xie Lian whipped his head around.

"LORD WIND MASTER! JUST WHO WAS IT THAT PULLED YOU AWAY?!"

Ch.110: Fight the Reverend; Crown Prince Takes Wind Master's Place

However, no more sounds came from Shi Qingxuan.

Xie Lian was feeling unsettled. "Lord Wind Master, what happened to you? Are you still here? What's going on? Why aren't you saying anything???"

If he had only been taken away by rowdy night cruisers who were only seeking a bit of fun, he wouldn't be so quiet so suddenly. Had he met harm already? But being anxious and distraught was useless, since he didn't even know where Wind Master was.

The crowd finally quieted down and Ming Yi was finally able to push out from the Temple of Wind and Water. The heavenly realm had a decree to never use spiritual powers selfishly on mortals, nor to appear before them at will. If mortal lives were harmed or taken, it would be recorded and penalized. That decree certainly made things difficult for law-abiding heavenly officials, otherwise, with just a wave of their hands, those people would fly away like that roof. The crowd finally snapped out of it and started screaming wildly.

"IT, IT'S APPEARED! IT REALLY APPEARED!"

"THE MONSTERS HAVE COME!"

With that, the crowd broke up and dispersed.

"Lord Earth Master!" Xie Lian asked anxiously. "How come you didn't hold on to Lord Wind Master earlier? Have you seen him? When was he lost?"

"Ghosts snuck in and were ambushing people in the crowd," Ming Yi explained.

It seemed that he saw there were lives on the line and split his attention to go save them; attacking ghosts, but losing a friend.

"Let's split up and search!" Xie Lian said. "He shouldn't have gone far."

Suddenly, within the communication array came Shi Qingxuan's voice anew. He was laughing boisterously.

"HAHAHAHAHAHAHAHA...."

This laughter came abruptly; at least there was finally something.

Xie Lian hurriedly asked, "Lord Wind Master! What happened to you just now, why did you suddenly stop talking? I thought something happened to you."

“HAHAHAHAHAHAHAHAHA HOWCANANYTHINGHAPPEN TO THIS WINDMASTER I WASONLYTRYINGTOSCAREYOUALL HAHHAHAHAHAHA MINGXIONGYOUBASTARD HOWDARE YOUNOTGRABHOLD OFME IF I DIE I’MDEFINITELYTURNINGINTOASUPREMETOCOME AND HAU N T Y O U u HAHHAHAHAHAH...”

“Stop your haha-ing. Say something sensible!” Ming Yi demanded.

Xie Lian already knew that the more anxious and frightened Shi Qingxuan was, the more he would hahaha. In fact, he’d even forgotten to pause between words.

Xie Lian interrupted, “You didn’t open your mouth to speak, did you? Your expression didn’t show any obvious changes? Have you fought back?”

“I didn’t speak. My expressions didn’t change. I didn’t fight back,” Shi Qingxuan said.

Xie Lian relaxed his tone and said gently, “Very good. Lord Wind Master, listen to me. Everything’s alright, don’t be scared. Keep up the current status quo, and pretend you didn’t notice anything. If you have something to say, just tell it to us here in the communication array secretly. Absolutely do not let that creature notice that you already know what it is. Slowly spread your spiritual aura and form a spiritual barrier to protect your person, that way you can at least ensure you won’t trip or fall into a ditch. If any weapons should attack you, you’d be able to sense it too.”

Shi Qingxuan’s voice sounded like weeping without tears. “Oh. And then?”

Xie Lian continued, “And then take deep breaths. Just like that. Do it a couple times...do you feel a little better?”

His tone was very soft and gentle, quite effective when it came to comforting another.

Shi Qingxuan said, “Maybe a little bit. Thanks, Your Highness.”

Xie Lian then tried probing. “Now...how do you think you would feel if you tried to open your eyes and sneak a look at that creature pulling you?”

Would he be able to hang on?

“I’ll probably die,” Shi Qingxuan said.

“...”

It seemed if Shi Qingxuan was to open his eyes, his terror would peak the moment the eyes could see, and he would turn into a most delicious and delicate meal for the Reverend of Empty Words. After that, he would probably lose all ability to fight. Besides, if the moment he opened his eyes, that thing was also staring back at him, the esteemed Wind Master would probably foam at the mouth on the spot and crash like a fallen star.

Xie Lian said, "Then you just keep your eyes closed."

"After it took you out of the Temple of Wind and Water, which direction did you go?" Ming Yi asked.

Right now, what they needed the most was Shi Qingxuan's location. Shi Qingxuan's eyes were closed and he couldn't see where he was going, but he should still have a general idea of his position, and could use the count of his steps to determine how far away he was.

Yet, Shi Qingxuan replied, "I don't know."

"You don't even know such a thing?!"

Shi Qingxuan was outraged. "Who in their right mind would remember those things? And didn't I think it was you pulling me?!"

On the side, Hua Cheng was still only observing, and was already bored to the point where he'd changed back into his red robes. Then he changed to black robes again. Then to white robes. Almost every time Xie Lian looked back, he would be donning a different appearance, and with every new look there were different hairstyles, and different accessories, and different boots, and so on; sometimes playful, sometimes elegant, sometimes deadly, sometimes glamorous. Xie Lian was growing dizzy from all the colours and kept looking back, unable to look away. The moment he realized what he was doing, he blinked fiercely, only just stopping himself from blurting out, "that outfit's not bad", or "that looks good".

He said instead, "Stop, stop, now's not the time to argue. With every word the Lord Wind Master takes another step, and the more he wanders the harder he'll be to find."

Shi Qingxuan moaned grievously. "I say, is it really that hard for you guys to find me? It's not more than fifty, sixty steps? It can't be over a hundred, and we're not even going that fast!!!"

Not over a hundred steps? Ming Yi immediately charged out, disappearing at the end of the street. Not long after, he reappeared fast as lightning before the entrance of the Temple of Wind and Water.

"Not there!"

Curses. "The Distance-Shortening array!" Xie Lian cried.

After that Reverend of Empty Words used that chaos to take the Wind Master out of the Temple of Wind and Water, it probably cast the Distance-Shortening array and sent them both elsewhere. Otherwise, in a distance within a hundred steps, he should've been easy to find. Once that spell was used, who knows where in the world they had been sent? Searching for the Wind Master now was no different than searching for a needle in a haystack!

They couldn't be careless in this affair, and Xie Lian immediately said, "I will go report this to the Heavenly Court."

However, Shi Qingxuan hastily stopped him. "Wait! Your Highness, don't go! You promised me to keep this a secret. My brother's third heavenly calamity is coming soon. The third one is huge, he can't be bothered right now!"

"Keep this up, I'll make you go through a trial right now," Ming Yi said.

Shi Qingxuan was enraged. "I said no and I mean it. How many eyes are watching my brother? This thing definitely picked this timing intentionally, I won't let it have its way! Never! Even if I die and my bones rot, it'll still have to be after my brother's completed his trial before I can be dug out!"

A moment later, Ming Yi relented. "Fine. Very good."

Xie Lian was sharp, and sensed that in his tone there was an oppressed wave of fury. It was an intense emotion that had never surfaced on him before, making Xie Lian feel rather unsettled. Unwilling for any other issues to start, he cut in.

"Lord Wind Master, is that creature still moving with you in hand?"

"Yeah," Shi Qingxuan replied. "It's dragging my arm."

"Is there anything notable on its body? Like a peculiar essence of evil, or a certain scent, feel, or something?" Xie Lian asked.

"No. There's nothing."

"What about your surroundings? Like, is the path under your feet jagged or smooth? Have you stepped on anything or kicked anything?" Xie Lian wanted to see if he could draw a general perimeter based on the surrounding environment.

"The path is very strange!" Shi Qingxuan said. "Very soft, very light, like clouds."

Xie Lian thought, "You're probably just weak in the knees from terror..."

Two out of five of Shi Qingxuan's senses were already sealed; it was hard to scrape together any clues, and it would only get more difficult from here. Although Hua Cheng had always been next to them, watching the show leisurely, him tagging along had always been only for entertainment. He had no attachment to Shi Qingxuan whatsoever, and as an entity of the ghost realm, he had no reason to help a heavenly official. Xie Lian also didn't want to trouble him and beg him for help all the time.

Thus, he steadied himself and said, "Lord Wind Master, I have a way for you to break away from that creature immediately. But, I need your permission."

Shi Qingxuan instantly replied, "Okay! I give you permission!"

However, Hua Cheng suddenly stopped him. "The Soul-Shifting Spell?"

"What?"

Xie Lian responded, "That's right. The Soul-Shifting Spell!"

The Soul-Shifting Spell was exactly as its name indicated; it was a spell to switch souls. Using one's eyes to see what another sees. This spell wasn't often used; first, it brutally burned spiritual power, second, very few were willing to give up control of their own bodies.

Hua Cheng's expression grew serious. "Gege, prudence."

"What're you gonna do if it faces you?" Shi Qingxuan asked.

"I'm not scared of it, so it doesn't matter," Xie Lian replied.

"Do it," Ming Yi said.

Hua Cheng, however, pressed again. "Gege, please reconsider."

Suddenly, Shi Qingxuan said, "It's stopped."

Hearing this, Xie Lian shouted in the communication array, "No more time to hesitate! Now!"

Shi Qingxuan gritted his teeth and said, "It's all up to you now, Your Highness!"

"Okay!" Xie Lian said.

Just as the words left his mouth, he closed both his eyes, and his body suddenly felt feather-light; light to the point it felt like he was floating into the heavens. Abruptly, it became exceedingly heavy, heavy to the point like he was going to bore into the earth. It was after a wave of nauseating whirling that his senses returned to him. He steadied his form, but his eyes were still closed. Not a single sound could be heard from his ears.

There was a hand grabbing hold of his arm, standing still.

Xie Lian opened his eyes in a flash. One hand removed the ear plugs, and the other flipped, seizing the Reverend of Empty Words in reverse.

He smiled. "Hi there."

Shi Qingxuan had his eyes closed for a long time, and it was pitch black all around. Thus, in the instant Xie Lian opened the eyes of this body, he hadn't yet adjusted to the darkness and couldn't see anything. However, what was grabbing onto him was now something he was grabbing onto. Ruoye wasn't around, so Xie Lian cast a hand-locking spell, and secured that hand like a steel cuff to prevent the other from escaping using magic.

Within the communication array came Shi Qingxuan's voice. "Your Highness! Are you alright? Maybe it's better if you switch back and I'll take over myself!!!"

It seemed Shi Qingxuan had also safely switched to his body. Xie Lian had a firm grip on that Reverend of Empty Words, and his leg shot out, kicking at it over thirty times.

"I'm fine!"

Since their souls had only just been switched, they would need time to adjust. Once he'd gotten used to it, his moves would become even more brutal.

"Your Highness, let me tell you the incantation for manipulating my spiritual devices; use as much of my spiritual power as you need, don't hold back!"

Xie Lian had no sword to wield, and flashed open the Wind Master fan. "Okay!"

Shi Qingxuan then added, "I'll tell you the spell for transforming into a woman too, I'm stronger in my feminine form!"

Xie Lian resolutely refused. "No. That's not necessary."

Hua Cheng spoke up gravely, "Gege, hurry and take a look at the surroundings. Tell me what place it is."

"No," Ming Yi said. "Tell us first what is fighting you right now."

During this exchange, Xie Lian's eyes had gradually adjusted to the dark environment. He squinted and looked at that black shadow before him.

Ch.111: Fight the Reverend; Crown Prince Takes Wind Master's Place 2

However, even though contours of the surrounding trees and branches could now be distinguished, he just couldn't make out the face of that black shadow no matter what. It was like there was a cloud of demonic black mist swirling around that figure.

The fan of the Wind Master was a first-rate spiritual device; it could blow away evil and bring order to the world. Having received the spell key Shi Qingxuan passed onto him, Xie Lian recited it in his mind and swept the fan. A whirlwind instantly blew up from the ground, whooshing and shaking the surrounding woods, and even a few small, weaker sprouts were pulled from their roots; it was a strength powerful to behold. Unfortunately, this wind was blown a little off-course, and didn't aim for the right target.

Spiritual devices weren't that easy to manipulate. He wasn't the master to the Wind Master fan, after all, and naturally couldn't handle it as smoothly as Shi Qingxuan. The angle and amount of power were both difficult to control; it was either too strong or too weak, either off-course or backwards. After realizing this, Xie Lian resolutely gave up and changed tactics. He snapped the fan shut and used it as an attacking weapon directly instead; he madly struck at the weak points of the other. Then, with a WHISH, he generated a sheen of spiritual aura on the edge of the fan, and straight-up turned it into a razor-sharp steel blade; slashing through the air, its shine chilling.

Shi Qingxuan probably figured out what happened, and cried in despair. "YOUR HIGHNESS, WHAT'S WRONG WITH YOU?! THAT'S MY SPIRITUAL DEVICE! I CAN'T BELIEVE YOU'RE USING IT AS A MARTIAL WEAPON! WHAT A WASTE OF GOD'S GIFT!!!"

This was a problematic habit all martial gods had. Though he was otherwise occupied, Xie Lian spared a moment to say flatly, "It's all the same. Makes no difference!"

Hua Cheng's tone was becoming harsher. "Gegel!"

Xie Lian knew what he was pressing for, and as he fought, he rapidly swept his eyes around to look at his surroundings. There were mountains and rivers, towers and pavilions, really nothing that stood out, and really nothing that could determine where he was.

That Reverend of Empty Words noticed his movement and probably guessed his objective, as it suddenly said, "You're not Shi Qingxuan."

Xie Lian never paused in his attacks, but his mind processed rapidly. "Usually it shouldn't be this easy to figure out the Soul-Shifting spell was used, so how did it immediately realize I'm not Shi Qingxuan? Well, whatever. Keep going!"

The way he fought was insensible and insensitive; that Reverend of Empty Words seemed to not be able to take the beating anymore.

It said, "You'll fall down this instant!"

Sure enough, it started to level curses at Xie Lian directly. However, it was like Xie Lian heard nothing, and he only pummelled harder.

That Reverend of Empty Words then said, "You're going to be defeated in battle!"

Xie Lian laughed. "I was already defeated eight hundred years ago, a few more times means nothing to me. How much more can I be defeated? Just give up! Nothing you say to me will work."

"Gege," Hua Cheng called. "If you can't determine your location, just fan up a whirlwind into the sky with the Wind Master fan and I'll know where you are!"

What a coincidence. Xie Lian just thought of the same idea.

"Alright!"

Just as he was about to raise his hand, suddenly, that Reverend of Empty Words let out a creepy chuckle.

"Someone's coming?"

Xie Lian became alarmed for some reason. Sure enough, that creature said in a low voice, "Don't worry, with your eyes wide open, you will watch the person coming to seek you die before you!"

Hearing this, Xie Lian couldn't laugh anymore. His heart dropped violently, and even his breathing stopped in that moment.

The next second, he actually yelled out loud, "SHUT UP!"

In a flash, more than fifty heavy kicks landed on that Reverend of Empty Words, each bashing right on its head. It could barely speak from the attack, yet it sighed deeply. That was a sigh of satisfaction, like it had tasted some sacred delicacy, and it laughed coldly. Accidentally dropping his guard, Xie Lian actually let it suck what it wanted from him.

However, Xie Lian hadn't the mind to notice, because those words truly did make his heart feel like it had been struck violently. Even if he knew Hua Cheng wouldn't "die before him" so easily as that creature said—and to be real, Hua Cheng was already dead—still a deep, uncontrollable panic manifested. He didn't realize he couldn't even stand to hear the very idea.

Although those in the communication array didn't notice anything amiss, it was like Hua Cheng was telepathic. He became alarmed, and said, "Gege? Is it saying something to you?"

Xie Lian replied, "It's saying nonsense...No! It said nothing."

Hua Cheng understood immediately and cursed. "It's seeking its own death! Tell me right now and I'll go straight over."

Xie Lian hastily said, "No need, don't come over. Absolutely do not come over!"

"Sorry to interrupt," Shi Qingxuan spoke up. "I say, the two of you really did exchange verbal passwords secretly, right? Your highness, did you not notice? You got the wrong array, the wrong array!"

It was only then did Xie Lian discover that, ever since he used the Soul-Shifting spell, while every word Hua Cheng said to him was passed through their private communication array, because he was focused on fighting with his heart a mess on top of that, he'd responded directly in the main spiritual communication array without realizing. Now, the fact that they had connected in private communication was utterly exposed.

However, there was no time to be embarrassed. Xie Lian said, "It's nothing. Give me half an incense time, I can take care of this thing!"

After that, he plugged his ears anew, and his attacks became even more vicious, focusing only on dealing with the Reverend of Empty Words. However, he had no idea that back at the town of Fu Gu, after Hua Cheng heard his words, he raised his hand and smacked, bashing Ming Yi three feet into the ground. Then, he immediately turned to Shi Qingxuan, who had taken over Xie Lian's body.

"Switch back."

Shi Qingxuan had already planned on changing back immediately, but seeing that sight, he hurriedly said, "Crimson Rain Sought Flower, what are you doing?! I'll switch back right now. His Highness is helping me, so it makes more sense if you hit me; why did you hit Ming-xiong?!"

But the moment the words left his lips, he realized that he was currently in Xie Lian's body, so of course Hua Cheng wouldn't hit him. If he must hit someone, then it could only be Ming Yi.

On the other side, Xie Lian was immersed in the fight, but he suddenly heard Shi Qingxuan yelling in the communication array.

"Your highness, can you please plug my ears and run further away? I'm switching back!"

"Lord Wind Master, will you be alright?" Xie Lian asked.

"I can't fight it, but I can still run away!" Shi Qingxuan replied.

Thus, Xie Lian gave that Reverend of Empty Words one final kick, making it fly out a few miles away. He turned around to flee wildly, but then he stopped.

"Wait, you don't need to run away! Let me set up a protection array for you! Lord Wind Master, do you have any protective spiritual devices on you? If you don't, precious gems and treasures can do too!"

Hearing him, Shi Qingxuan hastily replied, "Treasure? I've got that. Feel around my neck, there's a longevity locket, will that do?"

Xie Lian felt around, and sure enough, Shi Qingxuan was wearing a long golden longevity locket; its sheen exquisite and opulent.

He said, delighted, "Yes. This is a rare treasure, excellent!"

"Really?" Shi Qingxuan said. "I've got more: there's a jade belt around my waist, an agate ring on my finger, some pearls on my boots, the sandalwood handle of the whisk is older than you, oh, and apparently the hairs of the whisk are also rare, plucked from some spiritual beast..."

In one breath he told of seven or eight items, then he continued, "In any case, Your Highness, just take a look and see if everything on me can be used."

"..."

Yes, they could be used. And they were all extremely rare treasures! Xie Lian was shocked; as expected of the God of Wealth, as expected of the younger brother of the Water Master!

He said, "They can all be used. I'll find a house nearby to set up an array. When you're switched back, keep the ear plugs in, and don't look outside. Stay in the house and don't go out, wait until we come!"

Shi Qingxuan was going to break down in sobs. "YOUR HIGHNESS, YOU'RE TOO RELIABLE!!! THANK YOU! From today onwards, you're my second best friend. From now on, this Wind Master will never forget you in any good endeavours!"

Xie Lian didn't know whether to laugh or cry, and responded politely, "Thank you!"

During their exchange, that Reverend of Empty Words was left far behind. Glancing around, Xie Lian found a small pavilion nearby and charged in, shutting and locking all the doors and windows with a wave of his hand. He then wrapped the golden longevity locket around the door latch, bit blood from his finger to draw a spell, then he laid out all the treasures in formation, drawing a blood array. All of these actions were done in a short amount of time, and finally he sat in the centre of the room, closing his eyes.

“One, two, three. SOUL-SHIFTING SPELL—RETURN!”

It was like he was violently thrown high into the sky again, then plunged. After a wave of whirling, Xie Lian once again felt his feet touch the ground. Unsteady, he was going to fall over; before he did a pair of hands caught and supported him. He opened his eyes and heard Hua Cheng’s voice from above, dark and grave.

“Gege, I think you better explain yourself.”

Xie Lian grabbed his arm and steadied himself. He was just about to speak when he suddenly realized someone was missing, and asked, “Where’s Lord Earth Master?”

“Who knows,” Hua Cheng said.

Xie Lian was taken aback. “Who knows?”

Then he looked to the side. There was a human-shaped crater on the ground, and Ming Yi was slowly crawling out of that hole.

He stopped talking, speechless for the moment. In the communication array, Shi Qingxuan’s voice came.

“Eh?”

Xie Lian tensed. “Did it come?”

Having used so many of Shi Qingxuan’s treasures to form the array, he made sure the defense of that house was indestructible, and that Reverend of Empty Words shouldn’t be able to intrude. Even if it was powerful, it would still take time.

However, Shi Qingxuan said, “No no no. Your highness, this array is impressive, steady like the mountains, it really does feel secure. I think nothing could break in in the next three days and three nights. It’s just...I can’t believe it’s this place.”

“What place? Do you recognize it?” Xie Lian asked.

“Of course I recognize it,” Shi Qingxuan replied. “This is the Terrace of Cascading Wine. It’s where I ascended.”

Xie Lian was taken aback, thinking, “The Terrace of Cascading Wine?”

Shi Qingxuan seemed to have made a round of the room and said firmly again, "That's right. I come back to this place every few decades to check up on it. I'm not mistaken."

No wonder that the Reverend of Empty Words knew immediately that the one in the shell wasn't the real Shi Qingxuan. If it was the man himself, by just one look he would've known it was the Terrace of Cascading Wine, and there wouldn't be any need to look around to make sure.

Ever since Ming Yi had crawled out of the hole, he squatted down on the ground to start drawing an array. After a few strokes were drawn, however, he suddenly raised his hand and blasted away the array entirely. Hua Cheng's eyes immediately grew cold and Xie Lian was also taken aback.

"Lord Earth Master, what are you doing?"

Ming Yi rose to his feet and said, "The Distance-Shortening array doesn't work anymore. We have to walk over."

"What do you mean it doesn't work anymore?" Xie Lian exclaimed.

"It means just now, someone or something destroyed all the connection points of the Distance-Shortening array near the Terrace of Cascading Wine. No, the entire area's connection points have been destroyed."

Not long ago, Shi Qingxuan was clearly brought over to the Terrace of Cascading Wine via the Distance-Shortening Array. It seemed that as soon as Shi Qingxuan hid himself inside the pavilion, that Reverend of Empty Words immediately reacted and tampered with the points, intentionally slowing them down. This was no different than having the paths destroyed when crossing a mountain. Now, no one could even dream of using the Distance-Shortening array to get close to the Terrace of Cascading Wine.

"If we leave now, how long will it take before we get there?" Xie Lian asked.

Ming Yi had already turned around and started walking. "An hour!"

Xie Lian called out in the communication array, "Lord Wind Master, we're heading over to where you are now. You just wait until we get there. If anything knocks, absolutely do not open the door."

"Alright alright alright. Of course," Shi Qingxuan said. "Even if you didn't say anything, I already know. Don't take me for a three-year-old who'd open the door to anybody. Now then My Lords, please hurry, ok?!"

Fortunately, the town of Fu Gu and the Terrace of Cascading Wine weren't on separate ends of the earth; they were within acceptable distance of each other. If they hurried over now, they should still make it in time. The three immediately took off. On the way, Xie Lian casually tested his powers, and discovered that the Soul-Shifting spell really did burn him out quite aggressively. That powerful wave Hua Cheng poured into him was already used up by more than half.

Hua Cheng noticed his movements, and asked, "Gege, do you need more?"

Xie Lian hastily shook his head. "No. Really, thank San Lang ever so much for being so generous earlier."

"You're welcome," Hua Cheng said. "I already said, you can take as much as you want." After a pause, he then added, half-jokingly, "But, when gege pays me back, can I collect some interest?"

Xie Lian cleared his throat softly, thinking that it was probably an issue whether he could even pay anything back at all. But of course, his lips were still bold.

"Yeah...sure."

Although it was estimated to be an hour, the three of them weren't mortals and it was a dire situation, so naturally they were going faster. When they arrived at the Terrace of Cascading Wine, Xie Lian took a look around, and sure enough, it was the same place as before. All around was the chaotic mess created by his misuse of the Wind Master fan. The fan had refused his control and blew over trees and bushes, and Xie Lian was feeling a little embarrassed.

"Your highness, in which building did you set up the spiritual array? Do you remember?" Ming Yi asked.

Of course Xie Lian remembered, and he was also searching for it attentively. Soon, his eyes lit up and pointed his finger.

"It's that small pavilion."

The three walked towards the small pavilion; the closer they got, the more relaxed they became, as if they saw a ray of hope. However, when they approached, Xie Lian's pupils instantly shrank.

The doors to that small pavilion were open, creaking eerily as they swung back and forth in the chilling night air.

Ch.112: Doors Open to Greet the Ghost; Drawn Earth a Prison

“Where is he?” Xie Lian said.

The three entered the small pavilion, and within the building there was no one. The spiritual devices and treasures were still in the same places as they had been set up before; only, once the doors were opened, they had all become useless.

Xie Lian shouted in the communication array, “LORD WIND MASTER? WHERE ARE YOU?”

On the way over, because they were focused on rushing and Shi Qingxuan was overly agitated, Xie Lian had proposed that he meditate to calm down; to stop thinking and saying nonsense, scaring himself. Shi Qingxuan thought it made a lot of sense and gradually stopped talking, so the lack of response wasn't out of the blue. Thus, Xie Lian hadn't noticed anything amiss; but now, no matter how he yelled, there was no answer, and a feeling of dread started to spread in his heart. In a situation like this, there could only be two possibilities: either Shi Qingxuan was not responding on purpose, or he had already lost consciousness.

There were over ten-something spiritual devices and treasures on the Wind Master's person, each of them rare and exquisite, and they had all been used by Xie Lian to set the formation of the array. There should be nothing from the outside that could easily break through. Even if it could be done, just as Shi Qingxuan had said, it would take at least three days and three nights, and it'd be impossible not to leave evidence of a break-in. Yet, from the looks of it, the doors and windows of this small pavilion were all intact, and there were also no tunnels or ladders. Xie Lian went back to the entrance and picked up the golden locket on the ground, looking over it closely.

“He really did open the doors himself.”

Even though reinforcements were clearly arriving momentarily, for what reason would he seek a dead end for himself at the last minute?

“Maybe he thought the one at the door was us?” Ming Yi said gravely.

Hearing this, an abominable image suddenly appeared in Xie Lian's mind: from outside the small pavilion came three individuals, each in the appearance of himself, Hua Cheng, and Ming Yi, and they knocked on the doors. Within the pavilion, an overjoyed Shi Qingxuan immediately opened the doors, and the three “people” outside surrounded him, grinning at him eerily. The golden locket in Shi Qingxuan's hand fell to the ground next to his feet, never to be picked up.

Xie Lian immediately shook his head. “That's impossible. I've never heard that the Reverend of Empty Words has the ability to fake appearances.”

“Maybe it called for helpers,” Ming Yi said.

Xie Lian gave it a thought, but also dismissed it. “Everything that we ran into today was sudden and unforeseen. Before this, we hadn’t thought there’d be a need for an array to shield the Wind Master, so it too shouldn’t have been able to find any ghosts to help so quickly. Besides, didn’t we tell Lord Wind Master that we’d inform him in the communication array when we arrive? Whether the ones outside the doors were real or fake, it would’ve been easy to figure out by just asking, so how could he be so easily deceived?”

Coming to this point, Xie Lian suddenly stopped, then he started mumbling, “Unless it was someone he knew who told him to open the doors.”

“Someone he knew?” Ming Yi questioned. “How so?”

Just then, Hua Cheng spoke up. “His ears were plugged. He can’t hear.”

Xie Lian immediately seized his arm and exclaimed, “Well said, San Lang! It was exactly for that reason I said it must be someone he knew. Because Lord Wind Master had his ears plugged, he wouldn’t have been able to hear anything from the outside! Unless he removed the ear plugs, but would he do that? He was so terrified, he’d die before he would. So, to deceive him and have him open the door, there was only one way it could be done.”

The private communication array!

Xie Lian started to talk faster. “Which meant, while we were coming, there was someone who secretly connected with Lord Wind Master and told him something that made him open the doors on his own. If it wasn’t someone he was close to, they wouldn’t have known Lord Wind Master’s verbal password. The verbal passwords of heavenly officials are all closely-guarded secrets, not to be known by outsiders, and especially not to demons and monsters the likes of that Reverend of Empty Words. Also, it should’ve been someone he trusted deeply, otherwise he wouldn’t have opened the doors without thinking.”

“Or,” Hua Cheng said. “He didn’t know this person, but this person knew him, and gave him a reason he couldn’t refuse, giving him no choice but to open the doors.”

Xie Lian considered that possibility seriously, and said, “Technically, we can send messages to Lord Wind Master as long as we have the verbal password. But to have a strange voice suddenly speak, wouldn’t Lord Wind Master think it weird? He should’ve told us in the communication array the moment he heard. Unless this mysterious individual who sent the private communication paralyzed him with the first message. But what message could it be?”

“A threat?” Ming Yi wondered.

“How could it threaten? ‘If you don’t come out, I’ll tell your brother I’ve returned to harrass you’?” Xie Lian immediately dismissed the thought. “Not likely.”

That Reverend of Empty Words shouldn’t be aware of Shi Qingxuan’s concerns. Besides, it wasn’t a heavenly official, so how could it let the Water Master know immediately of its existence? Reinforcements would arrive within the hour, but Shi Qingxuan couldn’t even wait that long. At the end of the day, whether that creature could win against the Water Master was another matter entirely. It bore mentioning that it had never harassed Shi Wudu; it only had eyes for Shi Qingxuan, picking especially at the lower-hanging fruit. No doubt the Reverend itself was scared of the Water Master, so it wouldn’t have provoked him directly.

“Search for another hour,” Ming Yi said.

Xie Lian understood what he wanted to say, and nodded. “Alright. If we still can’t find him after an hour, no matter how much Lord Wind Master protests, Lord Water Master must be informed. Let’s break up! We’ll search this way, and Lord Earth Master, please search over there.”

Ming Yi turned around and left without a word. Xie Lian jogged as he searched, and never gave up calling for Shi Qingxuan in the communication array, but he remained dead silent.

“How goes it?” Hua Cheng asked.

Xie Lian shook his head. “No response whatsoever.”

The dread in his mind was growing heavier. He searched chamber after chamber of every wing in the entire pavilion, and was almost through with all the pavilions nearby; yet there were no traces at all.

Soon after, the two came to the tallest pavilion in the area. This pavilion was obviously the star of its surroundings, the centrepiece. It was renovated multiple times, glamorous and impressive, with a number of poetry verses written on the walls. Xie Lian raised his head to look at the establishment plaque: “The Terrace of Cascading Wine”.

He wondered out loud, “Is it the ‘Young Lord Who Poured Wine’?”

“That’s right,” Hua Cheng answered. “This is the original address to the ‘Young Lord Who Poured Wine’.”

“So it really is related?” Xie Lian looked at him.

“Yeah,” Hua Cheng replied, then briefly gave an account.

Turns out, in the legends, they said when Shi Qingxuan was still mortal, after training he would often come to this place to drink; spread out drunkenly upon the terrace, happy and carefree.

One day, below the deck came a malicious crook who often bullied the good villagers. When Shi Qingxuan saw him, he nonchalantly spilled the delicate wine from his cup and cast a tiny spell. That wine spilt right over that crook's head and knocked him out. After Shi Qingxuan was appointed a deputy general by Shi Wudu, he still loved the mortal realm, and continued to drink endlessly at this place like before. The day he ascended was also when he was here drinking.

To ascend whilst drinking sounded absurd, but it actually wasn't anything of the sort. Sometimes opportunities came knocking without any rhyme or reason. Xie Lian himself was still sleeping when he ascended. Perhaps in the future there would be heavenly officials who would ascend while they were in the bathroom; which might very well become a renowned sight too.

In any case, stories of scholars teasing guests had always been popular throughout history, and places that had these stories would always incite the urge for intellectuals to raise their brush and create, expressing their yearning for a heavenly lifestyle. Xie Lian now understood that this place was one of such landmarks. There were no tourists in the middle of the night, but the next day, there would for sure be many tourists who would discover, astonished, that the houses and trees had been blown away, and cry that the Wind Master had shown up.

However, the renowned sight of the Young Lord Who Poured Wine was slightly different than Xie Lian had imagined.

Just then, he heard Hua Cheng say darkly, "Gege, I need to go take care of something small. Please do be careful. I won't be long."

"Take care of what?" Xie Lian wondered mentally. When he recalled Hua Cheng's angry voice in the private communication array, and now his unfriendly demeanor, he asked, "Are you going to go find that Reverend of Empty Words?"

Hua Cheng paused for a moment, then replied, "No."

If it wasn't that, then it wasn't his place to ask any more. Xie Lian nodded.

"You were only here for fun anyway. Since something's come up, just go. You take care of yourself too."

"En," Hua Cheng said. After a pause, he added, "When I come back, I'll tell you something."

Xie Lian was taken aback and blurted, "What?"

But Hua Cheng's figure had already disappeared.

After an hour, there was still nothing, and Xie Lian called out in the communication array, "Lord Earth Master! How are things on your side? I haven't found him here, so I'm coming back."

“Nothing!” Ming Yi answered.

“This won’t do. I can’t hold back any longer,” Xie Lian said. “Let’s meet up at the centre of the Terrace of Cascading Wine. I’m going to report to Lord Water Master right now.”

After that, he immediately mouthed Ling Wen’s verbal password to her private communication array.

“Ling Wen, are you there? Can you find Lord Water Master? Please tell him to come meet at the Terrace of Cascading Wine at his earliest notice.”

The clear voice of a man rang next to his ears. It seemed that at this moment Ling Wen was in his male form.

“Your highness? Lord Water Master is here with me right now. He’s not someone who likes going out, so he probably won’t descend. What business do you have with him? I can pass on the message.”

Just then, Xie Lian had almost reached the main building of that Terrace of Cascading Wine, and saw from afar that the terrace seemed to be hung with something. It looked like a white cloth, swinging in the night breeze.

Xie Lian was taken aback, thinking, “Was there something there before?”

When he walked closer, he finally saw what it was—wasn’t that Shi Qingxuan’s outer robe?

Just then, Ming Yi roared in the communication array. “Your highness, come immediately to the tallest pavilion at the Terrace of Cascading Wine! HURRY!!!”

Xie Lian jolted, and on the other end, Ling Wen was asking, “Your highness? Are you still there?”

Xie Lian exclaimed, “Please have him descend as soon as possible! Something’s happened to Lord Wind Master!”

After having shouted that last message, he charged up the pavilion. There were no more sounds from the other end; Ling Wen was probably shocked by his message, and went reporting to Shi Wudu. When Xie Lian made it to the tallest floor, at the centre of the floor there lay a person, and it was Shi Qingxuan.

Shi Qingxuan had both eyes tightly closed; there were no external injuries on his person, and no traces of blood. Another person was helping him up, and it was Ming Yi. Shi Qingxuan was propped up, unconscious, and something fell from his chest. Xie Lian fixed his eyes and felt his heart tighten—that thing was the Wind Master fan, and it was split in half. That rare spiritual device could only be possessed by chance and not by force; it might not even be forged after hundreds of years. It was the Wind Master's number one spiritual device, yet it was destroyed just like that!

"When we came by just now, there was no one else!" Xie Lian claimed.

But just as the words left his mouth, he realized something else that was amiss. Earlier, when he and Hua Cheng came by, there were plenty of poetry verses on the wall left by literary guests; some charming, some arrogant, others elegant. But now, they were all gone, as if someone had wiped them clean; leaving behind a phrase that didn't exist before, in crimson script.

It was a row of large words, dripping with blood: "WRETCHED BEGINNING WRETCHED END".

It was the curse the Reverend of Empty Words bestowed on Shi Qingxuan on the day of his birth!

Just then, Ming Yi asked frigidly, "Your highness, where's the one that was with you?"

Xie Lian was taken aback and thought, "Oh no! San Lang's left at such an inopportune moment!"

The moment he left his side, something happened to Shi Qingxuan. This really couldn't be explained clearly. However, Xie Lian showed nothing on his face, and explained solemnly, "I asked him to go search for that Reverend of Empty Words."

"When did he leave?" Ming Yi asked.

Without changing his expression, Xie Lian replied, "Just now. He hasn't been gone for even half an incense time."

Truthfully, it was way longer than that. However, Xie Lian himself never doubted Hua Cheng. So naturally he wouldn't let anyone have the chance to doubt either, lest more issues arise.

Just then, from beyond the skies came waves of rolling thunder. A golden carriage of eight wheels broke through the clouds, driving towards them with an imposing aura.

Unable to reach the Terrace of Cascading Wine using the Distance-Shortening array, it seemed Shi Wudu went straight for a Golden Carriage instead. It must be known that, when a golden carriage of burnished horses was driven, it was a huge fanfare. If it should be seen by mortals who were stargazing in the middle of the night, it would for sure be an uproar in the mortal realm. This Water Tyrant really wasn't afraid of anything.

Watching that dramatic golden carriage approach, Xie Lian immediately said, "Lord Earth Master, if any heavenly officials should ask later, please don't say a word about Lord Hua. There are many heavenly officials in the Heavenly Court who like to exaggerate and make up stories. This affair has nothing to do with him, so there's no need to make it complicated."

Ming Yi gave him a look, and said, "Very well."

He agreed easily and looked down to keep checking Shi Qingxuan's condition. Xie Lian let out a breath of relief, but then, seeing the unmoving Wind Master, his heart sank once more.

That golden carriage came roaring, and soon after, it landed with trails of propitious clouds. Outside the carriage were a small number of junior heavenly officials standing at the ready to serve, and three grand heavenly officials exited the vehicle. It was Shi Wudu, Pei Ming, and Ling Wen. Three of the top ten at the Mid-Autumn banquet had come all at once. Of course, Xie Lian had long forgotten that he himself sat at the head of the top ten. Shi Wudu had deeply-knitted brows, sweeping his sleeves as he got off the carriage with a frown. He entered the pavilion with his Water Master fan in hand and Pei Ming and Ling Wen following right behind. The moment he saw his younger brother lying on the ground like a corpse, his face instantly changed, and he rushed over.

"Qingxuan? Qingxuan! What's happened?"

Xie Lian responded succinctly, "Lord Wind Master has run into the Reverend of Empty Words."

"..."

"What did you say?" Shi Wudu exclaimed in disbelief. "The Reverend of Empty Words?"

Hearing that name, not only Shi Wudu, but Pei Ming and Ling Wen's faces dropped too. It seemed they already knew of Shi Wudu's scourge. Watching their expressions, Xie Lian couldn't tell who was faking and who was secretly delighted; they were all acting naturally. Especially Shi Wudu. There was definitely no way he was acting.

Ling Wen retrieved a bunch of bottles from his sleeve, and said, "Try feeding him all of them."

Pei Ming, on the other hand, remarked on the side, "It's you again, Your Highness."

"It can't be helped," Xie Lian replied. "There's only so many of us going back and forth in the heavens."

"It seems every time we see you, that other one is always around too. I wonder if it's the same case this time?"

Xie Lian replied flatly, "No, no. Of course not."

He was lying through his teeth, but Ming Yi actually kept his promise and didn't utter a word. Pei Ming stopped talking, waved his hand, and led the officials under his command to search the premises. Given the situation, it was actually better that Hua Cheng had left beforehand. At least he wasn't at the scene of the crime. Shi Wudu couldn't wake Shi Qingxuan, but his eyes inadvertently swept over to the giant bloody words on that snow-white wall, and his face twisted immediately.

His face became whiter than that wall. Shaking with fury, he shouted, "WHO WROTE THIS? WHO WROTE IT?!"

Even though he was shouting, his voice was trembling.

Just then, Ling Wen exclaimed, "Lord Wind Master is awake!"

Xie Lian immediately squatted down. "Lord Wind Master?"

Sure enough, Shi Qingxuan's eyes were blinking open slowly. Shi Wudu shoved everyone aside and cried, "Qingxuan? Are you alright? Do you feel bad anywhere? Who hurt you?!"

Shi Qingxuan was dazed for a good while as he slowly came to. When he became conscious, the first thing he saw was Shi Wudu's face. The next moment, something no one had expected happened.

He shoved Shi Wudu away, grabbed his own head, and screamed.

"AAAAHHHHHHHHH——!!!"

Ch.113: Teasing Words to Befuddle Me and Also My Lord

Having been shoved so forcefully, the esteemed Water Master almost fell to the ground, jumbled and dumbfounded. It was a moment before he called out, "Qingxuan, it's gege."

Shi Qingxuan roared, "I KNOW IT'S YOU!!!"

Since he knew it was Shi Wudu and wasn't delusional, unable to recognize people, then why such a reaction?

Shi Wudu reached for him again. "Everything's alright now..."

Shi Qingxuan slapped that hand away. "ALRIGHT, MY ASS! How can anything be alright?! Don't say anything anymore! AAH! I CAN'T TAKE THIS!"

The moment those words left his lips, it was not only Shi Wudu's face that changed color, but also Ling Wen, standing on the side, and Pei Ming, who had just returned from giving out directives to his subordinates.

"Qingxuan, stop this. What you just said is no different than slapping your brother's face and pouring poison on his heart."

Usually when Shi Qingxuan heard Pei Ming speak, he had to argue back a few times. But now he only held his head wordlessly, ignoring him completely, muttering like he was possessed.

"I don't want to hear anything. You stop talking, too. Let me calm down. Just go. JUST GET OUT OF HERE!!!"

Finally, Shi Wudu couldn't stand it any longer.

"WHAT NONSENSE ARE YOU SPOUTING?!" he shouted.

Ling Wen chided, "Lord Wind Master, if there's anything, just tell us, so we know what we can do to solve it..."

Shi Qingxuan roared, enraged, "DO YOU NOT UNDERSTAND THE WORDS COMING OUT OF MY MOUTH?! GET OUT OF HERE! CAN YOU ALL PLEASE JUST GET THE HELL OUT OF HERE!!! AAHHH!!! AAAAAHHHHHHHHH!!!!"

He was yelling like he was unhinged, screaming and screaming. Suddenly he spat out a mouthful of blood.

"Lord Wind Master!" Xie Lian exclaimed.

Shi Wudu immediately seized his wrist to check his pulse. After feeling it, his face instantly became more terrifying than a ghost's; as if he was going to throw up blood on the spot, too.

"Lord Water Master, what's wrong with Lord Wind Master?" Xie Lian asked.

He reached out ready to check as well, but Shi Wudu slapped his hand away forcefully; glaring at him with fury, like he couldn't allow Xie Lian to find out just what Shi Qingxuan's condition was. Soon after, he turned to his younger brother.

"You're ill. You're deranged from terror. I'm taking you back for treatment. You will be healed for sure."

Shi Qingxuan stared at him intently, and slowly enunciated his words: "I am not ill. Whether I'm ill, you should know best! Don't write me off as crazy, I'm very aware. I've never been so aware in my life!"

Shi Wudu grabbed hold of him and dragged him to the carriage, yelling, "You don't understand anything! Don't speak nonsense!"

Shi Qingxuan wailed, "MING-XIONG! MING-XIONG, SAVE ME! YOUR HIGHNESS! SAVE ME!"

He reached out with both his arms, grabbing the other two, one with each hand. Xie Lian and Ming Yi both held on to the hands he extended. However, Shi Wudu yanked him away forcibly again.

"Let's go. Everything's alright. Gege is here."

Shi Qingxuan was still screaming, and Pei Ming and Ling Wen went over to help Shi Wudu hold him down.

Ming Yi shouted, "Your brother doesn't want to go back with you!"

Xie Lian exclaimed too, "That Reverend of Empty Words hasn't been dealt with yet; Lord Water Master, what do you plan on..."

Shi Wudu cut him off sharply. "What Reverend of Empty Words? I have no idea what you're all talking about. He's ill. His mind is addled. THAT'S ALL!"

"But Lord Wind Master..." Xie Lian tried again.

Shi Wudu cut him off again. "This is my brother, do you think I would mistreat him? This is our own family affair, no need to trouble outsiders! Would the two lords please not spread word of this around, either, and just mind your own business!"

Then, he raised his hand in front of Shi Qingxuan, and swept it down. Once Shi Qingxuan lost consciousness from the sweep, he was forced into the golden carriage.

Although his words were rude, they stunned Xie Lian. He wasn't wrong. After all, Shi Wudu was the rightful blood brother to Shi Qingxuan, so how could he have any intent to harm Shi Qingxuan? Besides, there were two other heavenly officials accompanying them, so having Shi Qingxuan go back with them was the safest option. How could outsiders continue to interfere when family showed up?

That Wind Master fan laid broken in two on the ground, without anyone caring. Ling Wen picked it up, speaking to Xie Lian and Ming Yi.

"Your highness, Lord Earth Master, please don't be offended. Lord Water Master is only mad from worry. This affair is personal, and personal scandals shan't be publicized, so pray My Lords keep this to yourselves. He will for sure make amends when this is settled."

After a few more courteous words, Ling Wen also boarded the carriage hastily. That golden carriage rose in the air, rumbling, then flew off. It was only after watching that stream of propitious clouds gradually disappear in the night sky that it finally hit Xie Lian: the Water Master really did take the Wind Master away, just like that. As for them, after running around for so long, they were really left behind, just like that.

Ming Yi turned around and was about to leave when Xie Lian snapped out of it and exclaimed, "Lord Earth Master!"

Ming Yi paused in his step. He turned his head and looked at him meaningfully before he said, "Relax. I won't say anything about Hua Cheng."

Xie Lian let out a breath of relief and said, "Thank you. Are you going to go check up on Lord Wind Master?"

Ming Yi nodded once, and turned back around to continue on his way. Although Xie Lian was also very worried about the Wind Master, still, all the medical heavenly officials in the Upper Court were going to be more of a help than he would be. Besides, Shi Wudu would for sure not want any outsiders to witness his brother's madness; given that, it wasn't the right time to pay a visit right now. Actually, Hua Cheng's sudden departure was more of a concern. After some consideration, Xie Lian decided to go find Hua Cheng first. Making up his mind, Xie Lian left the Terrace of Cascading Wine, and speedily began his overnight journey.

Unable to use the Distance-Shortening array, and without a golden carriage of burnished horses, Xie Lian could only depend on his pair of legs, sprinting through the mountain paths.

As he ran, he thought, “What kind of situation could San Lang possibly run into? His expression and tone of voice earlier made it seem like it was something serious. Hopefully, I’ll be able to give him a hand this time.”

It wasn’t even an incense time before suddenly, he noticed the roads ahead of him were thick with the essence of evil. Visibility heavily reduced, Xie Lian slowed his pace and thought, “No way. What is it now?”

He stood on the side of the road to watch and observe quietly. A while later, from the thick of that essence of evil came a bizarre work song.

“YI YU XI, YI YU XI.”⁸¹

“YI YU XI, YI YU XI.”

At the end of the road ahead, a giant black silhouette hazily appeared.

It was black and large, with some shadows floating about, but Xie Lian couldn’t tell just what it was. He had never seen anything with that shape, but it was for sure something quite big. Subconsciously, he took a step back in alarm; the Ruoye on his left arm ready to attack, he rested his right hand on Fangxin’s hilt.

Soon after, that giant thing showed its true form from the mist. Xie Lian’s eyes slightly widened. Turns out, it was a glamorous step-litter.⁸²

That step-litter was exceedingly extravagant. From its golden canopy hung exquisite and featherlight satin veils; should anyone be enthroned within, they would for sure be shrouded within the expanse of enchanting crimson drapes, obscuring their silhouette and leaving much to the imagination. The porters carrying that step-litter were four golden skeletons with abnormally large bone structures. They hollered their work song, “YI YU XI”, “YI YU XI”, as they made way. Next to every skeleton floated small languid swirls of ghost fires, twirling about, presumably used for illumination; whenever they came to a darker area, the ghost fires would burn brighter.

⁸¹ [噫籲嘯] “YI YU XI” are just meaningless sounds.

⁸² [步輦] “step-litter”: a “litter” is a type of wheelless vehicle; human-powered transport. Palanquins and sedan chairs are categorized as litters, but often have boxed cabins. A step-litter is an open-air platform with a seat/throne, and sometimes (such as in this text) it has a canopy adorned with hanging satin curtains. Step-litters are usually reserved for those with high status.

More info on wiki: https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Litter_\(vehicle\))

FYI: Palanquins and sedan chairs are basically the same thing. The name “sedan chair” was used in the west after the palanquin was imported to Europe in the early 16th century.

The sight was too strange, too bizarre and demonic, and Xie Lian couldn't help but stare; wondering if he ran into some ghost lady out to meet a lover on a date. He hurriedly backed further onto the side of the road to give way. Unexpectedly, however, those four golden skeletons carrying the step-litter stopped in front of him and each turned their skulls towards him.

One of the golden skeletons' jaw bones crackled, and out came a sound from who knows where. It spoke with a quivering voice:

"Lord Chengzhu⁸³ sent us to receive the Crown Prince of Xianle. Is My Lord Your Highness?"

"..."

Lord Chengzhu could be no other but Hua Cheng. Xie Lian removed his hand from the hilt of the sword and answered.

"That's me."

Crackle crackle. The skeletons seemed to be rejoicing, and lowered the step-litter.

"Please board, let's go!"

Were the four golden skeletons going to carry him to go see Hua Cheng? Xie Lian said reluctantly, "That's...too much trouble."

"Nonsense. It's no trouble at all, this is our job."

"Your highness, please board! Lord Chengzhu is waiting for you."

Thus, Xie Lian carefully stepped onto the platform, lifted the veil and seated himself within.

"Thanks for the trouble."

The golden skeletons were ecstatic, crackling and saying something incomprehensible. They picked up the step-litter and started bumping along the mountain paths.

That step-litter had upon it a wicker chair sewn with brocade; exceedingly comfortable. Xie Lian sat poised in the centre, feeling that it seemed a bit big for just one person. The step-litter carried by those golden skeletons seemed to be bumpy and wobbly, but when he actually sat down, the ride was quite steady. It moved extremely fast, swifter than flying on a sword. And ⁸³ [城主] "Chengzhu" means Lord Mayor or City Master. That doesn't quite cut it, since Ghost City is more of a city- or fortress-state, and has its own sovereignty. I haven't found any satisfactory English term that'd fully represent Hua Cheng's power and status, so let's just keep Chengzhu.

other than that bizarre work song those golden skeletons enjoyed chanting, it was practically silent; much more so than that rumbling golden carriage with burnished horses, and even more mysterious.

In the past, when Xie Lian was still a crown prince, he would also ride a step-litter when he went out from time to time. He was much younger back then, and sat on the lap of either his father or mother; the step-litter was carried by specially-chosen palace attendants who would cheer and clamor all around, impressive and imposing. After he got bigger, he didn't enjoy it as much anymore. Nevertheless, this was his first time being transported by those creatures, so still he couldn't help but be amazed.

After traveling for a while, he suddenly sensed a band of green ghost fires ahead. Their wispy light shimmered through the veil, and quiet chatter came wafting in the air.

"Who goes there? Shouldn't ya be leavin' somethin' behind, crossin' thru this burial ground?"

It seemed they ran into road-blocking feral ghosts. Shadows eating shadows, ghosts devouring ghosts, yet they even dared provoke Hua Cheng? Those skeletons crackled and laughed.

"What do you want us to leave behind?"

Xie Lian was just contemplating whether he should show his face and deal with this when he heard those tiny voices shriek.

"AIYOYOYOYO FORGIVE US! Our shitty eyes be blind an' didn't realize this was the step-litter of our ol' lord Hua Cheng! Git back to the burials, git back! My Lords please pass as ya will. My Lords are generous, please pass as ya will!"

Those golden skeletons said, "Too late, too late, Lord Chengzhu has given clear instructions that the highness seated in this step-litter shall not be offended. Now that His Highness has been delayed, why don't y'all tell us what shall be done!"

Wails and devilish cries howled all around. Xie Lian couldn't stand it anymore, and said, "Um, forget it. Since we're in a rush, just let this go."

Those skeletons said, "Since His Highness says so, then we shall let them go. Y'all got off easy!"

Xie Lian added, "However, do keep in mind to never block the roads in the future, and do not harm travelers."

The feral ghosts rejoiced. "Nonono, we swear that's never happened! Thank you, My Lord!"

"Depart!" those skeletons shouted.

As they passed through, Xie Lian faintly heard the babbling of female ghosts, chattering in wonder.

“Hey, who do y’all think is the highness sitting in that litter? I’ve never heard of Lord Hua’s golden step-litter carrying anyone else.”

“If it was a lady, then it’d be easy to guess. Yet it’s a man. Very strange.”

“What’s so strange about it?” Xie Lian wondered.

In the next second, he heard those female ghosts say: “Yeah. And here I was so sure that golden litter was definitely for the madam wife!”

After having run around for days, while riding in the step-litter, Xie Lian felt drowsy. He used his hand to support his cheek, and dozed off. Another long while passed, and he felt the step-litter stop again.

He mumbled semi-consciously, “What is it?”

He thought they ran into another band of road-blocking feral ghosts. But just as the words left his lips, he felt the step-litter dip, and it was another who had gotten on.

The man lifted the veil and called out lightly, “Gege?”

Xie Lian rubbed his eyes and squinted, looking towards the voice. “San Lang?”

The one who’d come was naturally Hua Cheng. When he saw Xie Lian’s half-awake state, bleary-eyed and dazed, he was slightly taken aback. Xie Lian sat up, feeling embarrassed, and cleared his throat.

“I accidentally fell asleep.”

Soon after, Hua Cheng smiled and went over to sit too. “Gege is exhausted. I hope gege won’t mind if I squeeze in.”

Xie Lian nodded and tried to move more to the right, wanting to leave more room for Hua Cheng. But Hua Cheng extended his arm and caught his right shoulder, pulling him back.

“No need. There’s enough space.”

Truthfully, there wasn't. This step-litter was crafty; too big for one person, too cramped for two, not a perfect fit unless one employed the method from Xie Lian's younger years, and one sat on the lap of the other.

"You left just in time earlier. Three heavenly officials from the Upper Court descended all at once."

Hua Cheng humphed. "Was it the Three Tumours? I already expected it."

Xie Lian laughed teasingly. "Was that the reason why you ran away?"

Hua Cheng replied jokingly too, "No, I went to hail for the carriage. So how is it, gege? Isn't my Infernal Ghost Carriage much more fun than the golden carriage of those heavenly officials in the Upper Court?"

"Yes, it's very fun!" Xie Lian laughed. But when he was reminded of Wind Master's awful state, he couldn't laugh anymore, and became solemn. "By the way, San Lang, what was it that you wanted to tell me earlier?"

Inadvertently, their eyes met. Hua Cheng still had Xie Lian's right shoulder in his grasp, never having let go, as if he was holding him in his embrace. Looking from the outside, only two overlapping silhouettes could be seen within the veils of that step-litter; curled up together, inseparable. Within the red curtains, Hua Cheng smiled.

"Gege, want to get married?"

"..."

"...Huh?" Xie Lian was startled.

Such a gaze, such words, they were in such close quarters with nowhere to run. Instantly, colours exploded in Xie Lian's vision, and his mind went completely blank. His entire person was frozen, stiffer than a corpse.

Seeing his reaction, Hua Cheng took his arm back and snickered. "It's a joke. Did I shock gege?"

"..." It was a good moment before Xie Lian snapped out of it. "...You're too much. How can you joke about something like that?"

It wasn't just shock. He was so rattled his heart almost stopped. And, though he did not realize, there was also a trace of hurt.

Hua Cheng laughed. "My bad."

He stretched out his long legs and crossed them, settling them up front, wiggling his boots. The silver chains clinked against each other, jingling crisply, truly the very image of mischief. If this was before, Xie Lian would think this young man playful and endearing. But now, for some reason, that noise was disrupting his calm, and an unexplained frustration filled his mind.

After feeling shaken for a bit, he couldn't help but think, once more, "How can you joke about something like that..."

However, when he thought about it, there wasn't anything wrong. It was precisely because it didn't mean anything that it could be used as a joke.

Hua Cheng noticed his odd expression, and immediately sat up straight. "Your highness, don't take it to heart. I was in the wrong just now. I won't joke about this ever again."

Seeing that he apologized so solemnly, Xie Lian felt bad. He thought, "Am I stupid? It was only a joke, and nothing serious. Besides, San Lang only said 'want to get married', but he didn't specify to whom, so where did my mind wander off to? Get a hold of yourself! This instant! Right now!!!"

He smacked himself a few times mentally and steadied his spirit before smiling.

"No no no, how are you in the wrong? Don't misunderstand, I was just thinking about Lord Wind Master, so I looked a bit serious."

"Oh?" Hua Cheng said. "Since the Water Tyrant descended too, that affair should be taken care of."

The two were exceedingly cooperative in changing the subject. Xie Lian started to think seriously, and shook his head softly.

"San Lang, do you really think this is all over? Somehow, I think this is only the beginning."

Shi Qingxuan had always admired and respected his older brother, but just as he escaped danger and saw his brother's face, he reacted like that. A horrifying thought entered his mind—could the one who deceived Shi Qingxuan into opening the doors be Shi Wudu?

Although Shi Wudu should've been in the company of Ling Wen and General Pei at the time, still, it wouldn't be difficult for spiritually-powerful heavenly officials to create clones and send them off on errands.

He was just about to keep telling Hua Cheng some of his suspicions and assumptions, when Hua Cheng said, "No. This affair is done and over with."

His tone was firm, and Xie Lian couldn't help but be taken aback.

“San Lang?”

Hua Cheng stared at him intently. “Gege, do you trust me?”

Xie Lian met his eyes and was equally firm. “I do.”

Hua Cheng said slowly, “Then, believe me. Stay far away from Wind Master, Water Master, Earth Master, Ling Wen, and Pei Ming. The further away, the better.”

Ch.114: Teasing Words to Befuddle Me and Also My Lord 2

After that exchange, thoughts laid heavy on Xie Lian's mind the rest of the way. He tried prodding for more, but every response Hua Cheng gave him thereafter all seemed to mean "that's all I'll say on the subject". Thus, Xie Lian didn't pursue it anymore.

When they returned to Puqi Shrine, dawn had not yet broken upon the horizon.

Pushing the door open, Xie Lian could see that all the dishes were cleaned and put away. Lang Ying, Guzi, and Qi Rong were all sleeping inside, a blanket covering them, looking very comfortable. It seemed that after he left, there really was someone who took care of things attentively, and they had already left silently.

This time when Xie Lian returned, there was a large pile of prayers waiting.

Puqi Shrine had never received this many prayers before, but he didn't think it had anything to do with that wealthy merchant spreading his good name—that's right. That wealthy merchant who lived in town finally came to fulfill his promise.

However, even if he did come by, he either didn't notice the very obvious sign Xie Lian placed right out front, or he purposely ignored it. He also didn't donate however much money he promised he would. The most important purpose of his coming here was to gift a brocade banner, and he enthusiastically presented it to Xie Lian before all the folks in the village. Xie Lian rolled it open unsuspectingly, and immediately folded it closed. Even so, the giant words on that brocade banner were deeply ingrained in his mind: "Return Babies through Miraculous Hands".⁸⁴

"???"

After sending that wealthy merchant off, he exhaled a long sigh. He'd been worried every day, wondering when the shack would finally collapse; he really didn't know when it could be repaired. Hua Cheng, who had been leaning against the door, seemed to have guessed what he was sighing over.

He said, "I've long wanted to say something. If gege doesn't feel secure living here, why not just move somewhere else?"

Xie Lian shook his head. "That's easy for you to say, San Lang. Where would I move to?"

Hua Cheng smiled. "Why not move over to my place?"

⁸⁴ [妙手回胎] "Return Babies through Miraculous Hands" is a play on the idiom [妙手回春] "Return to Spring through Miraculous Hands", which is a compliment for doctors who are so skilled they can bring the dead back to life. In this case, the wealthy merchant wanted to praise Xie Lian's skill in saving fetuses.

Xie Lian knew that those words couldn't be as nonchalant as they sounded. But ever since the "joke" the other night, a small shadow manifested in his heart for some reason. He no longer dared to respond to anything Hua Cheng said using that "joking" demeanor; only acknowledging with a smile, inclining his head.

As for those prayers received, although they were nothing more than mundane—such as the old ox broke his leg and couldn't haul the plow, or the wife in the house got pregnant and couldn't help in the fields—nonetheless, they were still prayers, and he must treat all worshippers equally. After a couple days, Xie Lian responded to the prayers and went into the village to help plow and plant.

Since Hua Cheng had been staying with him, naturally he went along to play. Because this was hard manual labour, at first Xie Lian hadn't wanted him to work too, but he refused to be persuaded. Thus, the two changed into coarse clothing, rolled up their sleeves and pant legs, and entered the waters of the rice paddy fields.

The large expanse of lush green rice paddy fields was littered with bustling farmers, and among them, there were two silhouettes that were particularly conspicuous.

Even if he was dressed in Xie Lian's gritty clothing, not a single bit of Hua Cheng's impressive air could be hidden away. More like, that ragged outfit only accentuated his face and figure. The two of them were both pale-skinned, their arms beautiful, their legs long and straight; painting an eye-catching, scintillating picture among the muddy-faced farmers. It made the village girls—who were used to seeing boors—blush, their hearts racing. They kept sneaking glances, and as they transplanted seedlings, soon their grafts were planted off-course and into curved lines; becoming laughingstocks.

Hua Cheng's blanched skin was a colour that was devoid of blood. Xie Lian, on the other hand, was rosy through the translucent white; due to his natural physique, the more he sweated, the more his skin became fair like jade. With the blazing sun overhead, he had only worked for a short while before his entire person was white like powder. The dry heat was intolerable, and he kept wiping at the beads of sweat rolling down his collarbones. However, he thought of how ghosts were all creatures of the shadows, disgusted with the sun, and knew Hua Cheng must be even more irritated. Xie Lian turned his head to look over. Sure enough, Hua Cheng also straightened up languidly, using a hand to block out the sun, his eyes squinting. Hiding in the shadows of his right hand, he was also gazing in Xie Lian's direction.

Xie Lian walked over and pressed the bamboo hat down on his head. "Here."

Hua Cheng was slightly taken aback at first, but he soon squinted into a smile. "Okay."

Although Hua Cheng said he was going to work the fields just for fun, when he actually got down to work, he was way faster than Xie Lian; swift and efficient, extremely skilled. An hour later, Xie Lian finished transplanting his field of paddies, but he was already sore and in pain, knocking and massaging his waist. Hua Cheng came over to help him out. Xie Lian took a look, and he couldn't believe that after only so long, Hua Cheng actually finished a large field silently all by himself; each green rice stalk standing in the watery paddies, neat and orderly, pleasing to the eye.

Xie Lian said earnestly, "San Lang, you really do learn fast. You don't need to help me, go sit and rest, and drink some water or something."

Thus, Hua Cheng went to the field ridges to retrieve water. The Village Head had been watching on the side for some time, and just then he gave a thumbs-up.

"Daozhang, which house does that little lad belong to? He's so diligent! So amazing! Just one of him is as good as ten men! If any girl is to catch his eye, then it'd be her good fortune!"

Xie Lian "pfft"-ed and laughed, but it wasn't long before a few others came secretly to inquire too.

"Hey, hey, Daozhang, where's that little lad staying at your shrine from? Is he married yet? There couldn't be a wife in his household yet, right?"

"Surely not? He's so young!"

Xie Lian didn't know whether to laugh or cry, and answered vaguely. "Um...I guess. He's young, so it's not time to consider anything yet."

Those villagers immediately said, "Well, that's not right. It's precisely because he's young that the affair gotta be settled soon."

"Daozhang, you gotta talk to him. Men gotta settle early before they can mature. Gotta build a home before anything else."

"That's right! Young people! They're ! They won't be able to withstand lonely nights!"

Those villagers were all from households with daughters, and wanted to dig for information. Just as Xie Lian was courteously turning them away, Hua Cheng walked over with a bamboo water bottle dangling in his hand.

"I'm married. There's a wife at home."

When those villagers heard, they were greatly disappointed, but still unrelenting.

"Which house is the lady from? Won't the little buddy tell us?"

“You’re not lying to us, are you?”

“She must be virtuous and beautiful?”

Hua Cheng raised his brows. “En, that’s right. Virtuous and beautiful. A real noble and gracious special someone that I’ve liked since I was young. I’ve had that crush for many years, and pursued really hard before I was able to win that person over.”

He spoke with such serious certainty, without a hint of falsehood, that those villagers felt there was no more to be said. They could only disperse, feeling defeatedly disappointed.

Xie Lian was spacing out listening to him when Hua Cheng passed over a cloth and a water bottle.

“Water?”

Xie Lian took the cloth and wiped his mud-covered hands before taking the water bottle to drink a few swallows, then passed it back. Subconsciously, he’d bunched the cloth in his hands into a messy ball, and he wiped himself here and there.

After trying to hold it in for a while, he still couldn’t help but ask, “...is that true?”

Hua Cheng took the bamboo bottle and drank a swallow himself, his Adam's apple rolling up and down once, before he lowered his head.

“Hm? Is what true?”

Xie Lian raised his sleeve and wiped some sweat on the side of his face. He wondered if the sun was a little too big today, because both his forehead and his cheeks were both burning up. He tried his best to sound as casual as possible, and smiled.

“There’s a wife at home, virtuous and beautiful, a real noble, gracious special someone. You’ve had that crush since you were young, and pursued really hard before you won that person over.”

“Oh,” Hua Cheng said. “That’s a lie.”

Xie Lian hadn’t noticed himself, but he let out a sigh of relief. This time, his smile was genuine, and he copied Hua Cheng’s tone from before: “You liar.”

Hua Cheng grinned and added, “But, it wasn’t all a lie. I just haven’t won that person over yet.”

Hearing this, Xie Lian was stunned. But Hua Cheng had already turned around, leaving to keep labouring in the fields.

Xie Lian stood where he was for a good while, dazed, before bending down and slowly going back to work. For some reason, he was feeling a little unhappy. Soon after, he discovered a small row of his grafts were off-course, and immediately pulled his mind back.

As he worked the fields, he tried connecting privately with the Wind Master through the private communication array. Although Hua Cheng warned him against getting close to the Wind Master and his group, Xie Lian couldn't help it. These past few days, he'd tried sending messages multiple times, but still there weren't any responses, nothing but silence. Thus, he changed his tactics and reached out to Ling Wen instead.

"Ling Wen, how fares Lord Wind Master? Is he a little better?"

Ling Wen was instantly connected, and her voice sounded next to Xie Lian's ear. "Lord Wind Master? I think he's a little better."

Xie Lian instinctively knew she wasn't telling the truth, but didn't pursue it. However, that did help him make up his mind in going up in a bit to go take a look.

Just then, Ling Wen added, "By the way, Lord Water Master sent a gift over to you. Please remember to take a look, Your Highness."

Xie Lian was taken aback. "A gift? There's no need for it. I haven't done anything deserving of a reward."

"There's no need to be humble," Ling Wen said. "Lord Wind Master grabs anyone to accompany him when he's feeling impulsive, and you've endured hardships by his side for so long. In all manner of speaking, there is no shame in accepting the gift. Lord Water Master said it was nothing but a small show of gratefulness, so just take it."

Xie Lian still didn't think it appropriate, and kept it on his mind.

After finishing his work and wrapping up, Hua Cheng went over to the Village Head's house to help repair his plow, and Xie Lian returned to Puqi Shrine. After moving the three "good-for-nothings", as Hua Cheng had called them, behind the shrine, Xie Lian searched all over the small abode, wondering, "Where's the gift?"

Thinking it might have fallen in the cracks behind the donation box, he rolled his sleeves to move it. Unexpectedly, when he tried to lift, the box was unmoving. That donation box was excessively heavy, like it had grown roots into the ground. Perplexed, Xie Lian took out the key and opened the box. The moment he did, the bright golden light almost blinded him.

That donation box was piled thick and high with gold bars; with just a rough look, there was at least enough to turn into a million merits!

Xie Lian instantly threw the cover shut soundly, pressing it down heavily with both hands, thinking, "Nothing but a small show of gratitude?!"

To gift something so hefty for no reason, was this a lip-sealing fee? At first he had considered that if it really was nothing more than a small gift, like a spiritual jade bracelet for saving power or something, then maybe it'd be best to take it. After all, returning a gift might injure that Water Master's face; the Water Master was proud, so it wouldn't be a nice thing to do. But now...alright, as expected from the God of Wealth. A chest this big, filled to the brim with gold bars, he had to return it.

It just so happened he'd already planned on making a trip to the heavens immediately to check up on the Wind Master. Figuring that Hua Cheng wouldn't return so fast, he left a note, then hoisted that oppressively heavy donation box onto his back before taking off.

Unexpectedly, the moment he reached the Heavenly Court, it was mayhem all around. Xie Lian stood dumbfounded, with wide eyes. The perfect Great Martial Avenue was full of wreckage and potholes, cracks and craters filled the street. A group of junior heavenly officials were running back and forth, and Ling Wen was squatting next to a deep crater, massaging her throbbing temple.

Xie Lian approached and asked, "What's happened?"

Ling Wen looked up and was taken aback by that giant donation box carried on his back.

"Your highness, what are you doing carrying such a big donation box up here??? What's happened? Sigh, don't even talk about it. General Nan Yang and General Xuan Zhen were fighting and destroyed each other's palaces."

Feng Xin and Mu Qing? Xie Lian was amazed.

"Why are the two of them fighting again?"

"What else can it be but that business with the fetus spirit? A few of the martial gods were in discussion, debating on how to deal with that ghost mother and son. General Nan Yang suggested bringing that fetus spirit to the refinery to dissolve it, since that creature really did murder a great number of people. But Xuan Zhen wouldn't let him. His tone wasn't the nicest, so Nan Yang said, as if you've ever been so benevolent, maybe you hold a guilty conscience, and so on. Your highness, you know how it is. They're like that. Say a few words, and they raise their fists. Just look. Look around. Look what their brawl has brought upon us. I've long since said that you martial gods really don't have a good culture; the expense for repairs in the Heavenly Court this year is too terrifying, I've only counted halfway and now I've forgotten everything again. Really..."

Her headache really did look quite painful.

Xie Lian said, "Then...I'll leave you to it. I'll go check up on Lord Wind Master."

Ling Wen looked up. "Visit Lord Wind Master? Don't bother, Your Highness. Lord Wind Master isn't allowing visitors right now."

"Didn't you say he was a bit better?" Xie Lian asked.

"That's what Lord Water Master said," Ling Wen said. "But the Lord Wind Master not allowing visitors were also the Lord Water Master's words. Right now, not even I can see Lord Wind Master, so he probably needs more time to recuperate. You best not go, Your Highness. Speaking of, isn't your donation box also too..."

WHAM! Xie Lian dropped the donation box on the ground.

"Then, please help by giving this to Lord Water Master for me. I haven't done anything deserving of a reward. Even if he didn't give me anything, Xie Lian wouldn't say anything that shouldn't be said."

He felt at ease after throwing that box down and left hastily. Ling Wen called after him from behind. Getting no response, she let it go, and continued to look at that deep crater with her throbbing head.

Although Xie Lian did leave, of course he wouldn't have descended back to the mortal realm just like that. Instead, he snuck to the esteemed Palace of the Wind and Water Masters in the Heavenly Capital.

Although the palace was thick with guards both inside and out, a small thing like this couldn't stop Xie Lian. Shi Qingxuan had brought him over last time, so he had a general idea where the Wind Master's bedchambers were located. He flipped over the wall, and changed between running across rooftops stealthily and sneaking around on the ground. It didn't take him long before he arrived. The only thing he worried about was the Wind Master not even being there to begin with; having been moved by his older brother to somewhere else.

Fortunately, his worry didn't come true. He climbed onto the roof and found a blind spot where others couldn't see him. He used his legs to hook onto one of the beams, hanging upside-down from the eaves, and looked into the interior of the bedchamber. However, the moment he looked, he was shocked.

Shi Qingxuan was trussed-up tightly, his hands and legs all bound with ropes. He was tied onto his own bed, but was still struggling unceasingly. Next to him, Shi Wudu was pacing back and forth by the bed, a bowl full of something black and unknown in his hands. He paused for a moment, then suddenly walked over, and forced its contents down Shi Qingxuan's throat.

Ch.115: Traversing Through Tunnels; Sword Penetrating from Above

Having his jaw squeezed open by Shi Wudu and force-fed, Shi Qingxuan choked violently; spitting and sputtering out more than half of the contents, dirtying all of his front. He started screaming and knocked his head forward, toppling the bowl. Shi Wudu's face was fuming with smoke.

He yelled, "Go ahead! Keep breaking them! There's plenty more medicine where that came from. You break one bowl, I'll bring you twenty more! I'll keep forcing this down your throat until you drink it!"

Shi Qingxuan roared, "AAAHHHH!!! CAN'T YOU JUST LEAVE ME ALONE?! JUST LET ME DIE!"

Shi Wudu said sharply, "I'm your brother! If I don't care for you, who will?!"

Shi Qingxuan stopped talking, twisting his head away. A moment later, Shi Wudu sat down on the side of the bed and softened his tone.

"I'll go have your fan fixed."

"I don't want that fan anymore," Shi Qingxuan said.

The Wind Master loved that rare spiritual device of his, that Wind Master fan, and would bring it out from time to time just to play around with it. Even in the midst of snowstorms in winter, the fan would be fluttered in the wind. Yet now, he said he didn't want the Wind Master fan anymore. Xie Lian was becoming more and more curious.

"If you don't want it, that's fine too. We'll use this chance to forge you a new spiritual device."

Shi Qingxuan turned his head back again. "I don't want new ones either! Just let me descend."

Shi Wudu turned to him. "Descend? Descend where?"

"Descend back to the mortal realm," Shi Qingxuan replied. "I don't want to stay in the Upper Court anymore. I DON'T WANT TO BE A GOD ANYMORE!"

Veins popped on Shi Wudu's pale-skinned temple. "What a joke! Throw away your godhood to descend to the mortal realm? Stop making a fool of yourself! I don't think you understand just how many people in the world want to ascend, and how many officials in the Middle Court would die to join the Upper Court!!"

Shi Qingxuan shouted in anger, "THAT'S RIGHT! I DON'T KNOW! I JUST WANT TO BE A DRIFTING VAGABOND! IS THAT SO WRONG?!"

“I WON’T PERMIT IT! A carefree drifting vagabond? Dream on! I...”

Just then, the colour of his face changed; as if a private message had just reached him, passing on some news. Shi Wudu immediately rose to his feet, his two fingers pressed against his temple listening intently. His face grew more and more serious. Soon after, he turned to Shi Qingxuan.

“Stop adding to my troubles. I’m going to be busy for a little while, I’ve no time to mind you! Once I return from going through my third heavenly calamity, you won’t be able to act up like this anymore!”

Then, he threw his hands up and swiftly left the bedchamber.

Once he was long gone, Xie Lian silently flipped down, pushing at the window, looking to sneak in. However, no matter how he pushed, the window wouldn’t budge; some sort of confinement seal must be set up. He dared not force it open, lest there be some alarm spell cast upon it.

He only called out in a low voice: “Lord Wind Master. Lord Wind Master?”

Shi Qingxuan jerked on the bed and turned his head, overjoyed. “Your highness?!”

“It’s me,” Xie Lian responded. “What’s happened to you? I can’t open this window, may I come in through another way?”

When windows couldn’t be opened by normal means, it was easy to guess the method that a martial god would use to enter a chamber.

Shi Qingxuan hurriedly said, “Don’t don’t don’t! Don’t destroy anything! There’s a spell covering all the windows and doors here. If you force yourself in with brute strength, the entire Palace of Wind and Water will know someone has come. Unless it’s by me or my brother, the doors and windows can only be opened from the inside.”

“But you’re all tied up like that,” Xie Lian pointed out.

Shi Qingxuan started struggling crazily. “Your highness, wait a sec! Let me break free of this rope...”

“...”

Xie Lian watched as his entire person rolled around the bed, sometimes curled into a shrimp, sometimes straightened like a steel board, struggling with great trouble trying to break free, and Xie Lian softly cheered him on.

“Keep going, My Lord!”

With a brief look, he could tell that the rope binding Shi Qingxuan wasn't any spiritual device. With the Wind Master's powers, it should've snapped with but a hook of a finger, so why hadn't it broken yet? Could it be that Shi Qingxuan really was so seriously injured that he couldn't even break free of such a simple bind?

Just then, an odd movement came from under Shi Qingxuan's bed, and a hand suddenly stretched out. Xie Lian was taken aback in shock, his head exploding in alarm.

“Lord Wind Master, watch out! There's someone hiding underneath your bed!”

Shi Qingxuan's face also dropped. “WHAT?!”

But just as the words left his lips, a black silhouette swiftly crawled out from under the bed and stood before him, watching him from above.

That man was dressed in black robes, and bore the mask of a ghost. It was hard to tell when he had hid under the bed, nor what he planned on doing. Shi Qingxuan was securely trussed up on his bed, writhing all over, trying desperately to break free, and Xie Lian was blocked outside by the confinement seal, unable to enter; truly a dire situation. Xie Lian was just thinking about breaking the window when he saw that man push up his ghost mask.

He spoke with a low voice: “Shut up!”

Shi Qingxuan's eyes widened. “Ming-xiong? Ming-xiong! My god, Ming-xiong, my good bro, hurry! Help me loosen these binds!”

With just one hand, Ming Yi snapped the rope binding Shi Qingxuan's body. Shi Qingxuan worked out the kinks in his joints, then crawled out of bed and rushed to open the window. He clutched Xie Lian's hands and shook them.

“YOUR HIGHNESS! THANK YOU FOR REMEMBERING ME STILL!”

Xie Lian patted his shoulders, and gently and skillfully hopped into the bedchamber.

“Wasn't there a confinement seal on the bedchamber? How did Lord Earth Master get in?”

“Nothing outside my profession,” Ming Yi said.

Then, he seemed to have noticed something wrong. He picked up the rope on the ground, looking it over before he looked up to ask Shi Qingxuan, “How come you can't even break free from something like this?”

Xie Lian fixed his eyes on the rope, too. Not only was it not a spiritual device, it was nothing more than an ordinary rope. The Wind Master possessed such strong spiritual power; how could he be bound by some coarse twine, and still struggle for so long?

Shi Qingxuan's face froze, and Ming Yi suddenly grabbed his left wrist, his expression growing icy.

"What's going on?!"

Xie Lian reached out too, to hold Shi Qingxuan's right wrist. He felt his pulse for a moment, then he became dumbfounded.

"Lord Wind Master, how did it become like this?"

There was not a trace of spiritual power in Shi Qingxuan's body!

Soon after, Xie Lian guessed, "Was it that bowl of medicine?"

Recalling that bowl of medicine Shi Wudu was trying to force down Shi Qingxuan's throat earlier, Xie Lian instantly squatted down to check the spillage.

However, Shi Qingxuan replied, "No."

It wasn't that medicine indeed. Xie Lian knew a little bit of medicine, and by its smell, that medicinal broth should've been an anesthetic calmant; perhaps it might cause drowsiness. Thinking back, at the Terrace of Cascading Wine, when Shi Wudu grabbed his younger brother's wrist and changed to such an expression, he must've noticed Shi Qingxuan's condition then. To feed such a broth to Shi Qingxuan should've been for his own good, so why was Shi Qingxuan so adamant in refusing it?

No wonder Shi Qingxuan wasn't answering his private communication. With all that strong spiritual power he once had completely gone, he was no different than a mortal.

Xie Lian blurted without thinking, "Lord Wind Master, you've been banished?"

Otherwise, how could he suddenly become this way? Yet there were no cursed shackles on his body, and if anyone was to be banished, there'd be no way it'd be covered up. The entire Upper Court and Middle Court would've known in no time. Shi Qingxuan's face was pale, and he seemed unable to stand any longer.

Xie Lian helped support him and asked, "Why did Lord Water Master tie you up?"

Only then did Shi Qingxuan snap out of it. "Right. My brother. Let's hurry and get out of here while my brother is still gone. Let's talk after we've escaped!"

Then he dropped and crawled under the bed. Xie Lian squatted down again.

“Lord Wind Master!”

There was actually a hole under the bed, going to who knows where, and Shi Qingxuan disappeared into it. Ming Yi lowered down, ready to go in too. Xie Lian contemplated, and in the end still decided to follow. However, Ming Yi popped out once more.

“Your highness, don’t interfere in this anymore.”

Xie Lian was taken aback by his block. “Lord Wind Master assisted me generously many times before. Now that he’s in trouble, I can’t just stand back and watch.”

“He’s always full of generous words and deeds, but most would stay away when there’s real trouble,” Ming Yi said.

“How others behave has nothing to do with me,” Xie Lian said. “Once we’ve figured out exactly what’s going on, of course I’d back off if my help really is unnecessary.”

Shi Qingxuan’s voice came from under the bed. “Are you two not coming? The hole is closing!”

Sure enough, that hole under the bed was gradually growing smaller. Seeing this, Ming Yi swiftly jumped in and Xie Lian followed. The three crawled around in the tunnel Ming Yi dug, and when Xie Lian looked back, the entrance to the hole was already filled, truly magical.

He asked in a low voice, “Lord Earth Master, how did you dig out this tunnel? I’ve never heard that it was possible to dig beneath the residences in the Heavenly Capital.”

It must be known that the foundation of the Heavenly Capital was not the same as the muddy earth of the mortal realm.

It was only after he asked that he learned the Earth Master Ming Yi used to be a skilled engineer in the common world. In his past lifetime, he repaired bridges, fixed roads, opened mountain paths, constructed houses, and bestowed prosperity to countless many, which was what allowed him to ascend. Now, before any major construction in the mortal realm, before any earth was bored, the people must first pray to the Earth Master and wish for blessings of successful labour work.

After he ascended, he forged a spiritual device, and it was a crescent-moon-shaped shovel. Legends say there was no mountain this sacred shovel could not flatten, no tunnel that could not be dug, and no building unenterable. To infiltrate as a spy in Ghost City, his ability was extremely advantageous; if there should be any secret chambers he wished to enter, he could just dig under, and the holes would close up after. If it wasn’t for Hua Cheng beating him to a pulp and greatly damaging his spiritual power, maybe he could've escaped using his treasured shovel.

In the past, the Earth Master had never tried using his shovel to dig under any heavenly official's residence, and he wasn't particularly interested in showing off his spiritual device, either; keeping it packed away. It was probably a good thing he wasn't showing it off; the spiritual devices belonging to the officials of the Upper Court were all of the elegant and beautiful sort, like books and brushes, swords and fans, guqin and flutes. If a heavenly official was to walk around with a shovel all day, it'd probably kill the scenery and murder his image. Once he heard the explanation, Xie Lian couldn't help but wonder: if he wanted his Puqi Shrine to be renovated, maybe he should pray to the Earth Master too?

After crawling for a while, Xie Lian heard from ahead of him Ming Yi ask Shi Qingxuan, "Was it the Reverend of Empty Words?"

Xie Lian too wanted to know if that was the case. If it was really the Reverend of Empty Words who injured Shi Qingxuan like this, if word should get out, it would for sure cause an uproar in the heavenly realm and produce extreme terror. A monster that could make a heavenly official lose their powers in a short period of time, and have them fall to become a mortal! Just thinking about it, it wouldn't be hard to imagine what mayhem that would cause.

Such a serious affair, yet after some silence, Shi Qingxuan replied, "No matter who did it, this whole thing is done and over with."

This reaction was definitely too questionable.

If this was a conspired trap, no matter what, the reaction shouldn't have been this, especially from someone like Shi Qingxuan; who could never be silenced when meeting injustice.

Instantly, a sudden dreadful conjecture came to Xie Lian. Although awful, it could explain everything.

Just then, Ming Yi suddenly demanded, "Silence."

The three in the underground tunnel all held their breath in unison. Ming Yi ignited a palm torch and errantly illuminated the grounds inches before them. The other two looked at him.

Ming Yi seemed to want to communicate via the spiritual array, but Shi Qingxuan had lost all of his powers now, unable to use his mind to communicate. Thus, he changed his mind and used his finger to write words in the air. Where his fingertips sliced through, a trace of ink was left behind, as if it was thick ink dripped and diffused into water.

The other two saw what he wrote: "Don't speak and don't move. Wait."

After waiting for everyone to read, he soundlessly blew once and those words dispersed in the air. There was still some remaining spiritual power Xie Lian hadn't used up, so he raised his hand and wrote a string of words too:

"Wait for what? For how long?"

Ming Yi wrote: "Wait until the person above leaves."

Xie Lian and Shi Qingxuan both looked up at the same time. It seemed that this tunnel Ming Yi dug with his treasured shovel beneath the Heavenly Capital also passed through some heavenly pavilions and residences. There was probably a heavenly official right above their heads at that very moment.

Listening intently, sure enough, there were sounds of heavy footsteps walking around slowly, as if pacing back and forth in the chamber. Listening to those footsteps, Xie Lian determined that person must be a martial god. Martial gods possessed five sharp senses, and if they should make any suspicious noise, they just might be captured.

Shi Qingxuan couldn't use the spiritual array nor write, and could only move his lips silently to express his accusations. Xie Lian watched him repeat himself twice before he could understand what he said was:

"Ming-xiong, why didn't you avoid temples and palaces??? Couldn't you have dug under the Great Martial Avenue instead???"

Ming Yi wrote coldly: "There wasn't anyone in this palace before. The Great Martial Avenue is full of holes right now."

Xie Lian wrote too: "That's right. I saw on the way over earlier. The avenue is full of holes and craters, some even meters deep. If the tunnel passes through one of the holes, who knows if we might bump into someone when we look up."

Thus, the three remained mute, transforming into three rocks, waiting patiently for that heavenly official to leave. After waiting for a while, Shi Qingxuan moved his lips again:

"Is that person gone?"

Ming Yi shook his head. Veins popped on Shi Qingxuan's temple, his angry face almost the same as when he was arguing with his brother earlier. He said soundlessly:

"Who the hell is dilly-dallying? It's not even the hour for sleeping! And what heavenly official needs to sleep? Is it the bathroom above our heads or what?!"

Strictly speaking, heavenly officials didn't need to go to the bathroom either. When his lips were just forming the word "bathroom", Xie Lian suddenly felt the hairs on his back stand. He forcibly pushed the two in front of him over, while using a foot to step down hard to push back at the same time, falling backwards.

A sharp blade penetrated from above the tunnel, its aura thick with killing intent, and it pierced the ground between his legs.

Ch.116: Eve to the Last Day of Autumn; An Unscrupulous Substitution

“...”

Although Xie Lian had certainly lived his days as someone who was impotent, but “pretending not to have the thing” and “truly losing the thing forever” were still fundamentally different. Startled, a thin sheen of cold sweat covered his body as he shouted.

“DODGE!”

Just as the words left his lips, that blade was pulled out of the ground, and Xie Lian instantly took that chance to move forward.

Immediately after, he pulled at Shi Qingxuan and cried, “Watch out!”

The blade plunged down again and slashed right before Shi Qingxuan. It practically pierced down right next to his head, and if it wasn't for Xie Lian pulling back him in time, he would've been nailed to the ground on the spot.

He exclaimed, terrified, “That was close! How did you know that was where it would come down?”

“Don't know! I guessed!” Xie Lian said.

It was pure instinct. When it came to killing aura, he was trained to the point of being able to react without thinking. Soon after, a second, a third, and a fourth blade all came plunging down; each of the sharp, shining blades blocking the three's way out and way back. BOOM! A huge explosion soon followed, and violent tremors came from above, causing dust and debris to rain down.

“They've opened fire from above!”

Each booming sound was becoming louder and louder, and the tremors were also growing each time, obviously coming closer and closer. There were sharp blades blocking them from the front and the back, and they were all keen and sharp young treasured swords; Fangxin was a senior, so who knew if it could fight them head-on. Ming Yi took out the crescent-moon-shaped shovel from who knows where and started digging at the side wall in that tiny space with great difficulty. Next to him, Shi Qingxuan was so exasperated he was going to spew his soul out.

“Ming-xiong, can you even do this? Ming-xiong, can you hurry up? It's all your fault for not using this spiritual device for so long, you gotta be more intimate with your devices, alright? Look how stiff and rusty it's become!!!”

To be fair, having it become rusty was forgivable. After all, there really weren't any other heavenly officials besides Xie Lian who could do something like carry a shovel in and out, everywhere, every day, without feeling ashamed.

Veins popped on Ming Yi's forehead. "SHUT UP!!!"

Xie Lian hastily intervened. "Don't be mad, don't be mad. The tunnel's dug through!"

Sure enough, the moment Ming Yi put pressure on his shovel, a hole opened up before them. With the shovel raised, he burrowed crazily ahead while Shi Qingxuan, in the middle, cheered him on crazily. As the only non-crazy person, Xie Lian brought up the rear. That treasured shovel of the Earth Master was indeed magical, and with only a few strokes, a new tunnel of over ten meters was dug. After a while, when he looked back, the hole behind was gradually closing up on its own, but above the place where they were just trapped, a thin light leaked down.

Xie Lian immediately spoke up, "It's going to drill through!"

Instantly Ming Yi picked up his pace and burrowed even crazier. Suddenly, his movements stopped and he looked up. Xie Lian reacted the same way, because they both sensed it: it was completely silent above them, without any movement. It should be an empty palace above.

Since their tunnel was already discovered, they should get out first before trying anything else. Ming Yi changed his direction and started digging up.

"Are you two sure this place really has no one that will see us when we get out???"

"Haven't heard anything. Unless they're sleeping!" Ming Yi replied.

Of course, heavenly officials usually didn't need to sleep, nevermind sleeping in the middle of the day, so that possibility shouldn't exist. Yet who knew: the moment Ming Yi's shovel broke through and the three emerged, poking their three heads out, inhaling the fresh air, before they even exhaled, across from them they saw a bed, and upon the bed was a youth with his arms and legs sprawled out, soundly asleep.

Xie Lian: "???"

There actually were heavenly officials who slept in the middle of the day???

Roused by movement, that youth rolled over and sat up, his curly hair a bird's nest from his slumber. He furrowed his brows and scratched his head, watching the three heads from across his bed with sleepy eyes, looking like he couldn't understand why such things would appear in his palace. The three pretended like nothing was the matter and hastily crawled out of the hole.

However, just as Shi Qingxuan almost crawled out, he suddenly cried out, and Xie Lian looked back. There was a hand that had caught his ankle.

The owner of that hand was Pei Ming. Even if he was in a tunnel, he was still courteous.

“I was just gonna ask, which little mouse was burrowing under my palace? Qingxuan, why are you out and about? Where are you going? You know how your brother gets when he’s mad, hurry back before he finds out.”

Ruoye flew out and struck that hand away.

Pei Ming hopped out and said, “Your highness, Lord Earth Master, do you two have nothing better to do? Encouraging the Wind Master to run away from home for no reason is quite preposterous, isn’t it?”

“Lord Wind Master might be Lord Water Master’s younger brother, but he has still been a heavenly official for hundreds of years. General Pei, please don’t speak as if he is no more than three,” Xie Lian said. “If we’re going to talk about reason, to imprison a heavenly colleague for no reason, no matter how you spin it, it’s still Lord Water Master who’s acting preposterous, wouldn’t you say?”

If his guess wasn’t wrong, then the Wind Master really couldn’t stay in the Upper Court any longer. Quan Yizhen was still on his bed, watching them with a dazed look, seemingly still confused by the whole situation.

Pei Ming raised his sword and said darkly, “Qi Ying, stop looking and come give me a hand. Apprehend them first.”

After some contemplation, Quan Yizhen actually decided to assist.

He leapt down, picked up the bed he was just lying on, and hurled it at Pei Ming. He did indeed give a hand, only, it was to help Xie Lian and company. That bed crashed into the unsuspecting Pei Ming, and he was flabbergasted.

“QI YING!!! WHY DID YOU HIT ME????”

Quan Yizhen waved his hand at Xie Lian, probably gesturing for them to hurry and leave. Xie Lian and company were stunned for a moment before hastily making their way out.

Maybe Shi Qingxuan was injured and didn’t have the energy, but he only jogged a few steps before his face turned pale, so Xie Lian came around to help pull him up. However, Ming Yi pulled him over directly, and carried him up on his back. Xie Lian placed his hand on the door, dug out two dice and turned back to that youth.

“Thanks so much!”

Quan Yizhen was still bashing at Pei Ming wildly, his moves viciously aggressive without method. If it wasn't for Pei Ming's own skills, if it was anyone else who was taking this beating, their heads would've been covered in blood by now.

Pei Ming's veins were popping all over, and he yelled, “GUARDS! STOP THEM!!!”

Yet before he called for guards, Xie Lian had already tossed out the dice, opened the door, and charged out. He shut the door behind him, slipping the heck out of heaven. However, what he had never expected was after he closed the door and turned around, what appeared before him was a Hua Cheng with one leg up, stepping on a new donation box. His upper body was bare, and he was wiping at his sweat.

“...”

“...”

One little rundown Puqi Shrine couldn't possibly hold this many prominent figures, and Xie Lian felt like he was going to suffocate. There was also one possessed outside, howling unsuspectingly, creating noise.

“GUZI~~ COME GIVE DADDY'S LEGS A LIL' MASSAGE CHOP~~”

It was a moment before Hua Cheng tossed aside the E'ming he was using to shave wood, and raised his brows slightly.

“...?”

The colour of his skin and the curves of his bare upper half were exceedingly beautiful, extremely eye-catching, so much so that Xie Lian's eyes were going to fall out of their sockets. Even if he didn't actually see anything properly, he still couldn't stop the blood rushing to his head, making his eyes go dark. Xie Lian fumbled and tumbled to his side and opened his arms wide, blocking Ming Yi and Shi Qingxuan's view.

“CLOSE YOUR EYES! QUICK! CLOSE YOUR EYES!”

The faces of the other two stiffened and they watched them with an odd look.

Hua Cheng placed his hand on Xie Lian's shoulder and said, laughing, “...Gege. Why are you nervous?”

Only then did Xie Lian snap out of it. That's right. What was he all nervous for? Hua Cheng wasn't a lady, so what if he was labouring half-naked?

Still, he didn't drop his arms, doing his best to cover Hua Cheng completely. "Just...just put on some clothes."

Hua Cheng shrugged. "Hm. As gege wishes."

Then, he calmly grabbed for a shirt, slowly putting it on, taking his time.

Watching him look all nonchalant and languid, Shi Qingxuan said awkwardly, "Um, sorry for the intrusion. I didn't think you guys...hahaha, you two are pretty much, hahaha. Anyway, just, hahaha."

"..."

"My Lord, if you have something to say then just say it, so if there's any misunderstanding I can explain. Don't use hahaha instead..." Xie Lian said.

They were pressed for time, and Pei Ming might pursue them all the way over here, so they couldn't stay in Puqi Shrine for long. Ming Yi put down Shi Qingxuan and started drawing the Distance-Shortening array on the ground. Xie Lian was just about to ask where they were going when he suddenly heard Hua Cheng sigh behind him.

Xie Lian remembered his advice regarding not getting close to the Wind Master and company, and turned to him in spite of himself. "Sorry about all this, San Lang."

Hua Cheng had already finished dressing himself, and replied, "I already knew you wouldn't just stand back and watch."

After a pause, he then smiled. "But, why should gege apologize to me? You remembered what I said a few days ago, but did you forget something else I told you?"

Xie Lian was slightly taken aback, wondering, "What?"

Suddenly, he remembered.

That night at the Green Ghost's lair, the thing Hua Cheng told him: "Just keep doing what you want to do."

After having remembered, Xie Lian blinked, not knowing what else to say, only knowing he suddenly wanted to do something for Hua Cheng. Yet at the moment, there really wasn't anything he could do for him.

Feeling a little discouraged, he suddenly noticed the collar of Hua Cheng's red robes, and said, "Wait!"

Then he rushed up to help Hua Cheng fix his collar. Turns out, the collar of the robe Hua Cheng randomly put on wasn't properly flipped out. Having fixed it, Xie Lian inspected him for a moment before smiling.

"There."

Hua Cheng smiled too. "Thanks."

A small voice inside Xie Lian echoed, "I'm the one who should be thanking you."

On the other side, the other two seemed to not be able to look over anymore; even the circle drawn under Ming Yi's hand didn't seem so round any longer. Once he finished drawing the array and the door was opened again, Xie Lian had thought he would see some gloomy cave or some spectacular palace. Unexpectedly, outside the door was a large expanse of farming fields. Far in the distance were lush green bamboo groves and verdant mountains, and farmers were scattered throughout the fields labouring. There was also a large, glistening, buff ox plowing.

This scenery almost made Xie Lian think they were still at Puqi Village, and he was stunned for a moment. Ming Yi had already walked out with Shi Qingxuan on his back. Hua Cheng also stepped out before him.

The four walked along the ridge of the fields, and maybe it was all in his mind, but that black ox seemed to be staring at them the entire way. After walking for a bit, they found a small cottage. After the four entered and sat down, Shi Qingxuan blew out a long breath.

"Are we not fleeing anymore?" Xie Lian asked. "What if General Pei chases us here?"

Hua Cheng looked at the outside for a while, focusing especially on that black ox, before closing the door. He said nonchalantly, "Don't worry. He wouldn't dare mess with the master of this land. There's no benefit to it. Even the Water Tyrant won't be able to do anything rash."

Xie Lian contemplated, but still spoke up. "San Lang, this whole thing is a mess, and probably implicates too much in the Heavenly Court. It may be best if you don't hang around."

However, Hua Cheng only chuckled. "What goes on in the Upper Court has nothing to do with me. I'm only sticking around with you to sightsee."

Suddenly, Shi Qingxuan spoke: "You should all stop hanging around."

The other three in the cottage all looked to him, and Shi Qingxuan continued, "His highness is right. This whole thing is a mess, and there's too many involved. I'm going to stay shut up here. My friends, there's no need to help any more. Let's end it here."

However, Xie Lian said slowly, "Lord Wind Master, whether things end here isn't up to you. It's up to Lord Water Master and the Reverend of Empty Words."

Hearing this, Shi Qingxuan's face stiffened.

Xie Lian added, "Lord Wind Master, I have a question, I hope you won't mind."

"What question?"

"Does the Reverend of Empty Words have something held over yours and Lord Water Master's heads?"

Shi Qingxuan's face was paling.

That night at the Terrace of Cascading Wine, Xie Lian had already set up an extremely secure defense array. As long as Shi Qingxuan didn't open the door to leave, he wouldn't be harmed. Yet, why did he take the initiative to open the door?

Unless someone connected to his private communication array and the first thing that came out of their mouth was blackmail, giving Shi Qingxuan no room to fight back nor raise alarm, and he could only follow as instructed.

Xie Lian sat down by the table. "I'm more inclined to think it's blackmail against Lord Water Master, because I believe you hadn't initially known whatever has transpired."

Which was why his reaction was so strong after having learned, generating such a sharp rejection against the Upper Court, such that he would rather descend into the mortal realm to become a drifting vagabond than to stay in the heavens as a god.

Ming Yi frowned. "What blackmail?"

Shi Qingxuan wasn't a gullible fool; if he fell victim to someone and lost his powers, the normal reaction should've been rage, an drive to investigate the truth, or lashing out at the culprit. Yet, he did none of that. There was rage, but it wasn't directed against the Reverend of Empty Words, but against his own older brother. And to the others, he only said "this ends here".

This was all entirely abnormal. Unless it was under one special case:

Namely, that Shi Qingxuan's ascension itself was abnormal in the first place!

To go against the heavens and alter fate, to raise someone who couldn't ascend upon the divine altar, was outrageously audacious, a treacherous heresy. Xie Lian had never heard of something like this. If this was true and it got out, it would for sure cause a tidal wave. Just think: everyone wished to ascend, but if anyone could use such a method, the laws of the universe would be rendered irrelevant, completely worthless.

This conjecture might be absurd, but the more he thought, the more it made sense. Ever since Shi Qingxuan was born, the Reverend of Empty Words had clung onto him, and the only way to escape it was to ascend. Miraculously, he ascended. In a mere few years, a pair of blood brothers ascended one after the other; what a beautiful tale. But also, what a coincidence.

Xie Lian never wanted to question the reality of Shi Qingxuan's ascension, but if the Wind Master had ascended naturally, how could his powers be so easily sucked dry? If it was so easy for a monster to turn a god into a human, who knows how many heavenly officials would have already fallen victim.

Unless Shi Qingxuan was mortal in the first place. Unless, when the Wind Master ascended, the Water Master did something underhanded.

Aggressively using rare treasures and devices to help the path of cultivation wasn't out of line. To ascend by way of massacre and battle in times of power change within the mortal realm wasn't out of line either. After all, the fate of the world was thus; honour must be accompanied by blood, and after ascension, all was wiped clean. However, some things would be out of line. If a mortal, or some heavenly official, did something underhanded, conducted rituals of evil to harm the lives of others for the sake of having someone ascend, that would be a completely different matter.

Xie Lian asked in a low voice, "Lord Wind Master, the night you ascended, was it the eve of the last day of Autumn?"

A brief moment later, Shi Qingxuan inhaled deeply. "Yes."

After a pause, Shi Qingxuan continued, "I remembered that day when we were in the town of Fu Gu. Eve of the last day of Autumn, wasn't that the same day I ascended? I had wanted to ask you guys about it at first, to see if that might be a clue, or if it was connected somehow. Maybe it was a coincidence? But it felt hollow, so I ended up not asking. But now you know if it's related."

It's related. Of course, it's very related.

Why did the Reverend of Empty Words choose that day to first send Shi Qingxuan to the town of Fu Gu to watch that Bloody Fire Social parade, then bring him to the Terrace of Cascading Wine to maim? Of course it wouldn't go through all that pain for no reason. Xie Lian connected the timing and the two places together: many years ago, on the eve of the last day of Autumn, in the town of Fu Gu, a mortal named Scholar He broke down and murdered countless many.

Also, on the eve of the last day of Autumn, at the Terrace of Cascading Wine, Shi Qingxuan ascended.

With this, it was more than obvious what the Reverend of Empty Words wanted to say. Shi Qingxuan, your ascension had everything to do with the death of the hero of this Bloody Fire Social!

That dreadful but logical conjecture Xie Lian formulated was this:

After Shi Wudu ascended, in order to have Shi Qingxuan escape the Reverend of Empty Words, he secretly found a mortal who matched all the requirements and conducted an evil ritual, making that man take Shi Qingxuan's misfortune in his place. That man was no doubt the impoverished, exceptionally clever, yet somehow endlessly unlucky to the point where his entire family was ruined, Scholar He.

Scholar He took on Shi Qingxuan's name, and the Reverend of Empty Words was deceived. Then, that meant his original fate was taken by Shi Qingxuan. That same night, before the last day of Autumn, one experienced the taste of hell on earth; the other, under immensely powerful protection, successfully ascended.

Yet the fate of those two were originally completely opposite!

Ch.117: Gods Appointing Gods Lesser Than Ghosts Devouring Ghosts

Xie Lian continued, "I dare say that Scholar He has the birth name Xuan. And, the details of his birth are exactly the same as My Lord's."

To commit fraudulent deeds and deceive the heavens couldn't be managed so casually, and not just anyone would do. There were certain requirements that needed to be met.

From the three questions that Reverend of Empty Words asked when it first captured Shi Qingxuan, it firmly retained two things: first, the name of its prey contained the word "Xuan"; second, the birth information of its prey. However, it didn't recognize the prey's face, and had needed Shi Qingxuan to approach for it to see. Since the Shi family was speedy in remedying the situation, other than those two items, the Reverend probably knew nothing else.

Thus, if there must be one who could take Shi Qingxuan's place to take on his misfortunes, it must be a male who was born the same year, same month, same day, same time, and their name must contain "Xuan".

How difficult must it be to find such a scapegoat. The world is vast; even if Shi Wudu used his everything to search, there still might not be one. Using the powers and influence of his Water Master status, he cast the net and actually found someone. And it was one who possessed the potential to ascend, about to go through his first Heavenly Calamity!

Such luck, how could he let it go? Compared to arduous cultivation, this was a convenient shortcut. If he missed this chance, it might not come again!

Having made it to this point, Ming Yi seemed to also have drawn the same conclusions, and his face was growing darker. Shi Qingxuan first nodded, then suddenly seemed to have remembered something. He looked to Hua Cheng, who was leaning against the door. After all, something like this shouldn't be discussed before a ghost. However, Hua Cheng only chuckled with his arms crossed.

"No need to look at me, Lord Wind Master. The one you should worry about isn't me, I've nothing to do with this whole business. Instead, why don't you concern yourself with whether anyone else in the Upper Court has gotten ahold of this weakness of your brother's?"

Ming Yi accused darkly, "You really do have spies in the heavens."

Hua Cheng replied lazily, "Don't you already know that?"

The Lord Earth Master was originally sent to the Ghost City to investigate this, but it seemed that the spy was planted deeply, and even after over a decade they still weren't found out. Hua Cheng said this whole business had nothing to do with him, so naturally Xie Lian believed him and didn't think more on it. Yet, Hua Cheng also said "why not worry about others in the Upper Court", which reminded Xie Lian of another thing.

So he asked, "Lord Wind Master, that night at the Terrace of Cascading Wine, why did you open the doors to the protection array yourself? Did someone call you out? Who was that person?"

"Yeah," Shi Qingxuan replied. "It was the Reverend of Empty Words. It said..."

Xie Lian crossed his hands into his sleeves. "How did it know your verbal password?"

"..." Ming Yi's face was dark. "Isn't it because this guy just had to go around and make friends, yapping nonstop whether others are free or not! He talks too much!"

Shi Qingxuan was aggrieved. "Ming-xiong, you can't say it like that. The ones who call on me are all heavenly officials of the Upper Court, I've never given anything personal away to that creature!"

"Since that Reverend of Empty Words has been lying low for so many years, now that it's returned and can even uncover Lord Water Master's...secret...so thoroughly, then for it to figure out Lord Wind Master's verbal password shouldn't be hard," Xie Lian said. "Someone must've leaked your verbal password. Whether intentional or not, it's still worth investigating."

Ming Yi added, "So? Did you see what it looked like? What did it do after calling you out?"

"..." Shi Qingxuan's head seemed to start hurting. "I don't know what it looks like. It cast a spell, I couldn't see clearly."

He was vague and didn't say what he saw either. Ming Yi was becoming frosty. Xie Lian figured it was probably the gorey scenes of the Bloody Fire Social, and those were certainly difficult to describe. A moment later Shi Qingxuan sighed.

"I'm the useless one. If I could have ascended on my own, none of this would have happened."

Shi Qingxuan's original fate was probably considered pretty good in mortal terms already, otherwise that Reverend of Empty Words wouldn't have set its eyes on him. However, it still might be a long way away from ascension. Those who could ascend were all protected by spiritual aura, and inhuman creatures would have a hard time doing anything to them. Besides, what monster or demon would want to mess with a future heavenly official?

Whether a person could ascend didn't depend on how smart they were; intelligence and effort might not matter at all, and exploiting rare treasures and devices certainly wouldn't increase chances. Sometimes, it's just like that. Ten years of study couldn't compare to natural wit and talent; a hundred years of bloody struggles couldn't compare to a moment's enlightenment.

If it wasn't written in fate, then it wasn't. The Water Master could spend all he wanted on his younger brother, but without that fate, Shi Qingxuan would very well be stuck in the Middle Court and become nothing more than the leading lamb of junior officials. That he was able to make it to where he was today, to shine with endless glory, was all because his older brother robbed something that belonged to another and gave it to him. If he had even a shred of conscience, it wasn't hard to imagine how it must feel after having learned the truth.

If the exchange had never happened, then the one who possessed the real potential to ascend, how glorious would he have been today?

Having thought this, a light suddenly went off in Xie Lian's mind.

"No," he said. "Lord Wind Master, the one who called you out wasn't the Reverend of Empty Words."

Shi Qingxuan raised his bowed head. "Huh? That voice definitely belonged to it, I wouldn't have mistaken that."

"No no, it was its voice, but that doesn't mean the body still belonged to it," Xie Lian said. "Everyone, do you remember? The prey the Reverend of Empty Words set its eyes on all died by way of suicide. Except for one person."

After a pause, he continued, "How did Scholar He die? How was it portrayed at the Bloody Fire Social? Was it suicide?"

Shi Qingxuan's eyes grew wide. "It wasn't suicide. It was..."

"Exhaustion," Ming Yi said.

"That's right!" Xie Lian exclaimed. "Even though he was hounded by misfortune, to the end never once did Scholar He think of killing himself."

He said somberly, "Think about it. This man had an abnormally strong determination. Having been struck by so many unfair, unjust encounters, if this was a typical person he would've long since given up or ended everything. Yet he always fought back; he never backed down over anything. I think that, perhaps, once the Reverend of Empty Words found him, it never managed to suck what it wanted—fear. The cause of his death wasn't suicide because of fear and despair. After the Reverend of Empty Words clung on to him, it didn't eat good fruit, but a steel plate instead. It broke its teeth, losing thoroughly in the end."

Listening to him, Shi Qingxuan shook his head and sighed earnestly. "...I really am nothing compared to this man."

Xie Lian continued, "He died filled with murderous intent and resentment. I don't think a battered soul like that would rest in peace. If not at peace, it would thirst for revenge.

"So, Lord Wind Master, I believe the current 'Reverend of Empty Words' couldn't possibly be the same one that sought you when you were born. Instead, it was Scholar He who stubbornly fought back 'til the end, and bit back at the Reverend. Or rather, He Xuan!"

Shi Qingxuan and Ming Yi were both stunned by his claim.

Hua Cheng added quietly, "Ghosts devouring ghosts."

When humans eat humans, at most, the stomach gets stuffed. When ghosts devour ghosts, with the correct method, they can absorb the other's powers and abilities and use them as their own.

"This can also explain why the 'Reverend of Empty Words' knew so many of the details of this whole affair," Xie Lian said. "A monster like it is dull and eccentric, it shouldn't be so intelligent. However, the one that's now returned to pursue you two is a..."

He wanted to use "hybrid", but it didn't feel accurate. Just then, Hua Cheng supplied, "Enhanced entity."

"Right," Xie Lian said. "After Scholar He swallowed up the Reverend of Empty Words, his mind was in complete control. The him now not only possesses the ability to curse, he's also very clever. And, it possessed bottomless resentment towards the two of you."

So, even though it already knew Shi Qingxuan's verbal password, it didn't cast a death curse through the private spiritual communication array at the start. Instead, it tightened the snare gradually, forcing Shi Qingxuan to plug his own ears, shut his own eyes, and lock himself in an empty room. Like a cat that caught a mouse, it wouldn't kill immediately, and would play and play until the mouse killed itself from terror.

A moment later, Ming Yi said, "Now that it's come to this, what do you plan to do?"

Everyone looked to Shi Qingxuan. Shi Qingxuan had already messed up his own hair from all the unconscious scratching.

He responded bemusedly, "...Well, don't look at me??? I...I DON'T KNOW WHAT TO DO EITHER!!! I just...I just don't know how to look at my brother now..."

It was his blood brother, after all, and this heinous crime, harming the life of another, was committed for his sake. So, it was understandable if he didn't know what to do for the moment.

Shi Qingxuan added, "But, I gotta beg everyone here to absolutely keep this a secret! Just for now. Just give me a little time to think...just what to do. Even though I've been thinking for days now, I had never thought, anyway, I just need time to calm down, and reflect..."

Towards the end he was rambling, and his eyes were unfocused.

Shi Wudu kept saying he was going to "treat Shi Qingxuan's illness", but what illness was there to treat? Unless it was his fall from divine grace, his change back into a mortal. His "illness" could only be cured if his fate was changed again and he ascended once more. Although it'd be difficult to find another qualifying candidate, who knew what other evil spell Shi Wudu would come up with? No wonder Shi Qingxuan was whining about becoming a mortal and abandoning his godhood, desperate to flee.

As for that scroll about the Reverend of Empty Words that was filled with errors, no doubt it was made to mislead Shi Qingxuan, making sure he didn't discover the truth. Who knows if it was put together by Shi Wudu or Ling Wen, but at the beginning when Shi Wudu needed to find a qualifying candidate, he must've needed the help of the Palace of Ling Wen. Did Ling Wen herself really know nothing of this? If there was a heavenly official like Shi Qingxuan who ascended this way, would it be possible that there was a second, or a third, or even more other heavenly officials who ascended the same way?

If that was the case, then it'd be horrifying. The world would be turned upside-down. This must be treated with the utmost gravity. Other than Hua Cheng, who wasn't involved and was at ease, enjoying himself, everyone else in the little cottage was all gloom and doom, as if a great enemy was about to descend upon them. Just then, there was commotion outside the cottage; there were oxen mooing furiously, and even more farmers shouting.

"Stop! Stop!"

"What are you planning, so full of killing intent!"

Xie Lian moved to the door and peeked out through the crack. "It's General Pei."

Pei Ming had only just been beaten down by Quan Yizhen, fighting in a brawl, yet he appeared perfectly fine standing outside. Before him was a leaning stone slab marking the boundary, and he seemed rather wary of it, afraid to enter rashly, so he remained standing there with a sword in hand. The farmers gripped their pickaxes and sickles, their faces written with unwelcoming expressions. That black ox in the paddy blew out a few heavy breaths from its large nostrils, and suddenly stood on its hind legs. An instant later it became a large, buff man; rather handsome, with a small steel nose-ring.

He laughed. "Well I'll be, ain't this General Pei. What a rare guest. What winds blew My Lord over today? Lemme say this first, we've got nothing to do with your Little Pei."

Xie Lian knew it. Earlier, when he saw that black ox in the paddies, he recalled a faint impression. Sure enough, this place was Mount Yulong; Rain Master country. Back then, it was also this Ox-xiong who lent the Rain Master Hat for Xie Lian to create rain. The years had gone by, yet it was impressive as always, and still plowed the fields with honest strength.

Shi Qingxuan also squeezed over to the crack in the door, speaking to Xie Lian, “That ox from Rain Master’s household. He’s a good guy.”

Pei Ming had once suffered a loss at the hands of the Rain Master, so naturally he was courteous and polite at the moment. “Please, no need to flatter me. Pei didn’t come to seek the Ruler of Yushi.⁸⁵ May I inquire if Lord Wind Master had come by your esteemed country?”

⁸⁵ [雨師] “Yushi” means “Rain Master”. The Rain Master was the ruler of the Kingdom of Yushi, which just means the Kingdom of Rain Master. Can’t tell if MXTX just got lazy with this name, lol. (pls love the rain master)

Ch.118: Pass the Heavenly Calamity; Waves Surge in the East Sea

“Heh, I wasn’t flattering you at all. We’re all busy planting the fields, ain’t no one saw anybody come by,” that ox said.

“If that’s the case,” Pei Ming said, and made a step forward.

Immediately all the farmers raised their pickaxes, shouting, “TRAMPLED! HE TRAMPLED IT!”

Pei Ming frowned. “Trampled what?”

“You trampled the crops that they so painstakingly planted. You best apologize,” that ox said.

Pei Ming looked down and said patiently, “If I’m not mistaken, those are just some weeds, no?”

That ox looked at him, puzzled. “A belligerent general like you, what would you know? Wouldn’t those of us who plant the fields know better than you whether it’s weeds or crops?”

Although Xie Lian could already tell the people of Yushi country were purposely picking on Pei Ming, he too couldn’t help but wonder whether those were actually crops or grass.

Pei Ming was the esteemed martial god of the north, why would he apologize to a bunch of farmers for such a petty reason? He ignored them directly and took a few more steps, raising his voice and shouting.

“QINGXUAN, COME OUT! Your brother is going through his Heavenly Calamity right now, and things aren’t looking good. Something bad is going to happen!”

“...”

Shi Qingxuan had planned on hiding in the cottage at first, since Pei Ming wouldn’t dare break in. Yet when he heard, he instantly opened the door and charged out.

“WHAT?!”

Pei Ming gave that ox a look. “I knew you’d come running here!”

Shi Qingxuan was startled, but immediately snapped out of it, jumping back a step. “Y-y-y-you can’t fool me! How can it have come so fast? That’s too sudden, I thought it’d be at least another few months?”

Yet earlier at the Heavenly Court, the Water Master did indeed leave in a hurry, like he was needed to take care of something important. Shi Qingxuan immediately brought two fingers to touch his temple. That was the hand seal for connecting to the spiritual communication array, however, it was only when he raised his hand did he remember he had lost his powers. No time to be depressed; he immediately grabbed onto Xie Lian.

“Your highness, help me ask, is it true?”

Xie Lian and Ming Yi both entered the spiritual communication array, and sure enough, it was already as chaotic as a pot of stew, exceedingly worrisome. Most of the heavenly officials seemed to be overlooking the East Sea, muttering.

“My heavens...this battle stance...as expected of the Water Tyrant!”

“B-b-but will this pass successfully...”

The stronger the spiritual power, the more Heavenly Calamities a heavenly official passed, the more perilous the next Heavenly Calamity. Shi Wudu monopolized the waters, dominated the path of wealth, and this was also his third Heavenly Calamity. How this trial would be was easy to imagine.

“It’s true,” Xie Lian confirmed.

That ox was still blocking the path, and Pei Ming couldn’t force himself through. So he called out from afar:

“You’re not a little child anymore, who would lie to you about something like this?! Passing a Heavenly Calamity isn’t like planning a dinner, you know, you think there’s time for you to change into new robes before it happens? It comes as it will, without warning! He’s currently above the East Sea, and the waves are surging, no one can enter and none can get out. He was just battling the waves when someone reported that you ran away, so how can he possibly focus on passing his trial?!”

“Then why don’t you hurry and tell him I’m at Yushi country?!” Shi Qingxuan responded.

Xie Lian listened to the direct relay of the situation in the communication array, and said, “It’s no use. That entire area where Lord Water Master is passing through the trial is enveloped with a layer of wild spiritual power. He’s probably in disarray right now, no one can reach him!”

Shi Qingxuan charged out. “Take me to him!”

Pei Ming extended his hand. “Come!”

However, Ming Yi suddenly flashed over, blocking Shi Qingxuan’s way, his expression dark.

“Ming-xiong, what is it?” Shi Qingxuan asked.

Ming Yi remained solemnly silent, but Xie Lian could probably guess what he was thinking, and why he had to stop Shi Qingxuan.

Was it really the right thing to do, to help Shi Wudu pass his Heavenly Calamity?

If the changing of fates was true, then the Water Master must receive punishment of equal gravity. Then, was it really appropriate to help him level up before looking into his due culpability?

That he could guess this was also because Xie Lian himself was pondering the same question. Shi Qingxuan hesitated for a moment, but in the end he exhaled a long breath.

“...Ming-xiong, I...Thank you. But no matter what, that’s still...I’m still worried, so let’s just worry about passing this trial first!”

Then, he rushed to Pei Ming’s side and turned his head back. “Thank you, Your Highness! Thank you, Lord Rain Master! Thank you, Ox! Thanks everyone! I’ll repay this one day!”

Then the two hurried away. Ming Yi stayed where he was for a moment before following after them. Xie Lian watched their retreating backs, but didn’t move. Hua Cheng stepped out of the cottage leisurely.

“Gege’s not going?”

After some thought, Xie Lian still shook his head. He said slowly, “This affair is beyond me, I can’t help. Let’s just see how they’ll solve this themselves first.”

Shi Qingxuan stood in the middle of it all, yet he still couldn’t come around to realize what he should do, so Xie Lian was also feeling a little awkward. Although Xie Lian could understand why Shi Wudu did what he did, Xie Lian still didn’t agree with the method he employed. The ideal conclusion would be for Shi Wudu to admit to the crimes himself, and go forward to receive punishment. Ming Yi probably also wanted the same thing, which was why he stopped Shi Qingxuan. However, based on the Water Master’s proud, domineering arrogance, that was most likely impossible. Having sat in such a high position for so many years, no one would want to come down willingly.

If this was anyone else, Xie Lian would probably report this affair to the Heavenly Court immediately. But when he remembered the Wind Master’s warm-hearted friendship, while his older brother was facing a dire situation, Xie Lian couldn’t turn his back on Shi Qingxuan and kick a person when they’re already down, uncaring for past affections. Thus, the only thing he could do was to sit back and watch how they would take care of this themselves. However, if what they should end up doing was untoward...

Having thought on this point, he turned to Hua Cheng with a bitter smile. "San Lang, your advice from before was probably right. Sigh, this whole thing."

Hua Cheng smiled and was about to speak when Xie Lian's expression changed suddenly. Within the spiritual communication array came Ling Wen's voice.

"What?! Hundreds of fishermen boats got dragged in??? It had to be right now?!"

Xie Lian was instantly taken aback and responded anxiously, "Fishermen? Dragged in where? The East Sea?"

If it was said earlier that the communication was as chaotic as a pot of stew, then this stew had just toppled onto the ground and fed the dogs. There was no break in Ling Wen's responses and her voice was still considered collected.

"Excuse me, which martial god is on duty? Ol' Pei?"

Pei Ming was in the communication array, and responded, "Don't worry. I've Qingxuan with me and we're rushing over. Lord Earth Master is here too. You just figure out exactly how many people got pulled into the storm so we can bring them all back. We'll try not to lose a single one."

"Then thanks for your trouble," Ling Wen said. "Lord Water Master blew out and magnified the spiritual arena, allowing no one to enter the perimeter of his trial. Any heavenly officials from the Middle Court would definitely be blown to smithereens if they try to go. The heavenly officials from the Upper Court can maybe try and break through the barrier. The number of people pulled in is probably over two hundred, so just you two might not be enough; we'll need another martial god. Which highness is present right now? General Nan Yang? General Xuan Zhen?"

Someone responded, "Weren't those two generals placed in confinement for destroying the Heavenly Court? They won't be able to heed the call..."

"Then where's Tai Hua? Has His Highness Tai Hua returned?"

"No! He's been out!"

"Qi Ying?"

"Who knows where he ran off to?! He always blocks every communication and listens to no one, My Lord, you already know this!"

Other than those few, there weren't any other martial gods that were worth a dime. Although anxious, Xie Lian still couldn't help but feel a little woeful. Was the aura of his scrap-collecting godhood so strong that everyone forgot he came from a martial god background?

He responded hastily, "Me! I'm present! Let me go. It's just rescuing the fisherman in the East Sea, right?"

"Your highness, the winds and waves of the East Sea are raging right now, your spiritual power only works at times, what if—"

"It's nothing," Xie Lian said. "I've fished in all four seas, and never once was it not storming. I've often drifted on the sea for over half a month at a time, so I'm very used to it."

"..."

All the officials couldn't help but wonder, "You've done that too?! Just what else have you done???"

The situation was dire and didn't allow room for more thought, so Ling Wen acquiesced. "Very well. Then thank you for the trouble. General Pei, coordinate yourself!"

"Very good!" Pei Ming responded.

Xie Lian closed the communication array down and turned to Hua Cheng. "San Lang, over at the East Sea..."

Unexpectedly, the moment he turned his head, he saw Hua Cheng had already changed into a refreshing fisherman disguise. He tossed up the dice and caught them as they fell. His other hand was on the door, and he said straightforwardly, "Let's go!"

Xie Lian was taken aback, but soon smiled and replied, "Alright!", and followed.

When the door opened, what appeared wasn't the interior of a cottage, but the expanse of a gloomy seashore.

The two emerged from a small fisherman's shed on the beach; that little shed was the most-used connection point for the Distance-Shortening array on the East Sea. Beyond the beach was the boundless sea that stretched to the ends of the horizon. The beach was grey not because the sand was grey, but because the skies were grey and the sea was grey also. Gloom pressed down, black clouds rolled; the malaise was oppressing and suffocating.

From time to time, a giant wave would surge in the distant sea, like a magnificent fortress wall rising from flat ground, and it would soon collapse. There were also water pillars like dragons, roaring into the sky like a tornado, thrashing and wild; they too would collapse once risen. Lightning crawled chillingly across the skies, twisted and savage.

There was a large, brand-new ship berthed by the beach. There was nowhere to perch upon the sea, and should they float in the air they just might get struck by lightning, so there needed to be a boat. Naturally, this ship wasn't an ordinary ship. Shi Qingxuan, Pei Ming, and Ming Yi were already on the ship, and the moment they saw Hua Cheng and Xie Lian exit the fisherman shed, Pei Ming called out.

"Your highness!"

Shi Qingxuan only sighed. "Your highness...sigh! Sorry for the trouble. I truly am."

Xie Lian boarded the ship and said, "Duty calls. How's the ship?"

Pei Ming noticed behind him Hua Cheng, who had his arms crossed, looking quite at ease. He warned, "Those unrelated must leave. This tempest isn't a joke."

Hua Cheng right now was dressed in plain, patched clothes, yet it still couldn't hide away his handsome intelligence; appearing like a good-looking little fisherman.

He laughed. "I'm not anyone unrelated, I'm only following my highness."

Xie Lian said too, "He's from my palace."

However, Pei Ming already flashed his sword, unrelenting and determined. "Stand down."

Xie Lian hadn't yet responded, but Hua Cheng already answered with an abnormal determination, "No. I must go with you this time."

Both sides were only in a stalemate for a moment, but Shi Qingxuan was impatient and turned to Pei Ming.

"General Pei, this man is fine. Let's just go!"

During their exchange, a frightening lightning struck down violently from the ends of the skies upon the surface of the sea. The lightning current coursed through the waters and crackled outward; turning the sea into an aqua colour, like a giant heart suddenly started pulsating and breathing. The sight was impressive, but at the same time terrifying. Pei Ming didn't want to wait any longer and shouted.

"START!"

The ship gave a violent shake, and with the rumbling sounds of a shaft turning, the ship started steering itself without any manual control. It left the beach, driving deep into the sea with great speed. Amidst flashing lightning and roaring thunder, the ship opened a path between crashing waves.

The storm might be big, but Xie Lian, Hua Cheng, Pei Ming, and Ming Yi all stood steadily; it was only with Ming Yi's support that Shi Qingxuan hadn't fallen over.

"It's tolerable right now, but how things are after will be hard to say!" Pei Ming said.

The ship was already going at an extremely fast pace, parting the waves in large splashes. Yet Shi Qingxuan still asked, "Can't this go any faster??"

"Running this ship burns spiritual powers, this is already the fastest it can go!" Pei Ming replied.

Shi Qingxuan clenched his right fist. That hand used to hold the Wind Master fan. With but one swing, it could've provided a tailwind, making the ship go at least four times faster. Yet now, the hand was empty, and he couldn't help but exhale a long sigh.

Just then, Hua Cheng tapped Xie Lian lightly, speaking in a low voice, "Gege."

Xie Lian whipped around and his eyes widened. Upon the sea, about thirty meters out, there was a small fishing boat whirling in the waves. There seemed to be a few figures crying for help, but their cries were all swallowed by the waves.

The fishermen in distress!

This was the reason why he was here. Ruoye flew out, wrapped those fishermen around the waist, and pulled them up. When those fishermen's feet reached the platform of the ship, their legs almost gave out. However, Pei Ming immediately opened the door of one of the cabins and threw them in. When those fishermen opened the door again, they would find themselves back on shore.

Just as Hua Cheng and Xie Lian fished up thirty to forty fishermen, the ship was also staggeringly reaching the centre of the tempest. At that very moment, there were plenty of heavenly officials overlooking this horrifying scene from afar, and there were surely many mortals who were in awe of the power of heaven. The lightning striking at the ship was increasing; this lightning was attracted to spiritual power, and would pursue and strike at those with strong powers. This was why one should stay far, far away when another was passing through their Heavenly Calamity, lest they fall victim.

Right now, Shi Qingxuan was mortal, Xie Lian's spiritual power was only enough for him to communicate through the array, and Hua Cheng had no need to use his power, so they were tucked away nicely. Thus, that lightning was focused on greeting Pei Ming alone. Many times he struck the lightning back bluntly with his sword, his blade easy. Such a show of skill, Xie Lian was quite impressed. If this was a heavenly official from the Middle Court, not only would they be running away with lightning at their tails, they wouldn't be able to strike back, either; which was why they couldn't be permitted to come.

After crossing through the barrier, soon after, Shi Qingxuan suddenly yelled, “GE!!!”

Xie Lian whipped his head up and sure enough, amidst seven or eight roaring water dragon pillars, he saw Shi Wudu hanging in the skies, with his white robes fluttering, and his hands in the formation of a battle hand-seal.

Although his figure was still oppressing above the waves, he seemed to be unfocused, his imposing powers unsteady. Those frenzied water dragons would seize every chance to get closer time and time again, waiting for the opportune moment to devour him whole, and each time he only just dodged by a breadth. The ship was miles away from him; if the Wind Master fan was still usable, then Shi Qingxuan could’ve pushed the waves down by a notch. In his current mortal body, even his voice couldn’t reach very far, and he could only watch in distress.

The moment Pei Ming spoke, his voice was broadcasted powerfully and widely.

“WATER MASTER-XIONG! QINGXUAN IS FOUND!”

Just as the words left his lips, Shi Wudu opened his eyes.

At the same time, another giant wave surged to the skies and crashed back down. The ship was thrown high into mid-air, but it didn’t keep up with the speed of the collapsing waters. It hung in the air for a brief second before falling rapidly. Xie Lian used the thousand-pounds spell to steady his form, and grabbed tightly onto Hua Cheng’s hand.

“Watch out!”

It was a funny feeling. Hua Cheng was clearly taller than him, and it took him no effort to hold Xie Lian up with one hand, yet Xie Lian always felt that he was light as a feather; like if he didn’t pay attention, Hua Cheng would disappear. So, Xie Lian’s grasp was firm and tight. Hua Cheng, too, clutched his hand back at the same time.

On the other side, Pei Ming called out, “WATER MASTER-XIONG, FOCUS! IF YOU DON’T PUSH THE WAVES DOWN, YOUR LITTLE BROTHER WILL DROWN BEFORE YOUR EYES!”

Shi Wudu saw the ship in the distance and heard his words. Gloom flashed on his face and his hand seal suddenly changed, erupting a spiritual barrier from around him. The water dragons that had been encircling him were suddenly struck; exploding into a deluge, crashing down soundly into the waters.

The raindrops were like rocks, banging against the deck, smacking against bodies painfully. However, after this was over, the storm had also slowed and calmed somewhat. Shi Wudu slowly descended and landed on the ship. Everyone was already drenched from head to toe like drowned dogs.

Shi Qingxuan wiped his face and mumbled with trepidation, "...ge."

Shi Wudu's face was still dark, and he strode over in large steps. "I TOLD YOU TO STAY PUT, BUT YOU HAD TO GO RUN AROUND! IF I DIE FROM ANGER, WOULD YOU BE HAPPY THEN???"

Shi Qingxuan really didn't know what to say to that. When he couldn't see his brother, he'd worry, but now that he'd seen him, he'd remember that whole business. Something in his heart just couldn't accept it.

"...sigh, I'm only just...I..." In the end, he scratched his head and sighed. "As long as you've passed your trial, that's all that matters. I think, I still think..."

Shi Wudu cut him off, "Who said my trial is over?"

Shi Qingxuan was taken aback. "Wasn't that it?"

With his hands, Pei Ming used all that water to slick back his hair. "Don't be happy too soon. This is your brother's third Heavenly Calamity, it's not gonna be that easy. It'll take at least seven days and seven nights. Just now was nothing more than the opening act."

Truth to be told, even if it was the first Heavenly Calamity, it wouldn't be that easy either. Thinking back, the "Heavenly Calamity" that Shi Qingxuan passed was greatly discounted compared to everyone else's. He must've come to that conclusion, and his face grew glum.

Xie Lian was still concerned with the goal of this journey, and asked in the spiritual communication array, "Ling Wen? We've entered the area where Lord Water Master is passing his Heavenly Calamity. Can you point us to where the fishermen who have been dragged into the storm are?"

"Please wait a moment," Ling Wen replied. After a while, she said, "This is troublesome. There are two hundred and sixty-one fishermen who have been pulled into the perimeters of the Heavenly Calamity today, and they're scattered, all over the place..."

She didn't say much more before her voice was breaking up, and Xie Lian couldn't really hear her anymore.

"What's wrong? Ling Wen?"

He thought maybe his powers were used up again, yet when he looked up and saw Pei Ming's face, it was obvious he was experiencing the same thing. The group hadn't had time to talk when Xie Lian saw, not far away on the surface of the sea, more broken little boats.

“Maybe the aftershocks of the opening round were too great and affected spiritual communication. It might get better in a bit. Ling Wen said there are two hundred and sixty-one fishermen who have been scattered by the waves, let’s just save as many as we can.”

Naturally, no one objected.

Pei Ming spoke up, “Water Master-xiong, why don’t you go inside and rest for a bit. The trial has only just started, who knows when more rounds will come. You’re pretty unlucky this time, to have involved so many mortals.”

Shi Wudu seemed to be somewhat tired indeed. He inclined his head, pushed open the door of another cabin, and went inside to meditate. Shi Qingxuan seemed to want to say something serious to him, but since the Heavenly Calamity wasn’t over, it wasn’t the right time to speak. He could only swallow his words and unhappily go to the side with Ming Yi.

However, Shi Wudu opened his eyes again and said sharply, “Don’t go running around. Come and sit right here.”

And so, Shi Qingxuan could only kneel down next to Shi Wudu.

After more than half a day, and as the night deepened, the ship floated to a deeper part of the East Sea.

Although spiritual communication was still broken, working at times and not at others, it could still be used tentatively. In that time, Xie Lian and company had already rescued over two hundred fishermen. Those fishermen had gone to sea to fish as always, but who knew such stormy winds and waves would surge so suddenly, and it pulled them too far into the waters. If they were by themselves, there would’ve been no way they could drift back. If they should float about for several days and nights, they might very well all die from starvation or dehydration; dried under the sun into desiccated corpses. To suddenly be saved, it was truly to find hope at the brink of death, and they were all overjoyed.

To just drift in the sea like this...who knew how many days and nights it would be before all the fishermen could be rescued, and who knew when Shi Wudu’s third Heavenly Calamity would officially start; there could be danger at a moment’s notice. In such a situation, Pei Ming still acted the same. In the evening, when they rescued a few fishermen girls, so scared their eyes were blurry from tears, he held them in his embrace and soothed them with a gentle voice; a true show of honeyed romance, affectionate and charming. It was only after he charmed the girls that he sent them off to the cabin, and those girls were all reluctant to leave; hoping that when they opened the door once more, he would still be there. Shi Wudu had been meditating for a while now, his strength restored and his face looking much better. He opened his eyes.

“Don’t you have high standards?”

Although the fishermen girls were at the peak of their youth, they were still only average; indeed, nowhere close to the kind of targets Pei Ming usually hunted for. However, after having embraced women, his face was glowing and he rubbed his chin, laughing.

“After rescuing so many scraggly-bearded old fisherman masters, one after the other, any woman looks delectable in comparison, hahahaha.”

Hearing this, both Shi Qingxuan and Ming Yi didn't want to look at him anymore. Xie Lian shook his head, actually finding it rather funny. He and Hua Cheng went to the side and sat down next to each other. A moment later, he suddenly felt emptiness in his stomach.

Everyone else on the ship didn't need to eat. Although Shi Qingxuan was a mortal right now, Xie Lian suspected Shi Wudu must've given him some sort of holy pill, the kind that can fill a stomach for a few days; so even now Shi Qingxuan didn't show any sign of hunger. This ship wasn't one built in the mortal realm, so it certainly wouldn't have rations stowed. Xie Lian was about to get up and go catch a couple fish in the sea when next to him, Hua Chen passed over something. Xie Lian looked down, and it was a snow-white and soft steamed bun.

He sat back down and whispered, “Thank you, San Lang.”

Hua Cheng whispered back too, “Take this for now, gege. It'll get better soon.”

The steamed bun was still split in half, and the two sat together munching slowly. On the other end of the ship, Pei Ming heard them whispering to each other, and he slicked his hair up again.

“Have you two made some discoveries? Why don't you leave your little world and tell the rest of us?”

Xie Lian was about to say something to put him off, when suddenly, he frowned. “Don't you all think there's something off?”

Ming Yi frowned too and looked up. “Yes.”

Xie Lian rose to his feet. “This ship seems to be going much slower. Is it running out of power?”

“How can that be?” Pei Ming said. “The amount of spiritual power stored in this ship should allow it to run two more days at sea.”

Xie Lian approached the side of the ship, his hands on the railing. “But I still think that this ship suddenly got heavier...”

He abruptly stopped talking mid-sentence. Shi Wudu and the others all gathered to the side of the ship.

“What is it?”

No need to ask. It was easy to see just by looking. Despite the darkened sky, it was still faintly visible that the draft of this ship’s hull was suddenly abnormal; much higher than before. And, the waterline was still climbing!

Xie Lian immediately said, “Is the bottom of the ship leaking?! Did we hit a shoal? Or is there something in the waters that chiseled a hole?”

“That’s impossible!” Pei Ming exclaimed. “How would we not notice if we hit shoals? This ship isn’t a typical ship, either, nothing normal should be able to chisel through, unless...”

It was like he suddenly thought of something and choked.

“Unless what?” Ming Yi asked.

“Oh no,” Pei Ming said.

“What, oh no?” Shi Qingxuan demanded.

Pei Ming whipped around and said, “When ships enter the lair of demons, they shall sink. We’ve drifted to the Black Water Demon Lair.”

Ch.119: Ships in the Lair of Demons Shall Sink

Xie Lian asked, "One of the four Supremes, Ship-Sinking Black Water?"

"Four Calamities, not four Supremes."

"..." Xie Lian then remembered that he had forgotten about Qi Rong, and apologized. "Ah, sorry, my mistake."

There's no way that Night-Touring Green Lantern could be on the same level as the other three.

As someone who had crammed the scrolls, Xie Lian roughly knew a bit about this Ship-Sinking Black Water. According to legends, this was a powerful water ghoulish who lurked in the outer seas. Just like the Crimson Rain Sought Flower, he slaughtered his way out of Mount Tong'lu. Although he tended to keep a low profile, that could only be said for the mortal and heavenly realms. Roughly counting, he had swallowed at least five hundred ghosts across the land, and among them, around four hundred were high-level water ghouls. The Black Water Demon Lair was his resting domain.

Ghost City was under Hua Cheng's jurisdiction; when one stepped foot into his domain, his word was law— "once within the boundaries, the world is lawless". It was just so here, as well. There was a saying that was even more widespread in the Underworld: "Crimson Rules the Land; Black Masters the Waters". Crimson obviously referred to Hua Cheng, therefore, Black was none other than Black Water Demon Xuan.

Pei Ming spoke, "Water Master-xiong, you're really unlucky this time. Demon Xuan isn't anything like the Green Ghost, even though he's not the type to cause trouble. Luckily, we haven't strayed too far, we should steer back before we're discovered."

The others stared at him. "Well, why don't you change course then? Aren't you the one in charge of this ship?"

Pei Ming was equally surprised. "It didn't already change course? This ship should do it automatically, it shouldn't require manual labour."

Yet, the rudder didn't budge at all. With no other options, Pei Ming resorted to steering it himself. When his hand landed on the rudder, he furrowed his brows. Xie Lian went up to help.

"It won't move?"

It's impossible that Pei Ming lacked the strength. Xie Lian, who was fairly confident in his own strength, wasn't able to move it either.

After examining the situation at hand, Ming Yi announced, "It might've been caught by something, I'll go down to take a look."

Shi Qingxuan chimed in, "I'll go with you, Ming-xiong!"

Shi Wudu said sternly, "Come back here! Don't go running around."

His brother was still in the middle of passing his trial, and shouldn't be distracted or emotionally agitated. Shi Qingxuan wouldn't dare risk it, and obediently came back, leaving Ming Yi to investigate under the deck by himself. Xie Lian wanted to help too, but he knew when it came to building and repairs, he wasn't as capable as the Earth Master. Even if he went, he wouldn't be able to help much anyway.

As he was gazing into the pitch-black sea that surrounded them, Xie Lian suddenly remembered something. He asked, "Are there any fishermen that ended up in this part of the sea?"

Hua Cheng, who had partnered up with Xie Lian in the search and rescue, was the first one to discover those stranded fishermen. He did a quick survey around and said, "It's unlikely. Black Water Demon Lair is in the South Sea, they wouldn't drift this far. Besides, the area here has a barrier; not just anyone can enter this place. Even if they did, there wouldn't be any hope for a rescue. There's nothing that wouldn't sink once it's drifted here."

The South Sea. They hadn't realized they'd drifted this far. Xie Lian tested his spiritual communication array, and the connection was indeed down. Even though the connection before was spotty, it was still usable; now, it was just complete dead silence. Although the sea looked peaceful, who knew what sort of danger lurked beneath, waiting for the chance to ambush them? The sky was turning darker, and Xie Lian felt uneasy.

"Since there's no stranded fishermen in these parts, if Lord Earth Master is not able to repair the ship, we might as well abandon the ship and seek land first. When Lord Water Master returns to the East Sea for his trial, we can continue the search and rescue there as well," he suggested.

"Might as well," Pei Ming agreed as he opened the cabin door.

Who knew that, after the door was pulled open, he would be met with the interior of an empty cabin instead of the scenery of land. His expression changed immediately.

"The Distance-Shortening array lost its power."

Hua Cheng laughed. "Isn't that normal? If you can't even use the spiritual communication array, how would the Distance-Shortening array be any better?"

Pei Ming looked over and asked, "This little buddy here seems quite calm for a youngster, and doesn't seem worried at all?"

Xie Lian interrupted. "The ship has already drifted into ghost territory and is sinking as we speak. We can't leave even if we want to. Let's solve the problem at hand first."

Shi Qingxuan called out to the person under the deck, "Ming-xiong, how's the situation looking down there? Can you fix it?"

Ming Yi's voice came from underneath. "Nothing's broken! The ship isn't caught in anything, either. It's something else that caused the ship to lose its power."

"This is Demon Xuan's playground now," Pei Ming stated.

As he was speaking, the ship dipped again. Upon a glance, Xie Lian saw that water had already swallowed half of the ship. If it was a normal boat, it would've given way by now. However, since this was crafted by gods, it was still resisting sinking and fighting to stay afloat.

"There must be exceptions. It's impossible that everything would sink here," he insisted. "There must be something that wouldn't sink."

"There is," Hua Cheng said.

The attention fell on him instantly. With his arms folded, he lazily said, "There's one type of wood that's able to float across the Black Water Demon Lair without sinking."

Xie Lian guessed a few common special wood types. "Sandalwood? Agarwood? Elm?"

"Coffin wood," Hua Cheng answered.

"Coffin wood?!"

"En," Hua Cheng said. "There's no one who has returned alive after they've stumbled into the Black Water Demon Lair, except for one person. That person was travelling home with his deceased loved one's corpse. When the boat sank, he drifted back to land on top of the coffin."

Pei Ming raised his brow. "This little buddy sure knows a lot."

Hua Cheng mirrored his expression and replied, "It's not much. You just know too little, that's all."

Even though Shi Wudu didn't move from his seated meditation pose, he turned his attention to Hua Cheng and narrowed his eyes. "Pei-xiong, I had wanted to ask earlier, just who is this?"

Pei Ming explained, "I'm afraid you'd have to ask His Highness for that. After all, it's someone from his palace."

Shi Qingxuan interrupted, "Alright, alright, it doesn't matter how much or how little he knows. Now that the spells have lost their power, where does one go to get a coffin around here?"

"No need, it's simple," Pei Ming answered. "Gege and I will build one for you right now, and show you what it means to take things into your own hands and be rich in food and dress."

"..."

"It won't work," Hua Cheng pointed out. "It has to be a coffin that has carried a corpse."

They couldn't possibly build a coffin, then off a person in the group and toss them in there.

In the midst of their conversation, the boat dipped again. The slightly-tilted deck that they were standing on was almost at the same level as the water surface. Shi Wudu, who was sitting dignified in his meditation pose, almost tipped over.

"I give up. Let me handle this," he said coldly.

He took out his fan and tapped it lightly against his forehead before fanning it out, revealing the water character on the front and a wave pictogramme made up of three curving lines on the back.

He lifted his arm and called out, "Water, come forth!"

Instantly, Xie Lian felt the ship being lifted up; the deck under him rose several inches above water, bringing back a sense of safety.

"The Water Master fan can even control the water in the Black Water Demon Lair?" he asked in surprise.

"Not the water here," Hua Cheng corrected. "He channeled the water from the outside."

It seems that they had just crossed the boundary into the Black Water Demon Lair, and hadn't ventured too far into it. Shi Wudu was able to draw water from the seas nearby to lift the ship up from underneath.

Pei Ming praised, "Beautifully done, Water Master-xiong! Now that the rudder is useless, the boat can't turn back. You should hurry and use the water to pull the ship back."

Before Shi Wudu could reply, the ship dipped once again. The Demon Lair water refused to back down, and clashed with the current from the outer seas. This time, the dip was stronger, causing the deck to tilt even more. Losing balance, the crew slid to the portside of the ship. Although Shi Wudu was born with a delicate and handsome face, his personality was extremely stubborn, refusing to back down. When he felt that something was going against him, a flash of anger appeared on his face. He snapped his fan shut and he opened it again, the three wave lines grew bigger. The current in the ocean doubled in force and the ship was yanked up once again.

With one force commanding the boat to sink and another forcing it to rise, the back and forth made it seem like a giant tug-of-war game. The erratic movements of the ship along with the constant lifts and drops caused the seawater around them to splash wildly and gush in and out. If it was anyone else on the ship, they'd be scared witless by now. Xie Lian grasped the ledge with one hand and tightly held on to Hua Cheng with the other.

"What's happening? The ship is turning!" he asked in bewilderment.

True to his words, the ship already started spinning towards a certain direction. The faster it spun, the lower it sank. It was then that Xie Lian realized that the ship had fallen into a giant whirlpool, and was being slowly sucked into the eye!

"Everyone, be careful!" he warned. "The two forces of water are battling!"

It was obvious that Shi Wudu wasn't in his home turf. The water that he summoned from the outer seas was powerful, but once it crossed the border, the strength was suppressed significantly. To go against the Demon Lair current, it was at a great disadvantage. As expected, as soon as the words left Xie Lian's mouth, the giant ship fell into the eye of the whirlpool. In that last second, Xie Lian tossed out Fangxin. He pulled in Hua Cheng, and the two stepped onto the sword and flew up.

At first, he was worried that Fangxin wouldn't have the strength to fly, but the moment they left the deck, he let out a sigh of relief. Although shaky, it was still able to fly. Looking down from above, the entire area was painted in a terrifying black. It was easy to see the collision between the two different-coloured currents. Their fierce battle was what formed this enormous whirlpool. As the eye swallowed the ship whole, the two currents of water separated.

However, the battle was far from over. Like two venomous vipers, they continued to snap at each other. Each collision was followed by a mountain of angry waves.

Xie Lian looked around and called, "Lord Wind Master? Lord Earth Master? General Pei?"

Shi Qingxuan's voice came from ten feet behind him. "Your highness! We're here!"

"Did you also jump on your imperial sword..." Xie Lian turned around, and the scene that unfolded before him rendered him speechless.

Ming Yi was standing on top of the handle of a shovel, while Shi Qingxuan was sitting on the head of said shovel, waving at him.

This wasn't an imperial sword, it was an imperial...shovel. This sort of imagery was undoubtedly hard on the eyes!

On the other side, Pei Ming's voice sounded. "What about Water Master-xiong?"

Seeing that Pei Ming was on his sword alone and there was no sign of the Water Master, Shi Qingxuan also called out, "Ge? Ge?!"

Xie Lian reassured, "No need to panic, he's the Water Master, it'll be hard for him to sink." But when he recalled the power of that whirlpool, he turned to Hua Cheng. "San Lang, hold on tight to my waist, don't fall."

Hua Cheng put on an obedient act and replied, "En, okay, but gege, there's something that I have to tell you."

"What is it?" Xie Lian asked.

"You can't fly in the Black Water Demon Lair. It'll attract things."

Not a second after, a sharp cry pierced through the air. A giant white creature broke through the water surface, heading straight for Pei Ming.

Pei Ming was a master swordsman. The moment when he sensed killing intent, his hand reached for his sword, only to realize said sword was under his feet. Luckily, his reaction was quick. With a leap, he grabbed his sword in mid-air and sliced the incoming creature in half. Before gravity could take control, he flipped back onto the sword, with not a single hair out of place.

As if it was nothing, he steadily flew up and asked in total calmness, "What was that thing?"
